THE SINO-RUSSIAN AGREEMENT

Appointment of Chinese Members to the Coming Conference: Chang Tso-lin and Manchuria's Rights Regarding Chinese-Eastern Railway

Peking, June 27.

The Official Gazette to-day publishes an order issued by the Waichiaopu containing the following appointments of the Chinese members of the Sino-Russian Conference, which will carry on the negotiations provided for by the Sino-Russian Agreement:—

Chief Secretary, Mr. Li Ching-jen.

Secretaries of Department, Messrs. Yang En-chan, Hsia Ching-yi, Chen Kuang-ping, and Chin Wen-ssu.

Chief of the General Section, Mr. Chu Ho-hsiang.

Chief of the Conference Affairs Section, Mr. Chow Chuan.

Members of the Secretariat Department, Mr. Chuan Shou-wen.

Expert Delegates of the Sino-Russian Conference Department, Messrs. Tang Tsai-chang, Chang Yu-chuan, Shih Chow-chang, Chow Chuan-ching, Wang Ting-chang, Chien Tai, Fan Ting, Chi Ching, Dr. Wei Wen-ping.

Chang Tso-lin Conciliatory.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin is officially reported to be adopting a much more conciliatory attitude towards the Sino-Russian agreement within the past few days. He now merely insists that his views shall be considered regarding Manchurian questions in the forthcoming Sino-Russian negotiations. While no official information on the question can be obtained, it is understood that Marshal Chang still claims that the Chinese Eastern Railway is a Manchurian question and that no definite settlement can be made regarding the railway without his approval.

The Russian Consulate at Tientsin was handed over to the Soviet representative to-day, and arrangements have been completed for the Soviet Consul to take over the Hankow Russian Consulate on July 1. Some difficulties have arisen over the Russian Consulate at Shanghai, owing, it is explained officially, to a misunderstanding on the part of the Chinese Commissioner for Foreign Affairs at Shanghai, not to any opposition on the part of the Settlement authorities. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Reply to the Legations

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, June 30.

A Note relative to the status of the Russian Legation has been sent to the Diplomatic Body by the Foreign Minister. Inter alia the Note says that the assumption by the foreign representatives of the signatories of the Protocol of 1901 of the responsibility of guarding the buildings and premises of the former Russian Legation in Peking was an act undertaken by the said representatives without the consent of the Chinese Government, and it continues:—

"Your Excellency's suggestion to consider the question of handing over the former Russian Legation only on a request addressed to the foreign representatives by the Russian representatives duly accredited to the Chinese Government appears to overlook the special interest of the Chinese Government to see that the premises of the former Russian Legation promptly are handed back to an authorized representative of the Russian Government. It will be recalled that the Diplomatic Quarter, though placed under the control of the foreign Legations by the Protocol of 1901, remains a part of Chinese territory and that the premises of the Russian Legation, though situated in the said Quarter, are themselves not subject to the control of the representatives of other Powers. Indeed, they cannot be subject to such control, as they are the property of a foreign Power with which China has re-established diplomatic relations and which is anxious to take possession of the Legation through its authorized representative, for use as its Legation. It appears to the Chinese Government that for practical purposes they are the natural channel through which to arrange for the handing back of the premises of the former Russian Legation to their lawful owners, because, as regards this particular matter, they are in the best position to know by direct communication with the representative of the Soviet Government as to who is its duly authorized agent to take over the said premises on its behalf. They are further inclined to the view that the conventional status of the Diplomatic Quarter should not make it difficult for the foreign representatives to comply with the request of the Chinese Government, since they have not asked to take control themselves of the said premises, but have requested only to have them delivered to an authorized representative of the Soviet Government.

"In view of the foregoing considerations, I have the honour to request that Your Excellency will, on recept of this Note, in conjunction with the other foreign representatives concerned, hand over the premises of the Russian Legation as early as possible to the Government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, which has appointed M. Schwarsalon as its duly authorized representative to receive and take possession of the Legation on its behalf. I hope the more sincerely that Your Excellency will see your way to arrange for compliance with this request, as any other course of action in the present case would not only embarrass the Chinese Government in their desire to extend every courtesy and facility prescribed by international usage to the representatives of foreign Governments maintaining amicable relations with China, but would also appear to prejudice the right of foreign Powers to establish their Legations on Chinese territory free from any condition other than the consent of the Chinese Government."

Diplomatic Body Formulating Reply to Waichiaopu's Second Note

Peking, July 1.

As a result of discussion at to-day's meeting of the Diplomatic Body with regard to the second demand by the Waichiaopu for the transfer of the Russian Legation here, it has been decided that the Doyen of the Diplomatic Body will draft a reply and forward it to the Waichiaopu.

It is reliably reported that the Diplomatic Body has no objection to the transfer of the Russian Legation, its contention is that the demand for the transfer should be made by an officially recognized Russian delegate after going through legal procedure.—Eastern News Agency.

Buildings in Tientsin Handed Over.

Peking, June 27.

According to an announcement made by the Chinese authorities concerned, the Russian Consulate in Tientsin was completely transferred yesterday to the Soviet delegate there. It is understood that the transfer of the Russian Consulate in Hankow will be effected on July 1. There are at present some complications concerning the transfer of the Russian Consulate in Shanghai between the Waichiaopu and the party in charge of the Consulate in question. In these circumstances, it is observed that it will take some time, before the Consulate there can be completely handed over to the Soviet Envoy in Shanghai.

As for the Russian Consulate in Harbin, it is reported that the transfer will be delayed in view of the triangular relations between the Three Eastern Provinces, the Soviet and Peking Governments.—Eastern News Agency.

Trade Commissioner in Peking.

Moscow, June 27.

M. Klyschko, formerly Assistant Trade Commissioner in London, has been appointed Soviet Trade Commissioner in Peking.—Reuter.

Peking, June 30.

It is reported in reliable quarters that M. Davtian will be appointed by the Soviet Government as its official delegate to the formal Russo-Chinese Conference and that M. Rakichin, now in Harbin, may perhaps participate in the Conference. M. Karakhan, who has no power of attorney to represent the Soviet Government at the formal Conference, announces that he will return to Moscow as soon as the Russo-Japanese Conference at Peking is completed.—Eastern News Agency.

Meeting in Shanghai.

An important meeting of Russian residents was held on Sunday at [illegible] address in Avenue Foch [illegible] to discuss the Sino-Russian agreement as it will affect them. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Russian Orthodox Fraternity, one of the most influencial local Russian bodies, and was attended by representatives of other organizations.

It is understood that a committee was formed, of which Mr. V. Grosse, former Russian Consul and co-Director of the Bureau of Russian Affairs was invited to become chairman.

The meeting was exclusively composed of anti-Bolshevik elements.

A CABINET CRISIS IN PEKING

All Ministers Follow Premier in Handing in Their Resignations

PRESIDENT STRIVING TO MAKE THEM WITHDRAW

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, July 2.

Although the Cabinet has decided to resign en bloc, the resignations have not yet been submitted to the President. President Tsao Kun is trying very hard to nip them in the bud but the impression is that he will not succeed. The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, is determined to force an issue with Wang Koh-ming (Minister of Finance) and the rest of the cabinet now recognize that reconciliation seems impossible.

If he cannot stave off the resignations the President will be in the same position as Mr. Sun Pao-chi, who depends for support on Lo-yang (i.e. Wu Pei-fu) while President Tsao Kun has hitherto refused to desert Wang Koh-ming.

Peking, July 2.

There is no new Premier in sight at present, for Admiral Wu Yu-lin, Dr. W. W. Yen and Dr. Wellington Koo have all put forward objections to their forming a Ministry. It is the general opinion that the situation will merely result in a reshuffle of portfolios under Dr. Wellington Koo. Meanwhile the usual exchanges of views are occurring between Peking and the outside military leaders.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRADE MARK BUREAU AT WORK

Firms Registering: Beginning of the End of Opposition: The New Official Translation Clearing up Some Previous Misunderstandings

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, June 28.

It has been said that the action of the British-American Tobacco company in applying for registration of their trade marks punctured foreign opposition to the new law; but was evident from the list of applying firms (appearing on page 2 to-day), opposition was falling away long before the B. A. T. capitulated. It is true that as a result probably of the example afforded by the B. A. T. other British firms are coming to terms with the law; but foreign acquiescence in the statute was assured long ago, first by the Japanese, then by the Germans, followed by the nationals of the United States and other countries. British business is the last to capitulate, and even as yet the capitaluiation is not so extensive as has been reported. Up to June 15, the date of publication of the eleventh number of the Trade Mark Builetin, only 12 marks, all belonging to the B. A. T., had been registered and none was under examination. This does not mean that others had not been received ,as applications are sometimes not even recorded as being under examination for about three months; but it proves that there has not been any rush on the part of British firms as is insinuated.

Treaty Rights the Basis

Even if one doubts whether British nationals have shown any tendency to monopolize the time of the Trade Mark Bureau lately, one cannot doubt that they will eventually fall into line with the rest of the foreign firms interested in China trade. During the time that Britons have been protesting against the law, other nationals have been registering, making little fuss and in some cases rendering half-hearted support to the anti-law demonstrations. By their action they will gain whatever protection such registration affords, as well as maintaining their claim on the protection of treaty obligations.

This latter protection is by no means sacrificed by acceptance of the law. Treaty rights are still the basic resort of the foreign firm, and are not altered in any fundamental degree by the new situation. What foreign firms have done is to make assurance doubly sure, and to protect themselves fully in any attempted infringement by Chinese firms. They have established a clearly-defined case against infringements according to China's own law, as well as according to China's commitments with foreign Powers. The establishment of a case free from all quibbling is infinitely more important to a firm with the interests in China possessed by a firm like the B. A. T. than an undue emphasis on rights which are only half the story of successful business enterprise in this country. It is the cultivation of the other half, which may be described as friendly feeling, which brings success to business undertakings in China.

Foreign Powers Lukewarm

That is the argument of the firms that have registered, and seeing that the deed as well as the word is involved, it is hopeless for British firms to expect drastic modification of a law which has even now won the recognition of so many foreign firms. To carry on a fight with the strenuousness that has distinguished the agitation hitherto would be to jeopardise not only their marks but the business that springs from them. Moreover, it is surely apparent to British merchants that their agitation has received only lukewarm support from the authorities negotiating with the Chinese Government. That lukewarmness, indeed, has been the cause of more than one [illegible] Right from the start of the agitation against recognition of the trademarks law, it was apparent that the feeling in Shanghai and Manchester, was not the feeling in Peking, and presumably the Foreign Office in London. Several American firms sensed their own Legation's viewpoint immediately, and took the hint contained in "We cannot tell you to register and we cannot tell you not to register." The difference in feeling took shape when the Diplomatic Body made its representations to the Government. It formulated suggestions, and even those suggestions were milk and water to many business firms and chambers of commerce. It should have been apparent, however, that they were the last word so far as the Diplomatic Body was concerned.

Hunting for an Expert

What has the Chinese Government done to meet these suggestions? First, it is negotiating with a foreign expert through the International Association of Trade Marks. There is every indication that the negotiations are being carried on in good faith, for, the writer understands, the Trade Mark Bureau has already piled up a bill of over $2,000 in cable tolls alone. But the engagement of a trademark expert is not like the engagement of, say, a bricklayer, Trademark experts are few and far between and apparently are in such well-paid and secure positions that the Government is finding it very difficult to dislodge one of them. The man with whom negotiations are now being carried on is a Swede, and the Trade Mark Bureau is confident that his engagement will soon be announced. It has been asserted in protestant circles that this expert must have administrative powers, but it is not likely that the Chinese Government will acquiesce in anything more than the appointment of an advisor, although it is quite likely that eventually not one but many foreigners will have to be admitted to the staff of the Trade Mark Bureau. But this will be merely a matter of business expediency.

The Government has already issued English supplements of all the back numbers of the Trade Mark Bulletins, and intends in the future to publish the Trade Mark Record, as the new supplement is called, simultaneously with the Bulletin. No one could quibble with the information put out in this publication; it will meet the wish of everybody interested in what his competitors in China are doing in respect of trademarks.

In regard to the remaining suggestions, China has already extended the period of grace allowed for registration purposes to December 31, while Article 10 still remains unaltered.

The Attempted Monopoly

As with several articles to which certain people have taken exception, the Chinese contend that Article 10 has been misunderstood. One who has had something to do with the legal side of the newly-created organ pointed out to the writer that in reality it is on all-fours with a similar provision to be found in the 1906 rules which were annexed to the British Trade Mark Law of 1905. Article 10 gives the Trade Mark Bureau power to change the appointment of attorneys. In the British rules it is stated that"

In the British rules it is stated that" the registrar shall not be bound to recognize as such agent any person who has been convicted criminally or struck off the roll of solicitors, or whose name, by reason of his having been adjudged guilty of disgraceful professional conduct has been erased from the register of patent agents."

The Chinese provision is not so explicit as this, but, so it is contended, means the same thing. An argument is used that recalls the recent attempt of a Chinese firm to monopolize unto itself all registrations of marks. It is said that whereas in Britain and the United States there are properly licensed patent agents, in China there is no such person, and that this article is intended to prevent the Bureau being imposed upon by the crooks who might be called into existence by this very Act. It is a good argument when dissociated with recent activities. In regard to these activities, the Bureau states that the firm in question came into existence entirely without its concurrence, that as soon as the Bureau was made aware of its purpose, it was speedily put under a ban, and that it exists no more. It is true that the trademark dealers have not entered into any transactions with the Bureau, but how far that was due to the storm created by the news of its establishment is difficult to define.

The Question of Finality

In certain quarters exception is taken to Article 35. In the translation now in general use, this clause reads:

In an official translation, to be issued shortly, the article reads:

"When a decision in a hearing in the matter of a trademark has been given, no person whosoever shall be permitted to ask for another hearing on the same facts and evidence."

"When a decision in a hearing concerning maters of a trademark has became final. . . . ."

It is pointed out that there must be some finality in trademark decisions, as is the custom in any legal issue in any country, and that appeals are specifically allowed for, first to the Bureau and then direct to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce. In the case of infringement, which would logically be the main, if not the only, ground for complaint, trademark machinery is supplemented by the machinery of the Courts. Hitherto, there has been no provision in any code of Chinese law dealing with the infringement of trademarks, other than a Supreme Court decision which says that such cases shall be accorded treatment according to the principles of justice. Now of course the question is written in detail into the law of the land.

Treaty Stipulations

Another clause on which issue has been taken is Article 43. The official translation clarifies the point in this way:

"In regard to the penalty and damages connected with trademarks as provided for in Articles 39 to 42, the trial and execution, when they concern foreigners, shall be conducted in accordance with treaty stipulations, if any."

This, of course, is the main consideration to the foreigner, recognizing as it does the existence of certain treaty rights which are the resort of the foreigner who is subject to his own consular jurisdiction in China.

The new translation of the law may clear up a few misunderstandings which have been current in the last six months. At any rate, seeing that it is the only official translation, it is essential to consult it before passing judgment on the law as a law. Whether the Chinese were justified in passing the law without consulting the treaty powers is another question.

Trademarks Already Registered or Approved up to June 15

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, June 25.

The following list shows the number of trademarks registered or approved on six months' probation up to June 15, as published in the 11 issues of the Trade Mark Bulletin. It does not include all the applications that have been made to the Bureau; sometimes they are held for three months before being mentioned in the Bulletin. Roughly, there have been twice as many applications as are here listed.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM BY MANDATE

Peking Deceived by Provinces: Secret Agents Sent Out to Ascertain Facts

Peking, June 24.

Another opium prohibition mandate was issued last night. It says that mandates ordering prohibition of opium traffic have repeatedly been issued. Apprehension is felt by the Central Government that, owing to local disturbances in remote regions, these mandates are not being fully enforced. Delegates have been sent out from Peking from time to time secretly, with the object of ascertaining the facts. Although official reports state that prohibition is being enforced, it is believed that a certain amount of poppy plantation, opium selling and smuggling is being carried on secretly.

"Since opium was first introduced into China this country has suffered bitterly from the use of this drug. Fortunately China can count on the assistance of other countries in endeavouring to free herself of this evil, but if we fail to take advantage of the opportunity offered to effect positive prohibition how can we fulfil the expectations of friendly Powers? The local authorities, therefore, as their duties involved, must bear the full responsibility in this matter. They must instruct their subordinates accordingly and see that their orders are obeyed, throughout the areas under their control. Prohibition must be carried out absolutely. If the local authorities fail to carry out this order, they will be punished and dismissed."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEW HOUSE TAX IN PEKING

Regulations for Assessment: Classification of Owners and Tenants

Peking, June 27.

A special order issued by the Metropolitan Police in connexion with the new house tax contains the following regulations for assessment:—

Houses are divided into three classes. The first class is again divided into three grades, Namely: 1.—Those to pay over $15 a month in taxation. 2.—Those to pay over $13. 3.—Those to pay over $10.

The second class is similarly divided into three grades as follows:—

1.—Those to pay over $8. 2.—Those to pay over $6. 3.—Those to pay over $4.

The third class is divided into grades as follows: 1.—Those to pay over $2 a month. 2.—Over $1, and 3.—Over 50 cents.

The classification and grades are based on the value of the property and the manner of living of the occupants, as well as of the rental in the case of leased properties. The taxes are to be paid by the occupants, and in the case of empty houses no tax is to be imposed. Poor people unable to pay the tax can apply to the local authorities for exemption. Schools, missions, temples and similar institutions not carried on as business concerns are exempt from the tax. With these exceptions, the order says, all residents, foreign and Chinese, are to be taxed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Peking telegram to the "Journal of Commerce" reports that on account of a run on the Bank of China, Bank of Communications and China and South Sea Bank at Hankow, silver dollars were being sent to that port from Peking on June 30. Quantities of million loan [illegible] were sold in a hurry, bringing the price down to $36.50.

BRITAIN AND BOXER INDEMNITY

Application Bill Strongly Supported by Manchester Chamber of Commerce

London, June 26.

The Manchester Chamber of Commerce to-day sent to the Foreign Office a resolution expressing grave apprehension at the action of the minority of 56 Members of the House of Commons on June 16 in voting against the second reading of the China Indemnity Application Bill, and expressing disagreement with the reason offered for such action. It says that to delay the carrying out of the promise made on behalf of Britain to China in 1922 would not only be undignified, but would assuredly bring discredit upon Britain. The Chamber holds that to turn such an act of grace into a means of bargaining would not assist but, on the contrary, would prejudice unfavourably the negotiations now pending with regard to new Chinese trademarks legislation. The Chamber is of the opinion that the possibility of a satisfactory outcome to the negotiations lies in the maintenance of a mutually friendly attitude.

Although the news that the Chinese Government has decided to extend the period for registration of old trademarks to December 31 has not yet been officially confirmed, the Chamber has advised its members not to take any further immediate action, but to maintain their previous attitude, namely, not to register under the Act in its present form, pending negotiations during the next six months with a view to securing the reforms of the law which are considered necessary in order to render the new Chinese law workable.—Reuter.

RUSSIAN CONCESSION IN HANKOW

Municipal Buildings Taken Over by the Chinese Authorities Almost by Stealth

Hankow, July 1.

The "Central China Post" says that the return of the Russian concession to the Chinese was effected to-day, apparently in a somewhat half-hearted manner, by hoisting the Chinese flag over the municipal buildings and the police station and by the decoration of police helmets with a new Chinese heraldic device in place of the familiar Russian cockade.

The Chinese authorities, for some reason or other, were obviously desirous of avoiding attracting attention to the change, and so surreptitiously was it done that quite a number of muncipal employees were not aware that they were working under a new banner.

The change, the paper declares, is likely to be remembered by Chinese and foreigners alike as being a day of importance in the annals of Hankow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

"LITTLE SUN" IN PEKING

A Hearty Welcome

Peking, June 30.

Mr. Sun Hung-yi, known more familiarly as "Little Sun," arrived at the Chienmen station from Tientsin at noon to-day and was welcomed by a number of prominent military officers, accompanied by bodyguards and bands. Amongst those on the platform to meet Mr. Sun were Gen. Chow Meng-hsien, a delegate from the Presidency, and a group of parliamentary supporters of Mr. Sun, headed by Mr. Wang Hsiang. During his stay in Peking Mr. Sun is to reside at Sun Chun-un, a big temple outside the Hsuan Wu-men.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HOME RULE FOR SCOTLAND

June 30.

"THE standard on the Braes o' Mar is up and streaming rarely." Not very long ago we chronicled a scene in the House of Commons. A Bill had been presented claiming Home Rule for Scotland and, in a not over full house, it seemed possible that a snatch majority might have been secured in its favour or, failing that, the vote against it would have been carried by such a small majority as to have given a fictitious appearance of the probability of the Bill becoming law at some not very distant date. The enemies of the Bill adopted the well known expedient of talking it out. That is, they continued the discussion until, by the rules of the House, other business must be proceeded with and the subject then under discussion shelved till a more convenient season which, not infrequently, means never. The red brigade from Glasgow appealed to the chairman to permit the application of the closure that a vote might be taken in the favourable circumstances then existing. But that gentleman, probably because a vote then taken would have been no true indication of the real feeling of the House, refused the request and the Bill was talked out as we have said. This was the occasion for a display of bad temper from the disappointed Radicals and there was another of those regrettable scenes which lower the dignity of Parliament and leave exacerbated feelings behind them.

Scotland, as a whole, seems to have taken the incident very quietly. With the exception of the few Glasgow irreconcilables it is likely that the majority even of those Members of Parliament who voted for the Bill did so rather as a protest against the way Scottish measures are sometimes brushed aside to give way to what, in the opinion of the majority—meaning the members who represent constituencies south of the Tweed—are more important affairs, than from any anticipation that the Bill would ever be carried into effect. It is quite true that majorities are apt to treat the rights of minorities rather cavalierly and it is a perennial complaint of the Scots members that measures affecting the welfare of their native land receive scant attention from a parliament in which they must, of necessity, be always a minority. There may be a modicum of truth in the contention, but surely there has rarely been a parliament in which the interests of Scotland are less likely to be overlooked than in the one now sitting in Westminster. Not since the days of James the First has so much "braid Scots" been heard at the Court of St. James as in these days when the Prime Minister of the realm is a "Lossiemouth loon" and the High Commissioner representing the King in Holyrood during the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland is a worthy miner from Clydebank.

And so the outburst of the wild men from the Clyde is so much the more inexcusable. Scotland can get Home Rule whenever she wants it. But those who ask for it must do so in the name of the whole Scottish nation and not in that of the very mixed breeds who make up the constituencies on Clydeside. We may learn a lesson from history. Why did the enterprise so gallantly initiated in 1745 when the royal banner of the Stewarts was unfurled on the braes of Mar fail so disastrously? Was it not because Scotland was not behind "Bonnie Prince Charlie?" Though "thro' the pass came brave Lochiel, Panmure and gallant Murray," the Lowland lords, the Douglasses, Hamiltons and Buccleuchs held aloof from his cause. Mr. Heughan can still charm us with his Scottish songs and Scotsmen will join enthusiastically in singing "Wha wad na fight for Charlie?" but when the young Prince passed through the Lowlands on his fateful march to the south he got many cheers but few recruits. He invaded England with a poorly equipped army of less than six thousand men whereas two hundred and fifty years before one of his ancestors had led nearly forty thousand men over the border to fall on Flodden field. But to manœuvre a successful revolt, a grievance is also necessary. This is where the Irish members always scored over the Scots. Ireland was never without a grievance real or imaginary and the imaginary ones were much more effective for purposes of agitation than a real one could ever be. This could be brought out into the light, discussed and if need be righted, but that was an intangible something that had more lives than a cat. It was Peg o' my Heart's heart-broken cry "My Father says—" and then would follow a torrent of invective which merely amounted to saying that this is a hard world for an Irishman to live in and the English Government is to blame for it. That attitude is possible to the impulsive Celt, but the hard-headed Scot cannot deceive himself into believing that he is oppressed, when an exactly contrary statement would be nearer the truth. And still less can he deceive his brother Scot and so the heather will not catch fire nor the blue bonnets march over the border for many days to come.

THE RUSSIAN BUREAU IN SHANGHAI

July 1.

THE notification published by us yesterday to the effect that the Bureau for Russian Affairs is closed as from to-day and will henceforth be carried on under the control of the Chinese Commissioner for Foreign Affairs until further notice, can hardly be said to have been unexpected. There are many indications that the Soviet are pressing hard to get possession of Russian State property in China; one Peking newspaper has definitely announced that the Russian Consulate in Hankow is to be handed over to them to-day; and while the peculiar circumstances of Shanghai do not admit of such summary procedure, it has become clear during the past few days that the Bureau would not be able to go on functioning exactly as it has been doing for the past three years. Under the agreement of March, 1921, which was concluded with the approval of the Consular Body, M. Grosse was appointed Assistant Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, deputizing for the Chinese Commissioner, in order to get round the difficulty of the latter not being able to function in the Settlement. The agreement has not definitely been cancelled. But the Consular Body have received instructions from the Diplomatic Body in Peking that they have no more responsibility as regards Russians in Shanghai. That, with the announcement of the Russo-Chinese agreement, passes to the Chinese.

The arrangement indicated by the closing of the Bureau is in the nature of a compromise and certainly of no bad order. The published notification is slightly misleading and one would be inclined to think there must have been a slip in its wording. It is not intended that the Chinese Commissioner should come and sit in the Bureau and run it himself. That, of course, would be impossible for the same reasons that necessitated the 1921 agreement mentioned above, and in any case the Commissioner has far too many other things to do. What actually happens is that he is in charge of Russian affairs until the appointment of a Soviet consul—none, by the way, have been appointed in any country yet—while the present Russian staff will continue to act for him in every-day business. This appears to be a perfectly unobjectionable continuation of the 1921 arrangement, which should give time to the Bureau to wind up its affairs and put them in proper order before handing them over to the Soviet representative whoever he may be—a very urgent matter, as we showed last week. It is only conjecture, but we should not be surprised if this arrangement were due to the good offices of Mr. Hsu Yuan himself, who is, of course, fully conversant with all the affairs of the Bureau and aware that it cannot be handed over to the Soviet like a pound of tea, without much confusion and inconvenience to many innocent people. Of course, there remains the uncertainty when a Soviet consul will appear. We understand that a man of the name of Rakitin at present in Harbin is destined for the post. But it hardly seems proper that Bolshevik consuls should be appointed until the conference on details of the Sino-Russian agreement is concluded, which cannot be for several weeks. No provision appears to have been made as regards a Russian sitting with the Chinese magistrate at the Mixed Court, but we imagine that this part of the 1921 agreement will also continue until the Chinese are ready to hand over all Russian affairs to the Soviet.

A more poignant matter is that of the Russian ships at Woosung. These, as recorded a few days ago, have been brought inside the mouth of the Huangpu and some 200 of the sick men on board are at the quarantine station. But altogether General Gleboff's followers in these ships number 640 and he now announces that he is absolutely at the end of all his resources. Rations have been cut down, but in a few days time they threaten to cease altogether. The possibility of 640 men marching up to Shanghai and demanding food is no pleasant one; yet, so far as can be seen, it is not by any means impossible. The men generally are reported to be most anxious to get to Hailar, where there is understood to be work for them, where many of their compatriots are and where living is really cheap. But how to get them there? General Gleboff, we understand, is now willing to hand over the ships to the Chinese Government, as he certainly should have done at first; and the appeal is to the Chinese authorities to take charge of the men and ship them where there is reason to think work awaits them. This, however, is a problem that must be grappled with now. It cannot be left to await the outcome of the Sino-Russian Conference in Peking.

STRAY THOUGHTS

July 1.

THE remark of a bright young male of five summers who (as reported in an American contemporary recently to demonstrate the influence, on even the very young, of the operations of the "Rum-fleet"), on being asked what he was going to be when he grew up, replied with emphasis that "he was going to be a bootlegger chief, with his own ships and automobiles and flying machines," gives one to realize, if not wholly to understand, how times and conditions have changed from the days when many of us were boys, and when our most fanciful flights of ambition and desire went little further than to embrace an occupation of excitement or glory—say that of an engine-driver, a cowboy, a general covered with medals, an admiral idem, and so on. Of course, as the years rolled on, our ideas and our outlook changed, and there came to most of us the time when, out of either necessity or choice, we seriously took to a permanent profession. Some of us became lawyers and rich men for all time; some took to that calling of eloquence, the Church, or to the one equally of eloquence but less perhaps of conscience, politics; some of us joined the much-commented-on profession of broker; some with a decided sybaritic bent became "officials;" some of us became doctors with a perpetual call of duty; some journalists with a perpetual overdraft; soldiers, disillusioned of early ideals; engineers and builders; bankers and merchants, poets and musicians; diplomats and statesmen—the list is practically inexhaustible.

But how many, or how few, of us have realized the ambitions and achieved the desires of our early childhood? Probably very few indeed. Views, ideas and ideals change with years, and there must be few of us who are now what at one time we aspired to be. There may even have been a period in some of our lives when the occupation of bar-tender appeared transcendant in its sublimity, supreme in its nobility and unequalled in its beneficial effect on mankind; but to those few of us who may have been so affected, it probably consisted of nothing but a phase of an existence possibly chequered, with the view abandoned or modified as circumstances, inclination or economic considerations dictated, and the profession never embraced as a principle. That, however, is but an interlude, possibly unnecessary.

Autre temps; autre mœurs. As science and industry have advanced and changed our ideals and conceptions, so have the early desires and ambitions of youth altered, and while a trio of decades ago the schoolboy's flight of fancy or desire found its limit in the elusive (and unfounded) romance of the cowboy, the thrill of the engine-driver or the glory of the bedecked and be-medalled admiral, to-day the adventurous-inclined youth yearns for control of an aeroplane or airship or wonderful amphibian tank, manipulation of a high-speed motor-car, or to be a world-centre of hero-worship as an accomplished and Adonis-like cinema star. And so it goes on and will go on, this changing ideal of youth; for what seemed to us wonderful in our own childhood is either commonplace or out of date to-day; and what now we look on as marvellous and in advance of our age may likewise, thirty years hence, be relegated to the limbo of things more or less forgotten, giving way to newer and greater developments and constituting wonders which, as was the case a quarter of a century ago, only the most imaginative novelists had the temerity to dwell upon.

THE ANTI-FOREIGN FEELING

July 2.

THE news sent down by Reuter on Monday from Peking with regard to the trial of Colonel Chen and others for the brutal assault on Mr. Bessel at Fengtai some months ago cannot be deemed satisfactory. In the first place it is called a re-trial. That we believe to be an absolutely inaccurate description. It is true that the Waichiaopu informed Sir Ronald Macleay, when he first made representations on the subject, that Colonel Chen had already been tried and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. But this statement was shown to have been absolutely untrue, (were it not, why was there ever a "second" trial?) and in the meantime Mr. Rodney Gilbert, whose information on such points is usually accurate, told us that Colonel Chen went about the capital openly boasting that nobody could touch him owing to his relationship to a member of the President's household. It was not until Mr. Ramsay MacDonald telegraphed personally to Sir Ronald, instructing him to use the utmost pressure in order to get Mr. Bessel's assailants properly tried, that Chinese justice at last began to move. The trial has then to be conducted in camera, an unsatisfactory and for all that anybody can see, except those anxious that justice shall not be done, unnecessary arrangement, which contrasts very unfavourably with the fullness and publicity of the proceedings in respect of Mr. Weatherbe's alleged assault on an octroi official. Finally, while two subordinates are imprisoned, Colonel Chen is acquitted, because Mr. Bessel could not identify him. Very likely he could not. He would hardly have been in a state after the way in which he was battered about to know who were his assailants. And it is quite possible that Colonel Chen was not actually on the scene of the assault. But was he or was he not responsible for the behaviour of the men who committed the offence? There is a very general belief that he was. If not he, then some one else was; and we want to know who that somebody was and why he is not punished. If, for example, two British bluejackets were convicted of brutally assaulting a Chinese official, we know perfectly well that their superior officer would share their punishment. But in China it is not so. Some nameless men are made scapegoats. Their superiors, those really responsible, are got off at all costs.

Another most curious feature is that the judgment has not been officially communicated to the British Legation, but has been allowed to leak out. Reuter thinks this was done "in order to test public opinion in advance." This has an ominous sound. It would be idle to deny that public opinion in Peking, at least as expressed by the noisier elements, is very bad, in the sense of being increasingly anti-foreign. It is common talk in the capital that an outbreak of some anti-foreign nature is to be expected before the end of this year. We do not attach more importance to common talk in this case than it ever deserves. But the symptoms of general feeling are not pleasant. Trotzky's grossly—perhaps it would be better to say Bolshevistically mannered applause of the soldier Li who attacked Mr. Campbell on the city wall was not at all approved by the better classes: but the rabble of politicians, students and gutter newspapers treated Li as a hero. The Powers' refusal to hold a conference for the revision of the Customs tariff has excited the greatest indignation in the capital. So also did the well-merited behaviour of H.M.S. Cockchafer in compelling the officials at Wanhsien to walk in the funeral procession of the murdered American citizen Mr. Hawley. Public indignation meetings, we are told, were held on both subjects and we may be sure that the press of Peking made the most of the opportunity. And yet in all sober earnestness, would anything ever have been done by the Wanhsien officials to mark their disapprobation of the cowardly murder of Mr. Hawley, had it not been for the Cockchafer's timely presence? And if the Powers did agree to increased Customs dues, who would benefit thereby? Assuredly not the people of China.

This anti-foreign feeling is not confined to Peking and is not new. Two years ago, Mr. Rodney Gilbert, in a roundabout journey from Peking to the Yangtze, spoke of it as a new and outstanding feature. And it has been reported freely by many correspondents in the interior. It appears to be due to two main causes. The political classes of China have been given their chance, conspicuously so at Washington, to show what they can do with their country. They have made egregious asses of themselves as is patent to all the world and, not having sincerity to admit their own fault, are seeking in time-honoured fashion to cast the blame on the foreigner. Secondly, the great tolerance shown by the Powers towards China for several years past, and their failure to deal properly with cases of outrage on their nationals and violation of treaty have created an impression that they can be flouted with impunity. Take in conjunction with this the prevailing want of discipline and overweening temper of the student body—of which a fair example is given to-day in our correspondence columns in the story of the recent trouble at Amoy University—and it is not too much to say that a very dangerous feeling is abroad in China and that the people who hold it are precisely those who most easily arouse the mob.

In using that word "dangerous" we are thinking mostly of China herself. It is the greatest possible mistake to imagine that the Powers will tolerate lawlessness and outrage indefinitely. Again and again in the dealings of China and foreigners, we find record of period of piracy, banditry, violation of treaties, official disregard of duty; and always after a certain time the Powers singly or jointly have been compelled to rouse themselves. China refused to right the wrong and they were forced to do it for her. The same thing will happen again. The Powers' refusal to hold the Customs revision conference is as the writing on the wall. And the men who are at the head of affairs have no excuse for not reading it. They know the West, as the old mandarins did not, and they are fully alive to their country's delinquencies. In bygone days émeutes and massacres took place only because they were connived at by the officials of the day, who had this amount of excuse that, if learned in some things, they were intensely ignorant in others. That is not the case of officials to-day and if they let the baser elements in the vocal part of the population get out of hand, a reckoning will be exacted of them, the sterner for having been long delayed.

ANONYMOUS LETTERS

July 3.

One of our local correspondents has recently raised the question, with a strength of language really beyond what we can at all think necessary, whether the editor of a newspaper should publish anonymous letters whatever the contents may be. Provided that an anonymous writer sends his real name and address, and that it is generally recognized that an editor is not in the least responsible for the opinions and assertions expressed, it has always been the custom in journalism not to reject such a letter unless for some special reason. This is, or should be, so well understood that the subject is hardly worth discussing, if it were not for the further assertion that regarding the contents an editor should exercise a literary and moral censorship and publish only the letters which he is certain will meet with general approval. If adopted, such a rule would necessarily be applicable to both signed and unsigned letters. Upon this point it may be worth while to make the position clear.

It may be at once admitted that many of the letters printed are entertaining to some readers, but are frivolous, tiresome, or aggravating to others. Missionaries are rather prone to controversy over verbal inspiration, the approaching end of the world, the conflict of religion with science, and such matters, and they are given a free field; but doubtless they object to, and, perhaps if they had the power, would exclude, attacks on missionary work which to them may seem uncalled-for and unfair. Other readers are bored not only by theological controversies, but also by the literary effusions of the Moral Welfare League, arguments in favour of the prohibition of alcohol and tobacco, and the advocacy of other reforms such as the desirability of more decorous feminine habiliments at Henli. Then there are the perennial complaints, which all do not endorse, concerning the quality of theatrical and other entertainments and the propriety of being punctual; the tearing up of the roads by various companies, the inconveniences of tramcars, the hard lot of ricsha coolies and the iniquities of chauffeurs; the quality of the milk sold in Shanghai, the exorbitant rents, and the high cost of living generally; letters from Chinese on encroachments on their sovereign rights and their ill-treatment by foreigners; also discussions on such subjects as extra-territoriality, taxation, the different currencies, education, brigandage, the disposition of the Boxer Indemnity, and a hundred other subjects in which some of the people of Shanghai at various times are more or less interested or which cause them irritation. Some of the letters are signed with real names, some are not. The preference for anonymity may be quite proper. To the young the delight of seeing one's letter in print is all the greater when sheltered from harsh criticism. Some writers honestly object to newspaper notoriety. Others, when they air a grievance, wish to do so without making enemies or being embroiled in a controversy which will make their names public. As to signatures, some of our correspondents always sign their names to every letter they send in. This is certainly of great advantage when they speak with authority owing to their expert knowledge of the subject under discussion. But signed letters are not always the best; sometimes it almost seems as if the writers think they are entitled to extraordinary privileges because their letters are open, and are more reckless and provocative than anonymous correspondents. As to newspaper anonymity in general, including the authorship of leaders and so forth, it is discussed by Sir Edward Cook in his biography of Delane, the great editor of the London "Times," and the conclusion is reached that circumspection and the sense of responsibility are never so great as when journalists and others, behind the veil of anonymity, write not for their own credit but for the credit of the paper and the good of the public.

The question still remains, shall the editor sift the letters and print those only which he thinks will be agreeable to everyone, or shall he print all without discrimination? Despite the occasional unpleasantness that some letters may cause, surely the latter is the wiser course. A newspaper, besides giving the general news of the world, should be a mirror, as it were, reflecting in all its aspects the life of the local community. In the very interesting biography recently published of George Cadbury, the Quaker philanthropist, it is narrated that in his zeal for reform, including the purifying of the daily press, he purchased a London newspaper and rigorously excluded all racing news, and all matter, including advertisements, relating to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. His policy did not succeed. The objection was too strong to an expurgated newspaper. After heavy financial losses it passed into other hands. Human nature must be taken as it is. Ours is a mixed world, containing all sorts and conditions of men, each with his own likes and dislikes, and within reasonable limits a newspaper must meet the needs of all and grant free expression to all. Therefore, the "North-China Daily News" prints all the news that is fit to print of every kind, and publishes letters without censorship. The only request or stipulation we would make is that correspondents, whether they sign their real name or not, will at least try to be just and courteous in their communications.

SQ.-LDR. MACLAREN

July 4.

It certainly seemed yesterday as if Nature were trying to make amends to Squadron-Leader Maclaren for all the ill luck he has had since leaving England more than three months ago. For the most disagreeable season in the Shanghai year, the day was really beautiful. The aviators were favoured with a fair wind all the way from Hongkong and certainly nothing could have surpassed the ease and gracefulness of their landing. It is sad news that Sergeant Andrews has had to be taken to hospital suffering from heat stroke received at Hongkong; but, with the proper care and attention that he can obtain in Shanghai, we sincerely hope he will soon be himself again. One noticed yesterday that Squadron-Leader Maclaren and Flight Lieut. Penderlieth were cautious about exposing themselves bareheaded to the sun, when the battery of cameras was turned on them; and indeed rightly so. But they appear remarkably fit and jolly and ready to face anything.

This flight is different from others with which we have had to deal latterly in that it enjoys no Government backing. It is a purely private venture. Mr. Barton in greeting the aviators did so as the leading representative of the British community, not in official capacity. This is so much in accordance with British Government practice that it has ceased to be much noticed by the British people. But it is a fact worth attention as it certainly adds to the merit of the flight and brings out in greater relief the dauntless resolution with which Squadron-Leader Maclaren and his companions have fought their ill luck. Cordial thanks in this connexion are due to the American authorities who brought him the new machine from Tokio; and we certainly must not forget to mention that the Japanese Government, always helpful in such matters, are doing all they can to assist, particularly in respect of frequent telegrams as to weather conditions.

Imagination breaks down when we try to visualize what such a journey through the sky means. Twenty-four years ago the present writer saw Santos-Dumont steer his frail dirigible balloon from St. Cloud round the Eiffel Tower and back, perhaps a distance of seven miles in all, after weeks of waiting for favourable weather, which then meant a dead calm. Santos-Dumont's life-long creed was that man would fly sooner or later; but very few people believed him. When Blériot flew across the English Channel in 1909, many people were firmly convinced that such a thing could never happen again. And now men have flown to Australia, across the Atlantic (perhaps the most wonderful feat of all) and are in process of flying all round the world and in dirigibles have remained aloft for many days at a stretch. As with the long distance motor-races of yore, these are feats which probably will never be attempted in every-day business. But as with the motor-races, each flight adds enormously to the general stock of knowledge and increases the comfort and safety of aeroplane-travel. Truly we owe a great debt of gratitude to these intrepid heroes of the air.

THE FOURTH OF JULY

By an American Contributor

To-day Americans will celebrate with their customary fervour the anniversary of their Declaration of Independence. The descendants of their antagonists, while regretting that the inevitable separation did not take place more amicably, will join with them in wishing prosperity to the great republic of the West. We are quite sure that the same burning ardour with which the revolutionists in 1773 threw chests of tea overboard to show their objections to a tax which brought in the magnificent sum of £80 per annum—it cost much more to collect it—will be exercised by Americans 150 years later in supporting the Prohibition laws imposed by themselves. As an American correspondent recently reminded us, alcohol is now the one galling chain which hinders the full and glorious development of the United States and its institutions. It is most singular that the cup which ought to cheer—whether it inebriates or does not inebriate is another matter—should often have the contrary effect and lead to controversy.

As already intimated, feelings of bitterness between the two nations because of what happened so long ago are anachronistic. As a matter of fact, in England the separation soon ceased to be a practical consideration in her politics. Unfortunately, in the United States it has been different. For generations the minds of the young have been prejudiced against the mother country, the colonists being represented as the children of light, superhuman in their virtue and their strength, warring and prevailing against George III. standing for the powers of darkness. But this traditional view is being discarded by American historical scholars, trained in methods of scientific historical investigation and who have access to the public records, unknown to their predecessors, which were opened without reserve to scholars by the British Government in 1889. In contrast to the earlier American historians the point of view of their successors is very different. As one of the most learned of them writes:

> It should be remembered that during this entire period our history (preceding the revolution) is not only American, but English. We have to do here with the expansion of England. . . . It is believed that the nature and history of colonial political organisms can be understood only in the light of the English institutions from which they sprang. They were English institution worked by Englishmen, but under new and strange conditions. They therefore underwent modification. The study of the different types which appear, and of the changes which were wrought in them as a result of the comparatively free development through which they passed, will reveal the origin and nature of our early domestic institutions. Here again, though amidst considerable variety, certain fundamental tendencies will be found at work which give unity to the internal development of the colonies. These, where unchecked, led naturally toward greater independence of the mother country. But they were checked to a greater or less extent by the assertion of imperial control in each of the lines of governmental activity. As time went on imperial administration tended to become more systematic and inclusive. Its growth, together with the conflicts which arose in consequence of the application of its restraining influence to the colonies, constitutes the central thread of our colonial history. By following it the essential unity of the period will be discovered and a satisfactory explanation of its leading phenomena will be found.

In other words, in England events were slowly moving toward the development of an Empire and, consciously or unconsciously, the aims, ideas and policy of her statesmen were influenced by it. In the Colonies the spirit of self-reliance, with the consequent jealousy of all outside control, was being developed. The two movements were sooner or later bound to clash and make separation inevitable. It may be admitted that many mistakes were made by the British, but it can no longer be maintained that the revolution was provoked by British tyranny.

However, we fear it will be a long time before the traditional view percolates down to the general multitude in the United States, though the political orations on the Fourth of July since America's war with Spain, her war with Germany and her participation in the politics of the world, are not so much of the tail-twisting variety as formerly. When children now study history they find that England is not the only country that should be criticized. But the principal unifying influence was the recent Great War. Then it was that in a time of storm and stress deep called unto deep and there was a mighty response which will affect the relations of the two countries for all time. This is altogether to the good, for there are troubles ahead. Though they quarrel and bicker after the fashion of relatives when no great issues are at stake, it is well to know, and for the world to know, that when grave danger threatens the two nations will be found standing resolutely together.

THE TRADEMARK QUESTION

July 5.

A certain amount of heart-burning has, we understand, been caused by the article from our Peking correspondent published in our issue of the 3rd instant on the trademark question. The general impression liable to be created by the article, we are told, is that, while British firms have been the last to capitulate on the question of registration, their decision to register is a foregone conclusion: that on the whole they will be well advised to register: that Treaty rights will not, in any fundamental sense, be jeopardized and, finally, that the "North-China Daily News" agrees with these views. It is convenient to deal with the last point first. The publication of the views of its correspondents does not, in a British paper, necessarily imply that the opinions expressed have received editorial endorsement. We rely upon our correspondents to give us correct facts, and to reproduce correctly local views regarding them, while the fullest possible scope is allowed for the expression of personal views, often of very great value and help to us. It does not follow however, that we always agree, nor, should abstention from immediate comment be taken as evidence of agreement. Not infrequently comment is more effective if delayed for a space, during which the subject in question gets canvassed with the result that editorial opinion, when expressed, becomes the more useful.

In this particular instance we disagree with our Peking correspondent in the view that British firms will be well advised to register and that Treaty rights will not, in any fundamental sense, be jeopardized if they do. The British Chamber of Commerce has pointed out, in our opinion unanswerably, that acceptance of the trademark law in its present form, whether officially or, through registration, in effect, must inevitably, modify existing Treaty rights, in the first instance, by partially abrogating the rights agreed to in article 15 of the Treaty of Tientsin; in the second by abandoning, in certain Chinese Courts, a Treaty right to be represented in disputes with Chinese. Article 15 of the Treaty of Tientsin says:—

"All questions in regard to rights, whether of property or person, arising between British subjects, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the British authorities."

Under the new trademark law, as it stands at present, questions between British subjects in regard to trademark rights will, in the first instance, be subject to Chinese jurisdictions. We challenge any British authority, Diplomatic, Consular or judicial to show that this is not the case, or that a subsequent decision given in an Extraterritorial Court would in practice overrule a decision given by the Bureau. As regards disputes with Chinese, the trademark law makes no provision for foreign representation in any of the Courts of Appeal from the Bureau, and such representation will not be possible, in the terms of the law as it stands at present, until actions are brought in the ordinary Chinese Courts for infringement. And in this connexion, it may be added, we consider that our Peking correspondent underrates the importance of disputes with the Bureau as distinguished from grounds of complaint arising out of infringements. The point he appears to have overlooked is that, in cases of infringement, Chinese Courts, if they apply the law, must necessarily to a large extent be bound by decisions of the Bureau in respect of registration. There is nothing in the law to show that they will have any revisory, or discretionary, power in regard to a mark which the Bureau has accepted. To that extent any case of infringement will be pre-judged. Nor do we find ourselves able to derive quite the same amount of satisfaction as our correspondent appears to find in the fact that "trademark machinery is supplemented by the machinery of the Courts." Chinese Courts have not so far shown themselves to be at all satisfactory avenues to justice.

As regards the policy of British firms towards registration, the actual position at the moment, we understand, is that some eight firms are known to have decided to register, half of these as a result of instructions from home, where it is an open secret that official advice given in one quarter has not always tallied with advice given in another. The Manchester Chamber only a few days ago again advised its members not to register, while instructions to register recently sent out to certain offices in Shanghai have been cancelled by cable. In the circumstances, accordingly, British firms in general can scarcely be said to have capitulated. The remarks of our Peking correspondent on this head, and the use of the word "capitulation," are, however, not inappropriate if read either as an indication of the uncertainties of the position, or as a comment on the decisions of such firms as have registered. The future hangs very much in the balance, while registrations already effected have undoubtedly undermined the solidarity with which the trademark law was at first contested. It is no part of our business to teach firms their's, and those which have decided to register presumably know their own interests best. But as a member of the general public with Treaty rights to hold or lose, we are justified in pointing out that in this trademark question we are face to face with one of those issues in which a choice has to be made between cash and other good things. In not a few situations it is impossible "to have it both ways." If, because the money-earning capacity of trademarks is thought to be of greater consequence than the particular rights in question, firms decide to register, so be it; but let there be no self-deception in regard to the probable reaction of their decision on other Treaty rights.

M. Karakhan has asked for a postponement of the date for the opening of the Sino-Russian Conference, on the plea that special dèlegates have not yet arrived from Moscow.

MR. Wei Chen-tsu, Chinese Minister to Germany, wants a share of the fund from the German Bonds to pay the arrears of his Legation. Dr. Wellington Koo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, it is reported, has promised him to bring up the matter for discussion at a Cabinet meeting. Should the Cabinet approve the appropriation of the money for the maintenance of the Chinese Legation at Berlin, Mr. Wei will return to his post at once, otherwise, he will resign and accept the Presidency of the Wuhan University.

IN spite of the great emphasis which China's delegate to the League of Nations places on its rôle in the League, it now transpires that the Chinese Government finds great difficulty in making good its membership dues. The Ministry of Finance, being unable to find the money for the purpose, is now complaining about the burden being too heavy for the Chinese Government. It is not yet known whether the Ministry of Finance will make a formal request to the Powers—or to the League of Nations—for a reduction of China's membership dues. Perhaps this has to be made by another department of the Government, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, if it is to be made at all.

THE Kiangsu Boy Scouts who left Shanghai on Sunday morning by the 9.30 express en route for the International Boy Scout Jamboree to be held in Denmark during August were accorded a royal send-off. On account of the shortness of time the party will take the trans-Siberian route, returning viâ Suez. The civil Governor of Kiangsu, Han Kuo-chun, who is an enthusiastic supporter of the movement, has given $10,000 in order that the Scouts might have the benefit of travel and that China might be represented at the Jamboree. The official party is made up of two scouts from St. John's University, two from Nanyang College, one from Soochow University, and one from Southeastern University, Nanking. These boys were chosen because of their distinction in scout work, physical strength and knowledge of English. The same test was applied to the four remaining scouts who pay their own way. Two commissioners and Mr. C. F. Li, in charge of the party, complete the group.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Advance of Wireless

Science and invention have made great strides in numerous directions during the present century, but for sheer rapid development combined with usefulness to mankind the science of wireless telegraphy has probably made greater strides than any other branch of scientific inventive activity. Wireless telegraphy has proved a boon in many ways, but in none to a greater degree than in its relation to shipping and navigation. It is remarkable to think that it is only nineteen years since wireless was first installed in a passenger vessel, especially bearing in mind that at the present day practically every ocean-going passenger vessel and the majority of large cargo-ships have a wireless installation. Some of the inventions consecutary to wireless telegraphy are almost as remarkable as the original invention. One of the most important of these is what is known as the wireless beam transmitter, an apparatus which is intended to enable all classes of coasting shipping fitted with an appropriate receiver, including vessels which do not carry wireless operators, to obtain correct bearings when in fog or when the position is doubtful. Another remarkable wireless "side-line" is the wireless bell, which is used principally in wireless telegraph apparatus for communication between lightships and shore stations, while yet another is a wireless set for ships' lifeboats, which has specially been designed with a view to the fact that it will be used under the most adverse weather conditions and in a very confined space. The transmitter can attract a ship using a crystal detector at a distance of 50 miles, and the receiver has directional qualities. Considering the importance of shipping to this part of the world, it is surprising that wireless, in its various forms, has not already been adopted much more extensively than is the case. There are very few powerful wireless stations in China, there is no direction finding station, and only a small proportion of local passenger ships are fitted with wireless means of communication. Now that the advantages of wireless telegraphy have so definitely been established, we can hope that in the not distant future the China Coast shipping will enjoy some of the advantages and additional safety attendant upon wireless which at present it is denied.

Mixed Court Changes

Several changes have taken place at the Mixed Court within the last few days, Mr. Kuan Chun being granted sick leave, Mr. Yui Yingvong taking his place temporarily, Mr. Chang Chien-wen resigning, and three other assistant magistrates being appointed. We have been so singularly fortunate in the matter of Mixed Court magistrates that a word or two with regard to them will not be out of place. Everybody knows genial Mr. Kuan, with his smile that only dies away during the brief intervals occupied in passing sentence or reprimanding some offender and it returns the next moment. His law is sound and despite his appreciation of anything humorous he never allows levity to upset the dignity of his court. To one who knows him well it always seems intensely comical when, in strict accordance with practice, very indifferent interpreters struggle through their caricatures of translation, knowing that Mr. Kuan, serene and smiling above them, is better versed in both Chinese and English than ever they will be. Mr. Yui may not be so well known to all, but he is a very able substitute for his senior. He is a native of Chêkiang and a descendant of a well-known official. He graduated with high distinctions at the Government University of Law. At one time he was the presiding judge of the Chinese Court in Nantao and 10 years ago was appointed a Magistrate of the International Mixed Court. During his tenure of office he has proved to be a very capable judge, having displayed an erudite knowledge of law and in the administration of justice he has won for himself the respect of the public. Many decorations have been bestowed on him, amongst which may be mentioned the Grand Cross of the Crown of Italy and the Second Class of the Chia Ho with precious brilliants and great sash. The community may be congratulated upon having such a capable official as the Chief Magistrate during the absence of Mr. Kuan, and it is hoped the latter soon will recover his normal health

Mr. S. C. Woo

In response to our request for fuller information with regard to Mr. S. C. Woo who is now playing in the Tennis Tournament at Wimbledon, a correspondent kindly writes that Mr. Woo is the youngest son of Mr. Ng Pak To, of Hongkong, and a half-brother of Mr. Ng Sze-kuong, the tennis player. Mr. Woo is not at Oxford University. He was at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, where he secured two half-blues in Tennis and Billiards. He came down in 1921 and is now reading for the Bar. While this is his first appearance at Wimbledon he has played at Queens for the past four years. He distinguished himself in the Amateur Billiards Championship in 1922, photographs and cartoons of the "Oriental Genius" appearing in many of the Home papers.

The Motor Garage Case

A great deal of sympathy will be felt for Mr. Paul Kelly in the loss of his action against the Asiatic Motors, Inc., and it does not need much reading between the lines to feel that that sympathy is fully shared by the learned Judge. Mr. Kelly put money into the business, he even advanced small sums out of his pocket at odd moments; a short time after entering the firm he agreed to accept less salary that he had contracted for and even this he did not get. Although he joined the firm early in May, there appears to have been no complaint of his work until September, by which time he certainly had complaints of his own. Of all this it is clear that Judge Purdy took a very human view. But the rights of defendants under a "satisfaction agreement" left him no option but to give judgment for them.

More Fairy Tales

We dislike accusing the Chinese delegate to the International Labour Conference at Geneva of misleading the other delegates but when he told them that China had introduced an 8-hr. day for children and abolished night work for women, we regret to say he was romancing. It is true that about two years ago Peking announced the promulgation of new labour regulations which, if we remember rightly, contained these provisos. The full text has never been published. The summary was enough to draw even from those who are working for reform in the mills a protest against its impracticability and the regulations have never been enforced. The Ewo mills in Shanghai have as a purely voluntary effort limited the age and hours of child labour and have cut out night work for women. In most if not all Chinese mills in China, conditions of labour are such as no Western country would tolerate for a moment. One hopes there may have been somebody at Geneva to contradict Mr. Hsiao's perversion of fact, but one fears there was not.

Police Arrogance

The Chinese police appear to be impressed with the notion nowadays that in any dealings with foreigners it is not necessary to state a case or even to be sure that they are in touch with the right man, but simply to get hold of some one, or several if possible, belabour them unmercifully—preferably with a rifle butt—and then lock them up. If in the morning some interfering Consul should come along and prove the victims to be absolutely innocent, why then they can be released and the affair forgotten, for Peking always can talk a matter of that sort to an end and in any case there is no money in the treasury with which to pay compensation. Furthermore, the stupid foreigner does not seem to be able to tell one Chinese policeman from another, so all are safe. The Peking and Tientsin incidents were bad enough, the affair at Woosung on Sunday was a gross abuse of authority, and the story chronicled on another page of what happened at the Russian Students' Union tells of a downright outrage. Apparently the police consider now that they have a perfect right to break into any man's house without warrant, seize upon anyone within reach and, without making charges or asking questions, cruelly misuse people. Obviously in this case the police will say that they had reason to believe a man who had committed an offence was in hiding in the house and was being sheltered by the students. There were grounds for such a belief, but that does not justify breaking into a house in the dead of night and committing violent assaults. If these policemen do not mend their ways, some day they will be taking liberties with someone who keeps a kennel of Alsatians, or they will be paying an unexpected call on the mess where there gather all our Battlers, Kids, Babes, Terrors, and Champions of uncharted areas. It is unlikely that in such an event there will be any argument by the slow process of the exchange of diplomatic notes —especially with the Alsatians.

Chilean Status

Although the Diplomatic Body refused to be a ruler and a judge as between the Chinese Government and the Chilean Consul, the wording of their note is no unfair indication of what they really think. And there is of course no doubt that Chileans enjoy extraterritoriality under their treaty. That treaty was concluded in 1915 and contains the usual "most favoured nation" clause, reference to which again appears in Mr. Arce's exequatur. In 1918 a treaty was concluded with Switzerland, also on the "most favoured nation" lines, but with a footnote added mentioning extraterritorial rights as included. The absence of such a footnote from the Chilean treaty concluded three years earlier in no way invalidates the rights secured under the "most favoured nation" clause. By 1918 the Chinese were beginning to evolve the policy which they enunciated at the Versailles Conference in 1919, namely, that they would grant no more extraterritorial rights. Hence the clause in the Swiss treaty. Only two treaties have since been concluded, with Persia and Bolivia—no extraterritorial rights in them. But that they are included in the nine years old treaty with Chile there is no doubt whatever.

Customs Drug Seizures

The Statistical Department of the Chinese Maritime Customs, with its figures that cannot lie or exaggerate, must be giving very material assistance to those who still determinedly fight on in the battle against the cultivation and use of opium in China. Up to 1921 there was a remarkable increase in the seizures, the figures jumping from just over 11 tons in 1918 to 67 tons in the former year. After that there was another decline, just over 30 tons being seized in 1922 and 23 tons in 1923. But the trouble is not all with opium, for the seizures of morphia and cocaine have been ever greater proportionately. In 1918 the figures were comparatively trifling, but thereafter they increased, falling slightly in 1922, but going up with a tremendous and most alarming bound in 1923, when the seizures of morphia were 1,100 lb., as compared with 557 lb. in 1922 and of cocaine 1,294 lb., as against 406. Nor do these figures take into account large quantities of harmful preparations of the drugs seized by the Customs. The Department very definitely states that opium rapidly is coming back to the place it held before the ban was placed upon it, whilst there is the added peril of morphia and cocaine. It is reasonable to assume that more of the drugs gets through than is seized and a consideration of that fact suggests startling statistics. It can be argued with a certain amount of truth that Chinese brought up to opium can continue to smoke it regularly without any really very harmful effects, but the case is different with morphia and cocaine. Many foreigners frankly admit that they have given opium smoking at least one trial, "just to see what it is like" and the consequences invariably have been so disagreeable that they have not had the slightest inclination to repeat the test. The beautiful dreams and the blissful state of contentment are a myth and the experiment is not worth the consequences. The other drugs have not such unpleasant associations in the taking and that is what makes them so dangerous.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE BOMB OUTRAGE IN CANTON

Vivid Description by one Present of the Attempt on the Governor of Indo-China in Which Five Persons Were Killed and Many Wounded

By Georges Guignard.

Canton, June 21.

About 50 members of the French colony, ladies and gentlemen, sat down to the dinner in honour of the French Governor and party.

The dinner took place in the lobby of the hotel, the long table being placed near the windows, so as to have as much breeze as possible. It was about 8.45 p.m. when we sat down. M. Merlin sat with his back to one of the windows, these windows giving access to the street.

We had not been seated more than four minutes when from the last window on the left of the Governor, a man, believed to be an Annamite, threw a bomb, or rather an infernal bomb, placed in a leather bag. This landed with terrible force at the end of the long table, smashing plates, glasses, etc. From where I was sitting, the last one at the end of the table on the right of the Governor, it seemed to us all, at that end, that some one was playing a joke by throwing a Chinese cracker. There was some confusion where the bag had dropped, many people asking what it was. After what most of us all agree to be six seconds a terrible explosion took place, smashing the end of the table and sending flying plates, glasses, cutlery, etc., and I am sorry to say killing on the spot my two friends M. and Mme André Demaretz, who had just arrived from France 15 days ago, as well as Mr. Emile Rougeau of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine. The wounded are Dr. Casabianca, in charge of the French Hospital, and acting French Consul; he has now lost his right arm, and has a large wound in his back several inches long; he has been operated upon since by other French doctors. M. Pelletier had, I was told, 58 wounds and died after in the Hospital; so did M. Gerin of the firm of Gerin, Drevard and Cie, of Shanghai, making five killed. Mme. Rolin, wife of the manager of the Banque Industrielle de Chine at Canton, was removed to Hospital with a nasty wound in the right arm, Lieut. Bernard of the French navy was taken to hospital and operated on; also M. Fournier of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine, and many others, of whom I do not yet know the names. Three Chinese boys were also wounded.

A Frightful Sight

It was the worst sight I ever saw. When I left my chair, the first thing I saw was the doctor on the floor in a terrible condition. I carried him with the help of another Frenchman to a sofa, and seeing so many wounded all round, and only one doctor to attend to all, I rushed for the British doctor. He was already attending to some French people who had rushed to him for first treatment; he came round soon and did most valuable work. When I returned to the hotel I then saw the extent of the terrible slaughter; men and women were lying in pools of blood in agony on the floor. Here it must be realized that we had almost nothing to help our poor friends. The Sailors' Home is quite near the hotel. Several British and American sailors rushed to the hotel, they tore off their shirts to make bandages and acted in the most gallant way. A little time after, British, American and French officers and sailors with doctors arrived and rendered most valuable work.

I then saw the dead. They were in a terrible state, the force of the explosion having driven knives, forks, plates, etc. into their bodies. The table where the bomb had dropped was not to be seen, having been blown up, the teak floor had many holes, some an inch deep. The ceiling was covered with shot, some shots having penetrated to the second floor. The bulk of the explosion went up to the ceiling, otherwise more of us would have been killed. Had, on the other hand, the man thrown the bomb at the second window, we all agree that half of us would have been killed and the rest wounded. I took charge of the dead and with 12 British sailors took then to the Canton Hospital mortuary. The wounded were taken to hospital in different ways, mostly on naval stretchers to the Canton and French Hospitals.

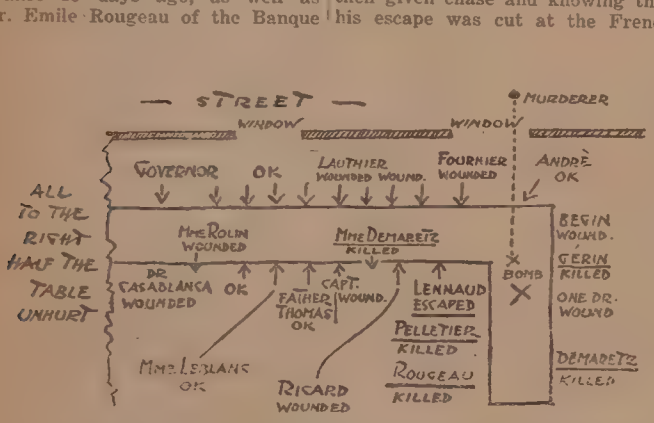
The Murderer's Escape.

The murderer ran down Central Avenue, but being armed and firing at the Chinese policemen who had then given chase and knowing that his escape was cut at the French bridge of Shameen, he turned down a street on to the Bund and threw himself into the river. All efforts of the police and sailors of various nationalities were in vain, the night being dark and the river broad; he was not seen again.

To-day was the funeral of the five victims. It took place at the French church of Shameen, the five coffins were draped in the tricolour of France and French sailors stood each side of the coffins. The ceremony was very impressive: French sailors carried the coffins in line escorted by a French naval guard from the Cronne to the French Bund, where the coffins were placed on a large houseboat. Most of the residents of Shameen were present at the ceremony, all flags were half-mast in town, and on merchant steamers in harbour as well. The cemetery is situated some distance down the river; quite a number of steam launches and motor boats took people down to the cemetery.

Before the five coffins the Captain of the Cronne delivered a most impressive address, which was replied to by the second of the Governor's Cabinet. Mr. Lautheir, manager of the Banque de l'Indo-Chine (who was also slightly wounded) replied. Then came a naval salute from the officers and sailors. The Roman Catholic priest then read the prayers. Over 200 wreaths were sent.

This outrageous act has been a terrible blow to our little colony, and we cannot yet realize it. Our sincere thanks to our British and American friends for help rendered in such trying circumstances.



Plan of the dinner table. Note the curious partiality of the effects of the explosion, some guests escaping uninjured right in the midst of the dead and wounded

SUN PAO-CHI STRIVING TO GET OUT

Peking, June 25.

The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, who went back to Haitien yesterday, will return to Peking this afternoon, according to reports in Chinese circles, as the result of persuasion exercised by Admiral Wu Yu-lin and General Nieh Hsian-fan, Chief of the Peking Gendarmerie. The Premier did not see the President during his last stay in Peking, and it appears that the President wishes to talk over with the Premier matters related to the present Cabinet impasse.

There are signs of official dissatisfaction with the Cabinet situation, and it is reported that, if Mr. Sun does not soon agree to resume his official duties, another Premier will be selected. In this connexion Mr. Wang Yi-chih is mentioned as likely to be nominated.

Various explanations are being put forward in explanation of Premier Sun's abstention from office, none of which can be confirmed officially. Indeed, nearly everyone in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject pust forward most cautiously a different reason. Unofficial circles, however, are much more outspoken, and it is freely hinted that the real explanation is the probability of a settlement of the gold franc question being brought forward, now that the Sino-Russian and Sino-German negotiations have ended in the signing of agreements. Mr. Sun Pao-chi stands committed to Parliament never to agree to payment of the outstanding indemnities in gold, and, as that is the only settlement possible, his position as Premier might involve difficulties.

General Wang Shou-chien, one of Marshal Wu Pei-fu's delegates in Peking has gone to Loyang. It is reported that he was summoned by Marshal Wu to report on the Cabinet difficulties. His return to Peking may be followed by a solution of the trouble.

June 26.

Premier Sun Pao-chi returned to Peking last evening and had a long talk with the President. It is understood that Premier Sun agreed to resume his duties as Premier, but insisted upon having a few days leave before doing so.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE DRUG TRAFFIC IN SHANGHAI

Customs Seizures During the Past Quarter: Some Comparisons

Peking, June 27.

The International Anti-Opium Association states that during the quarter ended on June 18, 1924, there were seized by the Maritime Customs, Shanghai:—

216 packets containing 119 lb. of morphia, manufactured by Marck, Germany, seized on the str. Latvia, also 40 tins containing 1,000 oz. of heroin seized on the str. Aachen. The latter seizure was unlabelled both as to name of drug and manufacturer.

Durng the last 12 months the seizure of unlabelled narcotics greatly increased. During the same quarter in 1923, in nine seizures representing three different countries and comprising nearly 4,000 oz. of narcotic, only one seizure of 60 odd ounces was not labelled either as to drug or manufacturer.

With the increasing activities of the League of Nations in connexion with drug traffic there is a growing desire to avoid detection on the part of manufacturers.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE FLOODS IN FUKIEN

U. S. Destroyer Despatched to Foochow

Peking, June 27.

The Commander-in-Chief of the United States Asiatic Fleet has sent a destroyer to stand by at Foochow in case assistance should be needed in connexion with the floods there.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. WEATHERBE AND AN OCTROI OFFICIAL

Judgment in Recent Charge of Assault Against Mr. Weatherbe But Complainant's Statement of His Injuries Not Upheld: Notice of Appeal

Peking, June 25.

Judgment was given by Mr. W. P. W. Turner, British Consul in Peking, this afternoon in the case in which Mr. D'Arcy Weatherbe was charged with having assaulted an Octroi official named Liu Kuai-yuan.

Mr. Turner said: "In this case, whilst there is conflict of testimony in points of detail, the main facts appear beyond dispute and indicate that, as a result of the defendant's taking exception to a direction of the complainant to submit his parcel to Octroi examination, a dispute arose, both parties losing their tempers and finally employing degrees of force to effect their different purposes.

It appears clearly established that at the outset the complainant desired the defendant to proceed to the Octrol office, that the latter refused to comply and endeavoured to drive off in his car, that the complainant thereupon attempted to prevent him at first by barring defendant's access to the car, and later, when this measure failed, by seizing the defendant forcibly by the sleeve. From this point the incident developed into an open scuffle, during which, on the defendant's own admission, he struck the complaintant.

Who Struck First?

The defendant's defence is that the complainant, in barring his way and seizing him by the coat, was the first to employ force, and that the assault committed by him on the complainant was therefore justified on grounds of self-defence as well as of defence of his servant and of his property, both of which had during the incident been seized by the complainant.

It is true, as argued by defendant's counsel, that under British law proof that the prosecutor first assaulted or beat the defendant and that the latter then assaulted the prosecutor in self defence is a good answer by the defendant to a charge of assault, provided the force employed by the latter is no more than is necessary for his self-protection, but this defence will not hold good when the prosecutor's prior assault was justifiable.

The case for the defence must therefore hang or fall on a determination as to whether or not the complainant in this case was justified in employing forcible measures in order to prevent the defendant from removing his parcel without examination.

The defence contends that he was not so justified, arguing that the complainant's duties were merely to keep a look out for persons coming out of the Post Office and to direct them to the Octroi office, and that his authority did not extend beyond these functions. The defence submits accordingly that, defendant having refused or neglected to proceed as directed to the Octroi office for examination of the parcel and assessment of duty, the complainant must accept his refusal and can only rely for redress on a complaint to the defendant's authorities.

Reasonable Coercion

Having regard to all the circumstances, I am not prepared to agree that this submission is reasonable, the more so since no fully conclusive evidence is adduced that without some steps to restrain the defendant from leaving the spot, his identity and nationality could subsequently have been ascertained. I am satisfied that the complainant was entitled to employ reasonable coercive measures to frustrate such a contingency.

Again it must be borne in mind that the defendant admitted receiving in the Post Office a printed notice in English calling upon him to take his parcel to the Octroi office for examination and payment of duty, and his statement that he believed it to be in Chinese and so did not trouble to look at it, can hardly be accepted as an excuse for disregarding it. In any case the evidence clearly established that he was in no doubt as to the obligation sought to be imposed on him, and it appears to the Court that, if the defendant believed this obligation could not legally be enforced on him—though no grounds for such belief have been put forward—his proper course as a prudent man under all the circumstances would have been to submit under protest and subsequently to enter a complaint with his national authorities.

For the reasons set forth above I am of opinion, therefore, that the defendant has not made a good answer to the charge and that the complainant must succeed.

Complainant's Exaggerations

There only remains to consider the degree of violence employed by the defendant at the time of the assault, with a view to determining the penalty to be imposed. On this point there is considerable divergence between the evidence of the parties. The complainant alleges that, apart from the blow on the face which caused blood to flow, he also received very severe wounds on the chest which necessitated medical treatment for over two weeks. The defendant admits the blow on the face, but denies striking the complainant on the chest, and he further asserts, in his justification, that the complainant was assisted in the scuffle by at least three others. The complainant's account is supported by other witnesses, but their evidence is discounted in some cases by subsequent admissions that they were too far away to see clearly what happened, whilst the complainant's own evidence is gravely weakened by the fact that, although given every opportunity, he failed to produce any medical testimony bearing out the severity of his wounds. I am bound, therefore, to accept the defendant's version of the occurrence and to reach the conclusion that the complainant's injuries were by no means so serious as alleged.

The finding of the Court is that the defendant be fined in the sum of 25 dollars and shall in addition pay a further sum of 25 dollars to the complainant as damages. Costs to be borne by defendant.

Mr. Weatherbe applied for and was granted a stay of execution in order to consult his legal adviser with a view to appeal.

June 29.

Mr. Weatherbe has appealed against the judgment delivered by Mr. W. P. W. Turner, British Consul in Peking, in the case in which he was charged with having assaulted an Octroi official named Liu Kuai-yuan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ALLEGED FORGER ARRESTED

Wanted in Tientsin and Taken in Mukden: Recognized by Photograph

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mukden, June 25.

A rather smart arrest was effected this afternoon in the offices of the British Cigarette Co., when C. F. Clark, of Hongkong, wanted for forgery in Tientsin was taken into custody.

Mr. Biggin, to whom credit is due for identification, noticed his photo hanging on the notice board in the British Consulate, and confided his suspicions to the accountant, Mr. C. T. Woodruff, who confirmed the likeness and straightway informed the Consul that the wanted man had been engaged only a few days before. Mr. H. Porter arranged for the Vice Consul, Mr. Montgomery, to apprehend Clark, who was quietly at work at his desk when the police arrived. Mr. Montgomery was shown into the private office and Mr. Woodruff then summoned the delinquent.

An amusing incident then occurred, for when the Chinese police entered the room, the grabbed at the first person in view, who happened to be Mr. Woodruff. On being confronted and charged by the Vice-Consul, Clark made no effort to dispute his indentity, and was unobtrusively led away. The affair was managed so quietly that not the slightest inkling of what was about to happen leaked out.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin has contributed $50,000 to assist ex-President Li Yuang-hung to establish the Wu-han University.

LULL IN THE BATTLE FOR KUEILIN

Arrival of Northern Peace Delegates and Departure for Enemy G. H. Q. with Marshal Lu Yung-ting's Terms: A Week's Desperate Fighting

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

May 21.

It is stated that during the blowing up of the city wall last night the enemy lost more heavily than in any other engagement since the siege began. All the buildings just outside the city wall have been burned, but some old brick walls are still standing and behind one of these the squad who were to scale the wall were in hiding waiting for the explosion to occur when they were to rush forward and try to gain an entrance into the city. This storming party were armed with automatics, but unfortunately for them when the explosion occurred the shock was so great that the wall behind which they were hiding fell and buried many of them under the ruins. This halted the rush for the wall. The second company waited a moment for their comrades to make the charge and then they rushed forward, but as this part of the city wall sank down bodily it could not be scaled. Thus the attackers were the target for heavy fire from the wall. A third company were fired at when crossing the stone bridge leading to the gate and many of them were slain. Later many dead could be seen lying about.

Later in the day carpenters and other workmen were given orders to erect a scaffolding on the west side of the south gate against the wall. The scaffolding is about 100 feet long just behind the wall and about four feet below the inner side, so that in case of another explosion and the parapets fall out the soldiers will not be exposed, but will have protection from behind which they can fight.

It is stated that a company of city soldiers have been lowered over the wall at an obscure spot near the South Gate and these are to prevent the outside forces from further tunnelling. The city troops are to tunnel through to the large godown in which enemy troops are stationed and from which the tunnel leading to the South Gate was dug.

May 23.

To-night forces were sent out by the East Water Gate and crept round to the Literary Gate where they surprised the enemy and after a short and sharp skirmish, assisted by guns from the city wall, the city soldiers, are said to have driven the opposing forces from some of their positions and captured arms and ammunition.

The Cloud Cliff Monastery in which a few nuns were still living, but which has been occupied by enemy troops, was the centre of one skirmish and during the fighting some of the nuns were shot dead. Later the monastery was put to the torch so as to prevent the enemy troops from again congregating there.

May 27.

A severe fight this morning which lasted for about half an hour resulted in the enemy troops being worsted and driven back from their positions, and a company of soldiers 400 strong, surrendered to Marhal Lu's troops.

Fighting began about midnight when enemy outposts were detected creeping up near the city's outer defences, and at once, from each side rifle shots were exchanged. Nothing important developed, however, until after daylight this morning when a picked company 600 strong, rushed out and gave battle. Each member of the attacking force wore a yellow identification badge upon his arm, and to each had been given a sum of money as a reward for risking his life in the struggle. The first charge was not successful. The attackers met with such a strong resistance that they gradually were compelled to fall back and yield the ground they had gained. However, the advance guard were soon reinforced by their comrades and together they managed to retake the first positions, and pressed on until other hills and stretches of level plain were also under their control. The charge was rather costly as one-twelfth of all those who took part were either killed or wounded.

The company who surrendered were largely made up of men from the western part of the province and many of them had formerly been soldiers under Marshal Lu. Some of the opposing forces were old acquaintances and when they recognized each other on the field of battle they refused to fight further. Later representatives met and it was decided that the surrendered men should remain in a village outside the city pending further consultation.

Peace Delegates' Arrival.

It is stated on good authority that peace delegates purporting to be acting under instructions from Wu Pei-fu have arrived. These men are said to have been near the city for some time, but had not been permitted to pass through the outer lines of the besieging forces. However, since the fight of yesterday morning they have been permitted to enter the city and they are now trying to bring the warring factions to terms. This is by no means an easy task as some of the opposing leaders are sworn enemies, and although they have been fighting for 48 days they still do not care for a peaceful settlement, but prefer deciding the issues on the field of battle. But the majority of soldiers on each sides are war-weary, and while as I write bullets are still flying overhead and the big cannon continue to roar, it is still hoped that the end has been reached and that the wearisome siege with all its sorrow and suffering, may be raised within the next few days.

Besieged Marshal's Terms

May 29.

Yesterday the Peace delegates who arrived recently from Marshal Wu Pei-fu met Marshal Lu and his staff and discussed peace terms. Gen. Shen claims that the city of Kueilin is within his jurisdiction, and that his authority was defied when Marshal Lu stationed his forces here. Marshal Lu maintains he was acting in his capacity as Pacificator of the Province when he visited this section of the province and that without warning he was unceremoniously surrounded by Shen's troops. Marshal Lu now promises that if Gen. Shen will lift the siege, and withdraw his troops from the city, he will not pursue the Southern troops or attack them even though the relieving forces do arrive. Both sides are to cease hostilities pending further word from Wu Pei-fu.

The peace delegates left at noon to-day for Liangfung market 45 li south of the city, where Gen. Shen and his staff are to be found, and may return in a day or two with the accepted terms.

Meanwhile the warfare continues.

It is estimated that since the siege began 49 days ago about 500 have been killed or wounded while perhaps the casualties on the other side number over 1,000

Plague Feared.

During the weeks of fighting many of those who were killed in battle have laid for days in the open fields and the stench caused by these decomposing bodies, could with the unsanitary hospital conditions gives cause for alarm. Flies have increased in alarming numbers and it is feared by many that these plague-spreaders may cause an epedemic to break out at any time. A fly-killing campaign has therefore been instituted and the daily paper this morning gave notice that two cents a 100 would be paid to those who would engage in the work of fly-extermination. Children to-day could be seen on the street swatting the flies and putting them in match boxes ready to deliver to the "fly coroner."

Sufferings of Besieged Citizens: Eating Grass

Kueilin, May 30.

The sufferings which multitudes of the poor people in the city are enduring beggar description. Many had been living from hand to mouth and the first month of the siege had not passed before these were in dire need. Soon the city granaries were opened and rice was sold at a reasonable price by the civil authorities, and to supply the need of food for those who were too poor to pay, charitable institutions opened rice kitchens where congee was cooked and given free to the hungry multitudes who thronged around and begged for food, Some stores distributed a catty of of uncooked rice to those who had families who could not come and be served congee. Near these rice distributing centres a motely crowd of the city's destitute fill the streets hours before the doors are open. Old and young, sick and well, huddle together and stand for hours in the boiling sun or the pelting rain waiting their turn to receive the pittance of food which will only last them one day. The next day the same crowd, with other added, assemble once more and clamour for food.

All manner of weeds, grass and leaves are being collected and used as vegetables. Banna leaves are a favourite variety doubtless because of their bulk and the quantity of eating matter they produce. It is a common sight to see women and girls hunting in fence corners and in garden lots among the weeds and grasses, for anything that can be cooked and turned into food.

Beggars are increasing daily and many of those who were sick, or afflicted with disease are dying in back streets and deserted temples. Honest laborers have been without employment for nearly two months while the siege has lasted. These soon used up their little laid-by cash and then the scanty household effects were sold and bedding and clothing pawned and at last in their extremity they have been compelled to join the nameless crowd who wander aimlessly about the streets and look to the city for their support.

To secure sufficient fire wood for the city's need has also become a pressing problem. Small bundles of wood that formerly were sold for a few pennies now sell five bundles for a dollar. Old houses have been torn down and many public buildings have been stripped of their woodwork to supply fuel for the soldiers. Partitions and floorings in the homes of the poor have, in many cases, been cut up for firewood, and in extreme circumstances even household furniture has been sacrificed to supply the need of daily fuel.

To-day is the 53rd day of the siege of Kueilin and still peace seems to be a great way off. Recently there have been repeated rumours that the enemy forces are again digging tunnels with the object of making a third attempt to blow up the city wall. In order to guard against such an eventuality orders have been given to most of the people living in the houses on the street skirting the wall from the south gate to the Literary gate that they must move immediately. Some of the buildings have already been torn down save the bare framework and behind these buildings, using them whenever possible, an inner defence wall is being hastily erected. This wall extends clear across the south gates street and joins to the buildings beyond.

Should the wall be again blown up and the outside forces manage to rush in they will find themselves obstructed by this second wall from whose gaping gun holes they will meet such a warm reception that entrance into the city seems to be an impossibility.

Nearer the Literary gate, in some of the houses, lateral trenches have been dug with persumably the object of sapping incoming trenches and detecting the enemy's movements, while underneath the Literary gate a hole is being dug from the inside unawares and spy, reconnoitre or rush the buildings in which the enemy is supposed to be operating.

Leaders Admit War Huge Blunder.

The peace delegates purporting to come from Loyang who visited the city a week ago have not yet returned, but a special messenger has arrived bearing a letter from Shen Hung-yin in which he disclaims all responsibility for the present war. He says hostilities were brought about by his army officers who were acting contrary to his instructions when they marched upon Kueilin and that in so doing they made a great mistake.

The last words of this message are undoubtedly true. "A Great Mistake" when without sufficient reason hundreds of men have been killed in battle, and the bodies of some of the dead still lie unburied in the open fields.

Relief Troops Held at Bay

It seems certain now that the promised reinforcements which were expected to come from every side are being effectually held back in the mountain passes by the opposing forces that were sent against them, and as the siege reaches its 55th day little hope is now entertained that they will ever arrive. However, the morale of the besieging army seems to have been effected as in recent days their attacks upon the city have been less effective and sporadic, while on nearly every side of the city the opposing forces have been driven back from the wall a considerable distance. At lease three of the city gates are daily slightly opened for the free access of soldiers and civilians with passes.

In order to save the ammunition and reserve the best for the final struggle, modern warfare is fast giving way to ancient military methods. The field gun with its explosive shells is heard no more, but in its place the ancient brass and iron cannon that have laid at the city gates for centuries, half buried in the earth have been dug up and now bark and roar in anger as they cast their iorn slugs out at the opposing forces. Machine guns have ceased to shatter, but instead long, ancient iron pieces stand ready to defy to foe. Modern bombs have not been used, but recently packages of powder encased in tin or iron cases, and with fuses attached ready to light and throw are now held in readiness along the wall where it is suspected the enemy may try and launch a supprise attack.

Civilians Request Cessation of Hostilities.

June 6.

To-day the getry, merchants, and scholars held a meeting in the Chamber of Commerce to which missionaries were invited. The chairman, Tsin Tung, stated the object of the meeting was to discuss what steps the city might take on behalf of peace. After considerable discussion a letter was written to Teng Shui-chen, commanding the outside forces requesting him to meet a delegation representing the citizens of Kueilin, Gen. Teng to state the time and place of meeting and to name the road over which the delegates should travel should the request be granted, and asking that protection be affored the delegates.

If I sense the situation aright it appears that really both sides are quite willing, if not anxious, to stop fighting, but neither side can say so plainly and maintain the desired "Face." Therefore if a third party—a non-combatant—steps in and on behalf of the suffering civilian population asks for a cessation of hostilities both sides will fell reticent and will condescent to grant this request, while doubtless mantaining most vigorously that they were both prepared to continue the struggle for another year if necessary.

YIHYANG MARU ON ROCKS NEAR WANHSIEN

Reported Sinking Rapidly

Hankow, June 28.

The "Independent Herald" reports that the Yihyang Maru struck the rocks 20 miles above Kueifu. She was badly holed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, June 28.

The Japanese Legation learns that the Yihyang Maru struck rocks near Wanhsien while on her way from Chungking at 10 on the morning of June 26. The steamer is reported to be sinking rapidly. All the passengers have been taken ashore and the cargo is being unloaded. The Yungyang Maru will leave Ichang for the scene with the intention of salvaging the steamer, but her condition is believed to be hopeless.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANDIT LEADER'S AGENT ARRESTED IN PEKING

Peking, June 27.

A secret agent of the notorious bandit leader, Chow Ma-ma of Yenchowfu, named Wang Tsai-chang, was arrested in Peking yesterday by Peking detectives assisted by the local police. Wang will be sent back to Yenchowfu for trial.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JACK ASHORE AT NINGPO

Unexpected Arrival of H.M.S. Bluebell: Football and Concert

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Ningpo, Chê., June 28.

The unexpected arrival of a British gunboat has naturally been an event of importance, especially to the British section of the community.

Preparations were made to entertain the bluejackets. A football match took place and at the British Consulate, the crew assisted by local talent gave a concert. The genial presence of so many Jack Tars, the number and variety of their contributions (ranging from "Nirvana" to "My Old Man's a Dustman") evoked from the very first the spirit of enjoyment, while the instrumental music of Miss Davies (violin) and Miss Honey (piano) and the songs of Mr. R. Denniston, won great applause. Mr. Denniston has fine bass voice and rendered very effectively "Invictus" (Henley's words) "The Trumpetar" and "Ralph Royster Doyster."

The Rev. W. P. Bates was at the piano. At the close "God save the King" was sung with great zest and three rousing cheers were raised for the host and hostless, Mr. and Mrs. Handley-Derry. The gunboat left early on Thursday morning.

Mission Church Collapses.

Friends of the English United Methodist Mission will be sorry to learn that on Thursday morning last through causes unknown the greater part of the Mission Settlement Church of this Port collapsed, leaving the building an entire ruin.

Speculation has been rife as to what has led to the disaster, whether it was the weakening of the foundations due to the incessant rainy weather or to the shock of the air vibrations from the firing of salutes by H.M.S. Bluebell, or both. The fact remains, however, that the walls and roof of fully a third part of the front of the building have given way. This is a loss to the Mission of several thousand dollars. Fortunately nobody was hurt by falling debris, no one being either in or near the building when the accident took place—truly astonishing, as the church stands in one of the busiest corners of Ningpo.

Mission Schools Breaking Up.

There has been a general breaking up of the Mission Schools this week for the Midsummer vacation. An unique feature of proceedings has been the united meeting on Wednesday last in the Fuzeen (American Presbyterian) Church of the Ningpo Middle School and the Riverside Girls' Academy both Union Schools of the American Presbyterians and Baptists, for their commencement exercises. The large building was filled to overcrowding with students and their relatives and friends. The Dao Yun of Ningpo was represented and many Chinese officials were in attendance.

On the same day at an earlier hour the Ningpo Methodist College held its closing ceremonies. There were present, the Rev. W. Tremberth, Chairman of the Mission, (who presided), Mr. Wong Dao-yun of Ningpo, Mr. A. G. Bethell (Commissioner of Customs) Mr. Railton Yuen, manager of the Shaohsing Ningpo Steam Navigation Co., Mr. Hood of the Hsin Kiang Teen and the Rev. A. A. Conibear.

The acting Principal (Rev. W. P. Bates), in giving his report, spoke of the additions to the College building and renovations during the year, of the increasing number of students (this year the college had a record attendance).

Three students of the highest class and had been sent to join the Sophomore class of St. John's University and two of the Senior Middle School graduates to the Freshman class.

Mr. Railton Yuen made an interesting speech, in which he contrasted present with past, and speculated on the future. Mr. Wong then distributed the diplomas, over 80 in number.

A BOXER RISING IN SZECHUAN

Descent upon Mienchow: Their Boasted Invulnerability and the Song They Sing: Soldiers Fleeing in Superstitious Panic

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mienchow, Sze., June 10.

The north and small west gates of the city are both shut. The cause is that there is an outbreak of the Boxers. I mentioned in my last that the Boxers were active at Chungpa, also that their particular point of attack appears to be the soldiers. I am informed to-day that the soldiery have burned parts of Manputu, a large village 60 li from here on the Chungpa road; this is in retaliation for some doings of the Boxers. The latter are now said to be on their way to Mienchow, and so the north gate is shut.

The small west gate is the entrance from Chêngtu, and the great North Road to Peking. The Boxers are reported as coming along that road, and are given as less than 60 li away.

June 11.

There was much firing and shouting last night from the city, and this morning the city gates were shut till 8.50 a.m. The Boxers, who were 30 li away yesterday afternoon on the Chêngtu road, were expected. One report says that there was fighting last night, and that some soldiers and others were killed But I went into the city at 9 a.m and although there were guards at every corner, one would not have gathered the impression that the malcontents had arrived at all. The bridge is still standing, but its upper work is gone.

Soldiers in Flight.

June 12, 7.20 a.m.

As I write there is a great noise of shouting and rifles in the region of the small west gate. The, Boxers or Follow Heaven Sect, or Red Lantern Sect as they are variously called, have doubtless come. They are reported to have killed several soldiers in a temple by the river about five li from here. They have no rifles. Half-a-dozen hounded-looking soldiers have just been here begging for admittance, "We have no rifles, and want to hide." To let them enter would be fatal. "This is neutral ground, and we must think of all these boys." They quickly disappeared, as knowing the inevitability of such an answer. The soldiers evidently believe in the invulnerability of the Boxers; and of course the result is that they are invulnerable, for the soldiers become too rattled to shoot straight.

The Boxers' Incantation.

June 13.

I have just received a most interesting letter from the Rev. V. H. Donnithorne who is at Anhsien, 100 li from here. He sends the incantation which they use as told him by an officer of the troops who are fighting them in the Anhsien district. The incantition 咒語 is as follows:—

天賜國民福	Heaven gives our people happiness.
槍砲子彈落空	Bullets all drop empty,
阿彌陀佛	Amita Buddha!
打不倒	You can't hit!
打不倒	You can't hit!

"They chant this in a loud voice before they go into action: and if they are fired at all they have to do is to stroke their breasts and the bullets fall out of their clothing."

Mr. Donnithorne says the officer who told him these things added with "a nervous little laugh 'do you beleve it is true?'; evidently from his manner he himself believed it." Some of the soldiers believing the Red Lanterns to be invulnerable have discarded their rifles and armed themselves with seven-foot-long spears which are more reliable than rifles!

The stories that I hear here are similar. At the Dragon King temple yesterday a lien 連 of soldiers was destroyed all but five who managed to escape. They just gave up before their fanatical opponents, and were killed. Their commander was beheaded and his corpse left in the temple. Word is going round that the Boxers from Anhsien, Chungpa and the Chêngtu road are all going to meet in Mienchow on the 13th of the fifth moon, June 14. Many absurd stories are going about, which all prove how mesmerism and superstition have hold of the people. As Mr. Donnithorne remarks at the end of his letter: "They are out-Couéing Coué."

COMING OF THE PANCHAN LAMA

He and the Dalai at Loggerheads: Wild and Ridiculous Rumours of Great Britain's Designs on Tibet

From Our Own Correspondent.

Sining, June 11.

The sudden appearance of the Panchan Lama heading for An-sih Cheo and Urga has provoked a good deal of speculation about the why and whereabouts of his movements. If it is true that the Dalai Lama and he are at loggerheads he would certainly not take the main road to Lhassa, and then branch North. The route he took from Shigatze, would very probably be up the small river called Shang, making North east passing the eastern of the Tengri-Nor (Lake Tengri) joining the main road near the Ya-la (Ya Pass), through Nagchuk, over the Dang-la going N.N.E. as far as the Tsaidam, keeping to the West of the marshy region and striking the Great Northwest Road to Kashgar at Sa-chow or further to the East at An-sih Chow where his route to Urga was apparently intercepted by Chinese soldiers under orders from Peking. This was the route the Dalai Lama took when he fled from Lhasa in 1904 and finally got to Urga. It is surmised that the Panchan Lama was also making for Urga, when the Chinese became aware of his flight and sent soldiers to intercept him, and he finding he was confronted by a large force of soldiers was obliged to change his route and be escorted to Peking.

Great Britain's Supposed Aim.

The officials are reticent about the whole matter. Some people have hinted that seeing the Dalai Lama is pro-British the Chinese Government invited the Panchan Lama to come to Peking so that they may have him as an off-set on the Dalai Lama, but the majority do not of favour this idea. Who knows but some other power is working behind the scene and by persuading him to go to Urga could hold him as a pawn. The general opinion among the student class is that the Dalai Lama wishes Great Britain to take over Tibet; this no doubt is the outcome of the students' meetings in Peking. I heard a debate between two students in a schoolroom just recently on the Tibetan Question. One was supposed to be the Dalai Lama and the other the Panchan Lama. The Dalai Lama tried to persuade the Panchan Lama to unite with him to invite Great Britain to take over Tibet, showing him the advantages of such an alliance and giving a summary of the wrongs they had received at the hands of the Chinese just before and since the Revolution. The Panchan Lama then advocated the holding on to China seeing that they were bounded on three sides by Chinese territory, that China had treated them fairly in the 200 years previous to the present trouble and they were all Asiatics. Naturally the result of the debate went in favour of the Panchan Lama.

Facts China Should Know.

This debate shows us what the Chinese think of the Tibetan question. Could not our Government do a little propanganda work here, by, having a little book printed giving a general outline of our dealings with Tibet which led up to the march to Lhasa in 1904, how we could have held Tibet if we had wanted to; the unfair dealings with the Tibetans by Chao-Ehr-fang, the deposition of chieftains who had been in the line of succession since Tibet was taken, the wholesale demolition of Lama-series without a cause, the deceitful attack on the Dalai Lama who just managed to escape to India, to the Chinese appeal to our British Council at Tachienlu to intercede for them. How the said British Consul travelled here and there, suffering much hardship and privation in the interior of Tibet, oft in the winter season, to prevail on the Tibetans to cease warfare, and but for his intercessions the Tibetans would have been in Tachienlu. Tell how the said Consul was the means of liberating hundreds of Chinese prisoners, depriving himself of much comfort to help those poor folks to get back to China who followed in his caravan like flocks of sheep. Tell all, and have the book widely distributed throughout China and leave to the thoughtful Chinese, the elite of the nation (not the gas-bags) to decide for themselves whether the Consul of the Power that these gas-bags say is trying to seize hold of Tibet, would spend and be spent in that trying country of Tibet to avert the Tibetans from massacring the soldiers, who had ruthlessly massacred their own people and to keep them back from Seizing Tachienlu, if his own country was anxious to seize Tibet. An utter absurdity.

Where is there one of those who have so much to say, who is prepared to go into Tibet and study the whole question on the field. That is too hard a bed for them to lie on; yet men of a friendly Power such as the late Gen. Pereira, Mr. Eric Teichman and others endure hardships, suffer untold privations to assist China only to be stabbed in the back by a lot of empty headed students who are no honour to such an ancient country as China.

Another Briton Bound for Tibet.

Captain Spears of one of the Indian regiments, but who has been in Peking for some time studying Chinese, is expected in Sining on the 14th. He proposes to go through the country of the wild Goloks to Jyekundo, then on to Chiamdo, Batang, Litang, and back to Tachienlu. This time of year is favourable for travelling through that inhospitable region. He will no doubt be favoured with an escort from the High Commission Ma-ch'i.

Wool Market.

Again the price of wool has gone up by leaps and bounds, thanks to the keen competition. Five years ago the price went up to Tls. 30 per picul. It was a harvest time for the Mongolians and Tibetans, but a sorry time fell upon many of the buyers who found themselves or their firms bankrupt. The following year it got as low as Tls. 5, now once more there is a scramble for the wool. One firm thinking to be first on the field sent its representative into the interior of Tibet and being a foreigner (which always represents money to the Tibetans) he not only did not succeed in getting wool cheaper, but fell a prey to the Goloks who helped themselves to a great deal of his money. The white men will never be able to compete successfully against the Chinese and Mohammedans who can speak Tibetan and know how to deal with them. High prices are good for the Tibetans and also for the merchants of Sining and other border cities where Tibetans make their purchases.

No Opium in Sining.

Sining, I believe is the only Prefecture in Kansu where opium is not grown, thanks to the High Commissioner.

SHARKS AT MANILA

Divers Afraid to Venture into Bay Because of the Man-Eaters

Manila, June 18.

Sharks have become so numerous in Manila Bay that professional divers have refused to go into the water on several occasions recently. One day last week the inter-island vessel, Dona Dominga, reported that a school of sharks followed the ship for half an hour as she was steaming up the bay. During the last two weeks two native fishermen have disappeared and the authorities believe they were devoured by sharks.

The diminishing use of dynamite for killing fish in various parts of the islands is given by fishermen as the cause of the increase in the number of sharks which come into the bay in search of food.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OUR HONGKONG LETTER

How M. Merlin Was Hedged Round in the Colony: Letter From Assassin's Friend

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hongkong, June 26.

The dramatic story of the attempted assassination of Mr. Merlin, Governor General of Indo-China during the fateful dinner at Canton has already been told and all people of the world have bowed their heads with grief over the tragedy the outrage involved. The Governor-General narrowly escaped with his life, but five of his less fortunate compatriots fell victims to the assassin's bomb. From the time of M. Merlin's departure from the tragic scene to his au revoir on the pier at Hongkong, he was guarded night and day, by picked and efficient police and soldiers.

His leave-taking at Blake Pier on Monday morning was an awe-striking spectacle. All Hongkong's Police force was on duty. For a distance of 200 yards on each side of the pier, the Praya (Hongkong's Bund) was effectively barricaded by Indian and Chinese Police officers who stood shoulder to shoulder across the roadway, and along the pavement forming a hollow square facing the Harbour. In the Harbour, River police launches, all equipped with guns, patrolled unceasingly round the pier and no junk, motor-boat or craft of an kind was allowed within 50 yards of the landing stage. On the pier a detachment of the East Surrey Regiment stood at the slope. Detectives with bulging hip-pockets mixed with the curious crowd which pressed round the barricade of policemen to gain a glimpse of the Governor General. In fact, M. Merlin was so closely and effectively guarded that no possible anarchist could have got at him except from the air. M. Merlin arrived with Sir Edward Stubbs in the Government car. In front of the car came a police motor-cycle and side-car and another at the rear. Each passenger in the side-cars was a crack revolver shot, one of them a Colony champion. M. Merlin departed without incident and embarked on the s.s. Chantilly for Saigon. Even on the ship the police had posted detectives who had gone aboard the previous evening. M. Merlin showed his gratitude in an expression he made to Sir Edward Stubbs. He said he greatly appreciated the completeness of the police arrangements made in connexion with his embarkation. Hongkong's Governor adds in a letter to the Captain-Superintendent that the police arrangements during the whole of the Governor-General's stay were very satisfactory and reflected great credit on the force.

The Assassin's Plans.

Latest news from Canton regarding the outrage brings to light some remarkable facts concerning the systematic shadowing of M. Merlin during his tour in the North China and Japan. A letter published in the "Yin Cheong Po" yesterday purporting to have been written by a Korean friend of the assassin, states that the bombing originally planned to take place in Hongkong, probably at the Repulse Bay Hotel where the Governor-General was entertained by members of the French community. The writer of the letter states he has worked for a long time for the restoration of his mother-country and met Fan Hung-tai (which he adds is the name of the Shameen assassin) in Tokyo. The Korean further states that when Fan Hung-tai found he had no chance of making his attempt in Japan he left for Hongkong some time before M. Merlin and prepared his plans for the attack to made here. Seeing that the Governor-General was always accompanied by other highly-placed Government officials of other nationalities he decided to wait until M. Merlin get to Canton.

The Portuguese Aviators.

The Portuguese avaitors, whose flight from Lisbon ended in the wrecking of their aeroplane near the Chinese border, two hours railway journey from Hongkong, completed their trip to Macao yesterday by boat. They left on the gunboat Patria escorted by the gunboat Macau. Residents of Macao have expressed a little disappointment: they had hoped and made plans to receive the adventurous aviators from the, air but owing to the fact that great difficulty would be found in assembling an aeroplane offered by a Hongkong gentleman this last lap of their journey by air had to be abandoned.

A delegation representating Macao's residents, headed by Mr. Assumpcao of the Municipal Council and Mr. Silva of the Macao Reception Committee came to Hongkong specially to persuade Majors Brito Paes and Sarmento de Beires to consummate their flight, but under the circumstances they had to return to the little Portuguese Colony a trifle disappointed. The airmens' damaged machine has been rescued from the Chinese cemetery at Samchun where it landed and is being packed by the Hongkong and Whampao Dock Company for shipment to Portugal.

Macao last night was ablaze with excitement. The picturesque little port was brilliantly illuminated and the occasion of the arrival of the airmen who were accompanied by their mechanic, Sr. Gouveia, now a lieutenant, was marked by much rejoicing and festivity which extended to the small hours of this morning. The distinguished visitors were met by the Governor and conducted to the Leal Senado where the celebrations were carried out with gusto.

The Weather Again.

Hongkong to-day breathed one huge sigh of relief. The sun came out. More than a fortnight of continued torrential rains had almost drenched the Colony and except for the biggest reservoir, the rest of the storage dams were filled to overflowing. There were only two hours on Monday when no fall was recorded and during the 24 hours, a total of nine inches was registered. The rains have brought their usual land collapses. In Kowloon, a partly demolished building, fortunately vacated by the tenants, collapsed on a number of workmen. Ten out of the 11 men buried were rescued suffering from minor injuries, but the 11th was not dug out until the next morning and he was dead. Though Hongkong has been flooded and with all its reservoirs full, a curious situation has arisen. Water is everywhere, but the thirsty are restricted. The floods down the hill districts have burst what is technically knows as a flume, a vital conduit which controls the supply in the Chinese quarters. P.W.D. officials are working on the repairs night and day and until the gap is breached, rationing will have to be resorted to. A residence, known as "Braeside" was threatoned at the time of the burst.

BANDIT REPRESSION IN HUPEH

Determined Efforts by Governor Hsiao

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchang, June 24.

If the reports of the native press are to be trusted, Governor Hsiao is making a determined effort to stamp out brigandage in this province. Hupeh is divided into four administrative districts, for each of which a military officer is to have responsibility. The chief magistrates of all the hsiens (counties) are to work under the directions of these officials, and by this means a concerted effort will be made to destroy the brigands in each district. The military are to join hands with the local defence bodies in making search for suspicious characters. All inhabitants will be required to give a satisfactory account of their means of livelihood. By these means it is hoped to rid Hupeh of bandits within the space of two months!

It is reported that Liu Hsin-huei, the robber who has been recently operating in the Suichow Hsien, has been driven back with considerable loss. A special force of soldiers followed up the robbers towards the Tsaoyang region.

At the Cabinet meeting on June 28, the Waichiaopu was authorized to wire an order to Singkiang, stating that "the province may sign the commercial treaty with the Soviet Delegate if it has been amended according to the direction of the Waichiaopu." Owing to the great heat and little work to be done, the Cabinet has decided to hold sessions only on Tuesday and Friday, instead of every second day of the week.

FROM BEGGARDOM TO BUDDHASHIP

Miraculous Birth and Precocious Powers: The Devout Do Homage

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hochow, Kan., June 13.

Up until recently an apparently insignificant lad went about the streets of Hochow in the garb of a beggar begging alms, now he is playing a different rôle.

He is clad in the robes of a lama, receives the homage and worship of his followers while he is seated in a chair far too large for his child body, this boy of eight years Chinese, in a temple at Hsi-min ugai 100 li removed from this city.

How this change and sudden promotion? "Thereto hangs a tale."

This child is supposed to be an emanation from a former "Rib Buddha" and through the process of metempychosis arrived into the present state of his existence.

Through three incarnations, according to Buddhistic theories, has this personage appeared in his world of sin and woe: on the first occasion, at parturition, the child could not be delivered, and so from within he spoke saying that the mother's side should be opened-in this way he saw the light of the world, and consequently, from thenceforth the name "Rib Buddha" was applied to him.

In the next cycle of his existence the "Rib Buddha" is born somewhere in Szechuan—strange to say instead of having pre-natal ability to speak, this precocious infant used the vehicle of thought right at birth, and in all likelihood gave his parents a surprise for they characterized him as a "iao kuai," or supernatural being and forthwith put a quietus to him by filling him up with pig's and dog's blood so that he was strangled!

Now for the last part of the story which is more extenuated.

A Runaway Tragedy.

A certain paramour of a Chinese woman eloped with her, thus leaving the lawful husband in the lurch; to them an offspring was born, but lo! and behold, a Mohammedan killed husband No. 2 in order that he might take unto himself the widow.

It appears, she did not see it that way; at any rate it usually "takes two to make a bargain."

The next link in this chain of occurrences is the woman accompanied by her boy coming to Hochow to get redress for her grievance from the local magistrate.

Then it was that these two survivors of this family were reduced to dire straits, even to beggary.

"Every dog has his day" is the maxim. Certainly, the fates worked in favour of the character of this sketch for on a certain day when the grief-stricken mother bowed before the idol in the temple of the city god crying for the shades of her husband, all at once, the child who had kept silent all these years, —mind you no pre-natal or natal mutterings—spoke up to the mother in this wise, "mother, do not weep any more for I have seen the blood on my father's neck" (referring to the murdered parent).

From this point on, events developed kuickly, a horse was led in and the animal was recognized by the candidate for Buddhistic honours ejaculating "This is mine."

Honours Thrust Upon Him.

He is immediately acclaimed as the "Leh-pa Foh-ie" or Rib Buddha," and so we see him no more dressed in beggar clouts, but in the "glad rags" of a full-pledged Buddha.

From one source I learn that the local Defence Commissioner gave a feast for this tiny Buddha with his first spurs; later comes a parade in his honour throughout the streets of the city. Some of the local soldiery escorted him, and a body of admirers welcomed him to Hsi-min ngai where he was inducted into his office and sat not only to receive worship, but to take in filthy lucre.

Your correspondent saw this "child" with one hand touching the heads of the worshippers aand with other raking in the coins handed him.

Now as to his immedate future "Rib Buddha" is to have a Tibetan lama teacher to teach him the mysteries of Buddhism—this means that he must go away among the Tibetans to take up his training. And them? He is after a period of six or seven years to return to his temple again.

U.S. ASIATIC SQUADRON AT TSINGTAO

Cafe Proprietors' Rich Harvast

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, Ju. e 22.

Thirteen ships of the U. S. Asiatic Squadron, including the Black Hawk, are anchored here and will remain until the 28th or the 29th, when they will proceed to Chefoo, their destination for the summer. Five destroyers arrived here on the 18th instant and six more the following day, accompanied by the Black Hawk. On the morning of the 20th another vessel came in.

Hundreds of "gobs" have been coming ashore during the interval. Tsingtao is consequently so much the richer, the restaurants and cafés and not a few of the bars having made piles of money. On the whole the behaviour of the men has been good.

CHEKIANG'S CAMPAIGN TO ABOLISH OPIUM

Tupan and Civil Governor Enthusiastically Join in Fight to Stamp Out Evil

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hangchow, June 25.

Determined efforts are to be made to rid the province of the opium evil. The Anti-Opium Society's local committtee of eight, representing as many organizations, yesterday called on Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, the Tupan, and the Civil Governor, Mr. Chang Tsai-yang, and secured their consent to serve as honorary chairmen of the committee. Not only did the two Governors enthusiastically consent, but they pledged themselves to do all in their power to assist the movement. This means that the whole administration of the province has also pledged itself to join in the campaign. The word of command will be passed to the fu cities, then to the hsien towns and smaller magistracies.

Another meeting of the committee is to take place this week for the purpose of working out a provincial plan of action. If the plans of the organizers meet with the success they deserve, the sympathies of local agricultural, educational, mercantile, banking and Christian organizations are assured. Students returning home for the summer holidays may also be expected to assist.

Churches Helping.

Every church community will be organized into an active working force. The representatives of the local churches believe that this will be possible through the efforts and influence of the Hangchow Union Committee. They are ready to put the full machinery of their organization at the disposal of the local committee, and an attempt will undoubtedly be made to secure the signature of every Christian in the province.

Needless to say Tupan Lu and Governor Chang's willingness to lead in the effort which the community is organizing, has given the committee great courage. Their attitude is just what was expected, for as formerly reported, they deplore the situation which has made the suppression fight necessary.

The Assembly is still in session, but the heavy rain damps the ardour of the members, and no business can be done for lack of a quorum.

The rain has been very heavy lately and even stopped the launches running on the river for a few days. One cargo boat capsized, but no lives were lost.

The Provincial Medical School is petitioning the Assembly for Hangchow to have its own university. As Hangchow had the first Government Medical School in China it thinks it deserves a university quite as much as Peking.

THE Cabinet has telegraphed permitting the Panchan Lama to pass the summer at Lanchow and requesting him to come to Peking in the coming autumn.

STUDENTS WHO BOSS THEIR TEACHERS

No Summer Exams Because the Schoolboys Won't Have Them: Deplorable Discipline

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, June 24.

Although it is yet early in the summer, most of the government schools in Wuchang have already broken up. The students decided to have no exams., and since their word is law, no exams. were held and they have all gone home. Really, the discipline in these schools is so bad that they are worse than useless. The students take up the attitude that they are the employers of the teachers, and the latter are merely their servants. There is an understood compact that nothing is to be expected of the students in class; the teacher is to do the talking, and the students sit and listen. Students attend classes only when they choose to, and the attendance records are rarely kept. The students also choose what subjects they shall study, and among other things ethics has been definitely thrust out of the curriculum.

It may seem as if the above is an exaggerated or biassed account of the state of affairs. As a matter of fact, it is merely a summing up of what your correspondent has heard from several trustworthy witnesses who know the inside of government schools from personal experience. One only wishes it were untrue. The worst feature of the situation is, that a whole generation of students is growing up, absolutely ignorant of discipline, puffed up with the conceit of their own importance, and with only the vaguest ideas about world history, the relations of China with other nations, or the elementary principles of politics and economics. It is no wonder that such a constituency is a fruitful field for the sowing of all kinds of wrong and mischievous ideas, such as are represented by the pamphlet of which I sent you a translation a few weeks ago. It is clear that, if Boxor Indemnity money is to be returned to China for educational purposes, it ought not to be entrusted to institutions which are entirely in Chinese hands.

A GLOOMY ACCOUNT OF FUKIEN

Conditions Never Worse: Indifference of Chinese to Treaty Rights

Peking, June 28.

A letter received in Peking from a foreigner holding a responsible position in Foochow gives a gloomy account of conditions in the province of Fukien. He states that encroachment upon and indifference towards the treaty rights of foreigners in that region are becoming more and more evident and, from the point of view of foreigners, the situation has never been so bad as it is now.

Quoting instances, the writer refers to the continued searching of foreigners and foreign launches by the naval and military authorities, despite Consular protests, and an outrageous attack made upon Mr. F. Poletti, Postal Commissioner for Fukien, by some of Gen. Chow Yin-jen's soldiers, on the Min River not far from Foochow, on June 15. Missionaries making their way from Shaowu to Foochow were fired upon four times by troops on the bank of the river, and the likin station in Foochow has seized foreign goods, which the local Consular body had, at the time of writing, still been unable to get released.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DR. SCHURMAN'S ILLNESS

Peking, June 27.

Dr. Schurman left hospital on Wednesday fully recovered from his illness.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

UPON the return of Mr. Wan, adviser to the Chiaotungpu, from Loyang where he consulted Marshal Wu Pei-fu on the subject of building a new bridge over the Yellow River, Admiral Wu Yu-lin, Minister of Communications, has decided to order the Engineer-in-Charge to proceed with the work of constructing the bridge accordingly.

SURVEY TO BE MADE OF CHINA'S COASTS

Proposal Approved by Mandate

Peking, June 27.

In connexion with the proposed Marine Survey Department at Woosung, the Ministers of the Navy and Communications recently submitted a joint memorial to the President suggesting that officers should be sent by these two Ministers to make a comprehensive survey of China's coasts. A Chihling mandate published in to-day's "Gazette" approves this proposal.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PROPOSED TSINGTAO UNIVERSITY

Exhibition of Objects d'Art to Raise Funds: To Be Held in July

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, June 22.

In order to raise a part of the money required for the establishment of the proposed Tsingtao University, Governor Kao En-hung, and Mr. Kong Yu-wei, the "living sage," are organizing an exhibition of fine arts which will be held sometime in July, either in the Tsingtao Academy, or in the Commercial and Industrial Museum. The Governor and Mr. Kong will loan their collections of paintings, pottery and curios for the exhibition. Mr. Kao's collection alone is worth a quarter of a million dollars and includes some of the oldest and costliest objects d'art in this country. Special invitations are to be sent to collectors in all parts of the country to visit the exhibition, which will be the first of its kind ever held in Tsingtao.

"Axe" on the Railway

The Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway has of late seized up the men in its employ, as a result of which the economy axe has descended rather abruptly on the necks of many officials. About two score of superfluous sub-station-master and so forth have received notices of termination of services. It appears that the Railway has kepts on its salary list a large number of men who the line could have done very well without. The new Managing-Director is rigorously applying to the railway a similar policy to that which Mr. Kao En-hung has to the administration.

The police have issued regulations governing the registration of dogs in this city. Dog-owners, irrespective of nationality, are called upon to register their animals, not earlier than July 1 and not later than July 10. Failure on the part of owners to comply with these regulations will lead to their dogs being dealt with as strays.

HANGCHOW NOTES

Money Exchange Gives Trouble

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hangchow, June 28.

The rain has been so heavy and continuous for some time that even the man on the street has had nothing to say.

According to rule there should be an election of new M.Ps. now but most of the present members want simply to carry on, and draw their $80 a month. Some say one thing and some another, and soon we may hear of a free fight with chairs and ink slabs.

Money exchangers are not agreeing about the exchange, some giving better terms than others, and causing dissatisfaction so another conference is called for: "nen sweh peh nen yin," a good Chinese expression, "can talk but cannot do."

The Tufei tried to do a little business on the Wu-sin-din island the other day, but there happened to be workman at hand and all they got off with was about $10.

The Peking Tramway Co. cannot commence operations until sometime before the Mid-Autumn Festival. This postponement is due not so much to the non-completion of the line as to the internal organization which will take more time than expected to complete.

H.M.S. BLUEBELL AT WENCHOW

First British Man-of-war in Port Since 1913: Safe Conduct for Salt

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wenchow, June 22.

For the first time since 1913 the port of Wenchow had the honour of having a British gunboat in harbour for three days last week. After expecting her several times and being disappointed H.M.S. Bluebell came up the river last Thursday and cast anchor opposite the city. The city wall on the river side soon had its crowds of Chinese gazing at the unusual sight. During practically the whole of the gunboat's stay the weather was most unpropitious—over two inches of rain falling on one of the days—but in spite of that many of the foreigners of the port took advantage of the Commander's invitation to visit the ship. A football match was arranged for the members of the crew and although the ground was by no means in good condition the game was thoroughly enjoyed.

The occasion of the gunboat's visit was in connexion with the Salt Gabelle. Fukien having taken charge of the salt revenues of that province, two launches of the Salt Administration were in danger of being annexed by the Southern Party. H.M.S. Bluebell (Commander Smithwick) was detailed as escort of the launches to a zone of safety. Probably partly on account of the action of the neighbouring province to the South, Wenchow is to be raised to the position of a sub-office of the Hangchow administration of the Salt Gabelle, with a foreigner in charge. Mr. Reiss, who is at present in charge, is visiting the outlying parts of the prefecture, but whether this is a substantive appointment or not is uncertain.

BLACKMAIL AT PEITAIHO

Chinese Attempt to Keep House-owners from Beach Unless Paying $500

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Peitaiho, June 23.

We have here a very good sample of what China will be like when extraterritoriality is abolished.

Chinese have dug a deep trench along the front of all the houses including the hotel at Temple Bay down to the slope of the hill known as the Lighthouse slope. They demand a payment of $500 from each occupant before they will permit approach to the road or beach. It appears the Chinese Police have advised the occupants to pay this blackmail in order to avoid trouble.

The land now claimed has never been tilled and is incapable of being tilled as it is a part of the Beach. There has been a roadway along it from time immemorial. No private ownership has ever been exercised over it till now. If the land really belonged to the blackmailers its worth would be less than $1 (one dollar) per 100 mow. The land is worthless from any and every standpoint. But the foreigner is by the side of it and he is apparently a silly sort of person who can safely be blackmailed.

It would be unbelievable if it were not true that the native police have abetted and aided this fraud. It is high time some competent authority looked into the mal-practices that are afoot and endeavour to give some fair and honest administration.

It is quite certain the only thing for the occupants to do is absolutely refuse to pay a single cent and to remove any obstruction, no matter what it is, as fast as it is created. If any unpleasantness occurs the responsibility will be with those who are responsible for law and order but who are more than countenancing this step which is calculated to lead to a breach of the peace. It would not be tried on with the Chinese, but only with the foreigners, whose prestige has sunk out of sight. Force seems the only justice the Chinese respect.

MR. Chang Shou-yung, Financial Commissioner of Chêkiang, has come to Shanghai, it is reported, to mortgage the 3rd Issue of the Chêkiang Loan Bonds for a loan of $500,000 from a certain bank.

JAPANESE OPPOSED TO AMERICAN BOYCOTT

How It Must Lead to Retaliation Which Would Kill Silk Trade and Dependent Industries: The Move to Cut out Luxuries

By Alfred E. Pieres.

Tokyo, June 20.

It is becoming increasingly evident that the broader- visioned and more far-seeing broadervisioned Japanese simply scout the idea of a boycott of American goods which agitators have been demanding as one way of retaliating against the exclusion of Orientals from the United States. The Japanese are a practical people and have already begun to see that boycotts boomerang on the boycotters even more than on those boycotted.

Silk, for instance, forms the backbone of Japan's foreign trade. The United States takes no less than 80 per cent. of the produce turned out by the sericulturists and filatures that dot the country. The agitators have not stopped to reflect that, in the eventuality of a boycott, the silk industry would be doomed and, with the ruin of this key industry, would also disappear the other minor industries that receive life and nurture from the silk industry.

The real Japan is not in the cities; the real Japan is not an industrial nation; the real Japan is in the villages and is agricultural. The villagers of Japan do not depend only on the produce of the ground to keep them going, but also engage in various minor industries. These minor industries often keep the wolf from the door, and the destruction of these subsidiary channels of income may mean penury, so that these ancillary activities must be held on to simply out of sheer necessity.

In the sericultural districts, for instance, the rearing of silk worms and the production of cocoons, during the seasons, is regarded as even more important than farming. Prosperity in these regions depends largely on the condition of the silk trade. It is not so very long ago that the decline in the exchange value of the yen staggered the rural regions. It is thus not difficult to see that the clamouring of the youngsters for an immediate and complete boycott against the United States—which will, in course of time, bring about a corollary boycott from the other side—is extremely ill-advised and is born of youthful impulse than of sober reflection.

Amity Gravely Affected.

When the new Diet meets, there will be vigorous questions raised and excitement may again run up for a time. Otherwise, all indications point to the fact that the pitch of excitement has reached its climax and will slowly and steadily decrease. But the feelings of the Japanese towards the United States will not be what they were, say, a brief eight months ago. Neither will there be marked hostility. Feeling will remain at a point half-way between hostility and friendship, and will not return to the amity that existed until the action of Congress has been remedied. The ultimate object behind the present agitations is to restore the relations of the two countries to the former footing of friendship "by pointing to the United States the error of her ways" as one propaganda leaflet expressed it in Biblical language. The object aimed at is laudable, though the method may not be without censure. The most deplorable "grave consequence" of the immigration squabble is the cooling down of a friendship that was gradually becoming more and more consolidated and the prejudicing of the aims and objects for which the Washington conference was summoned.

Business Men's Attitude.

The attitude of the Kobe Chamber of Commerce, which is unreservedly opposed to anything like a boycott, is a fair sample of what the best minds in Japan think of the stampeding action of the demagogues. After pointing out that the immigration question was a thing apart from trade and commerce, the Kobe Chamber of Commerce says:

"A boycott of American goods as a measure of retaliation against the action of the American Congress is rash. Let us consider what the effect of such a movement would be.

"In the first place, the world's sympathy would be alienated from Japan. At present, many powerful newspapers, religious organizations and commercial associations are championing Japan's cause and denouncing the action of Congress. If we adopt policies harmful to the interests of Americans here we would forfeit the sympathy of these friends of Japan and run the risk of losing the sympathy of other foreign nations. The situation would then be increasingly difficult.

"In the second place, even if the Japanese people were successful in effecting a boycott of American goods, it is apparent that we would be compelled to exclude many imports from this country which are essential to our economic welfare. Then, if America were to retaliate by boycotting Japanese goods, it must be remembered that silk—Japan's principal export commodity—is largely taken by American, the proportion going to the United States annually being no less than 80 per cent. Such an eventuality would spell ruin for our silk industry and the other industries dependent on its prosperity.

"In view of the anti-Japanese movement in America, we are keenly conscious of the necessity for consolidating Japan's national strength. But, at this time of national danger, we must refrain from any rash action which would be detrimental to our rightful cause of serve to undermine our national strength."

Decrease in Luxuries.

There is thus no likelihood of anything like an anti-American boycott reaching the proportions the reckless demand, and foreign trade will continue to flow in its usual channel. Luxuries, however, from now on will decrease, especially imported luxuries. Such a trend has been in progress for some time and the present immigration issue has only tended to intensify it. Long before the present impassé, long before the earthquake, the Government was exhorting the people to be less frivolous and to eschew the use of luxuries. The Prince Regent set his people an example on these lines even before he left on his precedent-breaking journey to the Court of St. James and to other European lands.

The present opportunity can, and will, doubtless be safely used for pressing home the need to forsake luxuries. Even foreigners have deplored the tendency of the younger generation in the cities to live beyond their means, and if there is a marked decrease in the importation of luxuries, this will not necessarily be a sign of anti-Americanism. Japan needs and needs very badly to cut out un-necessaries, and when it is borne in mind that nearly one-tenth of the country's national income is wasted on luxuries and non-necessities, it is apparent that such conduct is tending towards national suicide, especially with the country's national debt steadily mounting, the continued excess of imports over exports and the gaping economic wounds left by the earthquake.

HOLIDAY CROWDS AT TSINGTAO

Grand Hotel Full: Accommodation Taxed to Utmost

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingtao, June 22.

Summer visitors from the outports are flocking into Tsingtao. Hotel accommodation will soon be taxed to the almost. Already the Grand is crowded, but fortunately the new Strand is to be available from next Saturday.

Amongst those arriving from Shanghai during the past few days, are Mr. and Mrs. Paddock, Mr. George Hayes, Mrs. J. D. Abbott, wife of Commander Abbott, of the American Asiatic Squadron, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Gensburger, Mrs. Toeg and Mrs. C. N. Gray, all of whom are staying of the Grand Hotel. Mrs. Toeg is accompanied by her children. The Toegs have just purchased the residence of Mr. J. J. Judah, near the race course. Mrs. Rumjahn, of Tientsin, also at the Grand, expects to complete arrangements for the building of a theatre here to take the place of the present inadequate hall. Mr. F. H. Clark, special advisor to the Ministry of Communications, is here for the purpose of inspecting the locomotives of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway.

Mr. T. C. Chu, former Assistant Managing-Director of the Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, left with his family on Wednesday for Peking where they will take up their residence Mr. Chu has been transferred to the Ministry of Communications.

MISSIONARY MURDER

Mr. G. D. Byers Killed by Bandits on Hainan Island

Yet another name must be added to the long list of murdered missionaries in China—that of Mr. G. D. Byers, of the American Presbyterian Mission, who has been murdered at Kachek, on the island of Hainan, by bandits.

News of the tragedy was received by the China Council of the American Presbyterian Mission on Monday, so that the murder probably occurred on the Sunday. No details of the affair are available as yet.

In addition to the murdered missionary, there were at the station his wife and four children, Miss Moninger, Miss McCreery and Dr. Bercovitz with his family, all of the Presbyterian mission. The telegram states that these latter are all safe.

Mr. Byers is believed to be a native of Brandon (Ore.). He came East for the mission in 1906.

Washington, June 30.

The United States gunboat Sacramento has been ordered to leave Hongkong and proceed to Hoihow (Hainan) to investigate the murder of the American missionary Mr. G. D. Byers.—Reuter's American Service.

Further Details of the Outrage: Mrs. Byers and Children Safe

From a Correspondent.

Hoichow, Island of Hainan.

The late Mr. G. D. Byers, who was murdered by bandits, was alone with Mrs. Byers and their children at Kachek mission station at the time of the tragedy.

At 11 p.m. on Tuesday (June 24) a Chinese letter was brought to Dr. H. M. McCandliss at Hoichow from the Military official. It was a copy of a telephone message from Kachek sent at 9 p.m. by the military officer there. It was addressed to the Hoichow Hospital, and roughly translated read as follows:—

Four ruffians entered the compound to bind and carry off Mr. Byers. He refused to go so was shot in the abdomen and killed. Inform others. Please come at once to Kachek to make arrangements for burial.

H. M. Consul at Hoichow and the local Chinese Officials were immediately notified. Mr. Tappan and Mr. Steiner together with a Chinese Elder of Kachek started next morning at daybreak accompanied by an escort of six soldiers expecting to reach Kachek on the evening of the next day, June 25. The British Consul got into telephonic communication with Mrs. Byers through the Yamên and learned that Mrs. Byers and the children were well and had a Chinese guard, thus considerably dispelling anxiety concerning Mrs. Byers.

THE MURDER OF MR. HAWLEY

Action of H.M.S. Cockchafer Referred to in the House of Commons

London, July 2.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. G. Lansbury, Labour member for Bow and Bromley, asked, by whose authority the Commander of the Cockchafer had acted in connexion with the Wanhsien incident. He also asked if the two men concerned in the murder of Mr. Hawley had been court-martialled or otherwise tried, and also the time that elapsed between the murder and the executions.

Mr. Frank Hodges, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, replied that the Cockchafer was the only war vessel present and that the commanding officer took the action which he considered necessary. A full written report by the British Commander-in-Chief was awaited.

Mr. Hodges added, amid Opposition cheers, that the American Commander-in-Chief had thanked the British Commander for the action taken by the Commander of the Cockchafer which, according to the incomplete report received, had materially assisted in saving life.—Reuter.

Capt. Pelletier d'Oisy, the French airman, left Shanghai on Saturday in the Suwa Maru for Europe. A large number of people assembled at the jetty to bid him farewell.

JAPAN'S REFUSAL TO ACCEPT U.S. EXCLUSION ACT AS END OF THE QUESTION

Dignified Speech by Baron Shidehara: Resolved to Strive for Amendment of Act by Amicable Means: Nation-wide Protest on Act Coming into Force

Tokio, July 1.

To-day is the date of the enforcement of exclusion by America and Japan is registering a nation-wide protest by means of mass meetings, pilgrimages to national shrines, posters and handbills, as well as resolutions of the Upper and Lower Houses of the Diet.

The character of the protests is best exemplified by the posters, which were freely distributed throughout the city yesterday night. They call on the Japanese not to forget July 1, "when an intolerable disgrace was inflicted on Japan's good name." They urge the people to give up everything American (which may be interpreted to mean American materialism), but to show kindness to individual Americans, to abstain from luxuries, to work hard and to sustain the national honour.

The Students' Union proclaimed the day a "dry" day in order to demonstrate the earnestness and depth of Japan's sentiments against exclusion.

The comments in this morning's newspapers counsel proper control of sentiments.

Later.

The Premier, Viscount Kato, in the course of a speech before the Diet to-day, postulating that the Powers were busy developing their national strength with a view to extending their influence abroad, declared for domestic reforms to awaken the popular will. He expressed regret at the injustice of American exclusion, of which he would seek a reasonable solution.

The Premier abstained from reference to the Soviet question as under negotiation.

With regard to domestic affairs, he endorsed the speedy enactment of universal suffrage, electoral reform, Upper House reform, official discipline and financial retrenchment.

Question Not Yet Closed.

Though the immigration legislation in the United States of America is now an accomplished fact, "we can by no means concede that the question is closed. Until our just contentions shall have been given satisfaction, we shall maintain our protest and use our best endeavours to seek an amicable adjustment of the question to ensure for ever the traditional friendship of the two nations." Baron Shidehara, the Foreign Minister, thus summed up a review of the America-Japan question in his speech. He drew attention to the fact that even American exclusionists did not intimate that the Japanese were an inferior race, but declared that they were unassimilable. This contention he countered as "an arbitrary presumption, unsupported by any evidence of facts." He declared that Japan had never questioned the right of Americans to control their own immigration, but "recognition of such a principle does not lead to the conclusion that the exclusion clause may not be repugnant to the America—Japanese pugnant to the America-Japanese commercial treaty."

With regard to Russia, the Foreign Minister declared that as negotiations were pending he was unable to say much but he announced his determination to carry on the negotiations already opened in Peking and to make every possible effort to arrive at a satisfactory settlement which must precede re-establishment of diplomatic relations.

Friendly Attitude to China

Baron Shidehara declared that relations of fullest undertanding were desirable with China. Japan was watching China's efforts at stablization with sympathy, tolerance and hope and with willingness to render any co-operation she requires without interference in her domestic concerns and without any action disregardful of the position she justly enjoys. Japan intends to promote Sino-Japanese economic rapprochement subject always to the principle of equal opportunity and to the principles of those treaties signed at Washington though at present they are not being enforced.

The Foreign Minister declared that the guiding principle of Japan's foreign policy was safeguarding and promoting her legitimate rights and interests with due respect to those of other nations and also adherence to the principle that all official commitments given by one government to another, whether by treaty or otherwise, should on no account be affected by any change of government or cabinet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, July 1.

The House of Peers to-day unanimously passed the following resolution—

"The House of Peers, taking the view that the Japanese exclusion clause in the United States' New Immigration Law is absolutely contrary to the general rule of justice and fairness and is detrimental to the friendship that has long existed between the two countries, deeply regrets the enactment of the clause in question."—Eastern News Agency.

Lower House Unanimously Opposed to Act

Tokio, July 1.

The Lower House to-day unanimously passed a resolution recording its opposition against the discriminatory nature of the American Immigration Act as violation of the principles of justice and international equality and impairing the long friendship between America and Japan. A somewhat similar motion was also unanimously passed by the House of Peers. The speeches in both Houses were couched in firm but moderate language. The belief was expressed that the action of Congress could be remedied. In the meantime Baron Shidehara re-assured the House that the Government was determined to maintain a stand against the legislation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Law in Operation.

Washington, July 1.

President Coolidge to-day issued a proclamation embodying the new Immigration Law which becomes effective to-day and fixes the annual quotas of the different countries at 2 per cent. of the number of their emigrants resident in the United States according to the 1890 census. Britain and North Ireland quota 34,007; Ireland 28,567; Australia 121; South Africa, Egypt and the British Mandated Territories 100 each.—Reuter's American Service.

Proposal to Abolish Dual Nationality System

Tokio, July 2.

The Government's intention to introduce during the present session a Bill aiming at abolition of dual nationality for Japanese was announced by Baron Shidehara, the Foreign Minister, this morning during a debate in the House of Peers on questions affecting America and Japan, especially yesterday's flag incident which Government and other speakers very deeply deplored.

Baron Sakatani, who was the principal interpellator, seriously called attention to the situation and urged more practical attempts than protests to reach a solution. He suggested an interchange of views between representative Americans and Japanese.

Replying, Baron Shidehara assured the House that the American Government and people appreciated and sympathized with Japan's position. He expressed the conviction that in time the American Government would reciprocate Japan's efforts to solve the difficulty. The Foreign Minister added that the authorities were closely studying the enactment of an alien landownership law in Japan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A young lady—of the flapper variety—recently visited Beethoven's house at Bonn with a party of tourists. Walking airily up to the great musician's piano she sat down and played a few bars of a popular waltz. Then she turned to the custodian and said: "I suppose you have a good many distinguished people here from time to time?" "That is so," he replied. "Paderewski was in this room not so very long ago." "And did he play on that piano?" asked the flapper. "No," said the custodian, shaking his head. "He said he was not worthy to touch it."

HUGE BLAZE AT MUKDEN

Japanese Textile Factory Burnt Out: Property Worth Y.5,000,000 Destroyed

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden, June 28.

A huge fire which destroyed the major part of a large textile factory occurred here on Friday night, the 27th. instant, on the outskirts of the Japanese Concession. The property concerned is the Mammo Kegyo Kaisha, a Japanese joint stock enterprise engaged in the production of blankets, cloth, etc.,

The blaze which started at about 7.30 in the evening was soon visble all over the city, and spectators from all sides began to wend their way in the direction of the smoke and glare. On arriving in the compound, at the door of which Japanese soldiers had been posted, the factory outhouses and godowns and the huge weaving department were seen to be blazing fiercely, huge clouds of yellow smoke being wafted skywards by a gentle south wind. By 9.45 p.m. most of the roofs had collapsed, revealing timber uprights in tangled confusion suspended like flaming skeletons against an orange sky.

Homeless Squatters.

That part of the compound near the warping department, was strewn with hastily rescued material of a varied nature. Hundreds of Japanese soldiers and workers squatted on beds of wool and heaps of blankets, holding up lanterns which threw a picturesque glitter over the confused scene, or threaded their way along, watching the devastating work of the flames. Firemen and soldiers were pulling hose about the compound area, but there seemed to be little or no water with which to light the fire, the only engine in operation being that of the S. M. Railway.

The flames travelled quickly, and as the material was of an easily combustible nature there was not much heat considering the size of the buildings on fire. Japanese women were scurrying to and fro in bare feet carrying buckets of water, and, in some cases, refreshment for the firemen; while several dressing stations established by the South Manchurian Hospital, at various points of the compound, were administering first aid to those with minor burns and bruises. There was a smell from the burning buildings like that of burning rubber. The lofty chimney stack still stood, although the flames licked its base, while the general office presented a remarkable scene, the staff snatching hasty refreshment of beer and cakes, squatting among the salvage lying upon the floor.

Hundred Casualties

By 10.45 p.m. the flames had done their work of destruction and the majority of workmen had temporarily ceased activity. Mr. K. Terao, the Managing Director, informed me that as far as he could determine at the moment, the estimated damage is G.Y.5,000,000, consisting mostly of machinery and fixtures and buildings; uncompleted stocks and quantities of raw materials having been salvaged. The power and water plant, and the finishing department are safe.

There were about 100 minor casualties.

JAPANESE DIET OPENED

Formal Opposition to American Exclusion Act to Be the First Business

Tokio, June 28.

The Prince Regent to-day formally opened the extraordinary session of the Diet. Precautions were taken to prevent a recurrence of the untoward incident in December last year.

The first formal session of the Diet will take place on July 1 at which the House will record its opposition to the discriminatory nature of the American Immigration Act as a violation of the principles of justice and international equality and impairing the long friendship between America and Japan. The House will call on the Government to take prompt necessary steps to remedy the situation.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DISASTROUS EFFECTS OF FOWCHOW FIRE

Merchants Setting up in Temporary Buildings

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Fowchow, Sze., June 17.

Fowchow is recovering slowly from the serious effects of the big fire. Practically all the places of business which were burned down have now set up in temporary buildings, though it has been almost impossible to get building materials and labour during the past few months.

The cost of living is very high due mostly to the growing of opium. Rice has reached the highest price we have known here, 7,000 cash a bushel.

This part of the country has been the freest of perils by robbers that we have known for many a month. That is not to say that they have been driven away. Many think that they have just been having a holiday while the opium was being harvested. A little passenger boat going up the little river the other day was held up by a small band with four revolvers. Passengers and crew were robbed of over $1,000. We are well supplied with soldiers, who drill daily. During the past few months both generals here have had their birthdays, and have been very lavish with the country's money in celebrating them.

We have had a very wet spring, with but very few sunshiny days. The farmers would be very glad of the sun to give them a good corn crop. It has been very cool thus far.

The Young Men's Guild, run under church auspices, has purchased a small electric light plant, with the help of which they have been showing moving pictures during the past few weeks. The guild has also been trying to raise funds to start and industrial school for poor boys. Members have already raised several thousand dollars.

INSULT TO U. S. FLAG IN TOKIO

Flag Recovered and Offender Arrested in Tokio

Tokio, July 1.

At noon to-day a Japanese, who at present has not been identified, entered the American Embassy compound, climbed the pole and cut down the flag. He succeeded in escaping before the police arrived. The compound, where the Embassy stood before September 1, 1923, has since the earthquake been a camp for a detachment of U.S. Marines, all of whom with the exception of three, recently left Japan. The remaining Americans did not witness the incident, which was immediately reported to the American Chargé d'Affaires who called on Baron Shidehara, the Foreign Minister. The police are carrying on investigations.

Baron Shidehara expressed to the American Chargé d'Affaires his deepest regrets over the incident, saying: "I hope no American will think that this represents the sentiment of any thinking Japanese." Most vigorous measures are being taken to apprehend the offender.

The incident was the subject of interpellation in the Lower House this evening, when the Home Minister promised stricter control of demonstrations against America.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Kobe, July 2.

Thanks to smart work on the part of the police authorities, the man who committed the flag outrage at the U. S. Embassy during the luncheon hour yesterday was arrested in Osaka at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

He proves to be one Okada Gihei alias Hamada Ryoki, a native of Saitamaken, whence not few disturbers of the country's peace have come.

The flag was recovered by the Tokio police in Akasaka yesterday afternoon.—From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, July 2.

With the recovery of the flag and the official regrets already expressed by Baron Shidehara, the incident is generally considered closed.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PROGRESSIVE SHANSI

Continued Industrial Activity: Phosphorous Matches Barred

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kiangchow, Sha., June 25.

Surgical instruments are now for sale in country shops and at fairs, and amongst these are seen some that would only be considered safe in professional hands.

Not infrequently in market places are to be seen quacks who as a change from tiger bones, hornets' nests, roots and such like paraphernalia now exhibit plush-lined cases from which they produce and flourish forceps, scalpels, lancets and such instruments, boasting of their unfailing ability to eradicate many of (if not all) the ills that flesh is heir to. As nerve and audacity seem to be the most desirable qualities of a Chinese surgeon, these fellows easily prey upon the credulity of the crowd, and it is readily imagined (till after the fee has been paid and the operation performed!) that they have improved and popularized the famous western methods.

Meanwhile dangerous drugs from one source or another are finding their way into the open market, and unskilled hands.

The Government intends to register, after examination, all persons practising medicine and to suppress the unqualified practitioners. But in these places [illegible] from the capital nothing [illegible] been accomplished so far, [illegible] the qualifying of [illegible] students in the [illegible] al schools of various [illegible].

Every body at Work.

There has never been a time of such industrial activity. The [illegible] match factories here are steadily developing their trade, nothwithstanding the difficulties they have of getting foreign materials up from the coast and the greater difficulty of finding wood. Originally [illegible] ing to import supplies, they [illegible] now instead to send a big portion of their staff to distant mountains and establish timber camps, clearing rapidly diminishing plantations.

It is interesting to note that the public announcement of the League of Nations interdict on the use of phosphorous matches was no sooner officially announced, than these infant factories promptly put safety matches on the market. Shansi is awake!

PEKING WALL ASSAULT CASE

Accused Soldier Sentenced to Imprisonment on Each of Four Charges

Peking, July 1.

The soldier Li has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment in each case of his attacks on the British and Italian subjects and to three days in the case of his attack on the American, who was lightly assaulted.

A remission of one month has been given in consideration of Li's imprisonment before and after trial. Li will thus serve three months and three days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF PRINCE MATSUKATA

Tokyo, July 2.

Prince Matsukata died this evening.

Prince Matsukata was "an elder statesman" and was born in 1840. He became Minister of Finance in 1881 and continued as such for more than ten years. In 1891 he formed a Cabinet and had to assume the portfolio of finance on the occasion of the Japan-China War. His second Ministry from 1896-97 was memorable in the establishment of the gold monometallic standard. Prince Matsukata was Minister of Finance in the Yamagata Ministry that followed his. He was President of the Japan Red Cross Society from 1903 to 1912 and was Lord Keeper of Seals from 1917 to 1922, when he retired.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRADE AT A STANDSTILL AT TACHIENLU

Private, Personal Internecine Warfare: Villages Razed

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tachienlu, Sze., June 6.

To-day is Tuan-Yang, in the Chinese calendar the double fifth. The Tibetans are spending the day walking round the hill singing "O-ma-ni-pad-hum"; the Chinese are walking about the streets not over happy and with a look on their faces of some impending disaster. The boys and girls, Tibetan and Chinese, are all dressed in their gayest garments and are trying to enjoy this festive day as only children can. The merchants are very apprehensive, as Chinese New Year trade has been practically at a stand still. The roads have been entirely closed to traffic, no produce coming in or going out. Tachienlu is dependent on the outside world for all it eats and drinks and wears. Close the road into China and she immediately feels the pinch. Oil and rice and cloth have now gone beyond the price that ordinary people can afford to pay. There are no famine conditions nor is there any immediate cause of anxiety, but the people are beginning to ask how long will this condition of affairs last?

The military situation has reached such a chronic condition on the frontier that no one can say how, why, or when peace will come. The two opposing armies in true Chinese fashion are quietly and persistently waiting for something to turn up. One army occupies the Tahsiangling and the other the Feiyuehling and they are quite prepared to sit and look at each other as long as the rice and vegetables will last. From a military standpoint both seem perfectly harmless. The unfortunate thing about the present, private, personal, internicine warfare is the untold suffering caused to a harmless, helpless people. The soldier, simply because he carries a gun, thinks he has a perfect right to anything and everything in any house or shop he may chance to pass by. Villages have been destroyed and the poor are simply, dumb driven cattle, forced from their homes and work to carry soldiers' rations. The merchants here on the frontier are perhaps feeling the military situation more keenly than others in the province. Tachienlu provides an outlet for China's foreign trade. Tibet is entirely dependent on Chinese tea and the revenue from this one single export is well over 100,000 taels per year. For well over three months the entire tea trade has been at a standstill; the tea merchants have no interest whatever in the present hopeless warfare. Who rules concerns them very little as long as peace and quietness remain. The military situation has also paralized import trade from Tibet and the Shensi merchants on the border are now up against a very serious condition of affairs. The important trade in musk is largely in the hands of the Shensi merchants.

TREATY RIGHTS IN CHINA

Soviet Envoy's Reported Statement as to Intended Abolition

London, June 30.

In the House of Commons this evening, questioned with regard to the reported statement of M. Karakhan, the Soviet Envoy to China, promising that Russia would support any steps by China to abolish the special treaty rights of Britain and other Powers, Mr. MacDonald said that it had not been considered necessary to take notice of it. The attitude of the Government in support of the existing treaty rights in China remained unchanged.—Reuter.

IN view of the prevalence of piracy along the coast, the Ministry of Navy has decided to establish a preparatory office for the organization of a coast cruising force to clear the pirates, the first section to be tackled being from Shanghai to Amoy.

CENTRAL CHINA NOT ATHLETIC

Wuchang's Poor Showing at Athletic Meet: How Not to Remedy Matters

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, June 27.

The recent National Athletic Sports have made the students of Central China painfully conscious of their backwardness on the athletic field. All the prizes were carried off by the visitors from other parts of China, only one of Central China's representatives carrying off anything at all. It is now proposed to establish a School of Athletics in Wuchang, under the auspices of Governor Hsiao and the Tuchuns of the other three central Provinces of Hunan, Kiangsi and Anhui. The school will be on the Public Athletic Ground of Wuchang, and will make a fifth to the four existing "chuan men" (specialized) colleges (now "universities") of Wuchang. This is the kind of development that one would expect to result from the manner in which the National Sports were conducted. Instead of leading the schools of Wuchang to regard athletics as a normal adjunct to school life, it induced them to set up a separate department, in which the superproduction of mere beef will be the sole object. The holding of such big gatherings does not inculcate the valuable lesson of "sport for sport's sake." It only arouses useless emulation of neighbouring provinces. Central China has temporarily "lost face" in the contest with the other divisions, and she thinks she will regain it by this means. Instead of upholding the equal development of mind and body as the ideal of education, and attempt is to be made to train a limited number of students in athletics only, so that they may be able to rival the athletes of more sturdy build from North and South.

Projected Wu-Han University

Another scheme is on foot to combine the four "chuan men" Universities into a single Wu-Han University. This is a most desirable thing, and it would be still more desirable if this could be combined with the Central China University which the missionary societies are about to inaugurate. But it is to be feared that the obstacles of differing educational standards, incompatible ideas of discipline, and anti-religious feeling, stand too much in the way. The question of site and buildings has not yet been discussed. It has been suggested that Mr. Wei Tsu-min, the late Chinese Ambassador to Berlin, who is a native of Wuchang, should be invited to be the first President of the Wu Han University.

For some time a project has been ripening for the establishment of a large bee industry in Wuchang. The original idea which emanated from a member of the Provincial Assembly named Wang, was to have the apiary at the foot of the Hung Shan outside the East Gate of the city. But it has now been decided to have it in a garden inside Wuchang itself. Twenty-two hives, some of Italian and some of native bees, have been ordered from Shanghai. Let us hope that the honey will be plentiful and the stings innocuous.

The last has now been heard of the ghastly legend that cannibalism was being practised in Hankow. It is reported that the pies reputed to contain human flesh have been examined by a doctor, and that after careful scientific tests he has declared that they certainly contain animal flesh—possibly dog's or goat's—but not human. It is difficult to imagine how doctors do these things, especially as the pies are presumably several weeks old by this time. But the result is eminently satisfactory to all, except sensation mongers. The pie-sellers are still in prison, but no doubt they will be released before long.

THE following notices appeared in the "Glasgow Herald" of June 3, with an intimation to Shanghai papers to copy them:—

Birth.—Anderson.—At 2 Glenan Gardens, Helensburgh, on June 1, to Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson, a son.

Death.—Kerr.—At Rowantree, Kilmun, on May 31, Archibald Kerr, late of the China Navigation Co., Ld., Hongkong & Shanhai, husband of the late Helen Walker.

TRIAL OF MR. BESSEL'S ASSAILANT

Col. Chen Said to Be Acquitted on Plaintiff's Inability to Identify Him

Peking, June 28.

While the Waichiaopu has not yet communicated the verdict to the British Legation, there is no doubt that the Ministry of War has informed the Waichiaopu that Colonel Chen has been acquitted. The acquittal is apparently based largely on Mr. Bessel's inability to identify Colonel Chen.

The Tashing authorities have not yet informed the Waichiaopu of the results of the soldier Li's trial, but it is semi-officially stated that he has been sentenced to four months' imprisonment.

June 29.

The peculiar reluctance shown throughout to state the full facts concerning the Bessel case had an effect of creating public dissatisfaction which probably would not have been justified if much of the unnecessary secrecy had not been shown. For instance, the press generally referred to the case as the re-trial of Colonel Chen, whereas it transpires that Sir Ronald MacLeay's request, with which the Chinese Government complied, was for the re-trial of Mr. Bessel's assailants. On this action Colonel Chen Kuo-hsien and the latter's guards, Li Chao-lin, Miao Yung-mao and also Liu Ching-lan (who is described as a member of Colonel Chen's staff) were re-tried. The verdict was acquittal of Colonel Chen, based on Mr. Bessel's inability to identify the Colonel and the evidence that the latter had sent subordinates to arrange the attaching of the special car to the Tientsin train, the Court thinking it feasible that Colonel Chen himself had not left the special car and hurriedly crossed the line to perform a duty which his subordinates might carry out.

These details are not given in the published text of the alleged finding, but there is reason to believe that they are correct. Li Chao-lin and Miao Yung-mao were sentenced to three months' imprisonment for preventing public service and also to 26 months' imprisonment for inflicting grievous bodily harm on Mr. Bessel. Liu Ching-lan was sentenced to five months' imprisonment for assisting in the assault.

Technically the case is still sub judice, but the Ministry of War, after asserting that the Chinese regulations necessitated a trial in camera, thereby preventing publication of the evidence, which is of great public interest, has now seen fit to allow leakage of the judgment without awaiting an official communication of it to the British Legation by the Waichiaopu. Possibly the leakage was permitted in order to test public opinion in advance and the official text may contain a review of evidence more satisfying than the brief text published in Chinese semi-official organs.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPAN'S FINANCIAL DEPRESSION

Need for Retrenchment and Thrift: No Further Loans to Be Floated

Tokio, July 1.

Speaking in the Lower House this afternoon the Minister of Finance referred pessimistically to the adverse balance of trade and the depreciation in the exchange. He declared that habits of retrenchment and thrift were most imperative.

He announced that the Government would not float any further loans, but would meet expenditure under the old loan policy by appropriating Y. 105,000,000 from the recent foreign loans, Y. 154,000,000 from Government deposits, and Y. 35,000,000 by means of low value popular savings bonds. The Minister further announced supplementary estimates of Y. 265,000,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Waichiaopu has ordered the Commissioners of Foreign affairs at Tientsin, Hangkow and Shanghai to abolish the Bureaux of Russian Affairs at their ports on July 1. A notification to this effect has been sent to the Diplomatic Corps.

MACLAREN'S WORLD FLIGHT

Quick Journey from Bangkok: Hearty Reception on Arrival in Hongkong

Hongkong, June 30.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren arrived at Haiphong on Sunday evening and left this morning for Hongkong. He is due at three o'clock this afternoon.

Later.

Squadron-Leader MacLaren has arrived.

Later.

Squadron-Leader MacLaren flew from Bangkok to Haiphong in the same day, stopping for half an hour at Vinh. He left Haiphong for Hongkong at 10 this morning. There was intermittent rain and mist and a slight rolling sea. At about 5.15 the aeroplane was descried making for the Harbour through the Sulphur Channel. Squadron-Leader MacLaren's approach was signalized by the sirens of the waiting steamlaunches and motorboats, including those of the Governor and the Naval and Military Authorities. Very gracefully the flying-boat landed in Laichikok Bay, where the Standard Oil Co. of New York had arranged a mooring buoy. Vociferous cheers greeted Squadron-Leader MacLaren, whose boat was towed by the steam launch Binghy, belonging to the Asiatic Petroleum Co., who supervised the landing.

The Governor and other officials met Squadron-Leader MacLaren and his colleagues on board the A.P.C. launch. The Governor shook hands with Squadron-Leader MacLaren, to whom he said, "Very glad to see you MacLaren." Squadron-Leader MacLaren informed the Governor that the last 200 miles from Haiphong was not so good, but before that the flight was quite good.

It is understood that Squadron-Leader MacLaren will be the guest of the East Surrey Regiment's Mess and will probably stay in Hongkong for one or two days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, July 1.

The Hongkong Club to-day entertained Squadron-Leader MacLaren and Captain d'Oisy to luncheon.

Squadron-Leader MacLaren, in a speech, eulogised Captain d'Oisy's flight as the most wonderful the world had ever known.

Captain d'Oisy, replying, recalled Alcock's flight across the Atlantic as the most wonderful. He wished Squadron-Leader MacLaren a safe journey home.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OLD SOLDIER TRICKS IN SZECHUAN

How Two "Spies" Were Caught: Dollars Again

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mienchow, Sze., June 15.

The thirteenth of the fifth moon came and went without the threatened gathering of the Red Lantern clans.

A recent arrival from Tongchuan tells a story of the extraordinary taxation that has been levied there. This tax seems to cover everything. A man brings in a good load of wood, the authorities say: "Oh, you'll get a good price for that, you must pay so much." If you happen to be a friend of the soldiers they will give you quite a nice looking medal (I have seen it) which enables you to come and go without molestation.

This tax is known as 印花稅 because a pretty little ticket is put on everything taxed. When this tax was first started all the shops were immediately shut, and there was a great outcry. As a result the official called a meeting of shopkeepers to discuss what should be done. Those who would not agree to the tax water beaten! My informant told me that on the 10th (Chinese) a great meeting was held at Tongchuan to greet Gen. Yang Sen as Tuli.

Not many days ago two spies went from Mienchow to Tongchuan dressed as country labourers. On the way they met with an old lady who had two or three dollars. She was not sure whether they were good ones, and so asked our two country men their opinion. They gave it and the old lady went on her way, not unmarked by the two. In the comparation security of a road through a maize-field they explained that they needed her dollars. Indignant, the old lady told her story to a friendly man who passed. "There they go," said she. He tracked them into Tongchuan, then had them taken by a company of soldiers there.

"Why do you steal old ladies' dollars?" They made what excuses they could not then the officer looking closely at their now hatless heads said: "You are no civilians, there are the marks of your military caps round your heads," "Tie their thumbs to their great toes, and let them sit the sedan-chair for a bit. Now then, what are you doing here? Where do you belong? speak up, or you'll get it badly."

They confessed that they had come from Mienchow to see whether the soldiers at Tongchuan were weak enough to take a beating from the Mienchow contingent, who apparently are desiring a change of air.

OFFICIAL JEALOUSY IN FUKIEN

Gen. Sun Dissatisfied with His New Appointment and Still at Foochow

Peking, June 29.

Whatever may have been the intention, the political changes recently made in Fukien seem to have produced the reverse of harmony and indeed to have added to the distractions of the province. Gen Chou Yen-jen, who was recently appointed to succeed Gen. Sun Chuang-fang as Tuli, on the latter's appointment to be Border Commissioner of Fukien and Kuangtung, arrived in Foochow on June 14 and proceeded to take up his residence at one of the strategic points there. It was expected that the new Tuli would move into the yamên, which the accommodating Gen. Sun had vacated in readiness for him, but Gen. Chou, as soon as he found that the yamên was surrounded by Gen. Sun's troops, decided to remain where he was pending the arrival of his main body. Up to the end of last week neither Chou nor Sun had taken up his new post and the latter showed no inclination to leave Foochow, but rather to establish permanent headquarters there.

The movements and inclinations of Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei, whose marines occupy the vicinity of Foochow, are doubtful, but the fact of his staying on in Foochow seems to suggest that he is anxious to give moral support to Gen. Sun. That the latter is by no means satisfied with the possibilities of his new appointment as Border Commissioner is indicated by the fact that he has demanded a military conference with a view to divesting Gen. Chou of the civil power conferred upon him by virtue of his office as Tuli. He seems anxious not to leave behind him in office a Tuli capable of exercising the same wide powers which he himself enjoyed, and it may be taken for granted, on the other hand, that Gen. Chou has not for nothing given up his lucrative post at Yenping. Interesting developments may therefore be expected. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury. S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

MACLAREN'S ARRIVAL IN SHANGHAI

Beautiful Descent on the Huangpu After Rapid Flight from Foochow: Mechanic Unluckily Down with Sunstrokee

The British aviators, Squadron Leader Maclaren, Flight Lieut. Plenderleith and Sergeant Andrews, made a beautiful landing at the appointed spot in the Huangpu, opposite the Standard Oil Company's compound some 20 minutes after 11 o'clock on Thursday morning, having accomplished the journey from Foochow, a distance of 430 miles, in the excellent time of 4 hours 25 min.

The river was crowded with launches and motor-boats awaiting their arrival, and as soon as the 'plane was sighted, some 10 minutes before she alighted on the water, the air was torn with the shrieks of a dozen sirens to give some indication as to the vicinity of the landing place. The aeroplane came across land from Hangchow Bay, coming into sight to the southeast of Shanghai, and then turning opposite the native city came down along the river, swooped round, in a vertical over the big white cross marked on the left bank of the river to guide it, and then planed down like a bird on to the water, and taxied to within a hundred yards of the buoy without fuss or trouble. The landing was unanimously applauded by the experts in attendance. It could not have been better had the airmen been here before.

The Mooring.

An Asiatic Petroleum Co. launch then took the machine in tow and pulled her up to the buoy. Great care had to be taken in mooring the machine for with the strong wind blowing there was some danger of her turning over on her side. However, nothing was forgotten by those responsible for the arrangements, and the ingenious scheme was hit upon of sinking a number of buckets from lines attached to the aeroplane all round her. These, naturally, would have the effect of holding her steady in quite breezy weather. Even so, a slight mix-up occurred owing to the strong current and a cross wind, when the machine became entangled with the mooring line. Matters were soon straightened out, however, and the three men embarked in a sampan in charge of Mr. Elliot, of the A. P. C., and Mr. Swann, and were propelled to Mr. Barton's launch, where H. M. Consul-General greeted them. As they stepped aboard they were vociferously cheered, and there was more blowing of sirens. The first thing the airmen asked for, tired and thirsty, was a bottle of beer—a boon they were immediately granted.

The sympathy of those present was immediately elicited for Sergeant Andrews, who had to be helped on board. He had been hard at work on the machine all day when she was in Hongkong, and the sun caught him in the back of the neck. Consequently he felt sick and ill, and all he asked for was a bed, that he might sleep. His condition was more serious than at first thought, and we regret to say that he had to be conveyed to hospital as soon as he landed, with a temperature of 105 degrees and a nasty attack of sunstroke.

Sunburned but Happy.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren and Lieut. Plenderleith both looked the picture of health. Their faces, arms and bare knees were burned by the sun, but they were quite happy and managed to smile, albeit bashfully, in the face of the battery of cameras levelled at them from all sides. Squadron-Leader Maclaren, in spite of his name, is typically English in appearance; tall and lean, with a fair moustache and blue eyes, and a generally boyish appearance. Lieut. Plenderlieth is a smaller man, dark, thick set, powerful and cheerful.

After they had boarded the launch they were taken to the Customs Jetty, where another crowd of admirers waited to cheer them, after which they jumped into Mr. Barton's motor-car and were driven to the British Consulate, where they will remain as Mr. Barton's guests. After tiffin, which they took immediately, they went down the river again to overhaul the 'plane and spent some hours at work on her.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren was, as usual, with the men who do things, modest about their achievement. When it was put to him that they had made remarkably good time from Foochow he replied simply:

"We did not do so badly, but of course we had a nice breeze behind us all the way, and perfect weather."

They followed the coast all the way up from Foochow till they came to Hangchow Bay, when they came straight across to Shanghai, which accounted for their coming down the river instead of up the river, as did the Americans, and as they were expected to do.

In further conversation, Squadron-Leader Maclaren said, touching wood, that he hoped his luck had completely changed; if this was so, he attributed it entirely to the wind. The story of his smashes, culminating in the crash at Akyab in India, is familiar to most people by now, but since he has had his new 'plane and got under way once more, he has gone ahead fast.

SQUADRON-LEADER MACLAREN.

"The worst part of the journey" said the airman, "was between Calcutta and Haiphong. That was where we met the monsoons, but after that things were not so bad, excepting that we had the wind against us. We had the wind against us all the way till we got to Bangkok, and there it changed and was with us. From then on all has been well."

"The best part of the flight," he went on to say, "was from Ving in Indo-China onwards. All went well after that and we have made quite good time. Up to Calcutta was the worst. Flying then was bad. From Foochow to Shanghai was a very good stretch indeed; there was a nice breeze all the way up to help us along, though there were a lot of low clouds met with and we kept a flying height of about 4,000 feet."

Questioned as to his diet, the airman said he did not like eating in the 'plane. When asked whether he had eaten this day, he replied, "Well I had a couple of chocolates on the way up, but that was all. I can seldom eat a breakfast early in the morning."

We fear the sartorial appearance of our heroes did not approach the dazzling beauty of D'Oisy's uniform, or the scrupulous neatness of the Americans. All three were dressed in khaki shorts and stockings, khaki shirts and khaki hats, pushed well back on their heads to protect their their necks. Also they were covered in grease, and their hands showed signs of hard manual work. They were asked what clothes they brought with them, and once again Maclaren smiled. "You see our clothing" he said. "We have not brought very much."

An enthusiast remarked at this that the Frenchman had brought with him quite a number of uniforms.

Clothes and the Men.

"H'm" came the answer. "We tried it, too, but excess clothes soon went overboard. We are out to do a job of work." "Besides" he added naively, "I daresay we can manage to borrow something."

To the remark that a lack of dress-clothes was rather a blessing in Shanghai, where the use of such vanities is greatly overdone, the aviator tactfully said nothing, though he looked startled when informed a little later on that he was expected to turn up at the American ball that same night, in order that the Americans here might have a chance to welcome him. He acquiesced cheerfully enough, however, as he did to the other functions which have been arranged for him here.

Hundred Miles an Hour.

The aviator left Foochow at seven o'clock in the morning and arrived at Shanghai at 11.20 a.m. The distance between the two ports being 428 miles. This means that they averaged easily one hundred miles an hour. Of this, however, the actual flying time was only 70 per hour, the wind accounting for the rest.

The excellence of the landing arrangements was the result of the combined efforts of the Royal Air Force Association and the Asiatic Petroleum Company. The technical side of the work was carried out by members of the first body, while the general work was done by the A.P.C. The Standard Oil Co. very kindly put out the buoy to which the machine was moored, and in many other ways lent all possible help.

Credit is also due to Mr. Robertson, Installation Manager of the Standard Oil Company, for his assistance in the mooring arrangements, and to the Harbour Master for his patrols, which performed good work keeping the water clear for the machine to land.

Mr. J. H. Lansdell, ex-R.A.F., lays claim to having been the first person to sight the 'plane, from the A.P.C. motor launch Thistledown, while standing-by opposite the mooring buoy.

What came as a big surprise to most of the civilians present was the smallness of the machine, a Vickers Vulture amphibious, with a light engine. That a creation so fragile to the eye should have the strength and power, under the skilful handling of the men who drove it, to come so many thousands of miles at a time aroused both wonder and admiration. Three men must have been remarkably cramped for space.

A large party, the guests of Mr. Barton went down the river to meet the plane in the tender Scott, kindly lent for the occasion by the Shanghai Tug and Lighter Company. These included: Sir Skinner Turner and Miss Turner, Mr. H. J. Brett, Mr. A. George, Mr. G. S. Moss, Mr. W. H. Trenchard-Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Yada, Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. S. Fessenden, Mr. and Mrs. Alister Campbell, Mr. L. M. ff. Beytagh, Mr. Colin Rutherford, Captain Glumicke, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Dyer, Mr. A. C. Clear, Maj. and Mrs. Hilton Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Green, Mr. Archibald Rose, Mr. R. N. Swann, Maj. J. E. L. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Gull, Mr. Reader Harris, Mr. R. G. MacDonald, Mr. P. W. Massey, Mr. V. J. Holland, Mr. George Wilson, Mr. A. F. Withers, Mr. Mansell Reece, Mr. L. D. Fawcott, Mr. S. R. Kerr, Mr. F. Scarborough, Mr. Donald Leach, Mr. Reffell and Chief Inspector Vaughan, Maj.-Gen. Wong, representing General Ho Feng-ling, Mr. S. K. Chen and Mr. N. P. Yang.

Entertained at Columbia Country Club

The American community began the observation of their national day with a dance at the Columbia Country Club on Thursday night, which was largely attended by members and their friends, the latter including big contingent of British residents, and Squadron-Leader Maclaren, who received an enthusiastic reception on making his appearance in company with Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, with whom he dined at the Country Club.

Mr. Everett, chairman of the Columbia Country Club, proposing the health of Squadron-Leader Maclaren, on behalf of members, expressed the great pleasure it afforded them to entertain the British world-flier at their dance that night.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren, after thanking them for their welcome, said they could not realize how much pleasure it gave him to be amongst Americans that night. In sending to a competitor in the world-flights in a destroyer a new engine, the Americans had done one of the most sporting things he had ever heard of. He took off his hat to them, and declared that if he had not been born a British subject, he would want to be an American.

JUKONG ROAD POLICE BATTLE

Chapei Police and Soldiers Exchange Shots with Armed Gamblers

Some little consternation was caused off North Szechuen Road Extension on Thursday night by a raid upon a gambling den in that locality.

The Chapei police accompanied by a large number of Gen. Ho Feng-ling's soldiers raided a gambling den in Zun Loh Li alleyway behind the Isis Theatre, where, they had heard, there were a number of armed brigands. The raid, which took place at 11 p.m., resulted in a sharp exchange of shots. No one, however, received any injuries.

The alleyway which is closed at one end enabled the police to cut off the retreat of brigands and to capture the whole gang, numbering 14. They are now in the hands of the Chapei police.

THE engagement is announced of Mrs. John Snodgrass, widow of the late Capt. Snodgrass, to Mr. H. S. Wavell of the Asiatic Petroleum Company.

A strange protest has been made against the Chapei Omnibus Co. An association of Kiangpei and Huaian residents indignantly declare that the company's cars will kill people "just as if they were so many beasts of prey," if allowed to roam about in the streets. As residents in Chapei are mostly natives of Kiangpei and Huaian, to allow the cars to run would be tantamount to supporting the killing of their own countrymen? Another point of objection mentioned is that the Omnibus Co. would deprive the ricsha coolies of their livelihood.

TROUBLE AT WOOSUNG FORTS HOTEL

Motor-car Accident Followed by Chinese Soldiers' Unwarranted Intrusion into Private Property of a British Subject: Gen. Ho Feng-ling Taking Prompt Action

What might have led to a serious affray between Chinese troops and foreign civilians occurred in a disturbance within and outside the grounds of the Woosung Forts Hotel on Sunday afternoon after a motor-car accident. The matter might easily have been settled at once, but the Chinese troops from Woosung Forts were called upon to interfere, which they did to the great inconvenience of visitors to Woosung who went there merely for an outing and afternoon tea.

It appears that about 5 p.m. a car occupied by Russian passenger and driven by a Chinese chauffeur brushed against a Chinese when rounding the bend before approaching the Woosung Forts Hotel. The chauffeur was of opinion that he was not to blame and drove to his destination.

Further inquiries elicit the fact that the slight motor car accident which originated the trouble was in no sense a case of "road hogging." What happened was that, in avoiding a possible collision with another car at a turning near the Forts Hotel, the car in question brushed against one of a number of Chinese soldiers walking at the side of the road. The man was not knocked down and, not unnaturally, the chauffeur proceeded on his way without further notice.

The soldiers followed precipitately, though there was no chance of the car getting away unidentified, the road extending only for about a further quarter of a mile. Arriving at the hotel, the warriors at once invaded the grounds and noisily gathered in front of the steps. It was suggested to them by a Chinese servant that, if they had any complaint to make, it could be made by one or two of their number and that it was quite unnecessary for all to crowd into the place. Captain Davies, after pointing out that they were trespassing, took a couple of the soldiers by the sleeve and attempted to draw them off towards the gate—at which a big crowd of Chinese had now assembled. The Captain's action was the signal for an attack upon him, and in warding off a blow, he received a severe bruise on the right arm, a vigorous self-defence thus becoming necessary. In the scuffle he received another heavy blow on the shoulder, and also a kick, and might have been more seriously injured had not other foreigners gone to his assistance. After a performance lasting about 10 minutes, the platoon was got outside the hotel gates, but from this position they refused to budge, announcing that they intended to wait until the arrival of one of their officers. Meanwhile, the Chinese mob looking on increased in number and was somewhat noisy, but made no other attempt to demonstrate. Several foreigners who were in the hotel but had taken no part in the proceedings were detained for some time, and, being greatly inconvenienced by the enforced delay, were finally obliged to accede to the soldiers' demands for their names and the number of their car. They were allowed to go when these particulars had been given.

During the proceedings, the local police kept well away from the apot, and the presumption is that they did not relish a possible scuffle with the military.

Captain Davies was in communication with the Chinese authorities yesterday, and was officially assured that General Ho Feng-ling will inquire strictly into the matter and will take every precaution against molestation of foreigners at Woosung. Already, the soldiers have been warned to keep away from foreigners and foreign property, and they have been threatened with punishment if the order is disobeyed.

CHAPEI LIGHT AND WATERWORKS

More Squabbling over Transference to Private Concern

As the Chapei Water and Electricity Co. has not been able to take over the water and electricity works on the agreed day, a chorus of disapproval has been assailing the promoters. Several public bodies here have addressed letters to the company's Preparatory Office, pointing out the tremendous sacrifices the Chapei residents have made in fighting for the possession and control of the works, and accusing the Office of having failed to take over the property from the Government on the date stipulated in the draft agreement.

A letter signed by 352 persons has reached the Commercial Association of the Fifth District in Chapei, complaining about the silence of the Preparatory Office in respect of its actions as well as regarding the amount of capital that has been actually raised. Rumour has it, they say, that not even one-half of the capital has been subscribed. They demand the publication of all details, and to be informed whether the Company will be able to pay the money when the Government should be ready to hand over the property.

It is officially explained that the position of the Civil Governor at Nanking may be summed up thus: As an injunction has been issued against handing over the Works by the Administrative Court at Peking at the instance of Mr. Chang Futsen, member of the Kiangsu Assembly, he will have to proceed in order to satisfy legal requirements, while at the same time, he has wired, stating that he has signed agreement because of the procrastination of the Assembly in discussing this question and in view of the Chapei people's plight. He has asked the Assembly to discuss this question at its second session. If again rejected, the proposal will be referred to it a third time; and the Governor has power to deal with it summarily if the Assembly should delay its discussion again. According to the draft agreement, June 30 was the day on the first instalment should have been paid and not the date for the handing over of the two works. It states clearly that, upon the payment by the Preparatory Office of the agreed price for the property and the price for the right of doing these two businesses, the Industrial Commissioner shall hand the whole property over. This does not necessarily mean that payment of the price and the transference of the property must take place simultaneously.

NEW U. S. CONSULATE AT AMOY

Shanghai Architect Successful in Competition

Information has reached Mr. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, that the State Department has approved designs submitted by Mr. Elliot Hazzard, a Shanghai architect, for the new consular buildings at Amoy. The competition was held in December last and drawings were submitted by American architects resident in China. Mr. Hazzard is at present supervising building operations on the new Columbia Country Club.

The new Amoy consulate building is to be of the most modern type. It will be erected on the old site opposite on the Island of Kulangsu, where foreigners reside. It will be large enough for the transaction of American business in Amoy for many years to come. Built on the American Colonial style, similar in type to the American Club's new home in Foochow Road, it is proposed to build three storeys, in which will be contained the offices of the staff, the Consul's office and a residence for the Consul and quarters for the Vice-Consul. The main portions of the new building are to be of brick and reinforced concrete, while the local granite, of which there is plenty, will be introduced decoratively.

It is interesting to note that this is, according to reliable information, the first American Consular building ever constructed on property owned by the U. S. Government. At any rate there is no doubt that this is the first of its kind to be built in China. When completed the structure will be a noteworthy addition to the Island of Kulangsu.

Tenders are to be asked for at once and construction will be begun shortly on a building which is badly needed.

CONSTABLE SHOT BY ARMED ROBBER

Unarmed Chinese Policeman Killed in Heroic Attempt to Capture Armed Thief

Alarmed by the shots of his fellow constables and the blowing whistle of another who was wounded with two bullets in his limbs, C.P.C. 770, Zung Dei-ching, dashed after a fleeing armed robber on Hankow Road on Monday night and was shot dead. It was a heroic deed, for he was without a weapon, but notwithstanding this fact, he tried to overtake the ruffian, who turned and opened fire immediately. Struck twice, wounded in the chest and in the abdomen, the constable died before he reached the Shantung Road Hospital a few minutes later.

A gang of three robbers, all armed, it is supposed with 32 calibre pistols, entered a store on Nanking Road at 8.10 p.m. and after getting $50 left the premises. A coolie employed in the store followed them. They ran west on Nanking Road and one branched off at Chihli Road. It was this one that the coolie followed. The employee saw him turn into Kiukiang Road where he went west again, and passed at Hankow and Fokien Roads C.P.C. 1103, who carried a carbine. Quickly as the coolie notified him that the other was a robber, he loaded his weapon and opened fire at the robber, who turned and pulling the trigger twice, dropped the constable. As he fell, shot in left shoulder and right arm, the latter drew his whistle and continued to blow, while prone.

As he heard the whistle C.P.C. 770, deceased, ran to his comrade, and seeing what had happened, started after the robber although he was unarmed. But not for far for he fell mortally wounded. Another constable rushed up from his post on Hoopeh Road and shot twice but with no effect, but he did cause the robber to double in his tracks and pass the two wounded men on the ground. No trace has been found of the murderer, or of the other two who turned and ran directly from the scene of the robbery.

Reinforcements from Louza Station came to the scene and the two wounded men were sent to the hospital. A close search was inaugurated in the district, but no trace of the robbers was found.

The Inquest.

At the inquest held at the mortuary on Tuesday morning, Mr. Mr. Loh, Mixed Court Magistrate, found that "deceased came to his death, while bravely attempting to arrest certain armed robbers, as a result of gunshot wounds administered by one of the said armed robbers."

During the course of the session, C.P.C. 1207, the last to see the fleeing robber and who fired at him twice, stated that about 8.10 p.m. he heard gunshots and blowing whistles from the East; he was stationed at Hoopeh Road. He saw C.P.C. 770 fall and also witnessed the shots that wounded C.P.C. 1103. He loaded his carbine and fired once at the running man, who fired again. Witness replied with two shots, and the robber disappeared in an alleyway.

Mr. Bucknell—How many robbers did you see?—I saw but one.

The coolie, who followed, stated that he was not in the shop when the robbery took place, but that when he returned he saw the armed man at the door. So he entered another shop to telephone the police. On coming out he ran after the man until he passed the constable at Hankow Road. Witness told him what had happened whereupon the constable, C.P.C. 1103, opened fire and fell. Then the deceased ran after the robber and received his mortal wounds. Witness saw what took place from an alleyway until the bandit disappeared.

In reply to the Assessor he said that it seemed that the robber had a long square face, but he was not sure, that he could identify him if caught.

The Acting Commissioner of Police circularized the stations yesterday, recording with regret the death of C.P.C. 770, who in a courageous attempt, while unarmed, to arrest an armed robber, came to his untimely end. Deceased joined the force on May 11, 1915. The circumstances under which he met death afford another example of the devotion of the Chinese Branch of the Force. The Acting Commissioner feels sure that every member will hold his memory in respect."

The Funeral.

The funeral of Zung Dei-ching took place on Wednesday afternoon. There was a special parade of police, squads from all stations in the Settlement being present, as well as officers of the various branches of the Force, as a mark of recognition of the devotion to duty which the deceased man displayed, and a number of wreaths were sent. The French Police also sent a detachment of 50 men. Various Chinese bodies were represented, and thousands of Chinese watched the procession on its way from the mortuary in Dixwell Road to the cemetery.

OBITUARY

Capt. W. P. Hamlin

We very much regret to have to record the death of Capt. William Paterson Hamlin, one of the oldest foreign residents, not only in Shanghai, but in China. Capt. Hamlin was of Scottish descent, his family hailing from Gourock and they had long association with the sea. He was born at sea in 1844, on the sailing vessel Wilmot, which was owned by the family and was at the time commanded by his father. The son followed the father and when he was still quite a young man the late Capt. Hamlin went trading in the South Seas on his own account, sailing his own vessel As can be imagined, he had many exciting experiences in those romantic waters, and it is unfortunate that just at this time no one seems to be available to give detailed accounts of them. It is known, however, that Capt. Hamlin became a close personal friend of Chalmers, the famous missionary, and took him on a cruise round the islands of the South Seas.

Capt. Hamlin spent several years in his own ships and then came to the East. For a while he sailed around the India and Burma coast and in the early 'sixties he moved up to the China Coast, along which he was a very familiar figure until the time of his retirement, being one of the most respected and popular masters. In China he first joined Messrs. Butterfield & Swire and after a few years with that firm he transferred to Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co. In his later years he left the sea and became assistant wharfinger at Hunt's Wharf and about 1881 he took over the Old Ningpo Wharf, where he was associated with two other famous old China hands, Messrs. Duncan Glass and Robert Law. Another great friend of his was Mr. Kum Hon-sang, the compradore, who is still with the firm and who is one of the few remaining really old-style Chinese business gentlemen.

In 1910 Capt. Hamlin retired and it was the great regret of his host of friends that he had been almost continuously ill ever since. For eight years he remained in Shanghai with his youngest son, Mr. Wilfred Hamlin, and then he went to Tientsin to live with his daughter, Mrs. G. D. B. Bidwell, at whose house he died. Capt. Hamlin's wife died out here in 1883, but he is survived by all the other members of his family—one son who has never been to China, Mrs. Bidwell, and Mr. W. F. Hamlin of Shanghai. There also are five grand-daughters and four grand-sons. The body is being brought down to Shanghai so that Capt. Hamlin may be buried beside his wife in Pahsienjao Cemetery.

The Funeral.

The late Captain William P. Hamlin was carried to his last resting place, at Pahsienjao Cemetery, on Wednesday afternoon.

The late Captain Hamlin's health has been failing for some years past, and last April he went to Tientsin on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Guy Bidwell, of 128 Victoria Road, Tientsin, at whose home he passed away quietly on the 26th instant. His body was brought down to Shanghai on the str. Lienshing, and landed at the Old Ningpo Wharf, where the deceased spent so many of his working years.

Immediately following its arrival, the body was taken to the cemetery where the service was conducted by the Very Rev. Dean Symons, with the assistance of the Rev. C. M. Drury. A large number of friends were in attendance, in addition to the family mourners, including many of the late Captain Hamlin's Chinese friends.

The deceased was laid to rest in a grave adjoining that of his wife, who preceded him in 1885.

The mourners were Mr. and Mrs W. F. Hamlin, Mrs. G. D. B. Bidwell, Mr. and Mrs. Howell, Miss Jean Bidwell, Miss Winifred and Jean Hamlin, and Master Hamlin, Mr. and Mrs. G. Bidwell, Mr. Wm. Hamlin and Mr. and Mrs. G. E. P. Mayne.

Also, Messrs. C. P. Dawson, D. Wheen, Wheeler, Maj. and Mrs. Trueman, Mr. Nud Rothe (Tientisn), Mr. John Prentice, Mr. Gavin Wallace, Mr. P. A. H. Chambers, Mr Thompson, Mr. Donald, Mr. E. Marques Souza and many others.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful.

Mrs. R. A. Whitamore

News of the death of Mrs. Whitamore (née Lorna Way) at Tongshan Hospital, on Monday will be received with dismay by the whole Tientsin community, among whom she has spent her life, and made so many friends, (says the "P. & T. Times.") Mrs. Whitamore spent nearly all her girlhood and her short married life in Tientsin, and like her sisters, took a very active part in the social life of the port. She took a prominent part in A.D.C. and other entertainments, and was one of the most popular girls in North China. She was married, on February 18, 1922, to Mr. Rupert Alexander Whitamore, son of the late Rev. T H. Whitamore, of Whitchurch. News of her death, and of the peculiarly painful circumstances under which it occurred, will come as a great shock to her husband's and her family's many friends throughout the Far East.

STREET UNIONS AND VIOLENT CRIMES

More Resolutions and Sympathy for the P. C. Hero of Bubbling Well Affray

A meeting of members of the Nanking Road Merchants' Union took place on Wednesday afternoon, for the purpose of discussing means to safeguard the shops against robbery, cases of which have been more numerous of late. Mr. Wang Lien-fang stated that the Union had sent wreaths and representatives to take part in the funeral procession of the late Chinese P.C. 770, Chen Tien-ching, who so bravely sacrificed his life in the interest of the public. Subscriptions were being invited to a "compensation fund" which would be handed to the deceased's family through the proper authorities.

Mr. Chiang Meng-yun then outlined a proposal for the meeting to consider. He said in effect that as the devising of a method of dealing with the robber menace in the future constituted one of the duties of the town administration, the Municipal Council should be the proper body to assume full responsibility in this respect. The ratepayers had only the right to make suggestions. However, seeing that robbers did not confine their attention to Nanking Road alone, all public bodies concerned should be asked to join in making such suggestions as they might deem necessary.

The following resolutions were then passed:—

That letters be addressed to the Central Chamber of Commerce and other organizations inviting each to submit its views.

That a letter expressing condolence on the death of Chinese P.C. 770, Chen Tien-ching, and sympathy to Chinese P.C. 1103, Cheng Yuming, for the wounds he received, be addressed to the S.M. Police.

We much regret to announce the death at Dr. Fearn's Hosptal of Mr. Eduard C. Shroder, from injuries sustained in the serious motor-car accident on the Rubicon, on Sunday afternoon, June 15. Mr. Schroder and his friend, Mr. Frentzler, who was seriously injured, were riding in a car which was believed to have been hired from the Nanyang Garage. A rear wheel came off, precipitating the two unfortunate occupants into the road. The late Mr. Schroder was 43 years of age, a German, and in the employ of Messrs. Harbeck & Martin, Ltd.,

MEDHURST COLLEGE PRIZE DAY

Scholarships to Hongkong University: Mr. Scott's Address on Character-Building

Prize Day was celebrated at Medhurst College on Tuesday afternoon with a large number of parents and friends present, Mr. F. R. Scott, Chairman of the College Board, presiding, and Mrs. Scott presenting the prizes. Singing of the school hymn, "Our Foundation," opened the proceedings, followed by prayer by the Rev. E. Box, another member of the Board. The Rev. K. T. Chung then spoke in Chinese and a Chinese recitation was given by one of the pupils, Maiu Joen. The Rev. H. Bunce, B. D., principal of the school, then gave his report, saying in part:

A Satisfactory Year.

The school year just closing has been very satisfactory. During the last two years there have been many changes in curriculum and methods and the numbers have been steadily rising until now we are practically full. Of the present sixth Form part will be taking Hongkong Matriculation in November, and part next term. Some of these who take the examination in November will, we expect, be entering the University in January 1925.

As regards curriculum, whilst we have a predominantly British bias, we have thought it wise to draw more into line with the system in vogue in other schools in China, so that there is a definite course of six years middle school and an extra year for preparation for Hongkong Matriculation.

For various reasons we wish to strengthen the relation between Medhurst and the University of Hongkong. For those who have no chance of University education we think that matriculation at Hongkong gives a definite standard which at any rate the British Firms recognize and appreciate. I am glad to say that during the year three scholarships to Hongkong University have been placed at the disposal of Medhurst College. We hope to arrange that each year we shall be able to offer at least one scholarship to the graduating class.

Discipline.

Every school worthy of the name has its rules and discipline and obedience to rules is one of the things which, in my humble opinion, it is very necessary that Chinese boys should learn. But that discipline can only be administered with real effect if the parents support the school authorities. The majority of our students are boarders and we try to fulfil, at any rate in part, the idea of education i.e. that it is what fits a man to discharge his duties and fulfil his obligations in life. This is no little social life and in various ways we try to develop a "social conscience" and a realization of the duties that an individual has to society.

There are a few announcements about the future. Next term we shall have the services of Rev. A. P. Lansdown (New College, London) in the English Department and also in athletics. Mrs. Lansdown of University College, Reading will also give us some help, and Mr. J. S. Barr, M.A., B. SC. Glasgow, has been appointed and after a course of language study at Soochow will be on the staff of the College.

The College is to be repainted and redecorated during the holidays, new lavatories are to be constructed and we hope to take some measure against the frequent flooding of the playing fields, which has become more frequent since the land around has been raised.

Character.

After a recitation by Woo Sung Ngok Mr. Scott gave the address of the afternoon on "Character," saying in effect:

Our British idea of school and your teachers' idea of it are not merely concerned with the imparting of useful knowledge. Our idea of school is that it is one of the great opportunities of life for the forming of character. Our great scholmasters, men who built up great reputations as schoolmasters, have been men who were most successful at producing men of fine character, and our great British schools are valued by us according to their success in building up the character of the boys.

We know that a boy who has not any opportunity of going to a good school, is going to have great difficulty in developing a fine character, and that is why all British people in the East make every possible effort to get their boys home to good schools. And in choosing a school we don't think so much about the actual teaching, but rather about the discipline of the school and the spirit known to exist among the boys in the school. It is these things that build up the character, and when they are right, and strong true character is being developed in schoolboys, you can be sure that these schoolboys are getting the learning too.

A National Mould.

I think I am right in claiming that all our British schools, from the greatest to the humblest, aim at building character, and this results in a definite national character, which, with all its imperfections, is useful and forceful. And when our British ideas of schools are brought abroad to you, by these missionaries who want nothing but to benefit you and your country, they still aim at building character. Here in Medhurst, you boys have an opportunity that is denied to many Chinese schoolboys. Recently I read that certain Government schools had closed without holding any examinations, because the pupils controlled the schools and didn't want exams and held that, as they paid for their education, they could make such decisions. Those schools are not moulding their pupils, but the pupils in their young ignorance are moulding the schools into uselessness. Here you have got a real chance to develop character that will make you useful to yourselves and useful to your country. You have discipline in this school and you can't have this school without the discipline, because we know that it could do no real good to you or your country, if it abandoned its ideal of building up your character.

Rights Mean Duties.

It is very easy to get wrong ideas about "rights." So much has been said and written about "rights" and so little about responsibilities. I believe that nothing should ever be written or said about "rights" without something being said also regarding the corresponding "duties," for it is certain that there is no right that has not some duty attached to it. Here in Shanghai we are always hearing about "rights," from "sovereign rights" and "extra-territorial rights," and "treaty rights," down to very humble rights indeed, but very much less is said about the corresponding duties. I think we foreigners can truly claim that we pretty faithfully carry out the duties attaching to the rights which we have, but "sovereign rights" are frequently appealed to in order to prevent foreigners from doing some good thing for China, or for some part of China, something which doesn't ever get done because the sovereign responsibility for doing it is completely ignored. In this you have an expression of character.

Some of you will soon be starting in to make a career in some way or other. I want to tell you that success in life depends not so much on what you know and what you can do as on what you are. And it will be by your character that you will succeed or fail, and win respect and esteem or fail to win respect and esteem. By your character as revealed by your actions rather than your words. Your character will be revealed very easily by what you do and words won't cover it up.

Another Chinese recitation by Tsung Pung Nyi was then given and a selection from "The Tempest" by several boys of the Senior Class, after which the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Scott, who was presented with a large basket of flowers, and the afternoon concluded with the Benediction by Rev. Mr. Box.

WHEN THE HOLIDAY SEASON COMES ROUND

A FATAL COLLISION ON THE RIVER

Passengers Skylarking on an Overloaded Ferry Boat: Two Women Drowned

A fatal accident occurred on the Huangpu shortly before 7 p.m. on Saturday, whereby two persons lost their lives. A ferry boat plying between the Yangtszepoo Creek and the Pootung shore was taking about 40 passengers across the river and when in mid-stream it collided with a laden coal-boat coming down the river on the tide. As a result, six of the ferry-boat's passengers fell overboard. Four were rescued, but a girl of 13 years and a woman of 21 drifted beyond aid and were drowned. The body of the girl was recovered on Monday morning.

The River Police promptly started to investigate the matter, and the laodah and a boatman admitted that the ferry-boat was overcrowded, having 40 people on board, whereas the maximum allowed by the police regulations was 20. They asserted that the passengers were skylarking and were standing up in the boat. As in a recent drowning case, the police considered that the laodah was at fault, and accordingly he was sent to the City Procurate on Monday, on a similar charge under the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code.

OUTRAGEOUS ATTACK BY CHAPEI POLICE

Innocent Russian Students Violently Assaulted and Imprisoned without Cause

Still another case of violent and totally unnecessary assault by Chinese armed policemen on peaceable and innocent people occurred about midnight on Monday. In Shanghai there is an association known as the Russian Students' Union, the character of which can be guaranteed by many of the leading people in the Settlement. It consists of a group of young Russians who live under very strict rules, amongst these being an order that there shall be no lights in the house after 11 p.m., no intoxicating liquor of any sort on the premises at any time, and no gambling. The Union occupies a small house at 32 East Hengpeng Road, off Darroch Road, in Chinese territory, and 27 young men are in residence there.

There are several other Russians living in the Chinese houses in the district and on Monday night one of these created a minor disturbance. He is said, whilst under the influence of liquor, to have gone to a Chinese shop and demanded vodka. He was not served and then he became violent. The police were summoned and then this man ran away. Passing the Russian Students' Union quarters, he ran under their porch—but did not go into the house—dodged round a corner and was lost to the police. The students at the time were not even aware of this incident.

Shortly after midnight, 18 Chapei policemen, all armed with rifles, suddenly burst into the house. Perhaps "burst" is not the most suitable word, but, anyway they opened the doors, and, with their rifles at the "charge," crept slowly upon the astonished students. Meeting with no opposition, they became bolder, rushed at the students and seized Messrs. M. Starogrodsky (the president), N. Malikoff (the secretary), G. Boronoff and N. Andrieff. These men they shook and pulled about with such violence that all had their shirts and other clothing torn off. The four young men then were taken into the street and mercilessly beaten with sticks and rifle butts, after which they were marched off to one of the Chapei police stations.

When paraded before someone who seemed to be a superior officer, Mr. Boronoff, who speaks English very well, tried to explain their position, trusting that someone among the police would understand English. One of them did. No sooner had Mr. Boronoff spoken a few words than this man exclaimed, "Ah, English!" and struck Mr. Boronoff on his back with a rifle. Further assaults were committed and then the four young men were locked in a cell.

Meanwhile, a student from the house hastened to the Bureau for Russian Affairs, but he was unable to do anything, for when he came back he reported that, on ringing the bell he was mistaken by the night watchman for a drunken Bolshevik who had come only to make a disturbance, and he narrowly escaped arrest! In the morning the officials at the Bureau were apprised of what had happned, the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs was communicated with and the imprisoned students were released. No charge was preferred against them and they were not told the reason for their arrest, so that they can only surmise the police were chagrined at being fooled by the other Russian they were chasing, and who, as stated, had no connexion whatever with the Russian Students' Union.

THE Municipal Police have resumed their practice of inserting advertisements in the principal Chinese newspapers of Shanghai offering rewards to persons giving information leading to the arrest of armed robbers or persons in possession of arms.

AS consignments of the new Hangchow 10-cent coins have arrived at this port from Hangchow, the Chinese are wondering why they have not been put into circulation. Some say that there are persons secretly purchasing them, realizing that their standard fineness is higher than that of the 20-cent. pieces. Others assert that the exchange shops are not willing to accept them.

CAPT. KEARNY AND THE K. K. K.

Claim that the Klan is Fighting Drugs, Arms Smuggling, and Bolshevism: Above all in No Sense Anti-foreign: Membership Asserted to be Growing Daily

Captain Kearny, who describes himself as an advisor to the three K's but not as a member of it, takes exception to the suggestion that the organization was not Chinese but was directed by foreigners. He even denied that Dr. Ching and Mr. Pung, the two foreigners arrested by the Chapei Police, were members of the Klan. They too are advisors. Capt. L. D. Kearny will be remembered in connexion with a series of cases in the United States Court for China touching the sale of arms and ships to the Chinese authorities in Hangchow and Nanking. He is said to be one of the moving spirits of the new organization, which he insists has been organized for philanthropic purposes.

In a letter to the Editor of the "North-China Daily News" Captain Kearney explains the general attitude of his organization as follows:—

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In your article on the Chapei police raid on 7 Heng Peng Road you state that I was present at the time, this is not true as I was in my own residence which is next door.

Regarding your statement of the Chinese Ku Klux Klan being of foreign origin and being led by foreigners, this also is untrue as I have been employed solely to manage the weekly and have nothing to do with the Order itself neither have the two other Americans which you mentioned.

I do believe that you should have investigated the matter before you made such a statement and I think that if you had taken the time to look into the matter of the Order that you would be willing to aid instead of condemning.

I admit that I am acting in an advisory capacity to the Klans and that Klans are fighting the opium, morphine and other drug business and are at the present time compiling a list of all places and people engaged in the damn business. You will be surprised at the list and the people engaged and who they are, and will make you this offer.

If you are supplied with the proper proof that the places are engaged in the selling of narcotics illegally and the selling of arms and amunition as well, will you publish the same and recommend that they are give a passage on the first steamer home? This is a bona fide offer and I have and can supply the proofs as stated and they are not all Chinese either.

Fighting for Right.

The Order of the Three K's as it is called is composed of the best class of Chinese and is fighting for principle of right and teaches that the feeling of anti-foreignism as is promulgated by a certain class of Chinese and a class of foreigners at present, is wrong and harmful to the nation and the Order was organized to counteract this. The Order has nothing to with politics of any kind and will not have, but the members realize that they will have the animosity of a certain class of Chinese officials who are "squeezing" the keepers of the dope" and gambling den. We can give to you the names and the places and the officials who are "squeezing." Besides we can prove it. This was the reason of the raid, they want to see if the paper was giving names. They thought that the proofs and the lists were at the place raided, and for your and their information they are not in Chapei at all, but in the hands of people that will put the proofs to good use shortly.

It is time for the foreign business men to take and investigate the matter of foreign hatred that is being instilled in the Chinese by a certain class of foreigners and take steps to offset it. The better class of Chinese people do not want such teachings spread and the foreign business men would find no heartier support than from them.

The Order is anti-bolshevik and believes that the spreading of their doctrine through China will have more harm than all the wrongs of the Militarists and, unless something is done to counteract these insidious teachings, that it will mean ruin for not only the Chinese but the foreign business as well. It is very easily proved that the Soviets are organizing bands to go among the Chinese and spread hate of the foreigner among them and a few Chinese saw that something had to be done to help, hence the Order of the Three K's.

The above is the truth of the matter and can be very easily proven by you at any time you care to investigate the matter fully.

Against Anti-Foreignism.

I will state that all members of the Order take an obligation to try and prevent anti foreign teachings, and will report any person who is trying to spread anti-foreignism, and there are numbers of anti-foreign agitators, as well as papers that are subsidised by the Soviets as per article in "Shanghai Journal of Commerce," a few days ago. They also report any place or person where "Dope" is sold. This is how the information is gathered.

I am sorry to take up so much of your time in the reading of this but I believe that you are for justice in any cause and that you do not desire to condemn anything or anyone unjustly.

Thanking you and hoping that you will really investigate the matter and if what I have just stated is correct, then tell it, if the statement is wrong tell it and then do not recommend a trip home but a trip to prison which would be the proper place.

I am, etc.,
Capt. L. D. Kearny.

Shanghai, June 27, 1924.

Klan's Articles of Faith.

Captain Kearny's suggestion that the movement is opposed to any anti-foreign tendencies is not altogether borne out by the statement of principles, of the Klan. These are:

"Object:—
A. Our country, right or wrong, our country.
B. Our Brothers.
C. Our Family.
D. Education.
E. Industry.

Our Country:—
'We believe in the Republican form of government and it is our aim to maintain this form of government in China and to prevent forces that are detrimental towards the accomplishment of this fact.

Our Brothers:—
"As we are banded together for mutual benfits we must protect our brothers, namely:—give medical aid when sick, give succour when in poverty, unemployment or other difficulties, and to bury the dead.

Our Family:—
"Mother, wife and children are dear to us and therefore we must give comfort and shelter and to shield them from harm.

Education:—
"We are to see that education is provided to the family of our brothers and to himself as well and to support our schools so that they can grow efficiently and freely as the green grass grows throughout the land.

Industry:—
"Industry must grow with the government and therefore we must support and aid their growth by buying our goods first and others secondary and aid in the establishment of industries by Chinese.

The above is only a brief sketch of the object of the order.

Signed 三 K.

The Chinese name of the order contains the English letter K, although how Chinese who do not know foreign languages are expected to read that it is difficult to see. The Chinese name is: 中國三K.

Large Membership Claimed.

The Klan continues to claim large enrollments. It claims that even yesterday 300 applications were received. It is nevertheless interesting that thus far no Chinese has stepped forward and claimed responsibility for it. Mr. William C. Pung is an American citizen, employed by an American firm in Shanghai. Dr. J. S. Ching is an American citizen from Seattle who came to China 18 months ago and who is a graduate of an American university. Captain Kearney is believed to be an American citizen. These are the three men who have thus far assumed any responsibility for the Klan.

In a document which the Klan sends to candidates notifying them that they have been admitted to membership the following paragraph appears:

"Give us your answer soon so that we may be able to grasp your hand in the grip of brotherhood for the glory of China and help to maintain our country as a nation among the Great Powers of the World."

When that letter goes out to prospective members does it mean America or the Republic of China? It is rather difficult to make that clear, until some Chinese comes forward as the spokesman of the Klan.

By special permission of the Ministry of Communications, a special train of six carloads of explosive chemicals, ordered from abroad by the Chung Hsin Mining Co. of Shantung, left the Woosung Forts Station on Saturday for Nanking. The goods will then be carried by a special train on the Tsin-Pu line to the Company.

FERRY ROAD FACTORY HOLD-UP

Cunningly Planned Robbery: Police Search for Gunmen's Car

A daring armed robbery took place at the Shng Dah silk weaving factory, Ferry Road, on Tuesday afternoon. A t about 2.20 p.m. four Chinese presented themselves at the factory gate and informed the watchman that they wished to see Mr. Bai, the assistant manager. One remained at the gate while the watchman conducted the other three into the office, where the manager and seven assistants were at work. Here they repeated that they wished to see Mr. Bai, "on business," were told that he was not then in, and were invited to sit in the waiting room until his arrival. Instead of entering the waiting room, they went out to the north side of the building—with which, evidently they were familiar—and re-entered through a swing door which brought them behind the office counter and near the two safes. Two of the robbers immediately drew revolvers and covered the manager and his staff, and the third man, taking up a bunch of keys which were lying on the table, opened both safes and extracted $800 in notes and silver. The money having thus been collected, the three men walked out, joined their companion who was waiting in a motor-car some 50 yards from the office door, and drove away, in the direction of the French Concession.

While the robbery was in progress, efforts were made to telephone to the police at Gordon Road, but these failed, and it was afterwards found that the thieves had left behind them a 12ft ladder used for the purpose of cutting the telephone wire at the back of the office. A description of the motor-car was given to the police, but unfortunately none of the Chinese had the wit to make a note of its number.

$1,200 Stolen from Chinese House.

Another daylight robbery occurred on Wednesday, this time in Avenue Road. About 10.30 a.m., three Chinese entered No. 232, a Chinese house, and while one of them armed with a knife remained on guard downstairs, the other two compelled the lady of the house to go upstairs and open a box containing valuables, jewellery and money to the value of $1,200. The party then left, the victim following close on their heels and raising an alarm. Despite the fact there there were a hundred or more market people doing business in the vicinity, not one of them paid any attention to the cries of "stop thief," and the robbers walked away unmolested. Three Chinese police heard the woman's cries and hurried to the scene, but by this time the robbers had mingled with the crowd and so got away.

GIFT OF $64,000 TO SHANGHAI COLLEGE

At the Shanghai College commencement exercises on Saturday last, Mr. Hanson, acting President, announced that a gift of $64,000 had been received from the China Medical Board for the College's work in natural sciences. They had also, said the acting President, received assurances of funds from other sources for the Science Hall and Women's Hall heating plants.

This gift of $64,000 will place Shanghai College among the institutions now equipped to give students desirous of studying medicine the required preparatory course for entrance to the Union Medical School, Peking.

It was also announced that the Woman's Hall, which is a magnificient addition to the group of buildings comprising Shanghai College, has been completed and occupied.

During the past few days, and nights, a number of Chinese investigators have kept faithful watch in a house in Robison Road alleged to be haunted, but nothing has been revealed to them. The only thing one man had to report, says a Chinese paper, was that he had been bitten on the face by a poisonous mosquito, but this his fellow-watchers refused to believe, saying it must have been the ghost who slapped him in the face.

CHILEAN RIGHTS IN SHANGHAI

Mr. Arce's Claim to Extraterritorial Jurisdiction: Diplomatic Body Declining to Act as Judge in the Matter: Chilean Consul's Claim Based on Treaty

Peking, July 1.

The Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, replying to the Waichiaopu on June 16 with regard to the Chilean Consul's claim for jurisdiction in Shanghai, acknowledged receipt of Dr. Wellington Koo's Note of May 26, which called attention to the fact that in the Sino-Chilean Treaty there was no clause granting Chilean Consuls in China the right of jurisdiction and that at the time of granting the Chilean Consul an exequatur the Waichiaopu expressly pointed out that he did not enjoy such right.

"Your Excellency, therefore (the Dean says) requests me to write to the Senior Consul at Shanghai asking him to withdraw the instructions to the Registrar of the Mixed Court to the effect that persons claiming Chilean nationality should in the case of their arrest be handed over to the Chilean Consul.

My colleagues desire me to reply as follows:

Consular Body Not Concerned.

"The instructions given by the Senior Consul at Shanghai to the Registrar of the Mixed Court on April 17, to which you refer, did not imply and was not intended to imply that the Consular Body at Shanghai favour the Chilean Consul's contention that he possesses the right of consular jurisdiction. However, he had written a letter to the Consular Body emphatically declaring that the Sino-Chilean Treaty confers this right on him. It is evident that it is not for the Consular Body to set themselves up as an international court to give decision to a question of interpretation of a treaty concluded between the Republics of China and Chile nor could the Diplomatic Corps assume such an attitude. This question, as Your Excellency remarks, has to be dealt with and solved exclusively by the two Governments concerned.

Chilean Consul's Emphatic Stand.

"It is equally evident that the Consular Body at Shanghai cannot pass judgment upon a person who lays claim to a certain nationality. In view of the Chilean Consul's emphatic declaration that he possesses the right of Consular jurisdiction, the Consular Body had no other course open to them but to instruct that any individual arrested in Shanghai claiming Chilean nationality should be brought before the Chilean consular officer. This leaves the Chinese authorities free and in fact gives them an opportunity to address themselves immediately to the said consular officer and claim that the person concerned should be handed over to them for trial.

"It is needless for me to add that in such a case neither the Consular Body at Shanghai nor the Diplomatic Corps would or could interfere as it would be a case which only would concern the Chincse and Chilean Governments. It seems, however, to my colleagues and they trust that Your Excellency will concur with their point of view, that so long as the Chilean Consul at Shanghai maintains his note in which he assures the Consular Body that he has the right of jurisdiction granted him by the Treaty, the said Consular Body cannot act otherwise than they have done."

The Note is signed by M. Oudendijk.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Chilean Consul's Exequatur.

Constant reference has of late been made in the Chinese press as to the position and powers of the Chilean Consul in Shanghai, all of them to the affect that, under her agreement with China, Chile has contracted no extraterritorial rights and therefore has no Consular jurisdiction. There are only five Chilean subjects registered here, but the principle involved is of importance. Through the local Commissioner, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs insists that the Consul has no jurisdiction and no power to act judicially, and this view has been placed before the Diplomatic Body and the Consular Body in Shanghai.

According to the exequatur which Mr. Arce the Chilean Consul, received on his appointment, and in the terms of which he is addressed as "Honorary Consul for Chile in Shanghai," he is permitted to enjoy the same privileges and powers as are extended to representatives of other Powers of similar rank, under the most favoured nation clause. It is further to be noted that, in a letter addressed to Mr. Arce in April, at the time of his appointment, the Shanghai Municipal Council wrote to him saying that the Council would recognize his status as Consul and that, from the date of writing until further notice, Chilean subjects taken into custody would be brought before him to be dealt with according to Chilean law.

The latest move in the matter is that Mr. Arce has addressed the following letter to the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs:—

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 24th ultimo wherein you raised the question of extraterritorial rights concerning my country, and, in this regard, I must express my profound surprise at the view taken by your Government.

While there are many points which I could take up with you respecting this question, I would only refer to one of them. I wish to draw your most urgent attention to the fact that when the treaty between the Republic of China and the Republic of Chile was signed in the year 1915, every country that had a treaty with China was enjoying extraterritorial rights, and I respectfully submit that it is most unlikely that, my country would sign a treaty putting her at a disadvantage with all the other countries having treaty relations with China. Under the circumstances, I could conceive no reason why an exception should be made of Chile, a country with which she had always been on friendly terms.

I have the honour to refer you to the treaty between China and Switzerland made as late as in the year 1918, under which extraterritorial rights were conceded to the latter country.

Referring to your suggestion that I should withdraw my Assessor from the Mixed Court, I regret to inform you that I am unable to do so until I receive orders from my own Government.

I have to draw your attention to Article 114 of the Consular Regulations of Chile, which states that existing treaties must be strictly carried out and in the event of non-observance on the part of the local authorities, it is the duty of the Consul to inform the Ambassador, Chargé d'Affaires, or Consul-General, who shall communicate with his Government. I have informed the Chargé d'Affaires for Chile in Japan of the action of the Mixed Court in taking jurisdiction over Chilean citizens. He has informed the Secretary of Foreign Affairs in San Santiago. If my Government decide that the treaty did not confer extraterritorial rights on her citizens, they will immediately notify me of that fact. Should they decide otherwise, the question must be referred to a third power for arbitration.

I think you will agree with me that it is essential that both China and Chile should agree to the meaning of the treaty before any one-sided action should be taken which would put Chile at a disadvantage with the other countries which have treaties with China.

My colleagues in the Consular Body had rightly taken this view and communicated to the Mixed Court accordingly."

BURGLAR SHOT DOWN

German Passer-by's Escape from Bullet

A German named H. A. Bergmann reported on Tuesday evening to the police that he had been fired at while passing along Park Lane Hongkew, in a ricsha. It was quickly discovered that there had been no deliberate attempt upon his life but that accidentally he had narrowly escaped serious injury.

It appears that at 7.15 a Chinese coolie took a fancy to a door mat on the steps of 5 Park Lane, and he was about to walk off with it when a Portuguese named A. E. Guttierez, living at No. 12, "covered" him with a revolver and ordered him to stop. Instead of doing this the coolie dropped the mat and ran, and Mr. Guttierez promptly fired a shot which struck him in the thigh, the bullet passing uncomfortably close to Mr. Bergmann. It was not a serious wound, and the coolie continued his flight, but got only as far as Haining Road when he was held by a foreign police constable. He was taken to the police hospital and will appear at the Mixed Court in due course.

Mr. Yao Ming-teh has been appointed by the Financial Commissioner of Kiangsu to collect a tax on lottery tickets sold in Shanghai from July 1. The merchants and dealers have proposed certain conditions which Mr. Yao will submit to the Commissioner in a day or two. Meantime, the tax is not being collected.

COMMENCEMENT DAY AT ST. JOHN'S

Fifty Degrees Conferred at 45th Exercises: Glorious Weather and Huge Crowd of Visitors: 1917 Class's Gift of Sun Dial to Alma Mater

Under ideal weather conditions, the 45th Commencement Exercises of St. John's University took place on Saturday in a charmingly arranged outdoor theatre beneath the big trees of the University campus. Fifty students received degrees. There were over 300 guests, among whom were Sir Skinner and Lady Turner, Judge Peter Grain, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Graves, the Very Rev. C. J. F. Symons, Mrs. Symons and Miss Symons, Mrs. Merriman and Mrs. O. M. Green .

The exercises opened at 5 o'clock with a procession of guests, the faculties of the various colleges, the alumni and the student body, headed by the graduating class, in ceremonial cap and gown, to the huge platform banked with flowers.

The invocation was pronounced by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Graves. The Rev. F. L. Hawks Pott, D.D., President of the University, then delivered his report. After welcoming the guests, he said:—Referring first to external developments, the erection of Seaman Hall has been completed and the building will be ready for occupation next September. This furnishes us with an important part of the new plant for the Middle School. Seaman Hall, as you know, is erected in memory of Mr. J. F. Seaman, a former American merchant in Shanghai. The funds were provided by his widow, Mrs. J. F. Seaman, and the total cost of the building was Tls. 50,000.

The dining room was erected by a separate fund of G.$5,000, contributed by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania in honour of Bishop Philip Mercer Rhinelander, and will be known as the Rhinelander Hall.

The building formerly occupied by the Middle School will be used for a dormitory for university students, and will be named Scheres-chewsky Hall in memory of Bishop Schereschewsky, the founder of the University.

Some additional property has been purchased on the other side of Soochow Creek for the enlargement of our playing fields. This was necessary owing to the increase in the number of students.

Another house is in course of erection at the point of the peninsula, at the extreme north end of the grounds. This will serve as the residence of the Headmaster of the Middle School.

Importance of Chinese Studies.

In regard to internal developments. I may say that there has been considerable progress in the way of adapting the courses in all departments to the needs of students in China, and that we are making a special endeavour to see that students who graduate from St. John's shall have a good knowledge of their own literature, history and philosophy and that these important subjects shall not be entirely neglected in their eager pursuit of Western learning.

As to gifts to the University, I am glad to be able to announce that the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation has agreed to contribute $30,000 Mex. over a period of five years toward the maintenance of our Science Department on condition that during the same period the University will expend for this department not less than $157,000 Mex. This condition has been met and the donation has been secured.

The Class of 1917 will present today a marble base for the sundial to be erected on the campus.

Mr. Uy Bico, a merchant in the Philippine Islands, father of one of our students, has generously presented two flag poles to the University. These will be put up in a prominent position on the lawn.

During the year about $6,000 Mex. has been added to the Social Hall, a portion of which was raised by a student campaign.

We are again indebted to the British and Foreign Bible Society for the generous donation of handsome copies of the Bible as gifts to the members of the graduating class. These were presented at the Baccalaureate Service last Sunday. Mr. T. T. Low continues his annual appropration of $1,000 to our School of medicine.

University Summer School.

Finally I will say a few words in regard to the immediate future. As has been announced in the Press, for the first time in our history, a Summer School will be held on our grounds under the auspices of the East China Association of Christian Colleges and Universities. Prof. H.F. MacNair will act as Dean. From the present registration it would appear that the school will be well attended.

The plan for the development of a Union Medical School has moved forward a step by the offer on our part to place at the disposal of the school for as long a period as necessary our medical faculty, laboratories, class-rooms, hospitals and dormitories. It is hoped that this may be the beginning of the building up of a strong medical school in this part of China, in which missionary and other units will co-operate.

Negotiations are still in progress in regard to St. John's becoming a partner in the Comparative Law School of China, and we hope that this may be arranged during the course of the coming year, so that we may have a share in the further development of that school.

As soon as the balance (about $5,000 Mex.) needed for the Social Hall has been secured, work on the building will be begun. Plans have been drawn, and now we only wait for the completion of the fund. This building will add much to the social life of the University; it will serve as a students' club and will be a common meeting ground for the students of all departments.

It is not my custom in making my annual announcements, to refer to individual members of the faculty, but I feel that to-day I must make an exception. Dr. C. S. F. Lincoln who has been associated with St. John's for the past 25 years as medical officer and professor in the School of Medicine, retires from active service. He has won in no small measure the respect and affection of his associates on the faculty, the Alumni, and the student body, and he leaves a vacancy both in the work and in our hearts which it will be difficult to fill.

China's Renaissance.

One word in closing—a word of hope in regard to the future. The brightest spot in the gloomy situation in China at present is the earnest desire of young men and women for education. China during this transitional period in her history has not, we are glad to say, lost her great inherent belief in the power of education. We are witnessing in this country a great intellectual revolution, and St. John's is glad of the opportunity of assisting in this movement—a movement that must surely have far-reaching results on the future development of the Republic.

The presentation consisting of a marble base for the sundial on the campus was made to the University by the 1917 class, and prizes were distributed. Visitors were struck by the manly well-behaved bearing of the youths who came forward to receive their awards.

The Addresses.

Dr. Carsun Chang, President of the National Institute of Self-Government, then eloquently addressed the assembly in Chinese, stressing the importance of education and pointing out that education was the only sure way toward self-government.

The Idea of a University

Mr. O. M. Green said in effect:—When your President did me the honour of inviting me to address you I was in no little doubt as to having anything worth my saying and your hearing. It has been said that none of us are infallible, not even the youngest, and that, if it means anything at all, means that the older we get the less inclined are we to dogmatize. I took comfort from the fact that, as Chinese, you would listen courteously and as university men you are accustomed to listen patiently even though—I speak with deference to your teachers—the subject may not be very interesting.

That phrase I have just used raises some thoughts: What is a University? What is a University man? By its derivation a university is obviously a place for all men, and where every branch of learning is taught; a place for scholars as distinct from schoolboys, a place where professors, entrenched in citadels of antiquarian research, enter into profound controversies as to the precise bearings of the particle "an" and bombard each other at long range with fragments of the root "pi." But a University is more than that. Not always are those who are best in schools best in life. A University possesses an influence beyond the power of examination to test. Many university men with no pretence to scholarship, men who have not even attained a degree, carry with them through life the remembrance of their university career as a sacred amulet in the bosom. If the question were asked, I should say that the finest examination test of mental training and general aptitude is the Oxford Greats School. I say this without prejudice as a Cambridge man. Cambridge has its specialized learning—mathematics, engineering, science, but we have nothing like the Litterae Humaniores, in some degree the equal of the Chinese classical degrees. Oxford Greats have not the aim of producing the specialist: their design is to give culture, poise and aptitude, to steep men in the best thought of the ancients, give them power of expression, of selection, of criticism, and to comprehend the teachings of history in the broadest sense. Tout comprendre c'est-tout pardonner. If we read history more we should find far more reason for making excuses than causes of quarrelling.

A School of Greats for All

But I would emphasize that what a limited number of men get in perfection from Greats all men get in modified form from the atmosphere and surroundings of University life. Properly regarded, a University is the essence and embodiment of history, though in a prophetic sense, for it is not until later that we realize that, however unconsciously, we have been weaving the prose and poetry of history into the web of our lives.

In its place midway between the school and the world the university is of profound importance, receiving young men at an impressionable age when they learn easily and remember. For those who do well it is the best preparation. For those who unhappily may begin badly, its training gives them another chance to make a new start. Though subject to rulers and governors, the university student yet enjoys the freedom of the grown man, has a livelier sense of personal responsibility and enters upon a new relationship with his fellows.

The Beauty of Surroundings

Not the least of influences in most universities, certainly in Oxford and Cambridge, is that of exceedingly beautiful surroundings. Great architects of the past did not always pay too great attention to hygiene, but no one has since approached them in knowledge of the influence of beautiful surroundings and of building beautifully. When we look round at the present day we cannot but have some doubt of "progress." In the past, builders made Gothic cathedrals, and left the people to dwell in slums: to-day, we blow the cathedrals to bits with big guns and build cotton mills and factories which may be said to begin killing people who work in them almost from the moment of entry.

"These grey heaps of deep-wrought stone" inspire the least romantic with emotions which are never lost. They join in giving a university man something to be proud of all through life. I do not say that university men never do mean things. But at the most plastic time of life the seal of all that is greatest and noblest in our ancestry is impressed indelibly upon them, their lives are permeated with ideals and associations with which they are ever proud to have been connected. And a proper pride is a shining armour with which to go through life. Only, a man must be careful what he is proud of. He is not to take pride in his own doings. That is "swank." Rather is he to take pride in what others have done, cherishing the memory of that and living up to it, satisfied with nothing less than the best because any lesser standard would be unworthy of great forerunners.

The Craze to Tear Down.

The world of to-day is in far too great a hurry to abandon the things of the past. When we boast ourselves so much better than our fathers we must make quite sure that there was not something, after all, in the wisdom of the past. And this I think may fairly be applied to China to-day. You are straining towards new ideas and new systems, and you are vexed and unhappy because they cannot be realized in a moment. The change of mind which the new outlook has brought has made your country restless and dissatisfied, and China now shares with all the world that desire to tear down, to throw away, to disown the past, to break up and reshape all that the past has given. But I would counsel you not to forget Old China, to cherish the old world and strive to find out and utilize what was best in it. Man cannot divorce himself from his ancestry. Physically and mentally we are each of us the produce of a thousand lives. Morally and socially we grow by what was thought and felt before us, on the grain of wisdom garnered in imperishable storehouses for us by successive generations.

Making History Now.

You are making history at St. John's in two senses: you are still a young university, you are building traditions which will both serve your descendants and be their pride. And in another way you are making history; the eyes of the world are upon China, your new men are taking the place of the old, and many of them are amazingly clever, but I am not sure that there is not something missing in them yet perhaps the broader mentality of the student of Litterae Humaniores, that great pride in the past and veneration for ideals of which can neither be put into exact words nor traced to any exact source; the things which a university is designed to teach which is imparted not through schools and class lists and prizes bound in vellum and calf, but by itself and its traditions from old time, by its visible embodiment of the successive labour of generation after generation living in mutual help, in self-renunciation, bound in the common ambition to hand on the torch of discipline, of honour and of reverence.

The exercises concluded with the singing of the Chinese National Anthem.

WEDDING

Smith—Piper

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Sunday evening at St. John's Pro-Cathedral when Miss Anne Alexandra Piper, daughter of Colonel Alexander Ross Piper of Brooklyn, N.Y., was married to the Rev. Hollis Samuel Smith, son of Mrs. E. C. West of Binghampton, N. Y., the Right Rev. F. R. Graves, Bishop of Shanghai, assisted by the Rev. Robert C. Wilson of Zangzok, Kiangsu, officiating. Mrs. F. L. Hawks Pott presided at the organ. The bride, who was given away by the Rev. Henry A. McNulty of Soochow, looked charming in white crêpe satin embroidered in pearls and crystals, with a long court train of satin. The wedding veil of rose point lace was arranged over a coronet of orange blossoms. Miss Madeline Day of Wuchang acted as bridesmaid, wearing orchid crêpe satin.

The bridegroom was attended by the Rev. Francis A. Cox of Soochow, as best man. A delightful reception, attended by many friends, was held after the ceremony, at the residence of Bishop and Mrs. Graves, after which Mr. and Mrs. Smith left on their honeymoon which will be spent in Japan. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been connected with the American Church Mission for some time, the bride as a teacher in the Rosa Sayre School for Chinese Girls and Mr. Smith as a missionary in Shangshu, this province, which is better known by the local dialect as "Zangzok."

ON Sunday week at 5 p.m. an American steamer ran on a shoal in a dense mist off Tsurumi on her way from Yokohama to the Asano Dockyard, Kawasaki. As there was no possibility of her reflotation under her own steam, due to the ebbing tide, the Asano Dockyard soon despatched tug boats. The vessel had aboard 700 tons of crude oil for the Mitsui Bussan.

PRIZE GIVING AT SICCAWEI

The Apostolic Delegate's Advice to Students: College's Successful Year

The Apostolic Delegate, Mgr. Celse Constantin presided at the annual prize-giving of Siccawei College in the large guest hall of the college on Saturday morning. The hall was tasetefully decorated for the occasion, the colours of all nations mingling their varied hues with the rainbow flag of China. Punctually at 9 a.m. the guests entered and were seated to the front, the Tusewei School Band meanwhile playing a selection with great enthusiasm. To the rear were the students, numbering at the close of the educational year 514, and all eager to know how many prizes fell to the lot of each successful candidate in the trying ordeal of the late examination.

The prize-list was then read out by the Prefect of Studies of the Foreign Department, the Perfect of Chinese Literature and one of the native professors. The students of the Collegiate and Secondary Course were the first to be crowned, then those of the Higher Primary. The Secondary Course comprises the following subjects: Christian Doctrine, Apologetics, Sacred History, Philosophy, Ethics, Explanation of the Chinese Classics, Chinese Essay and Composition, French, English, Latin, Methematics, natural science, drawing, music and penmanship. The programme of the Higher Primary Department is less ample, but still well adapted to the age and capacity of the younger boys. Here also the Chinese classics are a prominent feature, as well as composition and letter-writing, French history, geography, arithmetic, elementary natural acience and penmanship.

Valuable Books and 430 Rewards.

In all these subjects were conferred upon successful students, each class getting generally two, the second recipient being a few points lower than the first. The prizes, which were piled up on two tables, took the shape of books, Foreign and Chinese, and were handed to the winners by the Delegate Apostolic, the Rector Rev. E. Beauce, S.J., the professors and distinguished guests. Four hundred and 30 prizes were distributed.

Fifteen Enter Aurora University.

The list of the candidates who passed successfully the entrance eramination to the Aurora University was then proclaimed. Of these there were 15, while those who received their diploma of full Secondary Education numbered 27, and those graduating in Higher Primary attained 53. All these received the plaudits of their fellow students and of the professors, and it was a real pleasure to see the genuine solidarty that reigned between teachers and pupils.

The ceremony was brought to a close by a student's address to the presiding delegate, and a short speech by the Rector, to both of which his Excellency replied, congratulating the scholars on their success, and the teachers who laboured hard to secure these good results. The Jesuit Fathers were known the world over for their educational ability, said the Apostolic Delegate. Special emphasis was laid by his Excellency on the duties of students, which embraced the acquisition of sound knowledge, the formation of character, and the pursuit of all that was good and noble in life. School-days laid the foundation of the future citizen, and if they were diligent and good students, they would in latter life be worthy citizens of their country.

When the guests had withdrawn, a bustling scene of parents and friends, of motor-cars, carriages, ricshas and other conveyances thronged round the porch and along the alleyways. About noon nearly all had left for their homes, and will enjoy there two months' holidays. The fall session of the college commences on September 3.

LOCAL bankers have decided to purchase no more bullion silver for the Anhui Mint owing to the inferior quality of the 20-cent. coins it has turned out. Mr. Tang Chia-chi, Director of that Mint, has accordingly come to Shanghai "to explain away the misunderstanding." It will need some explaining.

THE NEW YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK

An Architectural Appreciation

By John Lofting.

The latest new building completed is an addition to the architectural beauty of the Bund of an unique character. The architects, Messrs. Palmer and Turner, have many fine buildings to their credit along the Huang Pu front and all have special characteristics differentiating them which, at the same time, blend in a very pleasing harmony. In such a comparatively short line as the Bund the avoidance of monotony is a singular artistic feat on the part of the architects. The explanation is yet a simple one. The artistic staff of the firm is composed of picked men, Home architects who have established a reputation for sound knowledge and creative ability. Each, after gaining the necessary experience of the peculiarities of building in China, is entrusted with the complete design and carrying out of a new building as the commissions arrive. Thus each building carries the peculiar creative genius of the individual, and the general harmony is created by the artistic hallmark of the firm. The new Yokohama Specie Bank was entrusted to Mr. Frank Collard the young British architect who, in collaboration with other members of the firm, has already made a name in Shanghai with that pure Greek gem the Chartered Bank of India.

In the design for the Japanese Bank Mr. Collard projected his genius along a line which would have made the old conservative architects shiver with apprehension for the artistic risks involved. He set out to achieve what Rudyard Kipling laid down years ago as the impossible. And he has succeeded. He has set up on the Bund the complete refutation, in the province of art, of Kipling's dictum. West here meets East in a harmony of unimaginable beauty. Starting with a basis of English classic, borrowing from the ancient Greek, the design is enfused with a sympathy for Japanese art in the happiest manner. And, so far from creating a hybrid appearance or an effect of fussiness it achieves, by the boldness and purity of line and proportion, a calm dignity which, but for the softness of the line detail would be severe, almost hard.

The front portion of the building is faced with Japanese granite of a fine texture and colour which in the lower part of the Bund front forms a sharp contrast with the three pairs of large dignified black iron gates set in bronze surrounds. The bronze panels in each gate are fine castings depicting ancient Japanese arms. The plain granite facing of this part is continued within around the spacious portico and the solid simplicity of it, whether the gates are shut or slid out of sight within the massive walls and piers, forms an efficient and impressive base to the pair of five-feet-diameter plain circular swelled columns which run right up the front to the main entablature. A sculptured Japanese mask with helmet is very happily introduced into the bold Ionic capital of each column. The colonnaded front is flanked each side with a pair of wide plain pilasters in low relief culminating in delightful fluted capitals. The severity of these plain columnar flanks is finely relieved by the flat oriel window set between the pilasters in each case, supported by the sculptured head (of antique Japanese origin) of the keystone of the arch below, and capped with a rich copper canopy head. The main entablature above the capitals is built up with a plain architrave and frieze and a wide overhanging cornice. The wide-fenestrated perfectly plain storey above the cornice terminates on the sky-line in a boldly designed bronze cresting of a shell motive which gathers upwards in the middle at the flag pole base with a daringly original but charmingly successful design comprising the Japanese sunburst flanked each side by a large Phœnix, all flashing golden down the river.

This new bank front on the Shanghai Bund is arresting not only for its bold originality but also for its impressive dignity. Such a happy combination in modern architecture is a very remarkable achievement.

The granite Portico gives access to the marble colonnaded Entrance Hall of soft harmonious colours. On the South side of the Entrance Hall is a marble stairway of easy rise sweeping gracefully two ways.

From the Entrance Hall we enter between marble columns the Banking Hall proper. The first impression is of a rich simplicity and quiet dignity. The open space and freedom of this great hall seem to be rather helped than hindered by the number of columns which so large an area demands. The large square columns and responds of grey marble with their black marble bases and bronze capitals are a restful joy to the eye travelling across the spaces. The coffered ceiling toned to the colour of old ivory and decorated in royal blue and gold has an appearance of controlled luxury contrasting with the austerity of the plain lined stucco walls. The light is subdued but efficient, the North and South windows being assisted by a long domed centre ceiling light charmingly wrought with thin curving bars, a bronze cresting running around the springing with blue panels appearing behind. A soft light is diffused through pale green radiating glass curves and the lantern terminates at the crown with a delicate design of scrolls and circles. For all the delightful touches of decoration nothing jars the repose of this fine hall; and even the utilitarian strong room doors, set in their simple architraves in the plain lined walls, have a dignity and contribute their service to the general beauty of the whole.

The upper storeys of the building are designed for offices and are so skillfully planned that each room is conveniently accessible and perfectly lighted. The wide centre court above the glass dome of the Banking Hall collects ample light for all the inner rooms and corridors and distributes it through adequate fenestration.

The building structurally is the most modern type of fireproof construction, the steel framework having been fabricated in England. The floors and the strong foundation raft and treasuries and strong rooms are all built of reinforced concrete. The electrical and other mechanical equipment is of the most up-to-date variety in all cases.

To return for a moment, before concluding, to the point of unique value in this building. That the structure serves excellently the purposes for which it was designed; that the peculiar difficulties which every new building project presents on account of site and aspects, special requirements of the owners and what not, have been met and overcome in a manner worthy of the best traditions of modern work; that the building enjoys the comforts and conveniences of the latest science in mechanical engineering and so forth; these things do not distinguish the building from several others. The value which does distinguish it is æsthetic. For this building shows, as probably no other building in the Far East shows, the possibilities of sympathetic harmony between the artistic aspirations of the West and of the East. Furthermore, it contributes, if not a proof, at all events a suggestive evidence of the common womb of Occidental and Oriental creative art away back in ancient Athens.

About 20 years ago a book was published in England and America called "Impressions of Japanese Architecture" by the distinguished American architect, Ralph Adams Cram. In it the author claimed to trace a Greek influence upon the art of Asia as great as that upon the art of Europe. The following is a quotation from his chapter upon Japanese Sculpture:—

"Earliest in point of time is a bronze figure formerly in Horiuji but now in the Nara Museum. It is of the sixth century: pure Korean, or, if not that, then the earliest of all Japanese work and executed under Korean orders. . . . . Not only is it a fine type of pure and law-abiding sculpture, full of beauty and spiritual calm, but it is a priceless example of that amazing Asiatic modification of an Hellenic norm which proves a ramification of classic influence, a persistent survival of the Greek idea, in lands and among people severed from the primal source by almost the whole diameter of being.

The influence of Athens upon the art of Asia was as great as in the case of Medieval Europe, and the man who will undertake to trace the devious course of this influence from Hellas across the whole width of Asia will have a new field full of great possibilities."

If the architect of the new Yokohama Specie Bank has not actually traversed that field of research, he has certainly grasped the possibilities arising from the common source of widespread influence. To take but one of his happy examples, he has designed a sculptured head for the keystone of the lower arches of the Bund front flanks which is, not indeed a copy from any of the old figures, but an original design of very clearly defined ancient Japanese feeling; and, set in its Western classic surroundings, it lives as in a native element. Archæologists and historians may trace the courses of the art of the East and of the West in their ever-widening divergence; it has remained for a young English architect, by the reach of his genius, to draw them together and set them side by side, nay, in sympathetic embrace, and in the achievement to show the derivation of the beauty of each from the primal mother of both.

WATSON'S NEW FACTORY

Sterilizing Mineral Waters by Ultra-violet Rays: A Tour through the Factory

Watson's Mineral Water Company's new factory, at No. 86 Wayside Road, was formally opened on Wednesday, when throughout the morning and afternoon a reception was held and guests shown over the premises.

The new building is a fine big affair, and most of the plant installed is new—all of it up-to-date. Shanghai people consume a tremendous amount of mineral water in the course of the year, and with the uncertainly of the purity of the water which we get here, great care has to be taken in sterilizing and distilling. Watson's are particularly careful in this respect, and the greatest care is taken in distilling and "spotting." What chiefly impresses the visitor is the spaciousness of all the departments.

The ground floor is principally taken up with godown space and the large filling room. This room is particularly interesting to the layman, who, as a rule, drinks down his ginger-ale or his whiskey-soda with little thought as to how it is made. In the filling room are four automatic filling machines, shortly to be supplemented by two more, and each of these machines will turn out one hundred dozen bottles in an hour. Carbonic acid gas is manufactured in a special tank, distilled and purified, before passing into the gasometer where tremendous pressure is put upon it before it passes through the syrup and distilled water in the bottles. Then the bottles are automatically corked and carefully packed, after which they are shipped on the company's motor lorries and sent away.

On the upper story is the sterilizing room, where the water used in the manufacture of the mineral waters is first of all distilled in Bergfeldt filters and then sterilized by the medium of ultra violet rays.

On this floor is also the store room where English essences and Taikoo sugars, all used in the manufacture of minerals, are stored; also the syrup room where the various syrups for flavouring drinks are stored.

In addition to the present premises, preparations are being made for further extensions during the year.

Amongst those present at the reception were Sir Skinner Turner, the Very Rev. Dean Symonds and and Judge Milton Purdy.

BUREAU OF RUSSIAN AFFAIRS

Functioning as Usual but Under Supervision of Chinese Commissioner

The Bureau of Russian Affairs functioned as usual on Tuesday, with the exception that the offices were closed during the afternoon and officially the Bureau, as the notice on the front door stated, was under the supervision of the Chinese Commissioner of Foreign Affairs. The entire staff acted and were in their offices from 9 a.m. until noon. No change has been noted by those in charge, nor any order been received from the Senior Consul that there would no longer be any Russian Assessor at the Mixed Court, though it was noted at the morning session of the latter organization, that a Russian youth charged with driving a motor without a licence was brought before the Japanese Assessor and the Magistrate.

The Russian press stated on Saturday that M. Karakhan had made application to the Waichiaopu that a Russian Ambassador, differing from the ministers of other countries, be permitted to function at Peking. No reply, we understand, has been given him.

In view of the change in the situation it is interesting to note that many Russians have been applying to the American Consulate for visas. The Consulate, however, refuses to receive any applications at present, as it has been notified by the State Department that nothing is to be done until proper forms, under the new Immigration Bill, have been forwarded. Now that it is after July 1, it seems certain that no Russians from Shanghai will be able to go this year, for the difference in time in transit of mail makes it certain that the 1,792 as permitted under the bill will have left Russia before the forms even arrive in the Orient. Under the 150,000 maximum to be reached gradually (all immigrants annually permitted to enter America) 4,002 of which are Russian, there seems a bright ray in future years for those stranded here.

CUTICURA HEALS CHILD'S HEAD

Hair Fell Out From Eruptions. Could Not Sleep At Night.

"My little girl's head broke out in small red spots which formed sore eruptions and nearly covered her head. The eruptions scaled over and were very irritating causing her to scratch them, and she could not sleep at night. Her hair fell out so that it had to be cut.

"I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. I saw a great improvement so purchased more and after using two boxes of Ointment, with the Soap, she was healed." (Signed) Mrs. A. Marriott, 95, Prospect St., Alfreton, Derbyshire, Eng.

Use Cuticura Soap and Ointment exclusively for all toilet purposes.

Soap 1s., Ointment 1s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. Sold throughout the Empire. For sample each free address: F. Newbery & Sons, Ltd, 27, Charterhouse Sq., London, E.C.1. Also for mail orders with price. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

Silver.

The price came yesterday at 34 1/16d. ready and 34⅛d. forward, against 34 1/16d. ready and forward last week, showing rises of ⅛d. and 1/16d. on the respective prices. The fluctuations during the week were small. The London market was reported quiet and steady. China sold and the Continent bought a small amount for forward delivery.

Bars in stock, 3,547, including, silver Yen 10 lakhs. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 389¾ lakhs and $386¾ lakhs, against Tls. 376 lakhs and $382 lakhs last week, and Tls. 211¼ lakhs and $294 lakhs on July 4, 1923.

Exchange.

Exchange left off last week with the official quotation T.T. 3/3⅛d., where it still remains. Since last writing we have had two days holidays and our exchange market has been particularly quiet, and governed practically by Chinese speculators. Estimates still vary widely as to their position.

The market was quiet and steady all yesterday forenoon, with Banks selling T.T. 3/3⅜d. July, 3/3 1/16d. August, 3/3⅛d. September. Gold $ T.T. 71⅛ July/August, 71¼ September, 71⅜ October, with very little business passing.

THE SILVER MARKET

Easier Tendency Induced by the China Position

Reporting from London on May 28, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The tendency of the silver market has been easier, owing chiefly to the position in China, where exports are still languishing, and a certain amount of speculative exchange business takes place, in connexion with which sales of silver have been made in this market. Purchases have been made occasionally on Continental account and also on behalf of India. As a set-off against the former, a further large consignment of Continental silver has been received in London. The undertone is unchanged, for the fresh bear sales on account of China that have taken place represent so much more to be covered at a later date, when, quite possibly, competition may be keener than it is at the moment. Business with America has been fitful.

The silver quotations to-day for cash and two months delivery are respectively ⅛d. above and the same as those fixed a week ago.

THE GOLD MARKET

India's Remarkable Absorption

Reporting from London on May 28, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 21st inst. amounted to £126,255,860, as compared with £126,354,060 on the previous Wednesday.

Only a small proportion of the fair supply of gold available this week has been taken for India. Gold valued at $3,460,000 has arrived in New York from London.

We append figures (in lakhs of rupees) relating to Indian trade (on private account) for April:—

	Exports.	Imports.	Net Exports.	Net Imports.
Merchandise	3069	2027	1042	—
Gold	—	302	—	302
Silver	5	257	—	252

Total Net Exports, 488.

The absorption by India of the precious metals at the present time is still remarkable. The return above detailed indicates that the bullion proportion of the imports into India during the last month was more than 20 per cent. of the total. So far as external trade is concerned, these imports may be regarded as currency between India and her debtors, but within India itself they become commodities simply and do not go to swell the volume of currency. According to the following extract from the "Times of India," the question of financing crops, etc., is assuming importance:—

"A consideration of the Bank's (Imperial Bank of India) statement and the monetary situation shows that the country requires permanent additions to its currency to meet the growing trade and financial requirements, and that temporary inflations do not serve the purpose. The large additions to the country's rupee loans in recent years, moreover, mean a heavy call for finance, particularly during the busy season, and impose a heavy strain on the Bank's resources. The high Bank rates are telling heavily on the country's industries, particularly during the present period of depression, and interest charges are considered unbearably high. Trade and industries both demand relief from this situation, which is growing worse year by year, and it is considered that the country cannot get this relief so long as the official exchange ratiostands at two shillings gold, and fresh money cannot flow into the country, and become a permanent addition to its currency. An early return to the ratio of 1s. 4d. gold is becoming more and more imperative and although unsettled financial conditions in Europe may, in the opinion of some authorities, render advisable the postponing of such a step, yet India's internal development must receive a severe check so long as the present policy prevails."

The Southern Rhodesian gold output for April amounted to 54,865 ounces, as compared with 53,407 ounces for March, and 53,200 ounces for April, 1923.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Piece Goods Still Dull, but Signs are Promising: Renewal of Export Interest

July 5.

The markets again have been about as dull as they could be all through the week, but merchants for long have been accustomed, in the darkest days, to endeavour to discover something bright ahead which may offer consolation. So, although this is the third successive week of "nothing doing," they still, in their study of conditions, are convinced that it is but a temporary slump and that everything points to a revival coming along as suddenly as a typhoon. Even the export people have received so many inquiries that they regard the sale of something before long as almost a certainty, though operations still do not go very far beyond polite and chatty correspondence.

Piece Goods.

The conditions so far as indent firms are concerned have remained practically unaltered. Sales have been very small and the market all round has been extremely quiet, with a total lack of any evidence of a renewal of the trade demand in the quantities so urgently hoped for. Korea, who has been out of the market for so long, remains apparently uninterested, but as she has been nibbling in the auction rooms it is possible operations soon will be extended.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—A certain firmness characterized the local market for most of the week, but interest still is not of a nature to be enthusiastic about and actual sales have been small. The quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange yesterday were:—July, 46.20; August, 46.20; September, 42.50; October, 39.20; November, 38.65; December, 38.25. Spot quotations:—Shensi, 46.50; Hankow, 44.50 to 45.

Yarn.—A general apathy characterizes the yarn market. Quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange yesterday were:—July, 174.70; August, 172.90; September, 170.30; October, 164.80; November, 162.60; December, 162.

Produce.

The produce markets continue dull, although increased interest on the part of Home buyers is in evidence. Practically all commodities are in short supply, which is rendering business on conservative lines almost impossible. Groundnut prices in Europe have advanced and a few sales are reported, mainly to French ports. Groundnut oil also is in demand, but at prices well below the ideas of local holders. Good prices are being offered for musk, but supplies are rather difficult to secure. Light weight cowhides are in request, but mediums and heavies are unsaleable.

CHENGTU-CHUNGKING RAILWAY

A plan is afoot in the Civil Governor's office and the Szechuan Railway and Mine Bureau for the construction of a railway between Chêngtu and Chungking, a distance of about 900 li. Capital is to be raised privately among the people of the province. A petition for approval has been forwarded to the effect that authority is given for the construction of the proposed section, prior to which, however, plans in detail must be submitted for endorsement.

LUNGKAIHO OPENED

The opening of Lungkaiho, in the vicinity of Kiukiang, to foreign trade has been sanctioned by the Government. Lungkaiho is situated between Kiukiang and the Lushan summer resort for foreigners from Hankow and other Yangtze ports. Tao Chiao-yao, former Civil Governor of Kiangsi, has been appointed director in charge of the new commercial port. As Lungkaiho is so close to Kiukiang, no separate Customs house will be established; but like all other self-opened ports in China, the police, sanitary and other public services will be solely administered by the Chinese.

COAL OUTPUT

The total output of the Kailan Mining Administration's mines for the week ending June 21, amounted to 85,759 tons and the sales during the same period, to 87,776 tons.

RUBBER OUTPUT

The output of rubber from the Taiping Estates for the month of May was	7,367

LANCASHIRE'S COTTON TRADE

Position Becoming Worse

London, July 1.

In the course of a speech at Manchester to-day Sir Charles Macara said that the position with regard to both American and Egyptian cotton-spinning and manufacturing, instead of improving, was becoming rapidly worse. The present short-time movement had proved insufficient to meet the situation.—Reuter.

FOOCHOW TEA MARKET

The new season teas arrived in Foochow from the interior a little later than last year. The Paklum Congou market was opened on June 7 at Tls. 45 per picul, against Tls. 30 last year. The supply of first crop of this grade of tea is only 600 half-chests against approximately 3,000 half-chests last year. The bulk of first crop Panyong Congou and Souchong, about 20,000 half-chests for both, has also arrived, but the market for these teas has not yet been opened owing to high prices. Opening is expected in a few days. The liquor and leaf of all grades of teas this year is considered to be fair. Prices are expected to be higher on account of excessive likin taxes in the interior and the excellent demand.

JUNE WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX

The total index number for June in Shanghai, as compiled by the Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets, is 151.8, showing marked falls of 1.6 per cent. from the previous month and 2.2 per cent. in comparison with the corresponding month of last year. It is 5.1 per cent. lower as compared with June, 1920, during which our index number had the highest mark, mainly because of the sudden falls of metals and other food products. In metals, the quotation of pure antimony has decreased from Tls. 260 to Tls. 230 per ton. As for "other food products," sugar likewise has not a slump and other commodities, such as beef, mutton, pork, eggs, milk, salt, sauce and Shaoshing liquor, brandy and bacon, have suffered from converting their dollar quotations to taels, owing to the cheap rate of dollars. However, there only small falls happened to miscellaneous goods, while cereals and textiles, on the contrary, show upward movements. The index of cereals rises as high as 138.6, reaching almost the January level. The reason is due to the dearness of new beans at the opening sales in Hankow and Wuhu.

Our monthly figures since June, 1923, are given as follows:—

CHINA'S VANISHING TEA TRADE

The "Tea & Coffee Trades Journal" gives some interesting figures showing the immense decline in China's tea trade with the United States. The relative standing to-day of the four sources of supply is shown by the following table:—

	Percentage of total imports into U. S.
China	19.1	15.0	18.5
Japan	28.0	37.5	33.8
British East Indies	30.0	20.6	21.2
Dutch East Indies	6.9	7.4	9.5

The following table shows the amounts in pounds imported from the four principal sources of supply since 1900:—

	China	Japan	British East Indies	Dutch East Indies
1900	42,288 000	38,939,000	4 375,000	—

Business has shown a slight tendency to improve during the past week and buying quotations have been more general. There has been quite a steady demand for nearly all the local Rubber shares and this is supported by a slight recovery in the price of the raw material since last week. Quotations for nearly all other local shares show a little improvement but not attractive enough to tempt sellers at present and the amount of business passing has been small. Local Debenture Stocks are a firm market again and have been difficult to obtain during the week.

London quotations have improved slightly during the week and the following are the latest prices offered to us by cable this week:—

COMPANY MEETINGS

TANAH MERAH RUBBER ESTATES, LD.

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Tannah Merah Rubber Estates was held last Friday at the offices of the Secretaries and General Managers, Messrs. A. R. Burkill & Sons. Mr. A. W. Burkill presided supported by the directors and 104,925 shares were represented.

After the reading of the notice convening the meeting the Chairman said:—

Gentlemen, the Report and Accounts having been in your hands for some time, I will, with your permission, follow the usual course and take them as read.

Since the last report the total area of the Estate has been increased by five acres, representing a block of land acquired by the Company in 1920, but not hitherto included in the total area. During the year 160 acres of waste land were surrendered to Government, but no adjustments of areas can be made until after the survey and excision of the land from the title. This also applies to an area of approximately 400 acres sold the previous year, the survey of which has still to be undertaken by the Government. When all the necessary adjustments and surveys have been made, the Company will possess 1,817 acres of planted rubber and approximately 1,408 acres of reserve—a total area of 3,225 acres.

From the time restriction was brought into effect, the earnings of this Company have been seriously affected by reason of the very low export allowance given to the Estate. This was due to the fact that the standard year on which the allowances were based for all Estates was a period of comparatively low outputs as far as Tanah Merah was concerned, as a large proportion of tappers during that time were new recruits from Java just learning their work. I am pleased to report, however, that under the new method of reckoning outputs, the allowance has been appreciably altered and for the coming year the standard production has been raised to 566,360 lb., being an increase of 105,120 lb. on the original figure. On the 60 per cent. basis, this will give the estate a quarterly exportable allowance of 84,954 lb. as against 69,186 previously, an increase of 62,072 lb. for the year. In addition to this, you will be pleased to hear that the re-assessment was made retrospective to November 1, 1923, and for the quarter ended April 30, the allowance was increased to 102,166 lb. Under the revised assessment, it is estimated that the Company will be able to produce its allowance of 339,186 lb. at an "all-in" cost of 33 Straits cents, which is equivalent to 9.24d. per lb., but I feel confident this figure will be improved upon.

The position as regards the Rubber industry at the present time is an anxious one and it is extremely difficult to gauge what future prospects are likely to be. From time to time the question of improving the marketing of rubber by co-operative selling has been under consideration by the Rubber Growers' Association and a Committee has now been appointed to work out the necessary details of a scheme which I feel sure, if supported by all rubber producers, will undoubtedly tend to strengthen the position of the industry.

With regard to the accounts, these call for very little comment. The profit for the year amounted to Tls. 25,008.40 which, added to the amount of Tls. 31,850.88 brought forward from last year, makes a total of Tls. 56,859.28 standing to the credit of Profit and Loss Account. Whilst the result might appear to justify a small return to Shareholders, your Directors are of the opinion that the interests of shareholders will be best served by deferring any distribution of profits until the price of rubber is such as to insure the Company working at a reasonable profit. The present price, as you are aware, leaves much to be desired and barely covers cost of production. The Directors therefore regret they are unable to recommend the payment of a dividend, but should conditions improve, they will give this matter their first consideration.

Mr. Wyld has continued his excellent work as Manager and the Directors take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation of his services and those of the estate staff, the local agents in Ipoh and of the visiting agent.

Before putting the resolutions to the meeting, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability any questions shareholders may wish to ask.

The following resolutions were duly adopted:—

That the Report and Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1924, together with the recommendation as to appropriation as to balance at credit of profit and loss account as presented be accepted.—

Proposed by Mr. A. W. Burkill and seconded by Mr. E. T. Byrne.

That Mr. Chun Bing-him be re-elected a Director of the company—

Proposedd by Mr. A. W. Burkill and seconded by Mr. E. T. Byrne.

That Messrs. Thomson & Co. be re-elected Auditors to the company—

Proposed by Mr. W. A. Odgen and seconded by Mr. S. R. Owen.

WEST END ESTATES

A Profitable Year's Working

The annual general meeting of the shareholders of the West End Estates, Ltd., was held on Saturday at the offices of Messrs. Cumine & Milne, secretaries and general managers. The meeting was presided over by Mr. H. M. Cumine who was supported by Mr. P. L. Bojesen and Mr. C. K. Greaves, directors, and the shareholders present represented 9,759 shares.

The notice convening the meeting and the directors' report having been read:

The Chairman said:—Gentlemen, The report and statement of account for the financial year ended December 31, 1923, having been in your hands for some time, I will, with your permission, adopt the usual procedure and take the same as read.

The report recording so fully, as it does, the year's working leaves me hardly anything further to say except that I should like to draw your attention to the item of Tls. 78,413.47, the balance appearing in our favour in the profit and loss account. You will see the losses incurred during former years amounting to Tls. 45,893.55 has been wiped off, leaving a balance of Tls. 32,519.92 to be dealt with. It is the intention of your directors to have this amount for the time held in reserve until the buildings which are now under construction have been completed. You will also note the small amount of Tls. 2,515.40 which represents the working expenses for the year. As this sum is only 2½ per cent. or thereabouts on the capital, I am sure you will agree with me this speaks extremely well for the management.

Although the year ended has been a good one, there have been many difficulties and handicaps which we would otherwise have overcome had we the required resources to assist us. The directors regret the retirement of Mr. Chen Tse-kon from the board. Mr. P. L. Bojesen has been invited and has consented to fill the seat vacated, whose appointment, I feel sure will have your approval.

Messrs. G. H. & N. Thomson, auditors, have reconstituted their firm and have changed their name and style to Thomson & Co. They offer themselves for re-election at the same remuneration.

Before asking you to adopt the report and accounts as submitted I shall be glad to answer any question which you may care to ask.

The following resolutions were then carried:—

That the directors' report and statement of accounts for the year ending December 31, 1923, as presented to the meeting, be hereby adopted. Proposed by Mr. H. M. Cumine, seconded by Mr. C. K. Greaves.

That the election of Mr. Peter Ludvig Bojesen as a director of the company, be hereby confirmed. Proposed by Mr. W. Cumine, seconded by Mr. H. M. Cumine.

That Messrs. Thomson & Co. be hereby re-elected as the company's auditors for the year ending December 31, 1924, at the annual remuneration of Tls. 100. Proposed by Mr. P. L. Bojesen, seconded by Tsu Paolin.

Increase of Capital.

An extraordinary meeting of the shareholders was then held, Mr. H. M. Cumine presiding.

The Chairman said: It will not be necessary for me to take up much of your valuable time to explain the object for which this resolution has been put before you for your sanction, as the same, I am certain, will already have appealed to you as expedient seeing, as you must have seen, the difficulties and handicaps under which we have been working. Although the financial year ended December 31, 1923, has been decidedly a bumper one, and while congratulating ourselves on its success, we should bear in mind the several opportunities which we have had to pass, but which would otherwise have been taken full advantage of had we the resources then ready at hand.

Should the resolution be passed, it is not your directors' intention to immediately allot the new shares for subscription, but rather to hold the same in reserve until such time as occasion may require, in order not to cause unnecessary burden to the old shares that are already in operation.

The object for which the resolution has been put before you being quite simple although important, I think I hardly need to say anything further, but before asking you to adopt the same, I shall be glad to answer to the best of my ability any questions the shareholders may care to ask.

The resolution, proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Bojesen, and carried, was as follows:—That the capital of the company be increased to Tls. 1,000,000.00 by the creation of 90,000 additional shares of Tls. 10.00 each, ranking for dividend and in all other respects pari passu with the existing shares of the company.

NORTH CHINA INSURANCE CO., LD.

Steady Progress Despite Adverse Trade Conditions: Record Premium Income

The 21st ordinary general meeting of shareholders in the North China Insurance Co., Ld., was held on Monday at the head office, 4 The Bund. Mr. F. R. Scott presided, supported by Messrs. H. M. Little, W. P. Lambe, C. M. Bain, W. A. Kearton, P. W. Massey, W. Nation (Directors) and W. E. Smith, (secretary and general manager) and other shareholders, representing 9,865 shares.

The notice convening the meeting having been read, the Chairman said:—

The printed report and statement of accounts have been in your hands for some time and I propose, therefore, with your permission, to take them as read.

The working account for the year 1922, after allowing for a bonus to contributors and an interim dividend of 15s. per share, shows that the balance available for distribution is Tls.. 299,600.91, and your directors recommend that this balance be allocated as follows:—A final dividend of 20s. a share absorbing Tls. 60,759.49, and the remainder to be transferred to underwriting reserve account to close the Account for the year 1922.

As regards the year 1923, our figures show a steady progress despite the adverse trade conditions still existing, and it will be a matter of satisfaction for you to know that our premium income for the past 12 months, amounting to Tls. 2,655,464.31, actually constitutes a record in the history of this company. Our interest earnings also mark a notable advance over the previous year, whilst the balance in working account, totalling Tls. 710,563.05, shows a similarly healthy increase. In view of these satisfactory results your directors feel justified in recommending an interim dividend for 1923 of 25s. a share which, together with the final dividend for 1922 already referred to, makes a total distribution of 45s. a share. It is proposed also to pay the usual bonus of 20 per cent. on marine contributory premiums.

Turning now to the balance sheet. I would explain that the company's investments have been taken at the market value as at 31st December last, and, as you will see, an appreciation of some Tls. 640,600 is shown over last year's figures. You will notice also that our exchange and investment fluctuation account stands at a very substantial figure, sufficient to cover the possibility at any future time of any marked depreciation in our gold and silver investments.

Since our last meeting I would mention that Mr. W. Nation accepted an invitation to join this company's directorate. Mr. Nation's connection with insurance extends over many years and his services should, therefore, be of the utmost value to the board.

I would also like you to know that at the end of March last the Company moved into its new London quarters at Nos. 78-80 Cornhill, where, with its allied companies, it occupies a very prominent site in the heart of the city. Mr. H. G. Simms, for many years our Secretary and General Manager here, is in charge of this important branch and will be very glad to welcome friends home from the Far East.

Our business in London is, I may say, of ever growing importance and it is expected that we shall derive very considerable benefit from the better accommodation which our new premises will afford.

On the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. W. P. Lambe the Report and Accounts were adopted.

The following resolutions were then passed:—

Working Account, 1922.—That a final dividend of 20 per cent. on the paid-up capital be paid, at exchange 3/3½ per tael, and that the remainder be transferred to Underwriting Reserve Account to close the account for 1922.

Working Account 1923.—That an interim dividend of 25 per cent. on the paid up capital be paid: that a bonus of 20 per cent. upon the Contributory Marine Premiums, subject to income-tax, be paid, both payable at exchange 3/3½ per tael, and that the remainder be carried forward.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. W. P. Lambe.

That Messrs. Scott, Lambe, Bain, Massey, Martin Little, Nation and Kearton be re-elected Directors of the Company, and that the remuneration of the Directors be Taels six thousand per annum.—Proposed by Mr. John Bentley, seconded by Mr. L. P. Ralph.

That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews be re-elected Auditors of the Company, and that the remuneration of the Auditors be Taels one thousand per annum.—Proposed by Mr. R. L. Stewart, seconded by Mr. J. W. Thorburn.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

A Home paper refers to the Hongkong section at Wembley as a place where "tiffins and chow can be eaten." It is, of course, advisable that they be consumed together.

THE suitability of house publications to large hongs in China is shown in the "Mei Foo Shield," published by the Standard Oil Co., of New York, for its local and outports staffs. The third number has made its appearance under the editorship of Mr. Monte Smith, whose versatility is displayed in the artistic coloured covers which enhance the appearance of the publication. Considerable literary ability is displayed by members of Socony's outport staffs, aside from liberal contributions of items of personal interest. No doubt the magazine will be an important factor in maintaining the esprit de corps for which the Standard Oil forces in China have become noted.

ON Wednesday the "Echo de Chine" published a letter, unsigned, received from Tientsin, alleging that the attempted assassination of M. Merlin was carried out "with the permission of the Canton authorities." The writer added that the conspiracy was Chinese in origin, and arose through dissatisfaction among a number of men deported from Indo-China, while support for the conspiracy was gained as a consequence of what was learned of negotiations conducted by M. Merlin while in Japan. It was at first planned that the assassination should take place in Shanghai, but the conspirators found M. Merlin was too closely guarded here, and instructions, together with the necessary information, were accordingly forwarded to Canton. Commenting on this letter, the editor of the "Echo de Chine" says that people implicated are still in Canton, and the French will not be satisfied until all of them have been arrested by the Canton Government.

Municipal Gazette News

Chinese Refugees in the Settlement.

The following letter is published for general information:—

Council Chamber,
June 20, 1924.

SIR,—I have the honour to refer to your letter of April 12, forwarding a despatch from the Dean of the Diplomatic Body in Peking giving cover to a note from the Waichiaopu on the subject of Chinese refugees in the Foreign Settlement.

The Council notes that it has been reported to the Chinese Government that certain persons are in hiding in the Foreign Settlements and Concessions whose arrest has been ordered by the Central Government, and who make it their business to foment local disaffection and plot to raise disturbances in the Provinces.

The Council further notes that the High Provincial Authorities have been requested to take measures to deal with such evildoers in the areas under their control, but that, as it is not possible for them to control persons who may take refuge in the Foreign Settlements, the Diplomatic Body is requested to arrange for the requisite measures to be taken in regard to such conspiracies in the Settlements and to extradite such guilty persons in order that they may receive suitable punishment.

I have the honour to state that the Council is ever mindful of the fact that the Chinese Government has courteously set aside the Foreign Settlements as a place in which foreigners should reside and conduct their trade, and Chinese merchants and others have always been welcome to the Settlement when they come in peace and good amity and in the furtherance of such trade, but not otherwise. It has therefore been the policy of the Settlement in the past, and that policy will be continued, of expelling from the Settlement malefactors of every description and persons plotting secretly or otherwise against the security or wellbeing of the Chinese Government.

To this end, therefore, and apart from the established procedure for dealing with convicted malefactors, the Council declares itself ready and willing at all times to co-operate with the Chinese Government in controlling such unruly elements of the Chinese population, as may seek refuge within the Settlement, and upon receipt of such information as will enable the Council to take the necessary action, such persons in the future, as in the past, shall be denied the hospitality of the Settlement, and shall be expelled, extradited or otherwise dealt with as the circumstances of the case may dictate.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

S. FESSENDEN,
Chairman.

CORRESPONDENCE

MR. ELLY WIDLER AND THE SWISS CONSULATE

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Kaestli, the Swiss Vice-Consul's, letter in to-day's paper, one would think that the Swiss Consulate had already advertised it quite enough that they have no objection to issuing you registration-papers and passports without the special proofs of Swiss citizenship, which they all of a sudden require when there is trouble.

The fact remains that Mr. Elly Widler had both a Swiss registration certificate and a Swiss passport in his possession at the time of his arrest, and it would have been more to the point if Mr. Kaestli had come forward and stated that General Yang Sen is wrong when he says that Mr. Widler was an unrecognized forcigner when he arrested him. There would then have been a good opportunity for Mr. Kaestli to have continued: "but unfortunately the Swiss Government was unable to proceed with the matter as they lacked the complete proof required as to Mr. Widler's Swiss citizenship."

It is also, I believe, an undisputed fact that the Swiss Consul did at first insist on Mr. Widler being a Swiss citizen vis-a-vis General Yang Sen, who, however, seems to have taken up the position that he didn't care what kind of a citizen Mr. Widler was, he would deal with him—and dealt with him. Whether it was the firm stand the foreigner-loving General of Szechuan took up, and the $200,0000 he asked for Mr. Widler's release, that induced the Swiss Consulate suddenly to discover that they required further proof of citizenship before they could proceed in the matter, is not known.

We are all very indignant with the so-called "Chameleon Foreigners" who transfer their allegiance from one consulate to the other—and I see General Yang Sen is even trying to make capital out of this in his statement of Mr. Widler's case—but it seems to me that it is setting them a very bad example for a Consulate to do what the Swiss have done to Mr. Widler.

Mr. Kaestli's letter was, I think, quite uncalled for, and its immediate effect would seem to be to further downing a man that is down, which, I trust, was not the object of its writing.

I am etc.,
FAIR-PLAY.

A QUESTION FOR SINOLOGUES

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your correspondent 不定 by giving wrong characters for both the names he asks for information about, has made them almost unrecognizable.

The first name should be Liang Hao 梁顥. Liang Hao was born in 913 A.D., during the Sung dynasty, at Hsü-ch'êng 須城, in the province of Shantung. It is said that he obtained the dègree of Chin-shih 進士 when he was 72 years of age, and that he was first on the list. With reference to this the San Tzú Ching 三字經 has the following passage:

若梁顥八十二對大廷魁多士 which according to Bridgman's translation is: "Behold "Liang Hao, at the advanced age of 82, in the Imperial Hall among many scholars, gains the first rank."

This age, however, is disputed. Hung Mai 洪邁 points out that according to General History 國史 Liang Hao died at the age of 42, probably while he was Prefect of Kaifêng, at any rate when his services were most needed by the State. The Annals of Sung 宋史本傳 give his age at the time of his death as 92, and other authorities maintain that after a long life of repeated failures, including even a term of banishment, Liang Hao succeeded in gaining the confidence of the Emperor Chên Tsung 眞宗 who loaded him with honour for his services. He is said to have been a fine and handsome man, a Don Juan in his younger days, but always a loyal friend.

The other name should be Wang Hsi-chih 王羲之,—A.D. 321-379, Chin 晉 dynasty. Wang Hsi-chih was very studious in his youth; he mastered the Classics at an early age. In the military service of his country he rose to the rank of Brigadier-General and is often mentioned by that title, i.e. Wang Yo-chün 王右軍 Yo chün (not Shih-chün) is a military rank, not a personal name. Posterity knows him best as a very skilful penman, having introduced certain styles of handwriting which are much admired to this day. It is recorded that he transcribed the Tao-tê-ching 道德經 (Lao Tzù's famous book) for a Taoist priest, and received in return the present of a flock of geese. I can find nothing to show that he was a henpecked husband; authentic records are silent on that point. He was a native of K'uai-chi 會稽 (Shaohsing), (Chekiang Province).

For fuller details concerning these two men your correspondent should refer to the "Dictionary of Chinese Celebrities." 中國人名大辭典

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I wish to thank the two gentlemen who kindly replied to my enquiry about Liang Hao and Wang Yo-chun. I am in possession of four pictures painted by an "old gentleman of 82" and the name I put forward, apparently inaccurately, was given me by a Chinese as the most likely "old man of 82" to sign himself as such.

For putting Shih instead of Yo, I offer my apologies. Perhaps Zadoc knows if Liang Hao went in for painting in his spare time? Or may be this is another "old man of 82" who indulges in amateur's art.

Many thanks for the useful information supplied,

AMOY UNIVERSITY TROUBLE

To the Editor, of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—As there have been so many erroneous reports about the recent trouble we had at Amoy University, may I ask you to be good enough to publish the following authenticated account of all the happenings, which are, to my best knowledge and belief, entirely based on facts and nothing but facts:

On May 26, President Lim Boon Keng notified three teachers that, in terms of their agreements, their services would be discontinued after three months. These teachers immediately agitated among the students to demand reasons for their removal. The President politely but firmly replied that he had no intention of yielding to the mob pressure of the students. About thirty students, upholding Bolshevist ideas, intimidated the others, and, by threats of violence, insulted all those teachers and officers who tried to keep order backed up unfortunately by the discharged teachers and some other disgruntled members of the staff.

The police were unable to prevent rowdyism. The good students were coerced to remain quiet or even compelled to take part in processions to take forcible possession of the school premises, and to damage school property worth over $800.

False charges were made without the least scruple. Among other was that the President ordered the Acting Business Manager to hire coolies to beat students. The real facts are that on June 1, there was a teachers' meeting after which four Amoy teachers were returning home when they were suddenly surrounded and forced to return to the hall and were locked up. One of them was set free. He ran to the Acting Business Manager for assistance. The latter immediately went forward, followed by a few workmen. He was, nowever, stopped by students who behaved in an insolent and threatening manner. Some of the workmen voluntarily came forward to assist the Business Manager, and, in so doing, came into conflict with the students and captured three of them. It must be explained that to the unsophisticated country folks this rude behaviour of students towards their teachers was, according to their old Chinese tradition, an unpardonable sin. They pulled three of the students, ringleaders, away and tied them up. Mean while the Business Manager was still on the spot trying to get the students to set free their teachers. This being unsuccessful, he went to rescue the captured students, who, by this time, assisted by the discharged and disgruntled teachers, refused to be unbound, and, by misleading statements and false charges, caused the police and soldiers present to arrest the Acting Business Manager!

I need hardly add that, from the above account, it will be readily seen that President Lun never ordered anyone to hire workmen to beat the students, but that on the contrary he had been sinned against rather than sinned in any way.

I am, etc.,
JUSTICIA.

CHINESE BONDS.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In your issue of the 24th instant, your Canton correspondent reports that The Department of Finance of the General Head Quarters of Dr. Sun Yat-sen in Canton is issuing Military Bonds dated June 1, 1924."

It may be of interest to your readers to know that Dr. Sun's Government in the First Year of the Republic when Hu Han-min was Governor and Liao Chung-hai treasurer, both of whom are again holding office, issued Bonds to the total value of $10,000,000.

These were premium bearing bonds, one of which I enclose herewith for your museum, but after the first overthrow of Dr. Sun's Government these bonds were declared null and void and unredeemable.

On the re-entry of Dr. Sun into power at Canton, your correspondent endeavoured to cash his holdings in these bonds, but was informed that they were worthless as Dr. Sun had cancelled them.

It would be very interesting if Dr. Sun and his party could explain what became of the $10,000,000 as no drawing ever took place and no interest was ever paid on these bonds.

Foreigners, and in fact Chinese, should be very wary in applying for bonds from a "Government" which has proved its bad faith in the past, and publicity should be given to the danger or loss of one's investments in dealing in bonds of the Kuangtung Clique.

Thanking you for space in your valuable columns to publish this letter and enclosing my card,

I am, etc.,

TRUTH ABOUT LABOUR IN CHINA

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I shall be obliged by your kindly sparing for me just the space for a remark or two on yesterday's news concerning the Chinese Delegate to the International Labour Conference, claiming 8 hours for children and no night work for women.

That Chinese Delegate in my humble opinion must be another sample of Chinese professional Delegates to Conferences etc., often self-appointed and invarably maddrunk with Confucian greatness. These Chinese Delegate always benefit very greatly by a sobering and cooling such as can only be given by a speech à la Sir James Jamieson.

The true aim of that Chinese Delegate must be not to benefit any Chinese children or women put to add his quota to the "strafing" of the foreign and successful mill-owner by subverting the labour. The foreign mill-owner gives real actual bread and butter to thousands of Chinese men, women and children quite above 14-15 years. Night-shift work is paid for on pay day in full at special rates. Chinese-owned mills treat their labour quite in another way, especially as to pay day business. Hence Chinese labour prefers foreign-owned rule, as a natural consequence. Chinese-owned jealousy and hatred for the foreigner must be the true motive prompting the delegate; no such thing as humanitarianism in Chinese breasts.

In my turn I will state facts that the Delegate would not like to bring forth at any Conference viz.: I commissioned a workman—so-called skilled labourer—to repair with tin solder four small leakages in the corrugated roof of my houses estimated price for the job not given; I was asured that in one day all would be done. Instead; six labourers came, it took them over one week to do the job. Daily working hours were as follows, as I saw myself: Coming to work, 8.15 to 8.30 a.m.; rest, tiffin and cigarettes 11.30 a.m.; work again at about 3 p.m., to 3.20 p.m., or so; knock-off for the day at 4.45 p.m. Daily wages asked for 75 cts.

A carpenter's job was estimated to require at most 8 to 9 days for two men to do it, with ample provision for the unexpected. Three men came to work, all skilled workmen, time required at the rate of 80 cents per day: four weeks, cigarettes consumed dozens of packages during the same time. Ask native contractors and you get the same statement as mine own.

Chinese Delegates are given too much importance, there are no Chinese Delegates in my opinion but really Chinese So-and-So Clique Delegates. What about the Chinese Members of Parliament? How were those elected?

With thanks for the hospitality,

I am etc.,
FOREIGN DEVIL.

AN ANGLO-AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—To-morrow our American cousins celebrate their national fête day. Now, that day has a significance for us, Britons, which we are apt to overlook. The colonists in America revolted against a system of taxation which England attempted to impose upon them, and which the colonists considered unjust and unfair. In other words, the colonists took up arms to vindicate a principle, and that principle has been upheld ever since by the British Parliament, not only in its relations with the British Overseas Dominions and Colonies, but with the inhabitants of Britian itself. The action of the American colonitst opened up a new era in British Parliamentary procedure and policy, which has evolved a system of government which we have much to be proud of. The American colonists did no more in 1775 than we would do to-day if our Parliament attempted to impose upon us a system of government which was sought to be imposed upon the American colonists then. We Britons can, therefore, extend to our American cousins our best wishes for their national festival, a festival which is of common interest to the two great English-speaking nations, and the two greatest democratic nations in the world. Now, Sir, cannot we join forces to extent these common interests?

Ever since the close of the war leaders of public opinion on both sides of the Atlantic have been advocating closer co-operation and greater friendship between Great Britain and America. Numerous monuments have been erected in England in honour of Englishmen who took an active part in the founding of the great American nation. At innumerable gatherings the common interests of the two nations have been emphasized, and moving appeals have been made for drawing the two countries closer together. That this feeling is not altogether the result of the war is proved by the writings of prominent Americans and Britons. No one who has read "The Life And Letters Of Walter Hines Page" could doubt the existence of a deep-rooted feeling of affection and friendship towards England on the part of many Americans long before the war.

Then, again, take the experience of those of us who were sent to America during the war. Can we ever forget the wonderful hospitality and friendship with which we were overwhelmed by everybody and everywhere? In spite of the natural instinct to hide our feelings, we were swept off our feet, and our emotions were so stirred that, however tragic the period of the war may be to us, our experiences in America then will always be looked back upon by us with sincere and unadulterted pleasure.

All these are mere indications of what is underlying the minds of the best of the two nations, and is constantly being given voice to by those who appeal for greater friendship and closer co-operation. Now, Sir, I venture to suggest that Britons and Americans here have a magnificent opportunity of helping to bring about this great object. We work and play here together, and we can appreciate each other better than the average man at home, and we can better realise the desirability and need for greater co-operation between the two nations in world affairs. Can we not, therefore, form some sort of Anglo-American association or branch of the English-Speaking Union? We have at hand a wonderful opportunity of helping to cement the ties that already exist between our two great nations. With your powerful influence to help, can we not utilise that opportunity?

I am, etc.,
BRITON.

THE MURDER OF MR. HAWLEY

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—Another foreigner has been done to death in cold blood and another name has to be added to the long list of those sacrificed on the altar of China's incompetency, degeneracy and lawlessness. The circumstances attending this latest (I wish I could hope it were the last) crime are distressingly tragic and the manner in which Mr. Hawley met his end is a reminder of some of the dreadful massacres of foreigners which may be credited to China's past, when China did not claim a seat at the Council tables of the nations of the West. Here are the cold, cruel facts. Driven by a cowardly rabble, one defenceless man against many, to the water's edge and there done to death in a [illegible] despicable manner, with [illegible] and poles, and [illegible] in the dirty water. Truly, enough to make the gods weep, that a gallant gentleman should go to his death in this wise, at the hands of a bestial mob, not one of whom probably was fitted to lick his shoes.

Admitted that such bestial mobs exist in all lands, but herein lies the difference. In Western lands the arm of the law prevents their operation, or if they should operate, ensures swift retribution. But will there be any retribution and justice in this case? Dare we hope for it, with the evidence of Lincheng and other similar cases staring us in the face? Perhaps there will be paltry monetary compensation, but what is the value of that and will it prove a deterrent? I venture to think not. Stern justice should have been meted out then and there to that cowardly rabble. No other appeal to their natures would have sufficed. Then what about the Chinese practice and recognition of the code of mutual responsibility? Are not the officials who permit this sort of thing just as guilty, under their own code, as the rabble whom they are supposed to govern? The blood of Mr. Hawley cries out, not for revenge he last of all probably would have wanted that—but for an awakening on the part of the foreign Powers to a realization of the present drift of things in China.

I am no so-called "old-fashioned" foreigner, unable to detach myself from the too rigid traditional notion of the best way for foreign nations to treat the Chinese, with its element of mailed-fist dogma, nor am I one who is unmindful of the new influences at play in China and the advent of "Young China," requiring a certain revision of the foreigners' methods in their dealings with the Chinese. I do not propose the seizure of Chinese territory because of this murder. But I would ask the enlightened students of China, those who have knowledge of the course of justice in England, for instance—what do they propose should be done in the matter? And do they not agree that, notwithstanding violation of any abstract "rights," it would have been to the good of all if a foreign gunboat had given that dastardly mob the hiding of their lives? Now then "returned students" (and please do not think I use the term disrespectfully; I am quite serious) let's hear from you. What have you to say about this dastardly crime? I am not sarcastic and I prefer constructive to destructive criticism where your ancient and noble country is concerned, but I cannot disregard the appeal that the blood of an innocent man makes to me, notwithstanding that the man himself was totally unknown to me.

I am, etc.,
SPECTATOR.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In reference to the quotation from the late Dr. Morrison's book, by P.O.Q. in your issue of the 23rd, it may interest you and perhaps many others, to learn, that Dr. Morrison in his later years retracted all he had said in his book, against Missions and Missionaries.

When Sir Matthew Nathan was Governor of Hongkong, he was anxious to make a collection of books on China, and amongst the books he collected was a presentation copy of his book from Dr. Morrison.

After dinner one evening at Government House, Sir Matthew Nathan invited me into his study, to show me his collection, and put into my hands this presentation copy from Morrison, directing my attention to what the Author had written in the fly leaf.

Dr. Morrison stated that since the book was written he had been led to change his opinions regarding Missions and Missionaries, and he desired in this way to make clear his retraction of what he had once written in regard to their activities.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Please be good enough top publish the following in your esteemed Paper:

P. O. Q. has again been on the warpath against missionaries in China.

You Sir have again ably defended them. In the "North-China Daily News" dated the 16th P. O. Q. supports his contentions by quoting scraps from "Li Hung Chang's Scrapbook" compiled by the late Sir Hiram Maxim.

I think it absolutely futile to discuss the Missionary question. So much has been written on that subject for years and years past and the missionaries are still here, I notice.

The attitude adopted by you, Sir, is consistent with the attitude adopted on the Prohibition issue. Your view is to let everybody have their own pleasures. You are of the opinion and rightly so, that people who like a drink or two within moderation should have them. From your leader I understand, that your opinion is also that if men or women in the old country wish to support missions in China or elsewhere, and if there are men and women who will take up the duties of missionaries" let them go to it" Absolutely the correct attitude to take up.

I know that my dear old auntie was pleased like anything whenever her particular missionary paper arrived from China and she could read of a Chinese girl aged six, who had found Christ, or an old man or woman who had done the same. It would be cruel by an act of Parliament to stop or prevent that pleasure of hers. (It has been suggested in some countries to pass a law against sending money out of the country for missionary work). I think the only reason why people out here write against missionaries is, that they are working under the impression that Missionaries are having the time of their lives. Some of them have. But there are priests at home who are better off than other priests.

Why should the poor overworked missionaries not be allowed to spend a few months every year at Peitaiho and Kuling. Their work is decidedly harder than that of other foreigners, who for their sins have to live in the Interior. I consider a three months holiday at Peitaiho an excellent idea. And if missionaries do a little private trading. Why not? The rector in my native village owns brewery shares. He is putting something by for a rainy day. I think P. O. Q. has forgotten that wonderful old maxim "Live and let Live."

As to whether the Chinese become real Christians or not has nothing to do with the argument. I dare say that there are no more "Rice-Christians" in China than in England.

The only sane argument which might have been brought forward by P. O. Q. is missing. And that is and without blasphemy I am taking to my help and assistance a few words from the "Old Book:" Is it right to take the bread away from the children and give it to the dogs?" I hope the readers of this understand that the word dogs is not meant to apply to any nationality in particular.

What do I mean? I mean this, that at home in the so-called Christian countries (where by the way they cannot yet agree on a common family altar or the worship of their God in the same way) there is no doubt scope enough for conversions. There is also scope enough for social work. The Salvation Army lassies in Peking (God bless them) could find enough social work in the slums of London for the next generation.

All missionary endeavour is based upon the Lord's command "Go out into the world and make all men my disciples." This command is not unique as far as Christian Commandments are concerned. The Mohammedans are also told to acquire converts.

Another question P. O. Q. has left out is this one. Is it not a certain amount of arrogance on the part of the Christians that they have the nerve to try to tell people that their religion, which according to the age of the world is an extremely infant one, is the only one leading to heaven? Apart from the doctrines of the Christian Church which to my mind are fairly good if lived up to, I should say that before trying to transplant our religion to a foreign field we ought to ask ourselves what has that religion done to us? Have we morally or financially or in any other respect benefited by same?

My answer to that question is not a certain sudden brain wave.

As a student of the history of the world and for the purpose of this argument the so-called Christian world I must say No.

I dare anybody to contradict me when I say, that the Christian religion has cost the world more in blood, in treasure and in tears than any other yet invented. Christians will no doubt tell me, what they did during the war, that all the crimes Christian countries have committed were not committed by Christians but by wicked men. Leave it at that if you like, but the cold facts stare you in the face.

In the name of the Christian God the most atrocious crimes have been committed.

The tragedy of the Inquisition in Spain with its lust murders committed by the Church, avaricious and sexually perverted, as it was then, cries to the heavens above. Right up to the 19th century innocent women were burned on the stake. When as a boy I read or heard of those crimes I said: thank God, I am living in a civilized age.

What innocent humbug on my part? The victims of the Spanish inquisition (which by the way was common to all European countries) were fresh in my mind, when this last War broke out.

During the 1914-18 War the Spanish inquisition was repeated.

This time it was various politicians (and a few rulers of nations including the very Christian German Kaiser) who took upon their shoulders the rôle of Torquemada of Spain and his junior inquisitors. The Satanic-sadistic mind of the Spanish inquisitors produced some very cruel tortures. But in this war, though the Spanish boot and the wheel were left out and the burning at the stake, excellent substitutes were invented.

It is a matter of opinion whether it is better to be placed on the wheel or be blown to bits by a shell. Or whether the mustard gas is an improvement on the water test or whether burning at the stake is better than being consumed by liquid fire.

However, taking these things into consideration, one cannot but agree that the Chinese are right if they show no particular inclination towards the Christian Religion.

I often wonder what an innocent Chinese convert thinks when kneeling down in a Roman Catholic Church he is met by the sight of a man half naked hanging on a cross and the blood streaming from his wounds, or when he looks at the pictures on the walls of the Church demonstrating the so-called "way to the Cross." In some of the pictures he sees the God of the Christians being flogged etc.

If I could reform the Church of Christ as far as ceremonies and exterior things are concerned the Crucified Saviour and those pictures would go, and I would instead place in the Church pictures of the Saviour telling small children to come unto Him or pictures of the good shepheard.

Sadism has played an enormously great rôle in the Christian Church and without it, eminent criminologists agree, that there would be no wars. The Christian Religion has been out for many typhoons since its inception. I wish a second Martin Luther would come along and present to us Christ as I believe He was "A man full of love" and that we should see Him as such and not as a criminal executed in the basest way the Romans could execute any of their criminals.

Threats of a hell full of brimstone and fire will not lead people to better lives. This sorely tried world needs new medecine. Love and comitas inter gentes.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—It is a pity P.O.Q. does not attempt to combat my arguments but confines himself to quoting other people's opinions.

I knew personally both Dr. Morrision and Mr. Little and know they both had a high regard for missionary work whatever they may have written in earlier years. Some of the others quoted are violently opposed to Christianity whether in England, America or China so their opinions are of no value as to the particular question at issue.

A genuine informed and intelligent criticism of a great public international institution like the Christian missionary movement would be welcome but senseless and grossly inaccurate criticism has no value: it is only a value through which to vent spleen.

"Rationalist" cannot discuss the missionary movement because he rejects the whole Christian movement throughout the world. He must be dealt with on altogether different grounds or left to stew in his own juice.

The missionary problem is a great and interesting one and many brilliant minds are at work to make it reach the best solution. All constructive criticism which sincerely wishes well to mankind would be welcomed: let P.O.Q. attack the question from this standpoint and let us see if his suggestions have any real weight.

LONDON TO PEKING IN ONE TRAIN

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—It is amazing the amount of rubbish that is written in some of the home papers by men who profess to know what they are writing about. In your issue of to-day you quote an article written by a Mr. Ben Smith, M.P., headed "London To Peking In One Train." Mr. Ben Smith, M.P., visualises, "in the more or less immediate future," a journey from London to Peking or Vladivostock in one train, and "to make this possible we need but to construct a tunnel 22 miles long."

A point that Mr. Ben Smith appears to have overlooked is [illegible] altogether insignificant 6,000 [illegible] of railway track which is of a totally different gauge from that of England, Belgium, Germany, South Manchuria, or China. Perhaps the train Mr. Ben Smith M.P., has in mind is a sort of cross, and which can travel over any gauge. In his next article Mr. Ben Smith, M.P., will no doubt tell the readers of the "Evening News" how the 4' 8½" gauge English train will be able to travel over the five-feet gauge Russian railways. I hope you will not fail to keep a look out for this information. I am sure railway engineers will greatly appreciate it.

I am, etc.,
H. P. King.
Shanghai June 27,

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In the words of your correspondent H. P. King "it is amazing the amount of rubbish that is written by men who profess to know what they are writing about." However in this case it is not Mr. Ben Smith who is writing rubbish; rather is it a case of "angels fearing to tread."

Whether Mr. Ben Smith overlooked the break of gauge I do not know, but it is more than probable that he had heard of the device used on the German-Russian frontier during the war. This consists of a special bogie in which the wheels can be pushed in and out to fit the gauge. The mechanism is simple and safe, and the adjustment of the whole train can be done in half an hour or so.

A short time ago there was a project to install some of this special rolling stock on the Chinese Eastern Railway and to run a through train from Harbin to Peking. Although dearer than ordinary rolling stock the cost is not prohibitive nor was there any objection from the technical or mechanical experts, and it was only the political jealousies and suspicions that were raised that caused the project to be shelved let us hope only temporarily.

If Mr. H. P. King be an engineer and sufficiently interested, I have no doubt that he could ascertain the name of the patent and the manufacturer from the general manager of that very progressive and up-to-date line in the north.

Shanghai, June 30, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—When I wrote to you on the subject of the article written by Mr. Ben Smith, M.P., on the possibility of travelling from London to Peking in one train, I had not overlooked the device mentioned by "Trans-Siberian" in your issue of to-day. I have seen the device fitted to a special car on the progressive line in the north—I think "Trans-Siberian" is referring to the Tcheng-T'ai Railway—and have been on the car which was fitted with that device. If this device is so simple and safe, can Trans-Siberian tell us why it is not fitted to the whole of the rolling stock of that particular railway so as to allow of an interchange of rolling stock between it and the adjoining lines?

"Trans-Siberian" suggests that the reason for not fitting this device to allow of an interchange of rolling stock between the Chinese Eastern, South Manchuria, and Peking-Mukden was due solely to political jealousies and suspicions on the part of interested parties. If that were the only reason, why is it that it has not been adopted on the Indian railways, all of which are controlled by the Government of India?' We have some 40,000 miles of railways in India of various gauges, principally broad and metre. The question of a standard gauge has been frequently raised in India, and several commissions have been formed to consider the problem. At these commissions railway experts from various parts of the world have given evidence and devices for the interchangeability of rolling stock have been considered, but none has been found suitable for adoption. The last commission definitely decided that the two gauges must remain.

That this inability to adopt any of the devices is not due to political or inter-railway jealousies is proved by the fact that there are instances in India where there are two and three different gauges under the one management. For instance, one railway has over 1,000 miles of [illegible] gauge, and over 1,800 miles of metre guage, while another railway has under its own management three different gauges. In neither instance are there any devices fitted to allow of a free interchange of rolling stock. Even such an exalted person as the Viceroy has to change his car when he makes certain journeys.

If the device mentioned by "Trans-Siberian" is so simple and cheap, there is no country in the world where it would be more readily adopted than in India. I would suggest that "Trans-Siberian" takes a railway journey through the length of India. By the time he has finished changing trains he might realize that the adoption of his pet device is not such a simple matter as he suggests.

H. P. King.
Shanghai, July 2, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In reply to H. P. King, and not knowing India, I am unable to answer why the Government of India does not adopt the German-Russian device for running trains over different gauges. Perhaps it is that the official mind which is capable of the lack of foresight and imagination in building different gauges in the same country is also capable of the lack up-to-dateness in applying new inventions. Perhaps the differences of gauges are justified by engineering difficulties, steeper gradients, smaller curves Perhaps the difference between metre and standard (about 17 inches) makes the new device inapplicable Perhaps it is lack of money for experiement or Baboo obstruction. Who knows?

I made no reference to the Tcheng-t'ai Railway or the device used by them which may be different from the one I mentioned. This is also a case of metre gauge.

Anyway all these conundrums of Mr. H. P. King are irrelevent to the point and I am writing only to the point viz. London to Peking in one train and I repeat that the difference between standard and Russian gauge (3½ inches, or 1¾ inch displacement of each wheel) has been bridged by the device used successfully during war and peace, and that it is no idle dream or "amazing rubbish" of Mr. Ben Smith M.P. I repeat that my authority is the General Manger of that very progressive and up-to-date line in the North viz. the Chinese Eastern Railway, than whom there is probably no better authority in China to-day, and few in the wide world. Write to him Mr. King and not to the paper.

FANTAN

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Dear Sir,—During a recent visit to the South I got interested in watching the fantan gambling at Macao, but could get no intelligible explanation of the different way of placing the money on the board.

Foreigners betting invarilly put their money either straight out on a number or on a corner covering two numbers. Chinese on the other hand bet in a variety of ways, apparently modifications of the single number and corner betting. If some reader could explain the rules of fantan I would be much obliged.

Sir,—For the above "spots" (I did not know the name of them before) an ointment made of a mixture of olive oil and zinc powder of the consistency of very thick oil has afforded relief to many children whose parents have tried it, including my own, during the past seven years.

"Enquirer" should try it and let us know the result.

South Africans Lose to Mr. Leveson-Gower's XI: The County Championship

Reigate, June 26.

The match between the South Africans and Mr. H. D. G. Leveson-Gower's XI was resumed to-day. There was a small attendance. The weather was hot and the wicket excellent.

Mr. Leveson-Gower's XI were all out for 230. Howell made 43 and Doggart 47. Blanckenberg took 5 wickets for 53.

The South Africans were dismissed in the second innings for 171. Catterall made 45, Taylor 33 and Susskind 44. Doggart took 5 wickets for 58 and Rhodes 4 for 39. —South Africans 253 and 171; Mr. Leveson-Gower's XI 230. —Reuter.

Reigate, June 27.

The match between the South Africans and Mr. R. D. G. Leveson-Gower's XI was concluded to-day and resulted in a win for the latter by 3 wickets.

The winners opened their second innings to-day and made 196 runs for 7 wickets.

Scores:—South Africans 253 and 171:

Mr. Leveson-Gower's XI 230 and 196 for 7 wickets.—Reuter.

Second Test Match: Catterall's Fine Century

London, June 28.

The weather was fine but cloudy at the opening of the second test match between England and South Africa at Lord's to-day. Ten thousand people watched the game. The wicket sas excellent. The South Africans won the toss.

The King arrived at 12.50. The game was stopped and the players lined up to be introduced and shake hands.

Taylor and Commaille opened the innings, but were soon parted, Taylor being caught by Wood off Gilligan for 4 and Commaille being bowled for 0. Sussking was then joined by Nourse, but he put one into Wooley's hands when he had made 4. Sussking with 44 and Catterall with 17 were in partnership at the lunch interval, the score being 72 for 3 wickets.

In the afternoon the crowd doubled. The 100 was hoisted on the board after 143 minutes. Sussking played a very sound game throughout and was very strong on the off side. He hit six 4's during his innings of 165 minutes. He was caught by Tate off Hearne when he had made 64. The score then stood at 129 for 4 wickets.

Catterall reached his century in 170 minutes. His brilliant off-driving and hitting to square leg gained him an ovation from the crowd when he was bowled by a magnificent ball from Gilligan, after having batted for 195 minutes for a score of 120. He gave one chance at 30. He hit 16 4's. Blanckenberg had meanwhile joined him, but was bowled by Tate for 12. The score when Catterall was bowled was 212 for 6 wickets. Deane and Faulkner were in partnership at the tea interval, when the telegraph read 217 for 6 wickets.

The Africans were all out at 5.50 for 273. Deane, who made 33, showed some vigorous driving, and Faulkner's batting in many strokes was reminiscent of his old form. He made 25. The remaining wickets fell quickly.

The English batsmen came out at 6.10, and began freely, scoring 16 in the first five minutes. At the close of play Hobbs and Sutcliffe had scored 12 each and the English score was 28 for no wickets.

England's Huge Total

London, June 30.

The Second Test Match was resumed to-day in cool weather before 12,000 spectators. The sky was overcast. The wicket was good.

Hobbs and Sutcliffe, continuing from overnight, opened quietly. It was 83 minutes before the 100 went up. After this there was bright batting, particularly by Hobbs, who was at the top of his form and gave a sparkling display. He reached his century in 140 minutes, while Sutcliffe reached his in 163 minutes. At the lunch interval Hobbs' score was 114 and Sutclffe's 102. The total of 223 for no wicket is a record for a first wicket partnership against Africa in Tests, beating Hobbs' and Rhodes' 221 at Capetown in 1909.

Sutcliffe was bowled when the score stood at 268. His innings of 122 took 197 minutes, and was characterized by hard, clean cutting. He hit 11 fours. Hobbs was out with the score at 410 for 2 wickets through the only weak stroke in his innings of 211, which equalled the record highest score in any Test Match (in England), made by Murdoch in 1884. He batted for 275 minutes, and hit 15 fours and six threes.

At the tea interval the score was 451 for 2 wickets, Woolley, who batted aggressively, being 86 not out and Hendren 18 not out. The crowd had meanwhile increased to 16,000.

England declared at 5.23 p.m. with 531 runs for 2 wickets. The innings lasted 5 hours and 35 minutes. Woolley took 139 minutes to make his score of 134 not out. He gave an exhibition of vigorous driving, and punished the tired bowling mercilessly, hitting 20 fours. Hendren, who made 50 not out, batted for 58 minutes and hit seven fours.

The African batsmen came out at 5.40. After half an hour, with the score at 15 for no wicket, the game was interrupted for a quarter of an hour owing to bad light. It was resumed at 6.25. One over was bowled, and then stumps were drawn. The score stood at 19 for no wicket, Denne having made 13 and Commaille 4.

England Win by an Innings and 18 Runs

July 1.

One thousand people were present in glorious weather at the opening of the third day's play in the Test Match. The wicket was wearing well. Deane and Commaille made a very quiet start. They were tempted in every way, but remained very stolid. It was 166 minutes before the century appeared. Deane's wicket fell to Hearne when he had reached 24, and Commaille's leg was in front of a ball from Tyldesley at 37. Nourse also suffered a similar fate to Commille to a ball from Gilligan. Susskind and Taylor were in partnership at the lunch interval, Susskind with 23 and Taylor with 8. The score was 116 for 3 wickets.

After lunch the crowd increased to 4,000. The South Africans made a game attempt to save an innings defeat, but their efforts were frustrated by a new ball, which the bowlers found to their liking. Susskind gave the outstanding performance and put up a magnificent defence. He was l.b.w. to Tyldesley at 53. Catterall, who then came in, was too confident and eventually fell to the wily Tyldesley at 45. The remaining wickets fell for few runs. The English bowling was good and their fielding very keen and occasionally brilliant. The South Africans were all out at five o'clock for 240, England thus winning by innings and 18 runs. By a coincidence, this is the same margin of defeat as in the first Test Match.

South Africans v. Yorkshire

Bradford, July 2.

The match between Yorkshire and the South Africans opened here to-day in dull weather before 6,000 spectators. The wicket was easy after overnight rain. Yorkshire won the toss and made 285. Rhodes scored 54 and Robinson 95 not out. Robinson was excellent all-round and hit six fours in his innings of 184 minutes. Yorkshire were all out in 4 hours 25 minutes. Nupen took 3 wickets for 53.

At the close of play the Africans had scored 22 for one wicket.—Reuter.

The County Championship

At Portsmouth, Middlesex beat Hampshire by nine wickets. Hampshire made 106 and 230. Middlesex made 291 and 46 for one wicket.

At Nottingham, Notts beat Worcestershire by 8 wickets. Worcester made 66 (Staples 5 wickets for 18) and 331 (Hopkins 137). Notts made 341 for 4 wickets, declared, (Whysall 131) and 58 for 2 wickets.—Reuter.

London, June 27.

At Lord's, Oxford University beat the M.C.C. by 7 wickets. The M.C.C. made 328 (Moffatt 92) and 207. Oxford made 307 (Blaikie 120) and 229 for 3 wickets (Guise 78).

At Manchester, Lancashire beat Sussex by 140 runs. Lancashire made 287 (E. T. Tyldesley 105 and Watson 103) and 273 for 3 wickets, declared, (Hallows 112 not out). Sussex made 244 and 176 (Parkin 7 wickets for 86).

At Leicester, Leicestershire beat Gloucestershire by 1 run. Leicester made 178 and 223. Gloucester made 276 and 124.

At Gravesend, Kent beat Essex on the 1st innings. Kent made 262 and 455 for 8 wickets, declared, (Hilder 103 not out) Essex made 254 and 352 for 7 wickets (Freeman 123 not out).

At Birmingham, Somerset beat Warwickshire by two wickets. Warwick made 261 and 210. Somerset made 177 and 295 for 3 wickets (McBain 122).

At Northampton, Northamptonshire beat Derbyshire by 213 runs. Northamps made 364 and 209 for 6, declared. Derby made 272 (Cadman 125 not out) and 88.—Reuter.

June 30.

At Bristol Gloucestershire beat Oxford University by an innings and 57 runs. Gloucester made 504 for 5 wickets and declared, Dipper made 247 and Hammond 96. Oxford made 236 (Blaikie 102) and 211.

At Worcester Somerset beat Worcestershire by 9 wickets. Somerset made 261 and 60 for 1 wicket. Worcester made 75 (White taking 5 wickets for 27) and followed on with 244 (Foster 125).—Reuter.

July 1.

At Brighton, Sussex beat Cambridge University by 88 runs. Sussex made 260 and 269 and Cambridge 161 and 280.

At Chesterfield, Leicestershire beat Derbyshire by 7 wickets. Derby made 328 (Hutchinson 143) and 69 (Geary taking 5 wickets for 19). Leicester made 276 and 122 for 3 wickets. The match was for Morton's benefit.

At Hull, Yorkshire beat Essex on the first innings. Yorkshire made 299 (Douglas taking 6 wickets for 97) and 111 (Douglas 5 wickets for 49). Essex made 248 and 63 for 6 wickets.

At Southampton, Hampshire beat Surrey by one wicket. Surrey made 206 and 340 (Sandham 94). Hampshire made 312 (Tennyson 75) and 235 for 9 wickets (Tennyson 64). The match was for Newman's benefit.

At Birmingham, Warwickshire beat Kent by 8 wickets. Kent made 273 (Bryan 124) and 89 (Howell 5 wickets for 42). Warwick made 226 and 137 for 2 wickets (Santall 90 not out).

At Manchester, Lancashire beat Notts on the first innings. Notts made 247 and 221 for 3 wickets, declared, Lancashire made 288 (Makepeace 116) and 80 for 2 wickets.—Reuter.

WIMBLEDON TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Mr. Norman Brookes Again in Splendid Form: A Thrilling Match in Men's Doubles

Wimbledon, June 26.

Tennis was played at Wimbledon to-day under a blazing sun. The heat was almost unbearable. There were 15,000 spectators, including the King and Queen.

In the first match on the Centre Court, Mr. Norman Brookes beat the American, Mr. Francis Hunter, 3-6 6-3, 6-4, 5-7, 6-2. Mr. Hunter was one of last year's finalists. His defeat by Brookes was a triumph of genius and wizardry. Hunter began brilliantly, but Brookes got into his stride and played continually on the American's back-hand. The final set was very exciting. Two games went to deuce three times, including the last game, when a double-fault by Hunter gave Brookes the winning point. Brookes was cheered vociferously.

On an outer court Colonel Kingscote beat Mr. Ritchie, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Other third round singles winners included the British player, Mr. Gilbert; the South African, Mr. Spence; the Indian, Mr. Jacob; the Australian, Mr. Wat, and the American, Mr. Vincent Richards.

There was a thrilling First-round doubles match on the Centre Court when the Americans, Messrs. Washburn and Williams, defeated the Frenchmen, MM. Borotra and Lacoste, 5-7,6-3,4-6,6-4,6-3.

Then the South African, Mr. Raymond, brilliantly disposed of M. Brugnon (France) after a terrific struggle. The score was 8-6, 2-6, 4-6, 12-10, 6-4.

On an outer court the holders of the doubles championship, Messrs. Lycett and Godfree, beat Messrs. Ingram and Aitken, 6-0, 6-3, 4-6, 4-6, 9-7.

In the ladies' doubles, Mlle. Lenglen and Miss Ryan and the Americans, Miss Wills and Miss Wightman, scored easy victories.—Reuter.

Mlle. Lenglen Defeats American Captain

Wimbledon, June 27.

There was a large attendance at Wimbledon to-day. The cloudy and cool weather was somewhat of an ant-climax after yesterday.

Mlle. Lenglen scored her customary victory, defeating the American captain, Mrs. Wightman, in the third round, 6/0, 6/0.

The British competitor, Mr. Greig, in the fourth round extended Mr. Vincent Richards in the best game of the day. Greig was versatile and made great passing-shots. However, he tired perceptibly and was beaten 6/2, 4/6, 6/2, 7/5.

Miss Ryan in the third round beat the British captain, Mrs. Covell, 6/4, 7/5, thus qualifying to meet Mlle. Lenglen.

Miss Wills, who is redeeming herself in British eyes, beat Mrs. Edgington in the third round, 6/2, 6/2.

The Frenchmen, MM. Borotra and Lacoste, advanced to the fourth round, the former at the expense of Mr. Gordon Lowe, whom he defeated 6/1, 6/3, 6/4.

The American, Mr. Norris Williams, beat Colonel Dudley, 6/4, 6/0, 6/4.

In the second round of the doubles, Colonel Kingscote and Mr. Gilbert disposed of the Indians, Messrs. Hadi and Rutnam, 6/4, 6/2, 6/3.

June 28.

There was a large attendance at Wimbledon to-day. The Weather was cool and cloudy.

In the fourth round the African competitor, Mr. Raymond, beat Mr. Wheatley, a member of the British Davis Cup team, 7-5, 6-0, 6-0

The Belgian champion, Mr. Jean Washer, defeated Mr. Norman Brookes, 6-2, 7-5, 6-4.

The American, Mr. Williams, beat the African competitor, Mr. Richardson, 6-1, 6-1, 6-4.

Norman Brookes Defeated.

June 28.

There were 15,000 spectators at the Lawn Tennis Championships here to-day.

The most surprising event of the day was the failure of Morman Brockes, who was the hero of the week after defeating Francis Hunter, but he only glimpsed his true form Washer, driving with great force and accuracy wore down the Australian.

England fared bably in the fourth round, her two chief hopes being eliminated. Lacoste defeated Gilbert 6-3, 6-3, 6-2, while Raymond outclassed Wheatley. Only Kingscote, who beat Jacob 6-3, 6-3, 6-3, is left of the prominent players.

Borotra, who defeated Spence in a terrific battle 6-2, 14-12, 3-6, 6-0 and the Americans, Washburn and Williams, entered the fifth round.

In the doubles second round by brilliant play Hunter and Richards defeated Brugnon and Feret 6-0, 5-7, 6-1, 5-7, 6-1.

In the first round of the Mixed Doubles Lycett and Miss Ryan, the holders, had a hard fight to beat Spence and Miss Austin 4-6, 6-4, 6-1.

Mrs. Shepherd-Barron, Mrs. Satterthwaite and Miss McKane advanced to the fourth round of the singles.

In the fourth round Washburn beat the Australian Watt 0-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

In the third round the American, Mrs. Jessup, beat Miss Holcroft 6-1, 6-3.

In the second round the South African Condon, partnered by Mrs. Mallory, beat the Americans, C. Fischer and Miss Igourney 6-3, 6-4. Williams and Mrs. Wightman beat J. Hillyard and Mrs. Satterthwaite. —Reuter.

Mlle. Lenglen's Hard Struggle Against Miss Ryan

Wimbledon, June 30.

The weather was cool and windy and the sky overcast for the resumption of the Lawn Tennis Championships to-day. There were 15,000 spectators.

In the first match on the Centre Court the brilliant and agile French player, Locoste, defeated the hard-hitting Belgian, Washer, 6-1, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, in the fifth round and thus enters the semi-final.

To-day was a Lenglen day. The champion had the closest match of her career, when defeating Miss Ryan in the fourth round, 6-2, 6-8, 6-4. She lost her first set in England since she won the Championship in 1919. She did not play at her best, but Miss Ryan played the game of her life. There were periods when the defeat of the champion seemed more than a possibility. Miss Ryan made very skilful exploration of a drop-shot and left Mlle. Lenglen nonplussed. It was a great thrill for the crowd to see Mlle. Lengen fighting for her title in the third set.

In other fourth round matches Miss McKane beat the American Mrs. Jessup 6-1, 6-3. Miss Wills beat Mrs. Colegate 6-1, 6-0, and Mrs. Satterthwaite beat Mrs. Shepherd-Barron, 6-4, 10-8. Mlle. Lenglen, Miss McKane, Miss Wills and Mrs. Satterthwaite now enter the semi-final round.

In the second round of the doubles, Williams and Washburn (America) beat J. Hillyard and Greig, 6-3, 6-3, 6-2; Richards and Hunter (America) beat Okamoto and Hooihye (Japan) 6-4, 6-2, 7-5.

In the third round of the doubles, Lycett and Godfree beat the South Africans, Richardson and Condon, 6-8, 7-9, 6-1, 6-0, 6-2. The brothers Alonso beat Davson and Mavrogordate 8-6, 6-3, 6-3.

In the second round of the Mixed Doubles, Hunter and Miss Scharman beat J. Washer and Mrs. Feilden, 8-6, 5-7, 8-6; Woosham and Mrs. Covell beat Washburn and Miss Goss, 4-6, 6-4, 6-1: Richards and Mrs. Jessup beat B. Cameron and Miss Watson, 6-3, 6-1.

In the third round, Borotra and Mlle. Lenglen beat R. Poland and Miss Tyrell, 6-2, 6-3.—Reuter.

Borotra's Brilliant Victory over Richards in Men's Singles Championship

Wimbledon, July 1.

The weather at Wimbledon to-day was fine, though cooler than the previous day. The attendance was small.

The first centre court match was the fifth-round meeting of the American, Williams and the last-remaining British competitor, Colonel Kingscote. Williams entered the semi-final, eliminating Kingscote by 5-7, 64, 6-3, 6-4.

The South African, Raymond, entered the semi-final by defeating the American, Washburn, 6-0, 7-5, 17-15, in the fifth round.

Borotra is the second French semi-finalist, the other being Lacoste. He defeated the American, Richards, in the fifth round, 6-4, 4-6, 6-0, 6-3.

In the second round of the Mixed Doubles, Gilbert and Miss McKane beat Lycett and Miss Ryan, the scote by 5-7, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4.

Later.

It is authoritatively stated that Mlle. Lenglen will take no further part in the Lawn Tennis Championships under the doctor's orders.

Vincent Richards, who was the favourite, was absolutely volleyed out of the championship. The volatile Borotra followed up his services, covered the net, flashed lightning returns to Richards' services and smashed and volleyed the latter's forceful drives. His wonderful perception and remarkable speed left Richards impotent. Borotra dispossessed Richards of the championship, which was generally regarded as his for the playing. Richards was non-plussed by the Frenchman's tactics, which neutralized his driving powers and kept him at the pathetic task of lobbing back. The American won four of the first five games, but Rorotra won the next five for the set. In the second set the Frenchman lost many aces at the net. In the third and fourth sets he won eight games running, winning a love set and leading 2 games to O in the fourth set. He kept the American running by placing skilfully in the side-line corners. He was dominant and purposeful and the aggressor to the end.

Raymond's defeat of Washburn was a wonderful performance. Raymond was limping from an injured ankle, sustained in the Davis Cup ties.

Williams's defeat of Kingscote was due to the American's deadly drives into the baseline corners.

Ladies Doubles.

In the fourth round of the Ladies' Doubles, Miss Goss and Mrs. Jessup beat Mrs. Bouverie and Mrs. Hieil, 6-2, 2-6, 9-7.

In the third round, the Americans, Mrs. Wightman and Miss Wills, beat Miss Austin and Miss Colyer, 6-2, 6-4. Mrs. Lamber Chambers and Mrs. Shepherd-Barron and the Americans, Miss Goss and Mrs. Jessup, enter the semi-final round.

In the third round of the Mixed Doubles, Gilbert and Miss McKane beat Condon and Mrs. Mallory, 6-3, 6-2; Lamb and Miss Harvey beat Wheatley and Miss Colyer, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2; Hunter and Miss Scharman beat J. Park and Mrs. Middleton, 6-4, 2-6, 6-1; O. Turnbull and Mrs. Craddock beat Richards and Miss Jessup, 6-3, 4-6, 6-1.—Reuter.

Miss McKane and Miss Wills in Ladies' Singles Final

Wimbledon, July 2.

There were 10,000 spectators at Wimbledon to-day. The weather was cloudy.

The sole topic of conversation was the retirement of Mlle. Lenglen, who was a spectator. Miss McKane thereby receives a walkover into the final. She will meet Miss Wills, who beat Mrs. Satterthwaite 6-2, 6-1, in the semi-final.

The first centre court match to-day was that in which Raymond and Spence defeated Colonel Kingscote and Gilbert, 6-2, 7-5, 6-2. The Africans were always superior. Another British doubles defeat occurred when Richards and Hunter beat Woosnam and Wheatley, 6-2, 7-5, 3-6, 6-4, while the Americans, Washburn and Williams, disposed of Kingsley and Masterman, 6-1, 6-4, 6-4.

Mrs. Covell and Miss McKane entered the semi-final by defeating Mrs. Beamish and Mrs. Hazel, 7-5, 6-1, in the fourth round.

In the fourth round of the doubles Spence and Raymond beat Norman Brookes and Fischer, 6-4, 6-3, 6-2, and thus meet the Americans, and Hunter, in the semi-final. Lycett and Godfree, the holders beat the brothers Alonso, 6-4, 6-4, 9-7, and will meet the Americans, Williams and Washburn, in the semi-final.

The Mixed Doubles.

In the fourth round of the Mixed Doubles, Godfree and Mrs. Shepherd-Barron beat Hunter and Miss Charman, 9-7, 7-5. Woosnam and Mrs. Covell received a walk-over from Borotra and Mlle. Lenglen, who scratched. Gilbert and Miss McKane beat Williams and Mrs. Wightman, 5-7, 6-2, 6-2. Lamb and Miss Harvey beat Turnbull and Mrs. Craddock, 3-6, 6-3, 7-5.

In the Ladies' Doubles, Mrs. Wightman and Miss Wills received a walk-over from Mlle. Lenglen and Miss Ryan, who scratched. The winners enter the semi-finals, as do the winners of the fourth round of the Mixed Doubles.—Reuter.

BRITISH OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Won by American Hagen After Magnificent Struggle: 36 to Win on Home Journey

Hoylake, June 26.

The British Open Golf Championship began to-day in sunshine and hot weather. There was a huge attendance.

The scores at the end of the first round were as follows:—

Cyril Tolley (Royal and Ancient), 73; George Duncan (Hanger Hill), Len Holland (Northampton), and Mark Seymour (St. Leonards), 74; E. Douglas (Robin Hood), Aubrey Boomer (St. Cloud), Gilbert Nicholls (America), and J. Taylor (Mid-Surrey), 75; McDonald Smith (America), 76; Hagen (America), 77; Jim Barnes (America), 78; and Sarazen (America), 88.

Later.

At the conclusion of the first day's play Englishmen were in the ascendant, though the Americans Hagen and Smith were well within striking distance.

E. R. Whitcombe, of Camedown, leads the field with 147. His second round of 70 equalled the course record.

The other scores were:—J. H. Taylor, 149; Hagen and Smith, 150; J. Sherlock (Hunstanton), 151; Holland, 152; Duncan, Boomer and Nicholls, 153; Gadd, 154; Barnes, Tolley and Herd, 155; Havers, 156; Mitchell and Sarazen, 158; Braid and Ray, 160; Wethered 167.—Reuter.

Hoylake, June 27.

At the conclusion of the third round of the British Open Golf Championship, the leaders were E. Whitcombe (Camedown) and the American, Hagen, with 224; George Duncan (Hanger Hill), the American, MacDonald Smith, and Frank Ball, 227, and J. H. Taylor (Mid-Surrey), 228.

Later.

Hagen won the Championship with a score of 301.

E. Whitcombe came second with 302.

After Hagen and Whitcombe came MacDonald Smith and Frank Ball with 304, J. H. Taylor 307, Duncan, Holland and Boomer 308, and Sherlock, Barnes, Gadd and Weston 309.

Fifteen thousand people watched the final round. The finish was thrilling, Hagen making a dogged fight. After a first round of 74, he took 41 going out in the second round. Then came the news of Whitcombe's 302. Hagen made a lionhearted effort and played superbly on the homeward half, which he had to do in 36. He took 4,4,4,3,4,4,5,4, and 4 strokes. The excitement was intense at the last two holes. Hagen had a nice lie off the fairway at the 17th. He played a beautiful iron-shot, but missed a three-yard put for 3. He drove just over the green at the 18th, was two and a half yards short with his third, but holed out amidst a terrific ovation.

Other scores were:—

Nicholls and Herd 310: Tolley and Braid 314: Havers 317: Ray 319: Sarazen 323. Mitchell retired in the third round. C. Whitcombe was disqualified for playing with the wrong ball.—Reuter.

American-English 4 Ball Game.

A four-ball match has been arranged between the American golfers, Hagen and MacDonald Smith, and the Englishmen, Mitchell and Duncan, for early in July. The match will be played over 72 holes for stakes amounting to £500.—Reuter.

FRENCH OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Won by a British Amateur for the First Time: Mr. Tolley's Success

Paris, July 2.

The French Open Golf Championship, played on the La Bourlie course, for the first time in its 17 years' history was won by an amateur British competitor, Cyril Tolley, who made an aggregate score over thee 72 holes of 290.

Hagen (America) was second with 293, and Duncan was twelfth with 305. The American, Sarazen, scored 307. Ockenden, the holder, did not compete.

Tolley was very steady throughout. His respective scores for the four rounds were 73, 73, 71 and 73. In the third he beat the amateur record for the course held by the American, Chick Evans, by a stroke. Hagen's scores were 75, 72, 77 and 69. In the morning Sarazen headed the field with scores of 72 and 72, but to-day he made 88 and 75 for the third and fourth rounds.—Reuter.

China, Japan, Australia, Spain, France and England all searched for Rare Medicinal Herbs.

SCIENCE AND NATURE COMBINE TO PRODUCE WORLD'S GREATEST HEALER AND SKIN-CURE.

IT is not commonly known that countries so far apart as China and Spain, Japan and England, and Tasmania and France, have to be searched for the right species of herbs used in the manufacture of the natural healing balm bearing the world famous name of ZAM-BUK. These herbs are, many of them, rare and costly, and neither skill nor expense is spared to see that they are gathered just at the right season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal contents are at their very best. This is the secret of Zam-buk's unfailing reliability and complete success in all manner of skin troubles.

Zam-buk is the only true successor of those herbal balms used by the gladiators of Ancient Rome: with this important advantage—in addition to its pure herbal composition and complete freedom from animal fats, Zam-buk has, at every stage of its complicated manufacture, the full benefit of the latest pharmaceutical research and manufacturing skill. This knowledge and research have brought Zam-buk to a pitch of perfection never equalled in the annals of healing. Thus, Zam-buk can be depended upon to instantly soothe pain, allay swelling and inflammation, expel deep-seated disease, and grow new, healthy skin.

The different medicinal qualities in Zam-buk are beautifully balanced: the healing side with the antiseptic, the soothing with the germicidal; it is penetrative yet not too stimulating, and has just the right lubricity for removing superficial swellings, sprains and pains.

Zam-buk is an ever-ready, reliable, and highly concentrated medicinal product—eminently suited for use in hot climates. It may be applied with perfect confidence and knowledge that Zam-buk is a refined herbed skin balm, and not a pore-clogging "dressing" or ointment containing rancid animal fats and crude mineral drugs.

Zam-buk's unequalled power and effectiveness is thoroughly proved in cases of wet and dry eczema, psoriasis, impetigo, itch, prickly heat, ringworm, piles, ulcers, boils, abscesses, foot troubles, poisoned wounds, scalp diseases, and all sore inflammatory conditions of the skin. For its swift antiseptic healing Zam-buk is indispensable in burns, cuts, insect bites, etc.

Obtainable in handy-size boxes, of medicine dealers in Shanghai, Hongkong and The Straits or by post from Agents:—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

FREE SAMPLE BOXES!

But for the fact of their having absolute faith in the marvellous healing properties of Zam-Buk, the proprietors would hardly invite you to write for a Free Trial Sample. LAW REPORTS

PAUL KELLY v. ASIATIC MOTORS

Judgment in the Case in which an Employee of Motor Garage Claims Salary and Return of Moneys Advanced: No Option But to Find for Defendants

His Honour Judge Kelly gave judgment on Saturday in the case as described above. In doing so his Honour said in part:—

This is an action for breach of contract. The plaintiff, an engineer and experienced mechanic, on the 11th day of May, 1923, entered into an agreement in writing with Edward M. Mark, as the representative of the promoters of the Asiatic Motors, Inc., which agreement was in words and figures, as follows:—

May 11, 1923.

P. W. Kelly, Esq.,
Present.

Dear Sir,—Representing the promoters of Asiatic Motors, Inc., I desire to make you the following offer regarding your employment with the selling organization.

It is understood that you will subscribe to 500 shares of the common stock of Asiatic Motors, Inc., at U.S. $1. per share, and that you will pay for the same at the rate of not less than U.S. $500 per year in advance and that the said shares shall be delivered to you in amounts equal to such payments upon such payments.

Your duties with the concern will be to manage the engineering and service departments of the selling organization. You will be obliged to give the concern your best endeavours to the satisfaction of the directors of the company and to be subject to the orders of such directors. It is understood that you will be made a director in the selling concern and that as such you agree to faithfully perform your duties as a director.

Your salary will be not less than Shanghai Taels Five Hundred; (Sh. $500.) per month and you will be entitled to a vacation when you have served the concern faithfully for three years. This vacation will be for three months on full pay with transportation to and from America for yourself and for your wife, provided she is at Shanghai at the time of your departure. The company will provide you with the usual medical attention.

The right is reserved to the directors to terminate your services ninety (90) days after written notice of termination for such cause as they may deem sufficient. Upon such termination the company will return you all money invested together with interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum and you will accept the same and return to the company all shares held by you and puchased under the agreements herein contained. You will at that time be released from any further obligation to invest in the concern.

You will be fully advised of the details and the scheme for the promotion of the concern mentioned and it is expected that the promoters will have your full co-operation. Should the conditions herein set forth be acceptable to you, kindly sign the copy which is handed you herewith and return the same to the undersigned.

Your very truly
E. M. MARK (Sgd).

I accept the above conditions.
F. W. Kelly, (Sgd).

Statement of Facts.

A short time after the execution of this agreement plaintiff paid to Mark the sum of Gold $500.00 which was apparently used by Mark and his associates in defraying at least a portion of the expenses in the promotion and organization of the company. This Gold $500 was paid in as Kelly's subscription for 500 shares of common stock in the company, which Kelly agreed to purchase at the rate of Gold $1 per share. It appears that Kelly did not actually enter upon the performance of his duties under the agreement until about the first day of June, 1923, and that on or about the same time Kelly agreed verbally to a modification of his contract by accepting a reduction of his monthly salary from Tls. 500 to Tls. 350, which reduction in salary was to continue until the company's business had been placed upon a more profitable basis. This agreement provided that Kelly was to be manager of the engineering and service department of the selling organization of the company, and as such manager he was to have charge of repair work upon automobiles which would be turned out to him by the other department of the organization or which would be brought into the company's place of business for repairs by the general public. The parties proceeded to carry out this contract with little or no friction, so far as the evidence discloses, until some time in the month of October, or November, 1923.

Loans to the Company.

During these first four months, Kelly drew out, on account of salary, approximately Mex. $485. On or about June 21, after he had been at work for the company about three weeks, he made the company a loan of Mex. $600 which the company agreed to repay "in a few days" but which was not repaid until September 21 following, at which time it was applied by the company, upon Kelly's agreement to purchase 64 additional shares of stock in the company at Gold $16 per share. It also appears that in the month of June, Kelly advanced to the company Mex. $55.60 in cash at the shop.

During this time Kelly received from the company two cash payments—one on July 4 of Mex. $185 and one on August 2 of Mex. $300, making a total of Mex. $485 paid him upon his salary account—his salary during this period amounted to Mex. $1,450 at the reduced rate of Tls. 350 per month. On September 6, 1923, Kelly entered into another agreement in writing with the defendant, through E. M. Mark its representative, whereby he agreed to purchase 64 shares of stock at Gold $16 per share amounting in the aggregate to Gold $1,024. This contract required Kelly to pay Gold $400 cash as of the date of its execution, and the balance in six monthly instalments of Gold $100 each beginning October 1, 1923, and ending March 1, 1924. The certificates of stock were not to be delivered until the entire amount was fully paid in cash.

A Sort of Settlement.

Shortly thereafter, to wit, on September 21, 1923, the parties appear to have had an accounting or adjustment of their accounts. According to this settlement Kelly received Mex. $50 petty cash, and two cheques from the company for Mex. $899.02 and Mex. $118.41 respectively, or a total in cash of Mex. $1,067.43. He also received in the way of a credit Gold $400 which amounted to Mex. $769.83. At the time the plaintiff made this contract to purchase 64 additional shares of stock, Mark had agreed to increase Kelly's salary from Tls. 350 per month to Tls. 500 and that such increase should apply to Kelly's August salary. This additional Tls. 150 which was allowed and credited to Kelly on his August salary together with credits and cash payments made to Kelly as above-stated were sufficient to square the account between the parties as of September 21. During the two months and ten days subsequent to this settlement according to defendant's books of accounts Kelly is credited with salary for the months of September, October and November at the rate of Tls. 500, or a total of Mex. $2,082.32, together with cash amounting to Mex. $16.24 and Kelly is charged for that same period with only Mex. $1,102.72. In other words defendant paid Kelly for only two months—September and October—at the rate of Tls. 350 per month. The account also charges Kelly with certain chits which the company paid in his behalf, amounting to Mex. $30.50. It thus appears that Kelly never received anything on his November salary and defendant claims that it is entitled to apply this November salary, amounting to Mex. $694.44 together with the Mex. $16.24 which the company owed Kelly for cash which he had paid the Star Garage, in satisfaction of Kelly's last four instalments on his stock subscriptions, amounting to Mex. $772.00.

The Dismissal.

Plaintiff was notified of his dismissal on November 29 in a letter signed by the secretary of the board. Two special meetings of the Board of Directors had been held for the express purpose of considering the matter of Kelly's dismissal, and at each of these meetings, the Board had reached the conclusion that they were dissatisfied with his services and directed that he be discharged. The present action is for damages and is based upon the claim that plaintiff's discharge by the defendant was unwarranted and a breach of the contract.

The judgment goes on to show that the Board of Directors base their action of the dismissal of Kelly upon the good faith of their finding that he had failed "to give to the concern his best endeavours to the satisfaction of the directors."

"Satisfaction Contracts."

Extensive quotations are then given to show the law governing the rights of parties under a contract which requires one of the parties to do something which is satisfactory to the other party, and the extent to which the Courts have gone in requiring compliance with these so-called "satisfaction contracts." As for example:—

'The true doctrine is expressed in McCarren v. McNulty, 7 Gray (Mass) 139, 141: "It may be that the plaintiff was injudicious or indiscreet in undertaking to labour and furnish materials for a compensation, the payment of which was made dependent upon a contingency so hazardous or doubtful as the approval or satisfaction of a party particularly in interest. But of that he was the sole judge. Against the consequences resulting from his own bargain the law can afford him not relief; having voluntarily assumed the obligations and risk of the contract, his legal rights are to be ascertained and determined soley according to its provisions."

Defendant's Dissatisfaction

The defendant offered considerable evidence tending to show that during the months of October and November, and perhaps during a portion of the month of September it had received many complaints of dissatisfaction with Kelly's services or the department of which he had charge and control. These complaints came not only from various officials and employees of the company but also from the general public and were in most instances to the effect that Kelly was inattentive to his duties and that he and his subordinates performed the work in his department in a careless and unskilful manner, and that Kelly, himself, frequently quarrelled and had trouble with the Chinese help employed under him. It was also claimed that Kelly had refused to obey certain orders emanating from the Board of Directors and given to Kelly personally. It is true that the only order which the evidence showed Kelly disobeyed was an order given him by the general manager, Giovannini, on November 29, 1923, the day on which Kelly was discharged. This order was with reference to the delivery of a certain motor car to the general manager, and was given to Kelly over the telephone. Kelly's excuse for not obeying this order was that the car was not ready or in a condition to be delivered. This matter was at once reported to the Board of Directors and resulted in Kelly's immediate discharge. The record contains the minutes of two special meetings of the Board of Directors—one held on November 27, and one called two days later on November 29. At each of these meetings Kelly's unsatisfactory work was the sole subject of discussion and consideration. At each of these meetings the Board of Directors arrived at the conclusion that Kelly was not giving the concern his best endeavours to the satisfaction of the directors, that his services were unsatisfactory and that he had refused to obey their orders, and authorized and directed that he be discharged as of the November 30, 1923.

Board's Attitude Plain

In the face of this testimony it is impossible to hold that the company has failed by a fair preponderance of evidence to establish the fact that the Board of Directors was not dissatisfied with Kelly's services or that they were not in good faith and honestly satisfied that Kelly was not giving to the concern his best endeavours. The only escape which the Court could have from such a conclusion would be to find bad faith on the part of the directory of this company, in other words that they were not in fact "dissatisfied" but that such dissatisfaction was a mere pretext and not the real cause of Kelly's dismissal. In order to justify such a finding it would manfestly be necessary to have before me some testimony reasonably tending to establish bad faith and it seems to me that the record is woefully lacking in such testimony.

Kelly's Contributions

It will, of course, be admitted that Kelly was an interested party in the enterprise from its very inception and that his money which he paid for stock was used by the promoters of the company for organization expenses. It also appears that he voluntarily reduced his salary at the commencement of his services from Tls. 500 to Tls. 350 per month and that during the month of June, he loaned the company Mex. $655; that he refrained during the first four months from withdrawing about Mex. $1,000 of his salary which was admittedly due to him; that he subscribed for additional stock on September 6, 1923, to the extent of Gold $1,000 practically all the money he had, and it does not appears that there were any serious complaints made against him until a short time after he entered into the agreement to subscribe for additional stock. While all these facts, and perhaps others, that might be mentioned might have a tendency to raise some suspicion in the mind of the Court as to the good faith and honesty of this dissatisfaction which apparently did not become serious until October or November, I certainly would not be justified in finding that such facts reasonably tended to prove that the directors were not actually and in good faith dissatisfied with Kelly's endeavours and services under the contract. If one were to allow oneself to enter the realm of speculation and conjecture, the thought might be suggested that during the last few months of Kelly's employment he himself became dissatisfied with his contract and deliberately by his own acts and doings purposely gave the company cause for terminating the contract and that he expected it to be terminated under the 90 days clause which would give him three months additional salary and a return of the Gold $500 plus 8 per cent. interest. A Court or jury in deciding questions of fact cannot permit themselves to indulge in such speculation.

The contention of counsel for plaintiff that he could only be dismissed under the 90 days clause is then examined but not upheld.

I do not agree, however, with the defendant's counsel in the proposition which they advance that upon the termination under the 90 days clause the defendant could compel the return to the company of Kelly's stock upon paying him Gold $500 with interest. The return of the stock upon such a termination would, I am inclined to think be optional with Kelly. The contract contains no provision whereby Kelly was required to refrain from selling or transferring his stock and certainly if the stock were to increase in value five or ten fold it would be unconscionable to compel its surrender to the company for the amount of money which Kelly originally paid for it, plus 8 per cent. interest. In my judgment this provision of the contract as to the return of the stock is susceptible of a much more just and equitable interpretation than that which is placed upon it by defendant's counsel.

Court Cannot Save Plaintiff

However much a Court may desire to do so, it is powerless to save a party from the legal consequences of his ill-considered or improvident acts, and especially is this true when he has bound himself to performance by a valid and lawful contract. It is quite possible that Kelly entered into this agreement hastily, without advice and without a full understanding or appreciation of the provisions which we have been here considering, but it was, nevertheless his contract and the Court cannot now revise it or make for him a new or different contract.

It is, therefore, considered and adjudged that plaintiff have and recover nothing by this action and that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for its costs.

SIKHS' UNLUCKY HOTEL VENTURE

Partnership which Came to Grief: Judgment for Chinese Creditors

The misfortunes of Gujan Singh, Bishen Singh and Sucha Singh, "sleeping partners" in the Imperial Hotel enterprise, were again heard of in the Supreme Court last Friday, when his Honour Judge Grain dealt with two adjourned cases against them. Both were for goods supplied to the Hotel, the Dah Tuck Co. claiming $75.65 and Chen Kee $321.56. Mr. V. MacDonald appeared for the Chinese plaintiff.

In answer to his Honour, one plaintiff said that he did not trust da Silva, the manager of the hotel, and before supplying goods he made inquiries as to who were the owners of the hotel. The 'boys' told him that two Indians were the proprietors, and da Silva himself said that he was in partnership with the Indians and that the concern was a sure money-maker.

His Honour informed defendants that, as sleeping partners, they were liable for debts contracted by the other partner while the hotel was open, and he advised them to advertise that the partnership was broken and that they would not be responsible for any further debts which might be incurred by da Silva.

Gujan stated that the hotel had been sold to satisfy a claim for rent, and there were judgments out against the present three defendants to the amount of $3,000.

His Honour looked over the partnership agreement, which showed that the original capital was $6,000, Gujan Singh having two shares, and Sucha and Bishan one each, the fifth share being given to da Silva in consideration of his acting as manager, and entitling him to 20 per cent. of the nets profits.

Judgment was given for the amounts claimed.

CHINA MERCHANTS BANK FAILURE

"Bank Insolvent and Unable to Pay Debts:" Statement of Petition for Winding-up

Aat H.M. Supreme Court on Tuesday, Judge Sir Skinner Turner heard the petition of Shan Yik-hsien for the winding-up of the affairs of the Chinese Merchants Bank, Ld.

Mr. Wm. S. Fleming appeared for the petitioner and represented the interests of other creditors, and Mr. J. H. Teesdale appeared on behalf of the Bank and the Provisional Liquidation of the bank's affairs.

Mr. Fleming, having received the permission of the Judge to proceed in the British Supreme Court, read the petition to the Court. The petition stated that the bank was incorporated in Hongkong in August, 1917, and was also registered at Shanghai under the China (Companies) Order in Council. The head offices of the company were registered at Alexandria Building, Chater Road, Hongkong. The nominal capital of the company was Hk. $5,000,000. divided into 200,000 shares of $25 each. The subscribed capital of the company was Hk. $1,220,000 paid up, but there were certain calls in arrear, of which petitioner had no particulars. The company was indebted to petitioner (the petition went on to state) in the sum of $538.07, money deposited in the savings department of the bank, and subject to call or immediate withdrawal. On petitioner's application to the bank for payment of that money, the company neglected to pay same. The bank was insolvent and unable to pay its debts and in the circumstances it was just and equitable that the company's affairs should be wound up, and petitioner prayed for an order accordingly, or such other order as might be made in the promises as should be just.

Mr. Fleming went on the state that public notice had been given in the foreign and Chinese press. They had complied with all the extraterritorial requirements necessary, and they were now in a position to ask for the order for winding-up. He had been informed that the Registrar's office in Shanghai had been advised of similar proceedings in Hongkong Supreme Court, and he asked, therefore, whether in the circumstances the Judge would consider it best to adjourn the case in Shanghai till they received further advices from Hongkong.

The Judge replied that a provisional liquidator had been appointed in Shanghai by the Court (in chambers) following correspondence on the subject from the Hongkong authorities, and he understood a hearing was set down in the Hongkong Supreme Court for the 3rd of this month, when application for the winding-up of the company's affairs would be made there.

Mr. Fleming stated that this action was brought in Shanghai merely for the purpose of preserving the assets within the Court's jurisdiction, and that purpose would be served just as well if the case were adjourned, since there was a provisional liquidator appointed.

Mr. Teesdale offered no objection and the case was adjourned till the 15th instant.

BROADWAY ROUGH AND TUMBLE

Young Man Fined for Assaulting Police

A rough and tumble in Broadway on Sunday night led to the appearance of a young man named Miller before Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court on Monday. He was charged with having been drunk and disorderly, and with assulting a Skih police constable.

Inspector O'Toole told the court that shortly after 9 o'clock on Sunday night two foreigners began fighting at the corner of Broadway and Tiendong Road and the Sikh constable went to arrest them. Miller, however, got hold of him from behind and knocked him down, then striking him with his fists and kicking him on the elbow. Other police came on the scene and Miller was arrested, but he was violent on the way to the police station.

After evidence had been given bearing out this statement, defendant explained his part in the proceedings. He said that a sailor ran after another man, whom he said had taken his money, and brushed his ricsha as he went by. Three or four men began fighting and witness went in to try and separate them. "I never looked at who I hit," he added. "I might have hit the Sikh, but I was looking out for meyself."

The Magistrate observed that really an assault on the police ought to be punished by imprisonment without the option of a fine, but he would give Miller a chance and let him off with $5 or three days.

THE SLEEPER AWAKENS

Nightmare Caused by Samshu: Potent Effects of Chinese Stimulants

The potency of samshu was demonstrated on Saturday night by Sucha Singh, a Sikh watchman, who was found lying on the steps of a foreign boarding house in Astor Terrace. On Monday he appeared before Mr. G. W. King, charged with drunkenness and assault, and the story told was that the Chinese police constable who discovered him at first thought that the prostrate figure was that of a dead Russian. Finding, however, that the man was only asleep, he endeavoured to rouse him and, failing in this, bundled him into a ricsha. The sleeper awakened and a certain liviliness ensued. The Chinese constable had his arm bitten until blood was drawn, and Sucha followed this up by tearing pieces out of the constable's tunic, next slapping an amah in the face and pulling her hair, and winding up by giving a ricsha coolie a hefty kick.

Speaking on behalf of the defendant, Mr. J. G. Priestwood informed his Worship that Sucha was a respectable man who had lived in Shanghai for 12 years and never had got into disgrace before. After having been on duty on Saturday from 6 a.m. until 3 p.m., he visited a Chinese wineshop and the drinks he had "apparently overcame him," since he fell asleep on a doorstep in Astor Terrace immediately on leaving the shop. He was quite willing to pay the $6 done to the policeman's coat.

Fined $5 or three days.

SHIPS' OFFICERS' CLAIM FOR PASSAGE HOME

U. S. Court Admiralty Case

Evidence was heard by Judge Purdy last Friday in the first Admiralty case ever before the U. S. Court. Six officers of the str. Owego brought a libel suit against str. Owego, the master and owners, claiming that under the terms of their articles they were entitled to additional wages and to full transportation to Seattle.

Mr. J. N. Schoe, told, appeared for plaintiffs; Mr. N. F. Allman for defendants.

The six officers, F. Diaz, 1st mate; W. Cloherty, 1st asst. engineer; E. G. Simmerman, asst. engineer; Charles Lorentzen, 2nd mate; A. Alvsaaken, 3rd mate; and N. Heath, 3rd asst. engineer, told in substance the same story, that they had signed on at Seattle with the agreement that if they were paid off at any Oriental port they should be furnished passage back to Seattle and wages to the time of their landing in Seattle.

They were paid off in Foochow on May 31, so the men alleged, receiving their wages up to and including June 23, and given transportation to Shanghai, and what was claimed to be sufficient money to pay their passage to Seattle in the Manila Maru. They arrived in Shanghai to find that this boat had already sailed and that on the next boat of that line, the Africa Maru, the passage was G.$255 or G.$51 more than they had been given for passage. They claimed, accordingly, sustenance for the time they had been obliged to spend in Shanghai, additional wages to cover the additional time before they should reach Seattle and sufficient money for transportation home.

U. S. COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Traffic Cases: Delinquents in Submissive Mood and Dealt with Accordingly

In the U. S. Commissioner's Court, Mr. N. E. Lurton sitting, found the usual number of delinquent motorists on Saturday present to answer charges of violation of the Municipal traffic regulations, which were prosecuted by Chief Inspector Kinipple. It was an easy day, however, for the police, for it was not necessary in a single instance to call witnesses to prove the case—defendants pleading guilty and ready to accept the Court's decision if their explanation did not convince the Magistrate that extenuating circumstances existed.

Mr. A. L. Taylor, Shanghai baseball pitcher, had trouble with his lighting system two weeks ago and was fined G.$2, but the costs of the action were remitted. Mr. C. E. Klein pleaded that his fan had become disconnected and short-circuited the lights without his knowledge—no penalty imposed, but defendant was warned. Mr. C. E. Cottrell was the third to be without the proper lighting to his motor-car—he found that a wire had broken and when his attention was called to it by an officer he proceeded to have it attended to at once, warned. Mr. G. M. Byers found guilty of obstructing traffic on Nanknig Road—he had not parked his machine at a white line—was fined G.$2 and cautioned with reference to a repetition.

A Bill for Smokes.

With the conclusion of the traffic cases the action of Frank Fernandez v. James Crevling came to the attention of the Commissioner. Plaintiff admitted judgment for chits for liquor, cigarettes and cigars amounting to Mex. $133, bought during the past year. Mr. Y. Char acted for complainant, while Mr. P. Faison appeared for defendant. Judgment was given for $108 and costs, after defence had shown that certain payments had been made.

ARMED DESPERADO AND A MOTOR-CAR

Chauffeur Who Drove Captain Boyd Charged at Mixed Court But Dismissed

As a sequel to the affair of Captain Boyd, in which the latter was threatened by an armed desperado, the case of Yui Ah-moo, chauffeur, was heard before the Mixed Court last Friday morning. It seems that the desperado boarded the car in which Captain Boyd was travelling, and forced the driver to take him to the neighbourhood of Haining Road, where he made his escape. The chauffeur was later arrested by the Chapei Police on the ground that he was a confederate of the fugitive.

The accused when questioned said that the man had boarded the car and had flashed a revolver at them both, threatening to shoot if he did not drive on. He had had no alternative than to do so, and the man had escaped in the direction of Haining Road. There being no further evidence, the accused was released, and the case was dismissed.

It is stated that in connexion with this affair the police have arrested two other men who were present at the tea-house previous to the armed attack, who are said to be friends of the culprit.

THE ARMED ROBBER OF BUBBLING WELL

Last of the Sunday Afternoon Gang Convicted and Sent to the Arsenal

What is probably the final chapter, but one, in the life history of one Chinese armed robber, who terrorized the Western District on the peaceful Sunday evening two weeks ago, June 15, was written at the Mixed Court on Wednesday when he was sent to the Yamên of the Defence Commissioner to be shot. Should the Chinese authorities find him not guilty he is to be returned to the Settlement authorities. The charges against another man, thought to have been implicated, were dismissed.

In presenting evidence to the Court on Wednesday Det.-Sgt. Robinson showed the five automatic pistols of various makes and calibres and produced 63 rounds of ammunition taken from the bodies of the two shot dead and also found in the vicinity. Designating one pistol, he was of the opinion that the rifling in the barrel and the groves found on the bullet extacted from the shoulder of S.P.C. 89, corresponded. Accused's pistol, when he was taken into custody, had a shell in the breach and the weapon seemed to have been fired several times. Another pistol was found in the clothes of the desperado who had taken refuge in a house in Hardoon Road in a badly wounded, condition and whom witness had arrested a few minutes later—there were 14 additional rounds also.

Store of 5,000 Rounds.

While Sgt. Robinson drew the attention to a wicked-looking. Luger automatic pistol among the others on the bench before the Court, he said that the ammunition used by the gang came from a varied and wide reserve, the total amount being 5,000 rounds.

Mr. Martin—I do not know just what you mean by reserves.—If (reading from a list of the various styles of shells) these cartridges came from boxes of 100, as shells are often sold, there would be a store of 5,000 rounds, for it seems that nearly 50 kinds were used.

S.P.C. 89, taking the box with his right sleeve hanging empty, his injured shoulder not yet permitting him full use of the arm, which hung in a sling, replied to Mr. Maitland, prosecuting, that he had been wounded recently. His evidence, which he could not give at the first hearing, because he was confined to hospital, was to the effect that he was in a search party with two Chinese and a Sikh Havildar (the foreign sergeant had been detained at the Station) when they met two robbers, not knowing who they were. Upon the command to halt and submit to search the robbers opened fire and the other three to the rear did likewise. I received one shot in the arm, said witness, but as the five ran toward Bubbling Well Road I fired three times; four of them returned fire and I shot again.

The Assessor—Would you know the man who shot you?—Yes, it is the first accused, pointing to the man in question. Witness was quite sure.

Continuing his account of the fight witness said that he then noticed a foreign man who asked him to reload his carbine and let him continue the chase. A long white gown and a straw that he next identified as the same he had found in the gardens where the one wounded man went. He could not identify the second accused, who was a ricsha coolie, he had only seen his back, not his features.

Ricshaman's Suspicions.

A ricsha coolie, in the employment of a shroff, who had just collected some funds, and whom the police believe to have been the man the gang were waiting for, gave evidence. Mentioning that two men, one dressed in a long white gown and the other in grey, inspected his vehicle carefully three times, noting the numbers while the shroff was upstairs, he declared that he told his master of his suspicions and that he was afraid, The latter then ordered the return, not in the usual road but by way of Bubbling Well Road. In reply to Mr. Maitland witness stated that he knew second accused very slightly but that he (accused) had asked him if a robbery had taken place that afternoon.

The Magistrate questioned the first accused, who answered very quickly and in an assured way. He had also been a ricsha puller and for seven years. He was asked by one of the dead robbers to come with them, he did not know them, and was given a pistol, and, further, they had not told him beforehand what to do. Scha Lao-tze (evidently his superior) told him to fire three times when the officers approached, but, he stated, "I did not fire at the police, I shot into the air." He had never seen second accused before.

The latter, replying to the Magistrate, said that he had been a ricsha puller in Shanghai for a year. He was not acquainted with the remainder of the gang at all.

Mr. Maitland did not address the Court, but asked that the second be penalized, though his undesirability hinged only on the statement of a witness, who did not corroborate his written words in court.

A Tribute by the Court.

The Court in giving judgment, stated, "The Court recommends for the consideration of the Commissioner of Police the splendid conduct of Mr. Springfield and the Sikh and Chinese police in breaking up this gang of robbers. It is the opinion of the Court that the ricsha coolie, Chang Tzching, should be rewarded for the assistance rendered in the arrest of accused."

All the 13 silk filatures resumed operations on Saturday, in deference to the advice of Col. Lu, Chief of the Chinese Police. As early as 4 a.m., detachments of police were stationed in the vicinity of the filatures, which opened their gates promptly after 5.30 a.m. The workers gradually arrived, some straggling, behind. Yuanfeng and Tungfengyung had the satisfaction of seeing the women all present at 6.15 at which time work was started. The other factories were not so fortunate; but they all resumed work by 8 o'clock, a few having begun work at 7.45. The Inspector in charge returned to his station at 9 a.m. The two ringleaders, Tsen Husze and Lu Wang-sze, were released at the request of the Silk Guild soon after the strike had ended, as agreed upon, receiving a severe reprimand only from the Police Magistrate.

For using his master's car for running opium, a chauffeur was sentenced to three month's imprisonment at the Mixed Court on Tuesday, and the principal in the deal got six months. Cleverly forging similar licence plates to those used by the Municipality, the chauffeur suspended them directly over those belonging to his employers, Kanan & Co., 43 and 44 Dixwell Road, the number 3218 completely covering the original 3096. P. C. Bell stated that he was patrolling North Soochow Road with a Chinese, when he noticed the car drive along the road and stop alongside a boat. First accused slipped up and threw a 12 lb. chunk of the drug into the motor and returned for more. Seizing the chauffeur, they held him until the other returned, but the latter realizing that the game was up, jumped into the creek, where he remained for the better portion of an hour. Leaving the Chinese constable on guard, witness returned to the station with accused and on his return saw the wet and bedraggled culprit emerge. He had not drowned because, as he said, he held on to a boat. Insp. Mackenzie, prosecuting, remarked that the drug had evidently been brought from upcountry in an ordinary cargo boat. Three boxes of opium and other items were ordered to be confiscated.

MILITARY CONTROL IN GERMANY

German Reply to Allied Note: Repudiation of Allegation of Secret Arming

Paris, June 30.

A forecast of the German reply to the Note of the Conference of Ambassadors on the subject of inter-Allied military control says that it accepts resumption provided: (1) that it is deferred for one month; (2) that the Control Commission shall resume its mission by an inspection of factories; and (3) that the investigations of the Commission shall be limited to seeing laws promulgated prohibiting dealing in war material, carrying out the destruction of mobilization plans and providing for the non-existence of armed forces contrary to the Treaty of Versailles.

The first stipulation is stated to be in order to enable the preparation of German public opinion, but it is believed in Paris that it is merely to create a postponement until the results of the London Conference on July 16 have become known. The reply disregards the additional claim of the Conference of Ambassadors that the Commission shall make an inventory of German armaments which, if it turned out to be reassuring, would result in the limitation of Allied attention to supervision of the use of police and the disposal of existing war material.

Later.

The German Ambassador to-day presented to M. Herriot the German reply to the Allied Note on military control.—Reuter.

Berlin, June 30.

The German reply declares that the Germans repudiate the mere idea of war. They unanimously repudiate secret arming as impossible, useless and dangerous. It says that the Government have thoroughly carried out the disarmament of certain political organizations. The athletic exercises of German youth are not connected with military preparations by Germany.

The reply further says that no experienced military officer can hold the opinion that Germany is in a position to cause armed conflict in Europe, because she is in a condition of helplessness unparalleled in the history of nations. It suggests that the fears of danger to European peace are due to the fact that the idea of general disarmament has not made any noteworthy progress among the other nations.

Germany accepts the demand of the Allies for a general inspection provided it is final and is concluded by September 30.—Reuter.

Satisfactory on the Whole but Omitting Mention of Some Material Conditions

London, July 1.

Well-informed circles in London consider that the German reply is generally satisfactory, though it seems impossible to agree to the proposal that the work of control should finish by September 30.—Reuter.

Paris, July 1.

The German Note has created a not unfavourable impression in competent Allied quarters. The question of the date on which the inspection will end is not likely to create difficulties.

While rejecting the idea of a fixed date, the Allies will probably promise a complete inspection as early as possible, compatible with thoroughness.

Two more serious obstacles are, firstly, the absence of any mention of the five conditions which, the Conference of Ambassadors declared, must be carried out before the control is handed over to the League of Nations, and secondly, the stipulation for a preliminary agreement with regard to ways and means of carrying out the inspection.

There is no reason to anticipate that the Conference of Ambassadors will forgo satisfaction on the five conditions, while the preliminary agreement must not imply restriction of full exercise of the right of inspection.

The Cabinet has appointed General Walch President of the Control Commission in Berlin. He will replace General Nollet, who has been appointed Minister of War in M. Herriot's Cabinet. It has also been decided to replace on the active list General Sarrail, former Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies in the Near East.—Reuter.

French Expenses in Ruhr

Paris, June 28.

The Chamber of Deputies to-day by 456 votes to 26 approved the Ruhr credits, which M. Herriot made a question of confidence. The Socialists voted with the majority.

This is the first time that any Socialists have voted for the Ruhr credits, to which they are opposed on principle. The Socialist leader, M. Blum, declared in the afternoon that all Socialists would abstain from voting, but M. Herriot, by making it a question of confidence, constituted the vote a test of discipline.

The whole of the Left bloc and a number of Socialists abstained, but many voted for the credits. Practically the whole of the Opposition voted for the credits. Only the Communists voted against them and demanded immediate evacuation of the Ruhr. M. Herriot replied that immediate evacuation was impossible in the interests of reparations and also of security. He pointed out that voting for the credits did not imply approval of the policy of occupation, but the status quo in the Ruhr was necessary pending the issue of the forthcoming inter-Allied negotiations.—Reuter.

France and the German Note

Paris, July 2.

General Nollet, the Minister of War, told the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee to-day that France would not accept September 30 for the termination of the inspection by the Military Control Commission in Germany.—Reuter.

Berlin, July 3.

The "Echo de Paris" report with regard to the redrafting of the German reply to the note of the Conference of Ambassadors on the subject of inter-Allied military control is semi-officially denied here.—Reuter.

German Debts to Allies

Tokyo, June 29.

It is learnt on good authority that the British Government has under consideration a plan of convening on July 16 a joint meeting of Great Britain, Japan, France, Italy and Belgium, which are entitled to receive indemnity from Germany, and that upon an agreement being reached among the Powers concerned, Germany will be allowed to participate in the said joint meeting. It is expected that Baron Hayashi and Viscount Ishii, Japanese Ambassadors to the Court of St. James and France, respectively, will be appointed by the Japanese Government as its official delegates to the meeting.—Eastern News Agency.

BRITAIN'S RETENTION OF THE SUDAN

Lord Parmoor's Announcement Loudly Applauded by British Press

London, June 27.

The statement of the Lord President of the Council, Lord Parmoor, in the House of Lords on Wednesday that the British Government would not abandon the Sudan is practically unanimously approved by the British press.

While some writers express the opinion that Zaglul Pasha, in view of his uncompromising attitude, should abandon his visit to London, others admit that there is room for adjustment of the Administration, which can be conveniently discussed with the Egyptian Prime Minister in London.

Reuter's correspondent at Cairo states that the vernacular press publishes columns of protests against Lord Parmoor's statement from places throughout Egypt. A huge demonstration of sympathy with "our Sudan brothers" has been planned at Cairo, while the Egyptian Nationalist organization, the Wafd, have appointed a committee to collect subscriptions to assist "Sudanese victims of the recent demonstrations of sympathy with Egypt."

Zaglul Pasha, interviewed by Reuter's correspondent, said that friends of England in Egypt felt ashamed at Lord Parmoor's declaration, which, he asserted, had increased the anger of Anglophobes and made agreement difficult.—Reuter.

Cairo, June 29.

The Prime Minister, Zaglul Pasha, has gone to Alexandria to tender his resignation.

Zaglul Pasha's departure for Alexandria was in accordance with the decision he announced in the Chamber yesterday evening in the course of a speech replying to Lord Parmoor's speech in the House of Lords. Zaglul Pasha declared that Egypt would never renounce her rights to the Sudan and he himself would never negotiate with the British Government on the basis of the declaration of February 19, 1922. He had hoped that the Labour Government would support the cause of liberty, but unfortunately it followed the same lines as the Imperialistic Government. Zaglul Pasha concluded by declaring that if he were unable to get satisfaction he would resign and submit the matter to the King.—Reuter.

Resignation of Egyptian Premier Refused by King Fuad

Cairo, June 29.

After Zaghlul Pasha's speech the Chamber passed a unanimous vote of confidence in him and requested him to retain the Premiership until all national aspirations were realized respecting the independence of Egypt and the Sudan. Zaghlul Pasha, nevertheless, insisted on tendering his resignation to the King.—Reuter.

Alexandria, June 29.

King Fuad has refused to accept Zaghlul Pasha's resignation.—Reuter.

Premier's Statement in House of Commons: No Intention of Breaking Pledges

London, June 30.

Regret at the attitude of the Egyptian Government and Parliament over the question of the Sudan was expressed by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald in the House of Commons to-day.

He said that the statements in the Egyptian Parliament and the action taken to create trouble in the Sudan could only be explained as an attempt to force his hand and to deprive Zaghlul Pasha of liberty of negotiation.

In view of what had happened, it was necessary for Mr. MacDonald to make clear to all concerned that he did not believe that the House of Commons would accept any arrangement which would break our pledges to the Sudan (cheers) or jeopardize the present administration and development of that country. He still trusted that those responsible for the government of both countries would refuse to countenance impossible demands which would destroy the prospect of settlement.—Reuter.

Cairo, June 30.

The Chamber of Deputies unanimously passed a resolution thanking King Fuad for refusing to accept the resignation of the Premier, Zaghlul Pasha.

It is understood that Zaghlul Pasha, conforming to the wishes of King Fuad, will not resign the Premiership.—Reuter.

LONDON, June 26.—To-day's attendance at Wembley brought the total to over 5,000,000 since the opening of the Exhibition.—Reuter.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The American steamer, Sankaty, belonging to the New England Steamship Co., has been destroyed by fire at New Bedford due to an explosion. The Company's dock and freight shed were also burned. The loss is estimated at $350,000.—Reuter's American Service.

LABOUR GOVERNMENT'S SEVENTH DEFEAT

Conservative and Liberal Co-operation on Finance Bill Amendment

London, June 30,

In the House of Commons the Government were defeated on a minor point in the Finance Bill this evening by 220 votes to 165, but it is not likely to lead to serious consequences. This is the seventh defeat since they came into office.

Mr. Baldwin's attempt to secure an adjournment of the discussion until they knew whether the Government would accept the division or not was subsequently defeated by 237 votes to 169. The Liberals, who had previously helped to carry the Conservative amendment, voted with the Ministerialists on the adjournment motion.—Reuter.

Government Again Defeated.

London, July 2.

The Government suffered its eighth defeat in the House of Lords yesterday evening when the second reading of the War Charges Validity Bill was negatived by 28 votes to 23.—Reuter.

SOUTH AFRICA'S NEW GOVERNMENT

Gen. Hertzog's Declaration of Imperial Faith

Pretoria, June 30.

Gen. Hertzog, the leader of the Nationalist party, has completed his Cabinet, in which he is Prime Minister and Minister of Native Affairs.

The Labour leader, Colonel Cresswell, is Minister of Defence and of Labour. The other Labour representative in the Cabinet is Mr. Boydell.—Reuter.

Pretroia, July 2.

In a speech at a Nationalist banquet in his honour last night, General Hertzog declared that Britain would always be, as far as his Government were concerned, their first and chief friend. Unfortunately in the past there had been accusations against them because they had insisted on the doctrine that South Africa came first, but many of the accusers were now with them on this point. It would always be their aim to co-operate with Britain and heartily with the rest of the Dominions.—Reuter.

THE HUNGARIAN LOAN

British Portion of £7,902,000 Issued on July 2 and Lists Closed the Same Day

London, July 2.

The London portion of the big loan to assist the rehabilitation of Hungary, amounting to £7,902,000 in 7½ per cent. sterling bonds at 88, redeemable between 1934 and 1944, was issued to-day. The lists closed at 11.30 this morning. This is about 70 per cent. of the loan, the balance of which has been divided between various other countries.

The New York portion is $7,500,000, which was issued simultaneously with the London portion.—Reuter.

THE BUILDING TRADE DISPUTE

Lock-out Notices Postponed Pending Holding of Court of Inquiry

London, July 2.

Mr. T. Shaw, the Minister of Labour, to-day informed meetings of the parties to the building trade dispute that he would cause a public court of inquiry to be held into the cause of the dispute.

Later.

The building trade employers have decided to postpone the lock-out notices for a week pending the court of inquiry.—Reuter.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—President Coolidge has accepted the resignation of Mr. Cyrus Woods, the United States Ambassador to Japan, with an appreciation of his services.—Reuter's American Service.

ALL-INDIA CONGRESS COMMITTEE

Mr. Gandhi's Political Murders Upheld: Swarajist Disunion

Bombay, June 29.

A meeting of the All-India Congress Committee, which controls the Congress organization, is being held at Ahmedabad to determine the position of the Swarajists. Mr. Gandhi submitted a resolution laying down that membership of the committee should be confined to those spinning at least half an hour daily and practising quintuple boycott, including boycott of the Councils and Law Courts.

Repeated efforts to arrange a compromise proved unsuccessful. The resolution was strongly opposed by Mr. Motilal Nehru, who finally walked out with other Swarajists. After that the committee, by 67 votes to 37, adopted Mr. Gandhi's resolution. Mr. Gandhi then urged that the clause in the resolution stipulating that Congress officials not spinning half an hour daily should vacate office should be rescinded on the ground that it had been carried by a small majority and would have been defeated had the Swarajists voted. The committee agreed to the proposal.—Reuter.

Ahmedabad, June 30.

The resolution recently adopted by the Bengal Provincial Conference, paying homage to Gopi Nath Saha, who was hanged for murdering Mr. Ernest Day, a prominent Calcutta merchant, came up for discussion at the All-India Congress Committee, which, on a motion by Mr. Gandhi, passed a resolution regretting the murder of Mr. Day and condemning all political murders as inconsistent with non-violent non-co-operation and retarding progress towards Swaraj.

Mr. C. R. Das proposed an amendment urging the adoption of the resolution passed by the Bengal Provincial Conference. The amendment was rejected by 78 votes to 70 and Mr. Gandhi's resolution was carried.—Reuter.

WEMBLEY WORLD POWER CONFERENCE

Visiting Experts Representing 39 Countries: Suggested World Bureau

London, June 30.

Thirty-nine countries, including Ceylon, China, the Dutch East Indies, Holland, India and Japan are represented at the first World Power Conference at Wembley, which has lasted a fortnight. It was presided over by Earl Derby.

The visiting experts will enlighten their fellow delegates on the potential resources of each country in hydro-electric power, oil and minerals and on other scientific questions. They will discuss the establishment of a world bureau.

The Prince of Wales made a speech at the opening of the conference, to which Dr. Kamo replied on behalf of Japan.—Reuter.

CONGRESS OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

Resolution Urging Renewal of Empire Penny Postage Unanimously Passed

London, July 1.

The Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire opened at the Guildhall to-day, presided over by Lord Derby.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, welcomed the 200 delegates. In his speech he denounced class hatred and urged the co-operation of Capital and Labour in a spirit of self-sacrifice to solve the problems of the Empire.

The Congress unanimously passed a resolution urging the re-establishment of penny postage throughout the Empire. A delegate from New Zealand said that the results of the restoration of the penny postage in New Zealand had been very satisfactory.—Reuter.

Resolutions were also passed urging the establishment of an Imperial wireless chain and urging Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce to devote increased energy to promoting emigration within the Empire.—Reuter.

THE TREATY OF MUTUAL ASSISTANCE

British Premier Doubtful as to Success of League of Nations Scheme

London, July 2.

Several questions were put to the Premier, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, in the House of Commons to-day in regard to the draft treaty of mutual assistance, which has been circulated by the League of Nations.

The Premier replied that the Government were not yet able to state their attitude, partly because they were still consulting the Dominions. He was in no way convinced that the effect of such a treaty would not be to increase armaments, and he would like to get more information on this very important point. He was, in any case, convinced that this method was not the only one and doubted if it was the best method of approaching it. The Premier hoped to make a statement before the summer adjournment.—Reuter.

TRIAL OF THE AKALI LEADERS

All Convicted and Sentenced to Lengthy Terms of Imprisonment

Nabha, July 1.

All the 22 leaders of the Akali raiders, who attempted to enter Nabha in February last, have been convicted of forming an unlawful assembly with an attempt at murder. Sucha Singh, who led the mob on a pony with a drawn sword, was sentenced to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment. A Sikh woman, charged with inciting the mob, was sentenced to four years' ordinary imprisonment on account of her sex. Seventeen Akalis were sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment, and the other three on account of their age to three years' rigorous imprisonment. All except the woman were also fined 1,000 rupees.—Reuter.

THE DUTY ON CHINA AND JAVA TEA

Proposal to Apply Imperial Preference Rates Rejected and Withdrawn

London, June 30.

In the House of Commons Committee on the Finance Bill Mr. Herbert Spencer, Liberal Member for Bradford, moved an amendment to apply the Imperial preference rates on tea to China and Dutch East Indian teas, on the ground that China and Holland had treated Britain best in regard to tariffs of all countries in the world.

Mr. P. Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, replied that he sympathized with the amendment, but regretted that he was unable to accept it for financial reasons. The amendment was withdrawn.—Reuter.

U. S. DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Wild Scenes When Popular Candidates Nominated: The Oil Scandal

New York, June 26.

The McAdoo supporters, whose demonstration last night lasted for over an hour, started another demonstration at the resumption of the Democratic Convention to-day, when the nomination of Mr. McAdoo was seconded. The progress of the McAdoo marchers was somewhat impeded by the Smith cohorts in the aisles. Smith sympathizers in the galleries also started shouting "Oil! Oil!" as a sign of disapproval of Mr. McAdoo.

When order was restored, Mr. Franklin Roosevelt proposed Governor Smith as Presidential candidate. His panegyric ended in storms of cheering, shouting and horn-blowing. The Smith delegates seized the standard of New York State and carried it in procession round the hall, a band contributing to the din. The demonstration lasted for an hour and a half. The demonstrators brought in a brass band, which unceasingly played the popular song of the moment, "Eastside and Westside." A fire siren, used by fire-engines to clear the streets, added to the hideous noise.

Other Democrats nominated, less noisily, were the ex-Cabinet Minister, Mr. Houston, Senator Ralston and Senator Saulsbury.—Reuter's America Service.

Question of America Joining the League of Nations

New York, June 27.

To-day's nominations at the Democratic Convention were the ex-Governor of Ohio, Mr. James M. Cox, who had a 15-minute demonstration, and Mr. Charles Bryan, the brother of Mr. William Jennings Bryan. The Convention paraded noisily for both Bryans, singing "Auld Lang Syne." The tributes to Messrs. Cox and Bryan are not regarded as indicating a chance of their securing nomination.

The loudest voiced cheerer yet heard was discovered when Mr. G. S. Silzea, the so-called "Wet Governor of New Jersey" was nominated. The New Jersey delegation put him on a chair and he continued hurrahing until they themselves tired of his stentorian tones.

Nomination of the Virginian Senator Carter Glass was proposed amidst a demonstration whilst shortly before the adjournment of the Convention Mr. Davis, former Ambassador to Britain, was placed for nomination accompanied by a demonstration in which the supporters of Governor Smith and Mr. McAdoo joined. It is expected that the whole of to-day will be given up to platform issues which must be disposed of before voting on the candidates begins.

A Delegate's Private Refresher.

Government dry agents have announced the seizure in New York of 5,200 cases of spirits, 300 barrels of beer and 3,500 gallons of other alcoholic beverages since the opening of the Democratic Convention. It is presumed that they were intended for consumption by the crowds attending the convention.

An amusing circumstance was the arrest and fining of one of the delegates from Chicago for carrying a suit-case filled with bottles of whiskey.

Prohibition officials are investigating the statement of some aviators that they photographed two submarines in the Hudson River near Sing Sing Prison, which, they believe, were engaged in rum-running. The photographs not only show the outlines of the submerged boats, but also the wake of their periscopes.

America and the League.

June 28.

The committee of the Democratic Convention, after a struggle lasting an hour, agreed that a plank should be inserted in the platform declaring that the Party would do all that is in its power to hold a national referendum on the question of joining the League of Nations and that it would carry out the people's mandate expressed by it.

When the Democratic Convention assembled this morning, it was expected that the platform would be submitted for ratification, but, owing to differences in the platform committee, it was not ready. Mr. Cummings, the Chairman of the Committee, promised that the platform would be ready in a few hours. He announced that on the League of Nations plank there would be a minority report presented by Mr. Baker, the ex-Secretary for War. With regard to the Religious Freedom plank, by which the Ku Klux Klan is meant, Mr. Cummings said that the committee had discussed the question throughout the night and wanted more time, as they did not wish to bring religious differences on to the floor of the Convention, tired and worn with lack of sleep since Tuesday. Mr. Cummins, amid a dramatic silence, described how after the all-night session the members of the Committee at dawn joined in unison in the Lord's Prayer, after which Mr. William Jennings Bryan prayed for Divine guidance.—Reuter's American Service.

Majority Platform Adopted

New York, June 28.

The Democratic Convention platform proposes a national referendum on the subject of the entry of the United States into the League of Nations for amendments of the League Covenant as agreed with the President and Senate. It pledges the party to an international policy of co-operation and sweeping reductions in land and sea forces. It advocates the United States securing an international agreement with regard to armaments, and suggests a referendum for war, except in cases of actual or threatened attack.

The platform condemns prohibitive tariffs and pledges itself to tariff adjustment. It accuses the Republicans of failure to develop an American flag shipping policy. It promises to maintain the established position for the exclusion of Asiatic immigration. It avers that the United States is without a foreign policy, and that the Democrats intend to secure for America the moral leadership of the family of nations.

The Chairman of the Platform Committee, Mr. Cummings, moved the adoption of the majority platform unaltered and unamended.

The document opened with a tribute to Mr. Woodrow Wilson and affirmed abiding faith in his ideals. It promised further reduction of taxes; revision of the import tariff; recovery of oil-reserves "fraudulently leased" and vigorous prosecution of any guilty of wrong-doing in the leasing transactions; and operation of a Government-owned merchant marine. It bespoke retention of Asiatic immigration exclusion, and promised immediate independence of the Philippines, protection of American rights in Turkey and the fulfilment of President Wilson's award respecting Armenia.

With regard to the League of Nations the document promised to outlaw the whole war system, declared that the only hope of world peace and economic recovery lay in the organized efforts of the sovereign nations co-operating to remove the causes of war and to substitute law and order for violence.

Mr. Baker's Amendment.

The minority platform of Mr. Baker, ex-Secretary for War, urged immediate joining of the League of Nations. It declared that the Republican policy of isolation was as revolting in its spiritual aspects as it was harmful in its material consequences. It predicted that the Wilson policies would sweep the country at the coming election. The document averred that there had not been a true referendum at the last Presidential election on the League as that issue was interwoven with many others.

Mr. Baker in an emotional speech said that the man who ought to be pleading for the proposed plank lay dead, but his voice was calling from consecrated ground.

The Convention rejected the Baker substitute and adopted the majority platform.

The Convention was almost equally divided on the Ku Klux Klan issue, the majority report winning by a single vote.

Mr. Baker's substitute League plank was defeated by 742 votes to 353.

Later.

The Democratic Convention rejected the Ku Klux Klan minority report, which provided for specific mentioning of the Klan in the platform.—Reuter's American Service.

Mr. McAdoo and Governor Smith Most Popular Candidates

New York, June 30.

The Democratic Convention today will begin balloting for the Presidential nomination. Governor Smith and Mr. McAdoo are still the leading champions. Senator Ralston and ex-Ambassador Davis continue on the trail, awaiting a possible deadlock that would swing the Convention in their direction. Political experts predict a long and fierce battle. Sixteen candidates have been submitted for nomination, but the delegates are not confined to voting for these and may vote for anybody they consider deserving.

Almost immediately on assembling the Democratic Convention started the roll-call of the States in the first ballot for the Presidential nominee.

The official figures for the first ballot were as follows:—Mr. McAdoo 431½ votes and Governor Smith 240½ votes.

Later.

No candidate received the necessary two-thirds majority. The remainder of the votes were scattered among 18 other candidates.

Mr. McAdoo and Governor Smith picked up additional votes in the next few ballots, but not enough to indicate any general abandonment of their "favourite sons" by the delegates.

Mr. McAdoo in the fifth ballot secured 443 votes and Governor Smith 261. Louisiana cast its entire 20 votes in favour of Ex-Ambassador Davis in the seventh ballot.

In the ninth ballot Mr. McAdoo secured 444 votes, Governor Smith 278 and Mr. Davis 63½, though he started with a few West Virginian votes only.

The Convention has now gone into recess.

Later.

When the Convention resumed, the figures in the 10th ballot were: Mr. McAdoo 471 votes and Governor Smith 229.

Later.

The Democratic Convention adjourned after the 16th ballot without nominating a candidate.—Reuter's American Service.

No Definite Majority in View

New York, July 1.

At the Democratic Convention the 16th ballot resulted as follows: Mr. McAdoo 478; Governor Smith 305½; Ex-Ambassador Davis 63.

There was excitement at the 20th ballot when Missouri deserted the McAdoo camp, casting its 36 votes for Ex-Ambassador Davis, making the position of the leaders: McAdoo 432, Smith 307½ and Davis 122.

The Convention went into recess after the 24th ballot, which did not show any material change compared with the 20th. Mr. McAdoo gained five and Mr. Davis seven votes.

The following are the figures for the 25th ballot at the Democratic Convention: McAdoo 415; Smith 311; Davis 125.

The Convention adjourned after the 30th ballot without making a nomination.—Reuter's American Service.

Support for Mr. McAdoo from the Mississippi Delegation and Mr. W. J. Bryan

New York, July 2.

The 31st ballot at the opening of the Democratic Convention this morning was divided between 13 candidates.

There was enormons rejoicing in the McAdoo camp when in the 33rd ballot the Mississippi delegation was induced to transfer its 20 votes from Ex-Ambassador Davis to the McAdoo column, where it agreed to stay for five ballots in order to give the McAdoo men a chance to show what they could do.

After four more inconclusive ballots, Mr. W. J. Bryan spoke, declaring himself for Mr. McAdoo. He named many other Democrats, who in his opinion could fill the Presidency with credit, including his brother, Mr. Charles Bryan, Senator Ralston of Indiana, and Senator Walsh of Montana. He urged that this was no time for the nomination of a reactionary. The Republicans would get most of the Conservative votes. Mr. McAdoo fulfilled the requirement of being progressive.

There was great disorder by the Smith supporters' gallery, but the McAdoo adherents applauded rapturously.

One of the delegates asked about Mr. McAdoo representing Mr. Doheny as counsel. "If any oil ever touched McAdoo," said Mr. Bryan, "the intense and persistent opposition of Wall Street has washed it all away."

Mr. McAdoo gained 10 votes in the next ballot and the hall resounded with roars of "Oil! oil!" by the McAdoo adherents, amid which the session adjourned until the evening.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, July 2.

At the 39th ballot at the Democratic Convention Mr. McAdoo gained 55 votes and Mr. Davis lost 25.

The Convention adjourned after the 42nd ballot, which showed no further change.—Reuter's American Service.

DISASTROUS TORNADO IN OHIO

Nearly 200 Casualties and Damage to Property of $12,000,000

Peoria, Ill., June 28.

Five persons were killed and 20 injured by a tornado here. The damage is estimated at $1,500,000.—Reuter's American Service.

Cleveland, June 29.

A disastrous tornado has visited parts of Ohio. Three hundred persons are reported to have been killed and at least 1,500 injured in the county of Lorain, while the city of Lorain has been wiped out. Details are meagre, owing to destruction of communications in the neighbourhood, but frantic appeals for help are being received from the towns of Sandusky and Elyria, which are also in ruins.—Reuter's American Service.

Lorain, Ohio, June 29.

The latest estimate of the dead is between 150 and 300. The loss is estimated at $20,000,000. A thousand buildings at Lorain were unroofed and demolished. Six hundred troops have arrived to preserve order.—Reuter's American Service.

Cleveland, June 29.

One hundred and sixty-five bodies have been recovered from the State Theatre at Lorain, but Elyria is undamaged.

Later.

The damage at Lorain is estimated at $12,000,000. Other lake-front cities have suffered severely. The water-front at Sandusky is reported to have been entirely demolished, with some loss of life.

Later.

Lorain got the full force of the tornado, which swept an area extending 60 miles from Cleveland. It now presents an appalling sight. Eye-witnesses report that houses toppled over, roofs went flying through the air, trees were mowed down as if by a huge scythe, some walls of houses were blown out and other houses were aflame, the bridge over the river was demolished.

Later.

Owing to the confusion following the storm, many wild and exaggerated reports have been given currency. Revised estimates put the casualties at Lorain as 58 killed and 118 injured, whilst 7,000 are homeless. Further deaths occurred at Sandusky. The Red Cross and other authorities are of the opinion that it will be several days before accurate figures are available.—Reuter's American Service.

Terrible Scenes in Lorain: Miraculous Escapes and Acts of Heroism

Cleveland, June 30.

Six hundred soldiers are patrolling the streets of Lorain, which, after the tornado, resembles a war-stricken city after bombardment. The military authorities have established strict control and have ordered all those not on business to keep off the streets. They are calling on many of the citizens to clear up the wreckage.

There were many miraculous escapes from death; a woman, who was asleep, was blown from her bed through the window 50 feet into the yard. She was not injured except for a broken shoulder.

The Central High School has been transformed into a mortuary and is surrounded by grief-stricken families. The most pitiful scenes occurred in the class rooms, which are filled with dead, including a number of children.

There were many acts of heroism and self-sacrifice. One young man worked feverishly throughout the night helping the injured. He saw, at dawn, a motor car in a demolished street and rushed to the rescue. He was horrified to find his parents dead beneath the wreckage.

Some survivors knelt and prayed on the ruins, while others walked aimlessly in the streets crying and groaning.

The whole scene is like a nightmare.

Later.

Hitherto the known casualties in Lorain, Sandusky and Cleveland total 72 dead and many hundreds injured.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN OIL LEASE SCANDALS

Ex-Secretary Fall and Messrs. Sinclair and Doheny Indicted

Washington, June 30.

The Grand Jury has returned criminal indictments in the case of ex-Secretary Fall and Messrs. Sinclair and Doheny, whom the Government are prosecuting in connexion with the oil lease scandals. Mr. Doheny, Jr., is also indicted. All four are charged with conspiring to defraud, while ex-Secretary Fall is charged with accepting a bribe of $100,000, for using his official influence on behalf of Mr. Doheny in connexion with the Californian leases, and the Dohenys are charged with bribing him to take unlawful action.—Reuter's American Service.

BOOTLEGGING IN AMERICA

Ex-officials Severely Punished for Conspiracy

New York, July 2.

G. B. Means, former Agent of the Department of Justice, and his secretary, Elmer Jarnecke, have been convicted of conspiring with bootleggers to withdraw whiskey from distilleries. They were to-day sentenced to two years' imprisonment and fined $5,000 and $10,000 respectively.

While coastguards were pursuing alleged rumrunners off Sandy Hook, there was an exchange of shots resulting in the wounding of a man, named Kadenbach, in a passing motor-boat, which led to his death in hospital.—Reuter's American Service.

THE MATTEOTTI CRISIS

A National Tribute: Demand by Opposition for Repression of Fascist Militia

Rome, June 27.

Practically the whole of Italy observed a ten minutes' interruption of work to-day as a tribute to Signor Matteotti. Public services were interrupted for two minutes.

June 28.

A meeting of the Opposition groups, after considering the Matteotti crisis, to-day passed a resolution of non-confidence in the present Government and demanding a Government which would be able without delay to abolish the Fascist militia and unhesitatingly repress every from of illegality.—Reuter.

WORLDWIDE EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS

Violent Vibrations Recorded in Italy, South Africa and Australia

London, June 26.

Very violent earthquake shocks are reported from several world centres.

Reuter's correspondent at Faenza, Italy, states that the record of the shock at Signor Bendandi's observatory began at three in the morning and lasted for four hours. It appeared to have occurred 7,000 miles away. The quivering of the apparatus carried off the quills from the instrument.

A Reuter telegram from Capetown says that the shock registered at the Royal Observatory lasted for 2½ hours, beginning at 3.50 in the morning. It was apparently 5,600 miles off. A telegram from Sydney says that the shocks were still roaring through the instrument at Riverview Observatory at four in the afternoon after over five hours' duration.—Reuter

Melbourne, June 27.

A seismograph record shows that the earthquake occurred 1,280 miles from Melbourne. The direction is not recorded, but is probably southeast of Tasmania.

The shock affected the instrument more violently than the Japanese disturbance.

The Sydney correspondent of the "Melbourne Age" says that the earthquake caused the city slowly to rock for half an hour.—Reuter.

SPAIN AND MOROCCO

Melilla Disaster Recalled: A General Retired

Madrid, June 26.

Gen. Berenguer, the former Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish Forces and High Commissioner in Morocco, who was court-martialled in connexion with the Melilla disaster of 1921, has been sentenced to be removed from the active list and placed on the reserve. Gen. Navarro, who was tried on a similar charge, has been acquitted. —Reuter.

SOVIET SENTENCES ON ALLEGED SPIES

Said to Have Been Employed by a "Certain" Power

Moscow, June 26.

A telegram from Leningrad states that the Supreme Court Martial has sentenced to death nine persons accused of highway robbery, espionage and counter-revolutionary activity. Twenty-one others were sentenced to varying long terms of imprisonment.

All are alleged to have been in the pay of one Savinkoff, who is said to be one of the principal agents in the counter-espionage service of a certain foreign power. —Reuter.

EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO. AND WIRELESS

Awaiting Britain's Declared Policy Before Making any Ventures

London, June 26.

Presiding at the annual meeting of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Sir John Denison-Pender said that the company had applied for a wireless licence, but had to wait to see Britain's declared policy before anything could be done. They had received terms for a licence as regards India, but it was absolutely impossible for the Company to carry out the terms. Negotiations with regard to China had fallen through after prolonged negotiations.—Reuter.

TUBERCULOSIS VACCINE

Invention Showing Favourable Results with Children

Paris, June 26.

Professor Calmette, of the Pasteur Institute, claims to have invented a vaccine against tuberculosis, composed of bacilli carefully enfeebled by 230 successive cultures. One hundred experiments were made on animals before 217 new-born children, who presented symptoms of pre-disposition to tuberculosis, were given the vaccine, administered by the mouth. All the babies were under observation during 18 months and so far none have shown signs of the disease developing.—Reuter.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

Chinese Delegate Claiming 8 hr. Day for Children and No Night Work for Women

Geneva, June 28.

At the International Labour Conference M. Albert Thomas announced that ratification of the conventions adopted by the Conference had now been received from Japan, Austria, Spain, Ireland and Poland, bringing the total from 96 to 125.

Mr. Hsiao, the Chinese Government delegate, referred to the progress of social reform in China, notably, the eight-hour day for children and the prohibition of night-work for women and young persons. He declared that China keenly desired to collaborate in the work of the Conference, but regretted the inadequate support of the other extra-European countries, for example, Canada, New Zealand and Australia.

The committee of delegates appointed to study the prevention of anthrax adopted by a majority the resolution, proposed by Sir Louis Kershaw, the Indian Government delegate, stating that the Committee were unable to recommend the Conference to adopt decisions on the subject in view of the unlikelihood of any big industrial state agreeing to incur such international obligations, but recommending the Governments to study the question in order to afford the maximum protection to the health of the workers.—Reuter.

Japanese Labour's Complaints

Geneva, June 28.

At a meeting of the International Labour Conference yesterday in discussing the annual report of the Director of the Labour Office on international labour legislation, Mr. Jonekubo, the Japanese workers' delegate, complained of the unsatisfactory labour legislation in Japan. He said that the Japanese Government had officially recognized the ratification of strike agreements and the convention relating to the recruiting of sailors but in reality did not respect the provisions of these conventions.—Reuter.

Anthrax Committee's Report

Geneva, July 1.

The Anthrax Committee of the International Labour Conference has drawn up a report recommending the disinfection of hair, horns and hoofs for industrial purposes, without mentioning hair and wool used for textiles. A minority report, which, it is understood, is supported by the British delegation, opposes the omission.—Reuter.

NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION

Centenary Celebrations Combined with International Conference

London, July 1.

Londoners were afforded an interesting opportunity to-day of seeing and comparing types of lifeboats of various nations which were gaily decorated and moored in the Thames. This was in connexion with the International Conference on the occasion of the centenary celebrations of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution.

Sir Godfrey Baring, an Alderman of the London County Council, presided at the Conference. In his opening speech he appreciatively referred to the presence of Count Kozo Yoshii, the President of the Japan Lifeboat Association, who had travelled from Japan to be present at the Conference.

Later.

The International Lifeboat Conference to-day passed a resolution, in accordance with the suggestion of Count Yoshii, urging all maritime countries not possessing a lifeboat service to organize one and favouring the establishment of an international lifeboat organization on the lines of the Red Cross Society. The resolution will be sent to the League of Nations.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Dr. Deterding

London, June 28.

It is reported from The Hague that Dr. Deterding, brother of Sir Henri Deterding (Director-General of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. and a director of the Shell Transport and Trading Co., Ld.) died suddenly yesterday while viewing a new Dutch Indies film.—Reuter.

Sir Charles Dundas, K. C. M. G.

London, July 2.

The death is announced of Admiral Sir Charles Dundas of Dundas, K.C.M.G., at the age of 64.—Reuter.

Admiral Sir Charles Dundas joined H. M. S. Audacious, the flagship of the China squadron, as a cadet in 1874. He served in the Cape Squadron during the Boer war and took part in the Delagoa Bay operations. He served in command of H. M. S. Forte in 1904-5 on the East African station, and received the approval of the Admiralty for his prompt action in reference to Russian auxiliary cruisers. He was appointed Naval Attaché at Tokio in 1908-10. Sir Charles was principal Naval Transport Officer in France during the war.—Reuter.

AIR MAIL SERVICE ACROSS AMERICA

New York to San Francisco in 35 Hours: Eastward Trip in 32 Hours

New York, July 1.

The new daily air mail service between New York and San Francisco was inaugurated this morning. One plane left the Pacific Coast, but two were required to carry the large mails from the Atlantic seaboard owing to the prevailing winds being from the west. A third aeroplane will join the westward aeroplanes at Chicago with a large mail.

Each aeroplane is capable of carrying 600 lb. The westward journey is scheduled to occupy 35 hours and the eastward journey 32. —Reuter.

New York, July 2.

The first trans-continental air mail has arrived from San Francisco. —Reuter's American Service.

HOLLAND-JAVA AERIAL SERVICE

London, June 28.

A Fokker aeroplane, the F7, fitted with wireless and accommodating two pilots and six passengers, made a successful maiden trip from Holland to London piloted by M. Van Der Hoop, who will be a pilot of the air service from Amsterdam to Java across India, which will open in October and for which the machine was designed.—Reuter.

CRUISERS TO BE BUILT BY AUSTRALIA

Melbourne, June 28.

In the House of Representatives to-day, Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Commonwealth Prime Minister, introduced a Defence Bill authorizing an expenditure of £2,000,000 for the construction of two 10,000-ton cruisers and £500,000 for a Defence Reserve Fund.

One cruiser will be built in England immediately.—Reuter.

LEGITIMIZING CHILDREN

London, June 27.

The Bill making legitimate children born out of wedlock whose parents subsequently marry passed the third reading in the House of Commons to-day by 177 votes to 13. It has already passed the House of Lords.—Reuter.

EUROPEAN AMBASSADOR FOR SOUTH AFRICA

Johannesburg, June 26.

The Rand "Daily Mail" understands that the Nationalist Government intends to appoint a European Ambassador for South Africa with headquarters in Holland. The name of Mr. M. S. Grobler, a member of the House of Assembly, has been mentioned in this connexion.—Reuter.

ORIENTAL POTENTATES IN LONDON

London, June 26.

Prince and Princess Parachatra of Siam were the guests of the King and Queen at luncheon at Buckingham Palace to-day. The Prince of Wales received the Sultan of Perak and the Regent of Kedah.—Reuter.

U. S. IN CHARGE OF BRITISH INTERESTS IN MEXICO

Washington, June 28.

The Government has consented to take charge of the British Embassy here.—Reuter's American Service.

FRANCE AND RUSSIAN RECOGNITION

Paris, July 3.

On the question of resumption of relations between France and Russia, the "Matin" says that a conference between M. Herriot and holders of Russian bonds and industrialists interested in Russia did not yield any result. The paper declares that resumption of relations will not serve its purpose if it does not imply restoration of mutual trust in financial and commercial engagements.—Reuter.

THE FAMINE IN RUSSIA

Moscow, June 28.

With reference to the failure of crops in the southeastern districts of Russia, the Russian press here reports that while the crops in the southeastern districts have been greatly affected, the crops in Russia as a whole are as good as usual. In the famine stricken districts, about 1,500,000 people are seriously suffering from shortage of foodstuffs. The Soviet Government will, it is reported, shortly issue several ordinances with a view to the relief of the starving population and is said to have already transported to the famine-stricken districts some 10,000,000 poods of foodstuff.—Eastern News Agency.

Riga, June 30.

It is reported from Moscow that a prolonged heat-wave is adversely affecting the harvests in Russia. Quantities of crops have been destroyed. The peasants are disposing of their cattle owing to fear of famine. Panic is reported in many districts.—Reuter.

MURDER OF WELL-KNOWN JEWISH LEADER

Jerusalem, July 1.

Dr. de Haan, the Dutch poet and writer and leader of the Orthodox Anti-Zionist Jews, was shot dead yesterday evening in the Jewish quarter. The murderers escaped.—Reuter.

MEXICO'S EXTERNAL INDEBTEDNESS

New York, July 1.

Messrs. J. P. Morgan announce that Mexico has failed to pay the half-yearly interest on her external debt, which was due on June 30. The bankers hope that the breakdown is only temporary and will even grant a delay if requested.—Reuter's American Service.

SOVIET'S NEW COINAGE

London, July 1.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Sir C. Oman (Conservative), Mr. Philip Snowden, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that the silver coins being struck in the Royal Mint for the Soviet were .900 fine. No change was contemplated in the fineness of the British token of silver.—Reuter.

CHANNEL TUNNEL SCHEME NEGATIVED

London, July 2.

It is understood that a meeting of the Committee for Imperial Defence yesterday, attended by all the members, in addition to the ex-Premiers Messrs. Baldwin, Lloyd George and Asquith, negatived the proposal to build a Channel tunnel.—Reuter.

FINANCE BILL AMENDMENT

London, July 1.

In the House of Commons to-day, with regard to last night's defeat, Mr. Philip Snowden indicated that the Government had decided to accept in principle the amendment carried.—Reuter.

CONGRESS OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS SOCIETIES

London, June 30.

The Congress of League of Nations Societies was formally opened here to-day. The proceedings were confined to speeches by delegates, extolling the League idea. Mr. Sugimura (Japan) and the former Chinese Premier, Dr. Wang Chung-hui, eulogized the pacific ideal of the League.—Reuter.

FRANCO-AMERICAN LIQUOR TREATY

BIG PRICES FOR CHINESE PORCELAIN

London, July 1.

A sum of £22,304 was realized at Christie's to-day by the sale of a portion of the Benson collection of early Chinese porcelain. A pair of bottles of the Ming period were sold for 6,400 guineas and another bottle of the same period for 4,100 guineas. —Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

WHAT ALLIES WILL DO WITH GERMANY

United States to be Represented at Coming Conference

London, July 3.

France, Belgium, Italy and Japan have accepted invitations to the Allied Conference in London on July 16. The United States has also accepted another form of invitation.

It is intended that all States interested in reparations should have an opportunity of attending, but the question of invitations has not yet been decided. The question of the Dominions is also being discussed.—Reuter.

Paris, July 4.

The terms of the British invitation to the Inter-Allied Conference, which specify the bases of the proposed discussion, have offended French official circles, judging from a statement, issued by the Quai d'Orsay, declaring that the British memorandum binds nobody but the authors. It adds that the French Government intend to preserve complete liberty of action with regard to the suggestions, with which the British Foreign Office has accompanied its invitation without first consulting Paris. It points out that France is free before and at the conference to submit any proposals it likes, whether in harmony with the British suggestions or not.—Reuter.

Ruhr Refusing Payments.

Cologne, July 3.

The Ruhr mine-owners have notified cancellation of the agreement with the Inter-Allied Commission regarding reparations deliveries on the ground that the German Government have declined financial assistance and it is impossible for industry to bear the burden alone.—Reuter.

FIERCE FIGHTING IN MOROCCO

Spanish Troops in Difficult Position and Forced to Assume Defensive

London, July 3.

Disquieting reports are trickling through from Reuter's correspondent in Madrid. They show that the Spanish forces are engaged in heavy fighting against Riff tribesmen in Morocco. Communiqués acknowledge that eight officers, including two native officers, have been wounded, some of them seriously, and that 100 soldiers, mostly natives, have been killed or wounded.

A Spanish military aeroplane was brought down at Tetuan, and a Captain and a Lieutenant mortally wounded.

A Spanish column has reached Tazza Soland with supplies. It reports that falling back is difficult as the enemy are firing from both sides of the Bujaren river. The casualties are not yet known.

A communiqué adds that numbers of Riffs have established themselves firmly and have cut the Spanish communications at two places. A strong detachment will be sent to dislodge them and prevent the isolation of the Spanish positions, but the Spaniards may first have to assume the defensive before following up attacks with counter-offensives.

The seriousness of the situation is indicated by the fact that the Premier, Gen. Primo de Rivera, will visit the front next week.—Reuter.

THE BUILDING TRADE DISPUTE

Operatives' Determined Stand

London, July 3.

The Building Operatives' Federation have declined to avail themselves of the employers' decision to postpone the lock out. Notices declare that, unless the increase in the hourly rate and the provision of a guaranteed week are introduced on July 5, labour will be withdrawn.—Reuter.

CONGRESS OF CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

Resolution Passed Urging Adoption of Imperial Preference

London, July 3.

With only half-a-dozen of the delegates voting against it, the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire has passed and agreed to the resolution moved by Sir Edward Davison, Vice-Chairman of the British Imperial Council of Commerce, regretting the decision of Parliament not to ratify the preferential resolutions of the Imperial Economic Conference and urging the adoption of a liberal and generous inter-Imperial preference as very desirable for furthering Imperial development and attaining the ideal of eventual freedom of trade within the Empire.—Reuter.

AMERICAN DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Still No Nominee for Presidency

New York, July 3.

The chief feature of to-day's balloting was the switching of three States from Mr. McAdoo's banner. Two of them, Mississippi and Missouri, went solidly in favour of Senator Ralston, who, though still far behind the leaders, is beginning to be regarded in some quarters as the long-south "dark horse." Altogether 12 ballots were taken before the supper adjournment, the last of which gave Mr. McAdoo 427, Governor Smith 320, Senator Ralston 92 and Mr. Davis 63.—Reuter's American Service.

61 Ballots: Both Sides as Obdurate as Ever.

July 4.

The Democratic Convention adjourned after the 61st ballot. The deadlock is as strong as ever. The Committee will meet again this afternoon to continue balloting until a Presidential candidate is nominated. The Convention has broken the record number of ballots made in Charleston, Baltimore, in 1860, when Douglas was nominated on the 59th ballot. In view of the deadlock the leaders were consulted with regard to amending the rules, but the managers of Mr. McAdoo and Governor Smith declined to accede to it. Judge Rockwell on behalf of Mr. McAdoo assailed the "favourite sons" who created the deadlock as constituting "outrageous travesty," but the favourite sons are not concerned in a novel plan to end the deadlock presented by one delegate who suggested that Mr. McAdoo should be nominated President and Governor Smith Vice-President forming a so-called "Protestant Dry Catholic Wet Ticket."—Reuter's American Service.

LORDS AND COMMONS

Money Measure Thrown out by Upper Chamber

London, July 3.

In the House of Commons to-night, referring to the rejection by the House of Lords of the War Charges Validity Bill on Tuesday, Mr. J. R. FROM THE FOUR WINDS

LABOUR GOVERNMENT LOSING GROUND ON ITS FAILURE TO SOLVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Four Months in Office but Despite All its Previous Boasts No Sign of Any Scheme to Provide for Workless Except by More Doles

FROM OUR TRADE UNION CORRESPONDENT.

Manchester, June 4.

There is every reason to believe that our present Labour Government will come to a premature end through its inability to solve the problem of unemployment. The possession of a certain cure for this canker at the heart of our industrial life was the most specific of all its election promises. It claimed to be the only political party that had one. The panacea was a national scheme of productive work by the establishment of a national system of power supply, the development of transport, land drainage, afforestation, town-planning, and housing.

The first session of the new Parliament's life is now nearly over and not one of these grandiose promises has been fulfilled. When Mr. Shaw, the Minister of Labour, was asked in Parliament a few days ago to produce Labour's "positive cure" he pettishly replied that he could not conjure up cures for the evil like "rabbits out of a hat." This reply gave enormous delight to the opposition parties and spread consternation among Labour workers.

Soon after Labour was installed in office it abolished the "gap" in Unemployment Insurance benefits. This "gap" was an occasional fortnight between periods of unemployment benefit in which the unfortunate victim had either to starve or apply for parish relief. It was designed to stimulate the workless into a more frantic search for the the work that wasn't to be had. The rank and file of the Labour movement imagined that this amelioration of the condition of the unemployed was a preliminary to the promised schemes of national reconstruction. But the months have passed and neither Mr. Webb, the Party Oracle, nor Mr. Shaw, the Labour Minister, have shown any signs of producing the Bill which is to embody the promised reconstruction schemes. Instead of this Mr. Shaw sponsored a new Bill to extend the present benefit period to 52 weeks in the year; to increase the weekly benefit by 3/–; to pay it to all workers thrown idle through a strike in which they take no direct part, and to extend the payments to children between the ages of 14 and 16.

Nothing Done Nothing to Offer.

Briefly, to sum it up, Labour, after four months in office, has nothing to offer but a great extension of the payment of those doles it so vociferously denounced when the other parties were paying them. A year ago our present Labour Ministers described their payment instead of the provision of useful work as a tacit confession by the Unionist leaders of the bankruptcy of their statesmanship. Their easy acceptance of the same extravagant and dangerous way of slurring over the problem has created consternation among Labour workers in the various constituencies. Even the servile Labour press has lately been warning its Parliamentary leaders that the long promised scheme will soon have to be produced if the thousands of new converts to Labour are to be kept loyal to the party.

The proposal to pay unemployment benefit to children between 14 and 16 created great indignation and Mr. Shaw was compelled to withdraw it. The other clauses will shortly be put into operation. There is nothing in them to which great exception can be taken. If a man is genuinely seeking work and he cannot find it, and no one can find it for him, there is no advantage in adding to his humiliations by transferring him from the Labour Exchange to the Board of Guardians. And if workers are thrown out of work by the operation of trade disputes they have no connexion with, it is obviously unjust to penalize them. The whole case against the additional benefits that are not paid for by the usual subscriptions is the fact that they represent millions of pounds paid out for which the State gets no return.

Cool Acceptance of Evil.

The number of unemployed has varied very little during the past six months. It is about 1,100,000. Our worst period was in the summer of 1921 when there were over 2,100,000 workers out of work. From then until a few months ago the decrease was fairly steady except for the slight seasonal rise each winter. As the Minister of Labour has made out his estimates on the assumption that there will be little decrease in the present number for another six months it seems evident that Labour does not intend to put any great scheme into operation for their re-absorption into industrial life, or if it does it would appear to have little faith in it achieving anything. The estimate assumes that there will be about a million people out of work until 1926. From this cool assumption of the continuance of an evil that Labour Ministers specifically promised to cure it is evident that the Parties' election address promises are exactly the same as those of their predecessors—pure vote-catching.

The left wing critics of the Labour Ministry express little surprise at its failure to cope with the problem. Their periodicals, steering a tortuous course between orthodox British Socialism and Communism, have repeatedly remarked on the callous indifference of the typical Labour leader to the plight of the unemployed. They allege, with some reason, that trade union officials will not bother with the troubles of unfortunates who have no coppers to spare for subscriptions and salaries, and no potential lever such as a threat to down tools to intimidate the powers in authority. Delegations from the unemployed to trade union and Labour congresses were invariably shown scant courtesy and often refused a hearing. And the delegates living in the best hotels in the seaside towns favoured for the congresses saw nothing incongruous in allowing their unfortunate petitioners to spend their nights sleeping under the piers or in the casual wards of the workhouses.

Unemployed and Unemployable.

The million unemployed can be roughly divided up into three classes. The smallest are those who are normally in regular work but who are occasionally out for a week or so between one job and another. The next largest class are the casuals and unemployables who were never in regular work but who have just managed to get the few stamps on their cards that entitle them to be classified as workers "within the meaning of the Act." The others, and by far the largest number, are the elderly, the incompetent, and the weak and sickly. The trade depression has now been so prolonged that employers and foremen have had, and taken, opportunity to weed out all the men who cannot keep up the pace. Most of these are now sinking into unemployables. Many have not worked for two or three years, and with each succeeding year of idleness their chances of once more becoming producers instead of parasites grows steadily less. They are our pensioned reserve of labour for the next war.

A single man without any responsibilities can just manage to live on the unemployment benefit. A married man with young children is compelled to find some additional resources as it is impossible to live on the benefit, even when the dependant's allowance is added to it. Those men who are fortunate enough to belong to a skilled trade union whose resources are not yet all exhausted get their benefit supplemented by a small weekly grant raised from the working members by the imposition of a levy. Others supplement it by canvassing some trifling commodity from door to door. The unhappy remainder get little benefit from the unemployment benefits for, after queueing up at the Labour Exchange for part of their week's allowance, they have to queue up once more before the Board of Guardians to get the remainder.

Much Discussed Nationalization.

It is generally believed that the political leaders of the Labour Party never expected to form a government while still a minority party. It is common knowledge that they had plans ready for the gradual nationalization of the coal and railways and the coal industry, to be put into operation when they had a majority over all other parties. It may be inferred that their expectation of absorbing numbers of the unemployed was contingent on the power to carry such schemes through Parliament. Yet the policy of carrying through national reconstruction schemes on an immense scale is not inconsistent with the political professions of any party in Parliament. It is chiefly a question of brains, determination, and resource. No party could afford to oppose such schemes if a government set about them with foresight and common sense. For all its pre-election boasting the present Labour Government is ill-equipped for the task.

PLEASURES OF READING

Viscount Grey On Modern Disadvantages

Viscount Grey, a Vice-President, spoke last month on "The Pleasure of Reading" to members of the Royal Society of Literature at 2 Bloomsbury Square, Lord Charnwood presiding.

Lord Grey said he thought Englishmen were putting the pleasure of reading more and more in jeopardy. It was becoming more difficult to acquire the habit of reading. The motor-car was altogether unfavourable to it, the telephone was decidedly a disadvantage, with its practice of mincing time into fragments. Wireless was another modern invention which was making it more difficult for succeeding generations to acquire the habit. Picture papers were a further disadvantage, and they lessened not only reading, but also thought.

Giving advice, Lord Grey suggested planning reading beforehand. Have always in mind the three or four books that should be read. Literary reviews recalled old books and suggested new ones. Of the pleasures of reading, poetry, of course, came first and highest. Besides the joy in rhythm, the music of words, and imagery, there was great thought which not only stirred the intellect, but roused the emotions. At one time, after 11 years in office, he had retired for quietness into the country and had re-read Shakespeare's plays. The impression produced of incredible power and range made him feel almost afraid to be alone in the room with the playwright, as though he were with something supernatural.

On another occasion he found in a volume a list of questions which John Morley had answered, and against that of "Who is your favourite poet?" Morley had written Wordsworth. He would have written the same name. Why? Because of the poet's strength, and more, perhaps, because of the feeling of intimacy which Wordsworth brought to people as though he revealed to them some of their own experiences. If any reader fully appreciated Wordsworth he might be permitted to be amused at some of his foibles, such as his trivial titles.

The Wonder of Jane Austen.

Lord Grey spoke of novels, which he put next to poetry. It might be thought, he said, that love, as a passion, was essential to the greatest novels, but Jane Austen and Thackeray had proved that not true. When reading Jane Austen he felt she was the greatest wonder among novel writers. She worked under the closest limitations, yet the greatest critics and literary men placed her in the first rank.

Of humorous books he felt the humour should be innocent and clean. Of biographies he would quote an opinion he had read and agreed with, that those of literary men were the most interesting, those of soldiers second, and those of politicians the dullest.

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

Disastrous Rum-running Venture Climax to War-Wealthy Man's Misfortunes

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, May 7.

A rich lode of history and biography, in the shape of letters, has cropped to the surface, after long family hoarding, in the Letters of Jane Welsh Carlyle, written for the most part to her cousins, Helen and Jeannie Welsh (Mrs. Chrystal), daughters of her beloved Uncle John, who is himself the recipient of two out of a collection that will probably be often ransacked, for the gold of genius and character it contains, by chroniclers of the society and literature of the Victorian age.

Out of 220 of Mrs. Carlyle's letters that have come freshly to light, after having rested in the family repositories for 60 years or more, 165 are now printed, in full or in extract. When one bears in mind the 600 of Jane Welsh Carlyle's letters that have already been printed by Mr. Froude and by Mr. Alexander Carlyle, it must be acknowledged that the wife of the author of "Sartor Resartus" is more fully revealed to us, under her own hand, than perhaps any other woman in our literary annals.

The great majority of the letters are written to her cousin Jeannie—generally addressed as "Babbie," as the youngest of the family—under the seal not only of close intimacy, but of heart affection, and are to be regarded as the outpourings of the thoughts and sensations of a singularly high-strung as well as gifted woman, and as coloured by the ever-changing moods of the hour—as the receptacle and the safety-valve for explosions of suppressed feelings, as regards especially those who were brought into closest contact with her, and not to be accepted as records of permanent judgments and impressions of the writer, and are usually charged with Mrs. Carlyle's biting irony and humorous exaggeration. Although drops of gall, and even of vitriol, are squeezed not infrequently into Mrs. Carlyle's correspondence, the potion is on the whole a healthy and stimulating one, full of wit and sparkle, of keen and penetrating observation and of warm human nature.

The more we know of her, and the more we dip into her correspondence, the more clearly she appears as the wonderful and almost inspired little creature of her husband's remorseful memories; if an "angel of the house," one with not a few "draps o' De'il's bluid" in her veins, and, like Carlyle himself, somewhat "ill to live wi'." The secret of the matrimonial dissonances that make themselves heard, but with humorous more often than tragic effect in these letters, is perhaps to be read in a fragment preserved among Mrs. Chrystal's papers, which indicates that, although warmer feelings may have come later, Mrs. Carlyle did not marry for love:—"Just because in virtue of his being the least unlikeable man in the place, I let him dance attendance on my young person till I came to need him—all the same as my slippers to go to a ball in, or my bonnet to go out to walk. When I finally agreed to marry him, I tried excessively, and felt excessively shocked—but if I had then said No he would have left me—and how could I dispense with what was equivalent to my slippers or bonnet?"

In another vein of half-mocking frankness she wrote that "C.," as Carlyle is generally called in the letters, should have had "a strong-minded woman for wife, with a perfectly sound liver, plenty of solid fat and mirth and good humour, world without end"; she was "too like himself in some things," so that they "aggravated one another's tendencies to despair." No doubt they were often a sore trial to each other; and neither was specially well endowed either in liver or in temper. But too much has been made of frictions that arose less from weighty and serious than from slight and passing causes that admitted of being made a subject of fun; and the world would have known and said little about the matter had not Froude, following the untrustworthy lead of Miss Jewsbury, shown something worse than indiscretion as a biographer.

Sir R. Horne "All Scotch."

"His education was completely Scotch; he was brought up upon porridge and upon Scotch stories. He was, indeed, so much a Scotchman that he never forgot the road to England." This, according to Lord Birkenhead, accounts in some measure for the remarkable success of Sir Robert Horne. Sir Robert Horne must share with Sir Eric Geddes (both Scots) the distinction of being one of Mr. Lloyd George's two greatest war discoveries, thinks Lord Birkenhead. But for the war he might never have emerged at all into that larger British atmosphere which the ablest Scotsmen alone think worth breathing. It is the special quality of his temperament—a very valuable one—that he never makes enemies, and it is therefore always certain that, without the slightest disloyalty on his part to any associates, he will always have friends in both camps. "He never says a bitter word about anyone. I doubt, indeed, whether he ever thinks bitterly about anyone. For his temperament is compounded of gaiety. If you did not know how much serious work he had accomplished, and how efficiently, you might be tempted almost to dismiss him as a flaneur. Personally, I greatly prefer lively men to dull men, and informal men to pompous men. Sir Robert is both lively and informal. And it is to me his chief attraction that he combines what his great countryman Stevenson called 'a little judeecious levity' with qualities as solid as are possessed by any man in public life to-day."

A War Fortune Squandered

The colossal failures of Sir John Stewart ("Bonnie John, the Dundee war-made baronet") and Aitken, Melrose & Co., a war mushroom firm, have been followed by the bankruptcy of a third firm, associated in rum-running ventures, Thomas Cowan Steven, shipowner, 2 St. Andrew Square, Edinburgh. The bankruptcy was made on the petition of the Clydesdale Bank, who, with two other Scottish banks, are the heaviest creditors. The failure has been expected ever since the sensational suicide of Sir John Stewart in his Perthshire castle. The failure is a climax to a dramatic commercial and financial career which, in sudden acquisition of vast wealth, followed by exuberance of spending and disastrous speculations, is not excelled by any of the extraordinary romances of war fortunes. War won riches of a million have been converted into a deficiency at present estimated at £150,000. Steven is said to be at present in the Argentine Republic, having proceeded thence from the United States after failure to collect the money on the last ill-fated whiskey-running exploit, in which Sir John Stewart was involved.

Thomas Steven, now 38 years of age, was a clerk in a Leith shipping office. In 1914, with small capital advanced by a relative, he began shipbroking, and on the outbreak of war was interested in a steamer on charter. Munitions to the order of the French Government had to be shipped across the English Channel. Extraordinary freights were offered to handle such dangerous cargo in submarine-infested waters, and Steven rushed at the business when established lines hesitated. It proved a golden harvest; he added to his fleet, bought ships and sold them on an ever-rising market, and in a few months was inundated by a wave of wealth. Although athletic and fit, he never served in the war, for the French Government arranged complete exemption because of his shipping activities. When the industrial slump came Steven was tied up in shipping very heavily, and among other commitments had ordered three new steamers at £80,000 each, at the apex of the boom period. Two were built, and the third he managed to cancel at a heavy payment. Although his losses were heavy he was still regarded as worth £100,000. To retrieve his collapsing fortunes he embarked on extensive speculations, but the tide had receded with swiftness, and losses were made in everything he touched. A deal in Mexican Eagles cost £25,000, and, as an index to the magnitude of his operations on the Stock Exchange, one of the banks has "in pawn" 17,500 Globe and Phœnix mining shares. The final plunge was made on an ill-starred attempt to land a huge cargo of whiskey on the other side of the Atlantic, in conjunction with Sir John Stewart and Aitken, Melrose & Co. It was a Steven steamer and he made a mysterious and tortuous voyage down the South American coast into the Pacific in the vain effort to throw the revenue officers off the trail. He eventually landed the cargo, but it remains unpaid for by the Jews who got the liquor.

When at the height of his good fortune he spent money with both hands. He is said to have a suit of clothes for every day of the year and about one hundred greatcoats. A stock of 10,000 cigars was purchased and specially stored by a tobacco firm. One thousand of the cigars were 6 inches long, costing a sovereign apiece, and taking a long evening to smoke. When fortune changed, the cigars were sold, and the "war profiteers" were disposed of round two shillings apiece, purchasers buying them as curiosities.

A Striking Contrast.

The Scottish visitor to Belfast feels quite at home. He might be in another Glasgow. The business world is the same, likewise the ways of doing things, and the general pervading spirit is just as he finds in any other go-ahead city. In Dublin there is an old-world air, a living in the past, an indifference to the present and all suggestion of activity and progress. We have heard a Scotsman say that the most "foreign" town he ever was in was Dublin. A remarkable instance of this difference between the two cities is mentioned by a gentleman who has just returned from a visit. Within the last two years, he says, both Belfast and Dublin have been the victims of civil war, which was marked by fire-raising and murder. In Belfast multitudes of factories, warehouses, shops, and residences were destroyed by arson; to-day you would have to take an hour's walk to find the faintest trace of this destruction. In Dublin public buildings were blown up and rows of shops and warehouses burnt down; these are all in ruins at the present moment. Even in some places, as around the Four Courts, the slates and window panes, which were broken by the force of the explosion that blew up neighbouring buildings, are still broken.

"Tam MacKay" as Island Chief.

How a party of Britons seized a South Sea island was amusingly told at an open meeting of Pitlochry Chapter of the Eastern Star by Mr. R. M. Macdonald, the well-known Strathtay inventor, explorer, and writer, who admitted that he had been described as "a bad man." French, Germans, Americans, and Japanese were after the island, but Mr. Macdonald's party of Britons got first in, and hoisted the British flag on a hill in token of appropriation. They had been warned against a terrible and powerful native Chief, and when he appeared, with hundreds of his warriors, the explorers discreetly retired under cover. When the Chief observed the flag they were amazed to see him take out his musical tubes and play "God save the King." Turning round, he shouted "Where are you Britishers? I am Tam Mackay; I come frae Perthshire. This island has been British for two years."

He Was Taken Aback.

A country clergyman is contributing some of his lighter reminiscences to an Edinburgh evening newspaper and here is one which possesses a good deal of Scottish human nature. I was never so much taken aback (he writes) as I was one day during a visit from a member of my congregation. As she was ushered into my study, I could see she was greatly agitated. "Nothing wrong, I hope?" I hastily asked. "No; no! Naething wrang. Verra blashy w'ather." I acknowledged it was. The weather has always provided a common ground for conversation. The subject of the weather exhausted, my friend launched out on the 'chincough, which was at that time epidemic in the parish. Then she discanted upon measles, teething, and other bairns' troubles. Finally, from under her cape she produced the parcel, which all the time she had clutched nervously. "I canna forget, minister," she said. "I canna forget a' yer kindness, and I've never been able to mak' ony return. But, my son was oot potchin' last nicht, and I ha'e brocht ye twa rabbits."

Complete Lack of Enthusiasm for Home Rule: The New Treasury Secretary

Edinburgh, May 14.

Scottish Home Rule is not to be yet awhile. The Bill was talked out in the House of Commons. What is the truth about the Scottish Home Rule movement? There is not a tittle of evidence in support of the assertions, made in the course of the debate, that an enthusiastic demand for self-government exists in Scotland. The truth is that the Home Rule movement is being pushed by a minority of extremists, who see in it a means to foster their own peculiar political tenets and set up a Socialist State. For a number of years there has been an agitation in Scotland in favour of Home Rule, but it has been confined to a comparatively small section, and there is no evidence that the bulk of the people are panting for it. The advocates of the scheme had to fall back on the explanation that the demand was mostly silent. Quite an impressive array of Bills on the subject have been introduced in the past by Liberal members, but now the Socialists have usurped the topic, doubtless not without the reflexion that if a Parliament were set up in Edinburgh they might have expectations of dominating it.

Under the Bill the Scottish legislature would consist of a single Chamber, and there would be no check whatever on the will of a party having a majority. That is not a position the Scottish people would be likely to contemplate with equanimity. National sentiment is a good thing in itself, but when it takes exaggerated forms it is not a force making for mutual understanding and forbearance among the nations. If the matter were put to a plebiscite it is certain that very few would go further than assent to an inquiry whether some sort of devolution of Parliamentary powers would be useful. Nobody is entirely satisfied, unless it be the English, with the manner in which Scottish affairs are managed at Westminster, and some sort of devolution is bound to come; but certainly not on the lines of the crude Bill at present before Parliament.

It can hardly be said that the prospects of success of Scottish Home Rule were improved by the conduct of certain of its promoters at the close of the debate in the House of Commons. The intolerance and petulance which they displayed in the face of quite legitimate criticism by their opponents during the course of the discussion reached a climax when the Speaker, officially interpreting the quite evident feeling of the House on the matter, refused to accept a motion for the closure. The chagrin of the supporters of the Bill on realizing that it was talked out is quite understandable, but their childish failure to restrain their feelings, and the disorderly manner in which they gave them vent, formed a singularly poor advertisement for the cause they advocate. Their conduct was so deplorably offensive that the Speaker had to take the very unusual course of suspending the sitting before the other business of the day was completed. One would have thought, indeed, that certain of the protesters against the Speaker's ruling were inspired by a desire to provide the strongest argument possible against the setting up of a Parliament which, if one were to judge from the proceedings, would revive the unruly factionalism of the stormiest periods of Scottish history.

Gretna Green's Romance.

The original certificates of marriages celebrated at Gretna Hall between 1825 and 1854, signed by the contracting parties and the Gretna Hall marriage register, in the handwriting of John Linton, will be sold at Sotheby's next month at the instance of a descendant of John Linton, who celebrated the marriages. There are between eleven and twelve hundred certificates, some of which are in duplicate. The authenticity of these is considered to be unquestionable, and at times they have been accepted as evidence in courts of law. The John Linton who figured so prominently in the runaway marriages of Gretna was a confidential servant to Sir James Graham at Netherby Hall, Cumberland. He invested his savings in the purchase of Gretna Hall, which he turned into an inn, and this establishment became popular for the runaway couples.

Among the records to be sold a[t] those of Edward Gibbon Wakefie[ld] to Ellen Turner, 1826; Prince Car[los] Ferdinanda Borbone, younger brot[her] er of King Ferdinand II., of th[e] Sicilies, to Penelope Caroline Smyt[h] of Waterford, 1836; Richard Brinsl[ey] Sheridan, grandson of the dramatis[t] to Maria Grant, 1835; Capt. Franc[is] Lovell to Lady Rose Caroline Some[r]set, daughter of the Duke of Bea[u]fort, in 1836; Lord Drumlanri[g] afterwards Marquess of Queensber[ry] to Caroline Clayton, 1840; and Cap[t.] C. P. Ibbeston to Lady Adela C. [M]Villiers, daughter of the Earl [of] Jersey, in 1845. There are man[y] romantic stories of love and adven[t]ure attaching to the foregoing li[st] of runaway lovers. Wakefield de[-]coyed Miss Turner, an heiress [of] only 16 years, by means of a forge[d] letter, and induced her to marry hi[m] by pretending that her compliance was necessary to save her fathe[r] from ruin. The marriage was an[-]nulled, and Wakefield received three years' imprisonment for abduction. The Drumlanrig-Clayton marriag[e] was remarkable for the fact that th[e] couple, instead of using the tradi[-]tional post chaise, made the journe[y] to Gretna on horseback. Lady Adel[e] Villiers in her adventure in Gretn[a] was imitative, for she was following the example of her grandmother Miss Sarah Child, the daughter [of] the founder of Child's Bank, wh[o] was married at Gretna Green [to] Lord Westmoreland. The coupl[e] were pursued by the enraged banker who only gave up the chase after one of the horses in the coach ha[d] been shot by his prospective son-in-law. The Gretna marriage list[s] have been sumptuously bound, and [a] former owner has compiled an inde[x] of the records of exciting stories [of] love and romance.

A Scot's Rise To Fame.

The other day I had a cha[t] with William Graham, the Secretar[y] of the Treasury, one of the M.P.'s fo[r] Edinburgh (writes Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P.). It was a very in[-]teresting conversation, but I [must] confess that to me, as an Ir[ish]man, it was somewhat humiliating, and for this reason. William Graham came from a modest, even a poor, home, but his parents had that splendid passion for education which is one of the highest qualities of the Scots race, and one of the chief factors in producing their extraordinary position in the world, especially in the English-speaking world, where, indeed, banks are mainly officered by Scotsmen. His parents first gave him a good elementary education; he won bursaries in one of those excellent secondary schools in which Scotland is so rich; then his cautious mother wanted him to have the security of a place in the Civil Service, and for a year he was a clerk in the War Office—I think his salary was 15s. a week. But the boy had bolder ideas. He returned to Scotland, became a journalist, remained at that for several years, then with the money he had saved was enabled to go through Edinburgh University, to become a graduate and a lecturer there, as elsewhere and by a similar process is now a Labour Minister. In an astonishingly short space of time he has created a big position as Secretary of the Treasury—[in]deed, nature and training marked him out for the job. The gift which has most struck the House of Commons is his extraordinary mastery of figures. He rolls them out in answer to question and supplementary question with promptitude without a pause, without hesitation. To me a miracle, for I cannot remember a name, a face, or a figure.

The Fame of Aberdeen.

The fame of Aberdeen—in one respect, at any rate—has spread to the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Frank Mulholland, of Toledo, Ohio, who is at present making a tour of the British Rotary Clubs told his Granite City friends that it would take him hours to tell all the things he had heard concerning them. "I doubt," he said, "if there is any other city which has so many stories told about it. Outside the Ford car and the Jew, I think you hold the record."

"Let Weel Alane."

Yince said, ne'er say the same thing twice;
Speak yince, an' mak the hale thing plain.
An' when yer dune, tak this advice—
"Let weel alane."

A WAR THAT AUSTRIA NEVER WANTED

The Emperor Karl, His Loyalty and Evil Destiny

In a large volume just issued by he "Rikola Verlag," the last chief f the Austrian General Staff, olonel-General Arz, publishes" con- ributions to the history of the reat War," giving detailed de- criptions of the events from 1914 til 1918.

From early in 1917, he says (when he writer was appointed Chief of he General Staff) the German Em- eror was in full command of the perations and forces of the Central owers and their allies, and his ecisions were binding on all of hem. Arz subordinated himself to indenburg and Ludendorff; but hen in May, 1917, the Germans arted the unrestricted U-boat war, rz had doubts whether it could rce England to make peace in months. Arz describes the mperor Karl as a high-thinking, arnest man, who had the best in- entions, but circumstances were o strong for him. He also de- ares that the Empress Zita did not terfere with military matters.

In autumn, 1917, Karl urgently pplied to Wilhelm for heavy artil- ry to fight the Italians at the onzo, feeling convinced that ustria had to strike her hardest ow at Italy if she was to be ctorious. German artillery and an my were sent, and Austria's fensive was successful. But later the German troops had to go to e western front and in the middle January 1918 the Austrian army a badly lacking in provisions. trikes broke out almost simul- neously at Budapest, Berlin, and amburg, and Austria found herself an extremely critical situation. he ominous event of the letters of rince Sixte, which showed Karl's essing desire for separate peace, d not improve relations with the ermans.

Thus, although Austria had penet- rated far into enemy territory on all sides, her troops in Venetia were too weak to carry through the final attack on the Italians at Asiago successfully. It had been started against Arz's advice. English troops were stationed there, and the Austrians had no experience of them. The attack, which turned into a bad defeat, marked the end of the Austrian offensive. The moral effect of this fiasco was very marked, and the simultaneous de- feats of the Germans along the Western front brought things to a head. Still, it is almost touching to see how, up to the very last moment, and conscious that the cause was lost, Karl tried to stick to Germany, and ever when the breakdown compelled him to appeal for an armistice and separate peace, he wrote to Wilhelm in moving terms of friendship.

The last birthday of the young Emperor which was officially solem- nized was that on August 17, 1918. But the celebration was marred by the news of the recognition of Czecho-Slovakia as an independent State by the Entente. Then gradual- ly the whole dual monarchy fell to pieces, and when Karl began dimly to realize his doom and ad- dressed the "manifesto to his peoples" it was too late. The march of events which began with the disaster of Bulgaria was not stayed until the new democratic rulers of the German part of Austria declar- ed the country a republic.

Perhaps one more point ought to be mentioned. The Austrians as a whole certainly never wanted the war. It is undeniable that many of their military leaders proved utter failures. Yet it is recognized all round that the common soldier fought with great bravery and lasted amazingly long under the greatest hardships.

DO WE GROW IN BED?

Humans Taller at Night and Shorter by Day

It has long been known that man beings diminish in height uring the day. They are taller hen they rise in the morning than hen they go to bed at night. ildren especially are apt to look nger after an illness during which ey have lain several days in bed.

Measurements made by Dr. mada, in Japan, suggested that e difference might be as much as inches. The shortening is, of urse, due to bending of the spine d flattening of the arch of the ot, which take place as a result standing erect.

Dr. Gaston Backman, professor of natomy in the University of thuania, has now published the sults of careful measurements ade on 200 men in a Swedish natic asylum. The patients were easured at 7 a.m. immediately on sing, and again at 8 and 11 a.m., and 6 p.m. He gives the average s of height in centimetres after many hours in different age- oups as follows:—

Age.	After being up 1 hr.	4 hrs.	7 hrs.	11 hrs.
10 years	0.81	1.81	2.21	2.39
80 years	0.66	1.69	2.08	2.28

The maximum loss of height was ways reached within 12 hours, and d little or nothing to do with the ight or weight of the person. But e younger groups lost more height an the older, no doubt due to the eater suppleness of the spine. The st height is regained during the ght in exactly contrary sense to e loss during the day.—"Daily ews."

OUR DRINK BILL

Expenditure in 1923 of £307,500,000

The annual statement of the nited Kingdom Alliance as to the tional drink bill shows that th penditure on alcoholic liquors in reat Britain in 1923 decreased by 7 r cent. and the consumption in- eased by about 3 per cent. as com- red with the expenditure and con- mption in 1922.

The high price of spirits continued check consumption, but the re- duction in the price of beer increased demand.

The amount spent on intoxicating liquors during 1923 is estimated at £307,500,000, as against £330,000,000 in 1922. The expenditure per head of the population was about £7 2s., as against £7 13s. in the preceding year.

Comparing expenditure on milk and beer during the year, the figures are: Milk, £93,000,000; beer, £193,- 000,000. The total consumption of absolute alcohol was approximately 51,000,000 gallons, as against 49,- 500,000 gallons in 1922, and the ap- proximate consumption per head was, for Great Britain, 1.18 gallons; for England and Wales, 1.25 gallons. and for Scotland, 0.75 gallons.

A table giving the exports of British spirits to United States and its neighbours shows that the quant- ity given would be only 2 per cent. of the spirit consumption of the States in 1917.

PAPER MONEY PERILS

"An investigation into the com- parative hygienic merits of paper money and coin has recently been carried out in Berlin," says the "Times" Medical Correspondent. "The results are published in the "Archiv für Hygiene." In comment- ing on them the "Lancet" states that 'infectious diseases may be spread by paper money more frequently than by any other article in use among the people.'

"It was found that coined money is innocuous, owing to the self- disinfecting action of the metal it- self, and because its small, smooth surface prevents the development of germs. 'The dirtiest piece of cop- per is, from the standpoint of a bacteriologist, better than newly- issued paper money.' In post-war banknotes for some time in circula- tion up to 143,000 bacteria were found. In pre-war notes the high- est find was 3,000 bacteria. The post-war note is, of course, much more frequently handled than were the notes of the pre-war period.

"The notes manufactured of 'laid' paper were the worst offenders as germs tend to stick to them. The investigator studied the vitality of the germs and found that streptococci—the germs of blood and other poisonings—were virulent 54 hours, while enteric fever bacilli lived 11-96 days. Dysentery germs lived 17-52 days."

OUR PARIS LETTER

D'Oisy's Achievement: Dynamite and Science: Why Torture the Friend of Man?

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Paris, May 22.

In spite of his unfortunate contact with the bunker on the Shanghai golf course, Pelletier d'Oisy is officially considered as having accomplished his mission. M. Laurent Eynac, the Under- Secretary for Air, says that when the expedition was first planned, there was no intention of going further than Hanoi, but in view of urgent representations from French agents in China and Japan, and at the request of influential Japanese personages, it was decided that if Pelletier d'Oisy, who was "lent" for the purpose by the Air Force, succeeded in reaching Hanoi, he should continue his journey to Tokio via Peking. The task set before the airman was to fly from Paris to Hanoi with the same machine and the same engine, and using only such spare parts as he carried with him. In the eventuality of an extension of the flight beyond Hanoi, another engine and spare parts were sent in advance to Tongking, so that the original motor could be sent home for examination, as it was a matter of technical interest to know the exact condition of an engine that had propelled an aeroplane nearly 9,000 miles under actual flying condi- tions. Though no special prepara- tions were made for the flight, it would not have been possible without the patient effort which has been put forth for years in French laboratories and workshops. "We have worked unostentatiously" said M. Laurent Eynac "in accord- ance with a well-defined plan and without spending a penny more than was absolutely necessary. France is beginning to reap the fruit of all this work. In a year from now we shall have the first aeroplane technical organization in the world."

A Test Explosion.

An explosion of ten tons of melinite at La Courtine camp, in the centre of France, has been carried out for scientific purposes, chiefly with the object of in- vestigating the propagation of sound-waves through the atmos- phere. Though it was imperceptible in Paris except to highly sensitive apparatus, it was heard at much greater distances, notably in Eng- land and Austria. No doubt science will be able to derive useful information from all the data when they have been examined and compared and, in this respect, the public sees the utility of the explosion, but there was another part of the programme to which great exception has been taken. It was thought desirable to study the physiological effects of the deflagration, and accordingly a number of animals, chiefly dogs and guinea-pigs, were tethered near the melinite. They were badly scared by the explosion, but the loss of life amounted to two guinea-pigs, and even they did not die from shock but from being attacked by a bird of prey.

One of the dogs attracted the attention of a newspaper corres- pondent, who noticed that the animal wore a collar bearing a name and an address in Paris. He rescued the dog and reported the incident. His story caught the eye of the dog's owner, and "Fifils" was restored to his people.

Thousands of readers have writ- ten to the newspapers, asking why a dog with his master's name and address on his collar was sent from Paris to the centre of France without any attempt being made to communicate with his owner. Fifils was no doubt stolen by one of the men who supply the research laboratories with dogs for purposes of experimental research. Nobody bothered about his feelings or his master's; he was simply checked off as a sample of flesh and blood, and this callousness has caused a remarkable explosion of feeling throughout the country. Why, it is asked, should the dog, the only animal who surrenders himself wholly and unreservedly as the friend and companion of man, be selected as the victim? Would not foxes, badgers and other usually hostile and objectionable creatures do just as well? Moreover, there has been plenty of opportunity, during the war, of investigating the effects of explosions of all kinds on human beings, and what need is there of any further sacrifice? It is the old question of vivisection in another form. The public cannot bear the thought of inflicting suffering on animals, but does not refuse to profit by the advance in medical science to obtain which those suffering are caused.

Olympic Rugby Matches.

The match in which the Amer- icans beat the French team after the Rumanians and thus won the Olympic Rugby tournament once more raises the question whether it would not be better to leave team competitions out of the Olympic programme. Outbursts of chauvinism are quite frequent enough without having pretexts provided by sport. About 20,000 people went to the Colombes Stadium to see the match, expect- ing the French team to win by superior knowledge of the game. The Americans were duly respected as athletes, but as Rugby is not one of their national sports, it was supposed that they would be found lacking in most of the fine points. As it turned out, they proved superior in every respect. The French held their own fairly well in the first half, during which only one try was scored against them, but in the second they were outplayed and lost by 17 points to 3. Two of their men were hurt and had to be carried off the field.

So was one of the spectators. He was an American named Nelson. His demonstrative way of encouraging his compatriots so enraged his French neighbours in the stand that one of them hit him on the head with a stick, and he is still in hospital. Another American, who tried to rescue him, was also roughly handled. On the other hand, when an American player was temporarily knocked out, the crowd cheered and behaved in a way that was certainly not sports- manlike. The real trouble is that Rugby football, popular as it is, has not yet had time to take root in France. The public, not under- standing the principles or even the practice of the game, treats it as an exciting spectacle and gives full vent to its feelings. It will be a wonder if the Olympic Games pass off without further exhibitions of misguided patriotism.

SUNKEN WARSHIPS

Making Good Use of German Floating Dock

Progress is reported in the big salvage scheme at Scapa Flow. Messrs. Cox & Danks, Queenborough and London, are now engaged upon the raising of 74 German vessels, which include 50 torpedo-boat des- troyers, 11 battleships, five battle- cruisers, and eight light cruisers.

During April the firm's energies have been absorbed with the ac- cumulating of vast stores of new appliances for the gigantic under- taking and forwarding them in ship- loads to Orkney, and in altering the huge German submarine floating dock which they purchased for breaking up, but which they recently found was the very power needed for the heavy work of salving the battle- cruisers.

The central chamber of the dock is now to be cut to form two great pontoons, which, placed over the sides of a submerged vessel, will lift her bodily to the surface.

ANCIENT COURT ROLLS

In the Chancery Division the other day George Frederick Beaumont, a solicitor, and steward of some 90 manors and lord of about 40 others, sought to recover from John Jeffery, bookseller, of High Street, Barnes, Court Rolls dating from 1399 to 1659 of the Manor of Great Tey, other- wise Tey Magna, Essex, of which Mr. Beaumont is lord.

Mr. Jeffrey, it was stated, pur- chased the Court Rolls in 1902 from a wastepaper dealer.

Mr. Jenkins, K.C., for Mr. Beau- mont, submitted that the Lord of the Manor was entitled to the Court Rolls, and if they came into a stranger's hands the stranger must be taken as knowing that he could not lawfully retain them as against the lord.

The hearing was adjourned.

THE SWEDISH MATCH INDUSTRY

Big Increase of Capital to Cope with Widespread Demands: Many New Markets

From a Swedish Correspondent.

A most interesting expansion of the world-embracing combine of the Swedish Match Co., is report- ed. Last year, a number of its factories and sales organization, outside Sweden were consolidated under a new corporation, domicil- ed in the United States, named the International Match Corpora- tion, capitalized with 28.2 million gold dollars share capital and a 15 million bond-issue. This new capital was mostly intended to acquire interests in the match in- dustries of Canada, South America, India and Japan, but since then new aspects of the industry have turned up, offering to the combine other fields of activity which at that time could not be reckoned with.

In the first place, France, in its financial plight, has made up its mind to abolish the State mono- poly of the production and sale of matches, which has been severely criticized for providing bad and dear matches without correspond- ing revenue to the exchequer. The French market probably will be thrown open to private enterprise and the Swedish concern, which has at its disposal the highest technic- al skill and best commercial organi- zation within this industry, un- doubtedly will be called upon to take an important share in the re- organization of this important market. Such participation natural- ly will absorb considerable capital, not provided for in the plans pre- viously drawn up by the concern. Further, several other countries, suffering from a depreciated cur- rency, contemplate introducing a match monopoly with a view to creating new sources of revenue for the exchequer. The plans of the Experts Commission for Germany, for instance, include a match mono- poly and as this ranges among the securities for the huge international reorganization loans to Germany, which form a prominent part of the Experts' scheme, the international capitalists may be expected to re- quire a first rate technical ad- ministration for such a monopoly before granting the loans. No other concren will be more competent than the Swedish one to furnish this necessary technical skill. Not only its large experience in all matters of match production and sale, as well as international financial trans- actions and the high international reputation of the concern and its managing director, but also the fact that it is an eminently neutral en- terprise, belonging to a country not involved in the world's politics, render it especially fit for taking over the technical administration of such a monopoly. A match mono- poly also has a stranger and wider bearing than either an alcohol or tobacco monopoly, matches being used by every individual, and the small expense being scarcely felt by anybody.

Several states already have ap- proached the company with a view to taking over the management of such monopolies, these offers in most cases involving considerable financial engagements for the com- pany. The Swedish Match Co. lately decided to double its share capital—from 90 to 180 million Swedish crowns at 125 per cent.—thus swelling at the same time the company's reserve fund by some 22.5 million crowns. At least half the increase will be taken over by the internationoal markets, but the control of the company will be retained in Sweden by reduc- ing the voting power of the new shares to a purely nominal value (1/1000 as compared to the old shares).

SOMETHING LIKE A MAN

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent, in Uion Church, Tientsin, on Sunday Evening, May 18

Text: Acts XIX 29; "And they rushed with one accord into the theatre, having seized Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel."

Sydney Smith, the great wit of a hundred years ago, once asked a company to solve a riddle which he had made about himself. It was: "Why am I like a razor." The company tried and tried, but had to give it up. We usually do have to give riddles up. Who ever did guess one? When the company had given it up, he gave the answer:" Because I am always either in hot water or in a scrape." That was so. He had a witty and sharp tongue, which is apt to keep a man in hot water and in scrapes. For instance, when the doctrine of apostolic succession was first mooted by the High Church party, he said that he had no difficulty in believing it. When asked why he said "Because the bishop of London is so remarkably like Judas Iscariot?"—A man may expect to be in hot water who says things like that about his superiors. He can hardly expect promotion to come his way. Smith was, however, more than a coiner of bitter saying like that. He was on the side of reform generally. And so he was in hot water.

Paul was something like Sydney Smith. He was "always in hot water or in a scrape." He was in one now at Ephesus. The whole place was in an uproar. Paul had touched the place on the raw. The trouble was that he had interfered with a flourishing business, the making of images of the goddess Diana. The craftsmen, of course, said that they were animated by the purest love of their religion; Diana was being insulted. Our ostensible reasons are often enough not our real reasons. "Not only is this our craft in danger to be set at naught; but also that the temple of the great goddess should be despised." Very sad indeed, especially that business should go off. So there was an uproar, and the Secretary of the Municipal Council, a very diplomatic person, had to take the matter in hand and settle it. Paul got out of that very well. But he was always in scrapes. He had just come out of another at Corinth, where the Jews "opposed themselves," and "beat Sosthenes the ruler of the synagogue," and Gallio, the brother of Seneca, the Governor, came to his rescue. Paul was a man, who refused to take the safe line. He had had trouble at Thessalonica too. The Jews, which believed not, moved with envy, took unto themselves "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort," a sort of hired "gunmen," and they made a riot. In this case the brethren got Paul out of the place.

A little further back, he had been in a scrape at Phillipi. He and Silas had been thrown into prison for casting the spirit of divination out of a girl. A case of interference again. So we might go back to the man's conversion, and remember that he got into hot water straight off, for we read that he had had to be let down the wall of Damascus "in a basket." As soon as he became a Christian Paul's troubles began and they went right on. He gives an account of them in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, one of the most moving passages in the whole literature of the world: "in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I 40 stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeyings, often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by my own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watching often, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness." No one can read that without being touched to the heart. And the record that he had must have been fairly well-known, and very well-known in church circles. Lives like Paul's were not lived "in a corner" then, any more than they are now.

"A Man's a Man."

And so we come to this fine testimonial of character given by the historian Luke to two men, Gaius and Aristarchus, that they were "Paul's companions in travel." No one ever needed a better testimonial than that. You had to be a man if you were going to be Paul's "companion in travel." I have seen a notice displayed in hotels in the East like this. "This hotel caters for first-class travel only." That hotel does not want any traveller who asks questions about his bill. He had to be prepared to "pay through the nose," and smile. I need hardly say that men who were Paul's "companions in travel" did not stay overnight at establishments of this class.

Mr. Chesterton tells how he once read a rationalistic book on Christianity, and the great objection to the teaching of Jesus urged by the writer was, that Christianity, with its teaching of meekness and peacefulness and so on, seemed to turn men into sheep. He says this impressed him very much until he read another infidel book, which made its main accusation against the Gospel that it "had filled the world with bloodshed, and bloody wars." This was the turning point in his career, for he thought, that it must be a very queer religion both to turn men into sheep and raging tigers at the same time. In any case Aristarchus and Gaius can hardly have been sheep, when they became Paul's "companions in travel." They were men indeed, such as the church of Christ always wants, and as any stiff cause wants, whether it is the Gospel or climbing the Himalayas, or fighting a battle. We pick up a good deal of information about them in the New Testament. They were "men of Macedonia." I am glad of that. They were Europeans. They came of good fighting ancestry. We all know that Macedonia was the land of Alexander the Great and his heroic troops. And Macedonia has remained a land of fighters. There is the story of the Servian, who was asked after the late war, in which heroic Servia suffered so badly, what the Servians were going to do now. His answer was, "Please God, there will be another war." We may disagree with him. But that was fine. He was a man, who would stick to his side, whatever happened. Gaius and Aristarchus were of that breed. And we want then now. Every Christian needs that spirit. As to Gaius, we read of a Gaius who had the honour of entertaining Paul at Rome. "Gaius my host saluteth you," Paul says in Romans XVI. Was it he? And in the third epistle of John we read of "the well-beloved Gaius." If these are the same men, people got about the world more freely than we think. As a fact, they did. Gregory mentions a merchant, of Asia Minor who had made 70 journeys to Rome on business. As to Aristarchus, there is one telling reference to him. In the Epistle to the Colossians Paul says, "Aristarchus my fellow-prisoner saluteth you." He had stuck to the great Apostle to the end. I can remember the honour that was paid, not only to Livingstone's name when his remains were brought home to be buried, but also to his humble but faithful and loving black servant. He shared the honours heaped on the name of his great master. And so we cannot think of Paul, without remembering Gaius and Aristarchus. "Paul's companions in travel." They must have been men, of his heroic and undaunted spirit.

Companions in Travel.

Notice one or two things, that prove this. They were no sooner out of trouble in Ephesus, than they were in it again when the Jews made a plot against Paul as he was about to sail to Syria, and he had to change his plans. Then there was more trouble at Iconium It is very probable, that they were recent converts of Paul's. Now one would think that their first idea would be that other people would be as glad to hear of Christ as the Saviour, as they had been and they must have thought it queer that the message that had given them so much joy created such hatred and aversion in so many people. It must have been a surprise to them. But they held on. Their conversion must have been sound and thorough, because they cannot have been long with Paul without seeing that this Gospel that they had embraced was likely to keep them in perpetual hot water and trouble. Yet they held on. There are numbers of Christian people who need the spirit of these men. People say they are tired of so much debate and disputes about the Gospel. They give it all up. These people would never have been any good to Paul as his "companions in travel." Indeed not. The men needed to-day are of just of this spirit, that the more the truth is attacked the more loyally we stick to it. Jews and Gentiles could do what they liked, but these men had found the truth in Jesus Christ; they had no manner of doubt about it, and they could not be moved. We need that spirit. The greater the opposition, the greater the faith and courage we ought to show. That is the soldier's spirit.

The Church Not at Fault.

It will be said that it is the fault of the Church that there is so much religious strife and so much debate on the Gospel. No; while the Church has not been without fault, and there have perhaps been more divisions in the Christian hosts than could be wished, that is not the real cause of present day dislike of what we may call evangelical Christianity. No. Does anyone believe that if all the churches in Great Britain were made one to-morrow they would all be crammed the following Sunday? No one's hope is fool enough to believe that. It would be just the same as when St. Francis preached to the fishes:—

> "The pike went on stealing;
> The eels went on eeling;
> Very good what you say,
> But we prefer the old way."

Yes; the very next Sunday races might be run; tennis and baseball would be played as usual; hotels would give tea-dances, and multitudes would be anywhere except in church, or at a prayer-meeting, or having a quiet think over themselves and their relation to the God who made them. No, the real reason why there is a subtle dislike to plain evangelical Christianity is that it keeps mankind in hot water. Whittled down to windy abstractions it antagonizes no one, but as Paul preached it, and Aristarchus and Gaius believed it, it is a disturbing element in life. The truth always is and must be in a world that cares for truth in very moderate doses, and then with jam to help it down. It takes a man to be a real Christian when we come to think about it. Only a few simple considerations show us that. The very initial idea of it is, of course, that man is all wrong. If that is not its idea, why does it call itself a salvation? But mankind likes to think itself all right, at all events with a little effort of a moral kind, which a man can put forth if he cares to do so; while man is quite sure, that if he is spiritually somewhat shady, he can make up for it by being intellectual, cultured, a bit of a connoisseur at painting and music, and literature.

Culture and Faith.

It is a leading idea to-day, that culture can be a makeweight for faith in God and obedience. Lord Morley held that. Christianity has no use at all for any such idea. It says, the case was so bad with us, that the Son of God had to come to save us. And it says all depends on a man's attitude to Him. Men do not like that. The "intellectuals," as they impudently call themselves, hate the idea. But that is Christianity. Jesus Christ came to call us to repent, to begin an entirely new life based on Him. Who likes to repent? No one. Do men like Tagore, Russell, Wells, and hoc genus omne, of the "leading men" sort, like to hold that there is no hope for them unless they repent, became humble believers in Jesus Christ? No. Does the ordinary man of business and of all the innumerable sporting clubs feel impressed by the Christian doctrine of the value of the soul that a man is lost unless he sees, that he is a fool if he "gains the whole world and loses his own soul?" No, only very fitfully, when a sudden death or calamity scares him. Christianity keeps mankind in perpetual hot water over so many things. Not only its demand for a changed life through faith and repentance but a new life to be lived. This cuts across and athwart so many things, that we in our natural state say are right. There is the forgiveness of enemies. Bitterness and revenge are the natural feeling. Who likes to forgive? Few. But Christ says, that if we do not forgive our enmies, how can God forgive us? In that case, are there any real Christians at all?" Christianity further, makes everything of a man's soul. It is precious to God. Christ died to save it in us all. Men say, that Christianity is a kill-joy because the church seems to cut across peoples enjoyments on Sundays and some on weekdays. What is the truth about that? The New Testament is not hard in its Sabbatarianism. It says all proper things are a Christian's. But it does imply this, that a man's first duty, as it ought to be his pleasure, to keep alive his sonship to God, his life in God through Christ; and it does not see how a man can do that, if he never worships, never prays at home or in church, never puts himself in touch with those times and opportunities in life, that bring his soul to God, and bring divine things to his soul. What would a golfer's success at golf be, if he thought as little about his form, as so many people do about Jesus Christ? Christianity requires the cutting down of indulgence in a great many nice pleasant things in order that we may give our soul the chance of coming into touch with still grander things, the "things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal." Christianity too seems to throw an absurd amount of responsibility on us for people, who we say, are nothing to us at all. Take the natives of New Guinea! A man says, "Pooh; what on earth have I to do with them? I cannot have any responsibility for them." But the answer to that is in the case of Paul and these two travelling companions of his. They had found a wonderful thing, salvation in Christ, and they actually did feel bound to tell everybody about it. Every man in the world is a "brother for whom Christ died," so that our responsibilities are very heavy. We may take these as examples of the fact, that the Gospel upsets all our common ideas. It gives us new and better ones, but it is an upset all the same, and man is rather bored by it. He does'nt mind it if it is watered down, but as Paul and his brave friends understood it, it needs all the grace of God in Christ to keep us faithful. It does look as if the world will be in perpetual hot water over the Gospel until it repents.

THE KU KLUX KLAN

As It Was in Its Origination: Recent Revival an Off-Shoot of Blonde Beast Idea

BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY.

In the United States, the original Ku Klux Klan came into existence as a result of the Civil War. Negroes only just freed from economic and political slavery, rough and unrighteous northerners known as carpet-baggers, coming into the south to make what they could out of the misfortunes of a fine people defeated in war, banded together. The young men of the south had to find means of defending their moral and social rights, their homes and women folk, from such a combination. They eventually organized the Klan, the night-riders of which garbed in flowing white robes, hooded, silent, bearing a Fiery Cross, acted as a police force for the enforcement of moral law in the chaotic south. Such bodies appear everywhere in the world in similar circumstances. Such bodies have appeared in China in the form of volunteer organizations.

In due course, the Klan disappears from American history. Like similar institutions, when the immediate cause for its organization disappeared, the better element retired, disintegration and dishonesty set in and the movement went to pieces. Some years ago, Thomas Dixon, an American author, wrote a novel on the subject which David Griffith arranged for the screen in the form of "The Birth of a Nation." The picture is perhaps one of the only true screen classics, for it has been showing for many years and the public seems never to tire of it. It has very patently influenced American public opinion, has recrystallized the anti-negro feeling) and has given a background in romance for a peculiar racial movement developing in the United States simultaneously with the nationalistic unmeasured chauvinism attending the War.

The Fair Hair Fallacy.

This movement might go by the name of the Superiority of the Nordics. It will be remembered that the Germans had for many decades preached the superiority of the Teutons over all human beings. The blonde beast of Nietzsche was ridiculed during the clamour of war, but the idea sunk into minds of many non-Germans were themselves blonde, blue-ey tall and of apparent Teutonic ori Houston Stewart Chamberlin, Briton born, but a German by c zenship and affinity, son-in-law Wagner, a follower of Thor Parsifal, a wearer of an Iron Cr and the most abject of scholar panderers to the Kaiser, wrote t fat and wearisome volumes call "The Foundations of the 20th Ce tury," in which he tried to pro that everything good and valuable the civilization of the human ra was of Aryan or Teutonic origin. forgets the movements of the Hu the Ephthalites, the Turks and oth peoples of Mongolia and Centr Asia, the mixture of peoples in t Mediterranean, of Asiatic, Africa European and Indo-European. Wh is good was done by someone wi blonde or red hair or by one w should have blonde or red hair. even claims that Jesus Christ w a Teuton because all pictures of H show blonde hair!

This idea of the superiority of t blondeness fitted well with soci conditions in the United State For there, although the country republican, a social aristocracy Anglo-Saxons has developed ov the large mases of mixed nationalit The names of the holders high public office indicate the sign ficance of this Anglo-Saxon aristo racy: Lincoln, Johnson, Buchana Arthur, Garfield, Roosevelt, McKi ley, Cleveland, Wilson, Hardin Coolidge—not a Slavic, Latin, Semitic name anywhere. The pu Anglo-Saxon or Scottish-Irish Pr testant class in the United States h remained predominant throughou American history and is likely to r main such, for with restricted imm gration, the numerical attack this class is weakened.

The Nordic Theory.

Certain pseudo-scientists utiliz the German idea of the superiorit of the Teuton, changed the wor Teuton to Nordic, got enthusiast about Scandinavia and launched a attack on the civilization of every thing which was not Teutonic i origin.

Into the rights and wrongs of the theory behind such a movement, it is impossible to go here. The fact of the movement is sufficient. It was widespread and general. It led to adhesion of similarly-minded people who sought to preserve the type of political and social institution which they knew and liked to live under. It led to a distrust of the alien in the United States, particularly the Southern and Eastern European, the Semite and the Asiatic. The fact that radicalism in the United States was as much a political tendency among the New England old families such as the Lowells, the Longfellows and the Danas, did not seem to disturb the general opinion that all radical, and therefore un-American movements were organized, financed and strengthened by adhesions from eastern and southern Europe.

Henry Ford's Mistake.

Henry Ford was a strong element in this movement. It is no secret that the master tinker was led into his most startling absurdity by a Jewish woman from Vienna, Rozika Schwimmer. This lady got Ford to organize the peace expedition. She made the arrangements. He was the goat. Ford's bitterness toward Rozika, his shame at being ridiculed, his loss of face, were not to be forgotten. Like other men at other times, he took it out of the Jews. Using the old Russian monarchical organization and allying himself with the Tory "Morning Post" which was also associated with Russian monarchism, he started a world-wide campaign to extirpate the Jew.

All Things to All Haters.

All these forces working together, from different angles, made possible that curious tendency in American political and social life, the Ku Klux Klan. This organization adopted the paraphernalia of a historic movement, hallowed in the minds of many fine people in the United States; it adopted the historical point of view of the Anglo-Saxon aristocracy in the United States, of the socially best people; it supported itself with the natural antipathy to people of alien habits and civilization. It utilized the fear in the United States for the radicalism of Russia, the dread of negro infiltrations and of Asiatic immigration. It adopted the creed

t the United States must remain like a Protestant, that moral l must be upheld by popular force the written law is by political ce and that the non-white, non-te elements in the United te must be held in their "pro-
" place, the propriety of their ce to be determined by the inidual Klan of each locality.
When the Klan first reappeared it s principally engaged in anti-r and anti-radical activity. In s course, however, it became a t fomenter of hatreds. Where ews were unpopular, it was ti-Semitic; where the Catholics re disliked, it was anti-Catholic; er the negro was disliked, it was ti-negro. It was all things to all
ers. Its platform was hatred.
appealed to the spirit of the

RITAIN'S INDUSTRIAL HEALTH

Patient Who Declines to Die in Spite of the Pessimists

By Hartley Withers.

A recent announcement to the ect that the Government intends ortly to set on foot an inquiry
o the causes of our present trade pression will be generally welcomas a step in the right direction.
is true that inquiries of this kind apt to produce little but "hot
," and, in the meantime waste a al deal of the valuable time of distinguished and important tlemen who conduct them; but in s case, the very curious and un-al conditions under which trade at present carried on all over rld, seem to make it worth ile to have an official inquiry o the commercial health of the ion, which has been the pioneer commerce and also in industrial ganisation.

In view of all that has been said the past half century about the t doom of British industry, it really rather astonishing to find at there is still any trade left to depressed and inquired about.
. Joseph Chamberlain's observa-ns about dying industries in the rse of his great Tariff Reform mpaign in the early years of the ntury, have been quoted so often to have become almost a proverb.
t it appears from a quotation ely given in a letter to the imes" that in the '80s of last ntury Lord Ranolph Churchill was en more emphatic and positive in s predictions concerning the future British industry, much of which as, in his view, already dead.

Nevertheless, though there is me satisfaction in seeing how any funeral sermons have been eached in the past over a patient ho at least can boast that it has tlived many of its mourners, we ve no right to assume that warngs about Britain's trade position
e necessarily unfounded to-day.
ll things come to an end, and some y those will be right who tell that the sun has set for ever on ritain's trade supremacy. And ose of us who are still most con-dent that there is life in the old untry yet, cannot get away from e unemployment figures, which main appalling, however easy it ay be to show that they are eadily improving, and that a con-derable part of them is normal.
the face of this figure all evidnces that we see which seem to ow that in spite of immense diffilties Britain is getting on a good al better than might have been pected, might be regarded with me suspicion. Moreover, it is om the ranks of the industrialists themselves that the most serious and weighty pronouncement now come concerning the outlook for our trade.

Lord Weir, in a letter published in the "Times" of April 24 headed "Handicaps of Industry," told us that "the gravity of our national and social position can be best appreciated by comparing in terms of man-hour effort the country's wealth producing effort to-day with its performance in 1913. Assuming equal efficiency," he continued, "the performance to-day is approximately 16 per cent. poorer than in 1913, and we have about 14 million additional mouths to feed. Consequently, our average standard of living has fallen with consequent dissatisfaction to many, and this has resulted in our unstable, industrial atmosphere and, in a measure, our present political situation. Lord Weir went on as he said, to indicate certain elements in the situation which any Government what ever its label, may be expected to offer clear guidance to the community. First of these was the new relativity of remuneration—agricultural wage rates at a starvation level, the great skilled industries of cotton, wool, coal, steel, engineering and shipbuilding, all more or less dependent on exports, with wages below a decent standard, and finally the "sheltered or domestic" trades and services engaged in distribution, transport and public utilities, with very substantially higher wages. In America a wide temporary disparity in remuneration inflicted ruin on agriculture, which appear to be merely a temporary matter in such a self contained country. But here Lord Weir fears that it is quite possible that the evil results may be permanent. "We may" he writes, "be actually in the process of ruining the very industries which pay for our food." He adds, that he is not cavilling at the high rates in the sheltered trades, but is concerned as to the effects of maintaining to-day's new relativity. He shows that the miner, who two years ago accepted a wage rate which enabled this country to export more coal than ever, and thus preserved mining employment now feels that he has been let down, because there has been no reduction in the cost of living which would have improved his purchasing power, while on the other hand he sees some sheltered trades with wage rates rising automatically with the cost of living. The position of the employer is, in a different way, equally uncomfortable and difficult. "Take the position" says Lord Weir," of employers in an export trade confronted with a wage demand. If they yield to the reasonable humanitarian aspect and grant the increase they avoid a strike, obtain public approval, increase their difficulties in obtaining contracts, tend to create further unemployment, and are finally told they are profiteers. On the other hand, if they refuse the demand, there is a strike and they are called reactionary. In the sheltered trades, it is easiest to take a narrow view, grant the demand, and pass it on to the consumer."

Lord Weir can certainly claim that he proved up to the hilt the need for a thorough investigation of the influence of the new wage disparity on the cost of living figure and on the condition of the export trades. From this investigation alone, he thinks can there be evoked the practical recognition by employers and trade unions alike, that burdens must be shared. If that recognition can be secured, we shall have gone a very long way towards opening the way to a great revival of British trade; especially if at the same time it is possible to institute fuller information concerning production, the lack of which makes one a little sceptical concerning estimates of man-hour effort and the like.

The efficiency of the world postal services, particularly that of the American and Chinese, was clearly demonstrated last week, when in a recent mail a Christmas card was returned to a sender in Shanghai with no return address attached. Mailed by an American lawyer to an addressee in Jamestown (Rhode Island), it was forwarded to an address in Lansing (Michigan), where it was thought that he had gone, but the letter came back to Shanghai finally stamped "Not in the Directory." Consulting the "North-China Daily News" Hong List, the local authorities ascertained the address of the sender (he had enclosed a card) and the undelivered letter is now in his possession.

Aspects of the Principal Planets.

Mercury.—Invisible as a naked-eye object in first part of month, being in superior conjunction on the 6th. The plant becomes afterwards an evening star, setting at the end of the month a short time after the sun.
In conjunction with moon on 2nd; in superior conjunction on 6th; in conjunction with Venus on 3rd.
Sets on 13th at 7.45 p.m.
,, 20th at 8.2 p.m.;
,, 27th at 8.9 p.m.

Venus.—Invisible, being in inferior conjunction on 1st, and having its dark side turned towards the earth. May be faintly perceived in the early morning at end of month.
In inferior conjunction on 1st; in conjunction with moon on 2nd; with Mercury on 3rd; in aphelion on 21st; stationary on 23rd; in conjunction with moon on 29th.

Mars.—An early evening star in Aquarius, increasing in brightness at the end of the month, surpassing even that of Tupiter.
In conjunction with moon on 19th; stationary on 24th.
Rises on 1st at 10.20 p.m.;
,, 16th at 9.23 p.m.;
,, 30th at 8.37 p.m.

Earth in Peribelion.

Besides the diurnal revolution of the earth on its axis, which takes place in 24 hours, and gives us the varied charms of day and night, our planet revolves every year in an elliptical path about the sun. This path around the sun is nearly 600,000,000 miles long, and the earth advances thereon at the rate of over 18 miles a second. This movement of our world becomes apparent, if we consider the change of the fixed stars, some of which are visible during the Winter and others during the summer months. The earth's motion round the sun as a centre explains the varied aspects of the heavens in Summer and Winter skies.

As the earth moves on its orbit, it approaches at one period of the year—about 31st December—nearer to the sun. It is then said to be in perihelion. At another period—about the close of June or in early July—we are further away from the sun, or the earth is in aphelion.

Jupiter Hastens its Setting.

Jupiter, which was in opposition on June 6, and at its nearest point to our earth on June 7, is during this month an early evening star crossing the meridian about 10 p.m., in the early part of the month, and about 8 p.m.; towards the close. It is still well placed for observation. Its setting takes place in the early hours of the morning, and about an hour after midnight at the end of the month.

Sets on 1st 3.16 a.m.;
,, 16th at 2.12 a.m.;
,, 30th at 1.11 a.m.

Mars Approaches the Earth.

The orbit of Mars is exterior to that of the earth, and the planet is in opposition at intervals of about 2 years. At the opposition of this year, Mars will be exceedingly bright, its brilliancy being superior to that of Jupiter. This will offer a rare oppotunity for observing its white spots, or "snow Zones," as they are called, at the poles, and its ruddy areas, so far unexplained. Certain markings seem to cross these areas, and have been named "Canals," but there is no evidence that they are the work of living beings.

The space between Mars and Jupiter—Mars being 35,000,000 miles away from our earth; and Jupiter, 399,000,000—is studded with small planets, the total number already known being over 1090, and these may be also well observed.

IMPRESSIONS OF CHINA

A Good Official

By George E. Sokolsky.

Huc recounts the following of a good official:

"To attain still higher dignities it would have been necessary to go to considerable expense, and make costly presents to ministers and persons influential at court. He could not, therefore, pretend to any higher employment, because he was poor, and he was poor because he would not fleece the people under his jurisdiction, and because he administered justice gratuitously, and shared his modest provenue with the poor of his district; but every one loved and blessed his rule."

There are many men like the Abbé's official working in corners of China to-day. And they are probably as unknown as he was. Known are the mighty in Peking and the warlords in the provinces, they who live upon the ever-diminishing fat of the land.

A School of Words

A message from Peking says that a school for diplomats is to be opened. But who will attend such a school, when diplomats abroad cannot be paid are not promoted justly? The report says: "The teaching force will be principally drawn from the among the staff of the Waichiaopu." Wellington Koo will probably be dean of the school, for among all of China's diplomatists who is more fitted for the task, in accordance with Talleyrand's definition of a diplomat? What a glorious school it might, however, be made, were it staffed by Chinese scholars and were the diplomats first given a grounding in Confucius, Mencius and Moh Ti. Confucius said: "With sincere trust he unites the love of learning; holding firm unto death, he is perfecting the excellence of his course." What better guide for a diplomat!

And a Child

In the East an old man protected himself from the ravages of a tiger.
The tiger entered his house at night and bit his head.
The small child in the Western home did not know the tiger;
He took a bamboo pole in his hand and drove the tiger as he drove the cattle.

And leave the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering Huangpu on the sight,
A solemn stillness all the air enfolds,
Save where mosquitos wheel their droning flight
And windlasses clank o'er the steamships' holds.

Save that from yonder locust-eaten tree.
The fretful rook does to the moon complain
Of drastic orders of the S.M.C.,
That he be shot at sight: alas, in vain.

Beneath this half-scorched grass, yon elm tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring heap,
Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
The forefathers of modern Shanghai sleep.

The noisome scent of sewage-laden creek,
The coolie's fluting from the mat-built shed,
The hawker's clarion, the barrow's squeak,
No more shall call them from their lowly bed.

Oft did the Maloo to their progress yield,
And shroffs approach to find them stony broke:
How jocund did they drive their teams afield!
How bowed the riesha' neath their sturdy stroke.

Let not the tourist mock their scanty toil,
Brief office hours, accomplishment obscure;
Nor Taipans hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple dealings of the poor.

The boast of Bubbling Well, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er has Bestowed, await the after-dinner hour:
The path of pleasure leads but unto jazz.

No doubt in this selected spot is laid
Some heart once pregnant with the whisky's fire;
Hands, that the rod of Councils might have swayed.
Or twanged, mayhap, the Town Band's only lyre.

Some correspondent who, with dauntless breast,
The tyrant editor withstood with ease—
Some sanely-driving Broker here may rest:
Some simple soul who never heard of squeese.

Was one with dirges few and scant array
Slow through the busy street one morning borne.
Approach and read (for thou can'st read) the lay
Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn:

The Epitaph.

Here rest: his head upon the lap of Earth
A Youth to Fortune and to Fame unknown.
Society frown'd on his humble birth
And bill-collectors marked him for their own.

Large was his bounty, though his income small;
Fate's recompense proportionate at the end.
To roistering companions he gave all,
Yet, e'er he died, might not name one his Friend.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

"Ouida" was a "best seller" long before Marie Corelli and she was a much better novelist. Even so, the present generation of readers probably hardly knows that she died in poverty, or her books. "Moths" made her a figure of scandal to our grandparents, though the modern girl would hardly lift an eyebrow over its pages. She will, however, have the opportunity of doing so, for Chatto is publishing new editions, at a popular price, of the novel and of its companion, "Under Two Flags."

The Empire Exhibition at Wembley is to have its echo in the London publishing world. Sir Godfrey Collins is to publish a survey of the Empire in 12 volumes, each of which will be self-contained. The editor is Mr. Hugh Gunn and a strong committee of the Royal Colonial Institute is giving its assistance. Sir Charles Lucas, a well-known authority on Imperial subjects, is writing "The Story of the Empire." Dr. Berriedale Keith will deal with its constitution, its administration and its laws. Sir Godfrey Lagden will discuss the native races. Sir Charles McLeod trade, commerce and shipping, and there are other well-known contributors.

About a year ago a daring party of French motorists left Algeria for Timbuctoo, and that meant crossing the Sahara. They had four "caterpillar cars," which had been specially built for them, and every other necessity for their venture. Thanks to their courage, and partly perhaps, to their luck, the venture was entirely successful. Its leaders were Monsieur Haardt and Monsieur Audouin-Dubreuil, and they have now written an account of it. Their story has been translated into English for an edition which Fisher, Unwin will publish under the title. "Across the Sahara by Motorcar."

A book of undoubted human interest, Mr. Robert Smillie's life story, is coming from Mills and Boon. It has the title "My Life for Labour," and in order that labour may read it, it is being published at half a crown. It is the modestly told tale of a man who has taken part in great conflicts, and won great victories for his class and order. At the best the life of a miner is one of hardship and peril, but perhaps it has been softened and brightened by the labours of "Bob Smillie." He lives the simple life to which he was born, and his book has that incense all through.

One of the cleverst things the late Marie Corelli did was to realize early in life the value of a good professional or pen name. She started life as Minnie Mackay, but she soon became Marie Corelli on title-pages, and the change was a wise one. For some inexplicable reason Marie is a good name with which to figure before the world. The successful Maries are numerous. I can for the moment think of no famous Minnies. A strong point in Marie Corelli's character was that she preserved her individuality to the end, asserting her likes and her dislikes pretty freely. The weak point in her career was that her success produced a form of megalomania, and just as Gibbon, after a time, confused himself with the Roman Empire, so Marie Corelli confused herself with the Almighty, or at any rate, believed herself to be a fifth Evangelist and superior to the other four. At the height of her success an excellent limerick was circulated, which I suspect, E. V. Lucas wrote. It ran:—

There was once an old buffer of Delhi,
Who could not read Crocketts "Cleg Kelly,"
When they said he's the fashion,
He flew in a passion.
And said "So is Marie Corelli."

There are romances of success in authorship, as there are in life, and Miss Mary Borden, who is actually Mrs. Spears, the American wife of an English brigadier-general and M.P., has had one with "Jane—Our Stranger." Eight years ago she wrote a first story, "The Romantic Woman," which was admired by the critics and missed by the public. Then, quite recently, she wrote "Jane," and it made her such a "best-seller" that "The Romantic Woman" now reissued, has gone into three editions.

There must be a peculiarly pleasant satisfaction to the composer of chess problems when he knows that all over the world men of many races are sitting down trying to solve his puzzles. Mr. G. F. Anderson has a wide reputation among chess enthusiasts as a composer of problems. His attractive little volume, "Adventures of My Chessmen" ("Chess Amateur," 3s. 6d).) contains a collection of his published works. Mr. W. H. Thompson in an introduction says that these problems are terrors for the hasty solver. He adds: "A collected edition of a composer's works usually enables the student to place the author with some degree of certitude, but in the present instance it will be found that Mr. Anderson has been so versatile that he cannot yet be placed anywhere."

GILBERT CANNAN

THE HOUSE OF PROPHECY.—By Gilbert Cannan. Thornton, Butterworth, Ltd. 7/6d. net.

Nowadays the publication of a new novel by Gilbert Cannan is a very welcome event. For he has this distinction, that whereas all his contemporaries, the band of young men who started writing serious novels at the same time, have sooner or later disappointed us of their early promise, his work alone has held to the standard of his earliest writing. In these days that is something to be very thankful for. And, even if Gilbert Cannan has not fulfilled the expectations aroused by his early work, it is, in the present arid state of the art, something of a triumph that he has never fallen short of his first achievements. In this his latest book he gives us the brilliant flashes of insight, the clear cut expression of unrecognized social truths that we have learned to expect from him, fresh, interesting, stimulating. At the same time they are set in the same incompleteness, incoherence, which we have gone on hoping (for some years now) would disappear from his work and give place to a continuity of thought, a smoothly finished vehicle. It seemed so much a sign of impatient youth that we assumed a finish of constructive thought must develop with experience. But no constructive finish has developed, and our hope of it begins to loose its grip. He seems to be permanently uninterested in the ordinary things. He cannot be bothered with the bricks and mortar of life. How, then, can we expect construction? His defence would probably be "I am doing the lighting, not the bricklaying." And to the retort "You are putting very brilliant lights in very unusual places" he would reply "They are illuminating corners of the house of life which you would never otherwise see." And we might as well let him have the last word, since we have nothing left but the rather flimsy taunt that the medium is hardly the correct one. Who shall define the limits of the novel form in these days?

It amounts to this: that while Gilbert Cannan continues to flash the light of his genius upon the unusual, the extra normal, we will have to excuse him not giving us a coherent story or even a comprehensive character. For there is the same haphazard incompleteness in his character drawing as in his general construction. He gives us only the unusual. In order to visualize the complete personality the reader has to supply the ordinary aspects of the character from his own experience. For to take what Gilbert Cannan tells of a man or a woman as a comprehensive description would be like judging the average, kindly householder solely upon his behaviour at breakfast on Monday morning.

No. It is not his story nor his characters that matter. It is his attitude towards life and the times which he uses his characters to demonstrate. He will not subside into the usual acceptance of things as right because they exist or are done. Of the 19th century he says:

"There was a nightmarish quality about it all, about the completely hypnotised acceptance of everything that was said, thought and done as perfection; the worship of queer inhuman gnomes like Gladstone and Disraeli: the preposterous delight with which calamity was hailed as heroic triumph: the insane jubilation over longevity, security, prosperity and the commonplace." And again of youth during the War:

"That was a strange time in which he had found her, a time in which youth was so completely ignored that it was impossible to recognize it even when you held it in your arms. Youth, at such a time, it seemed, was an offence unless it was bound and captive and drilled into obedience to it knew not what. . . Youth passes. Youth smiles. Youth is indifferent and impersonal in its generosity, and neither knows nor cares what is done with its gift of itself. Youth knows nothing save that it must give. And so youth gives, and the world in its weary wisdom takes, knowing what a burden youth is to the young."

Gilbert Cannan will not accept the old dictum "Youth will be served." In another part he refers to "all the women of our time brooding, brooding upon the evil of the world to find a way to protect the children they must bear against such a monstrous perversion of the generous gift of youth as had overtaken a whole generation."

It is for such independent views and such fearless comment and criticism of life and men's conduct of it that his work is interesting, valuable and stimulating.

JOHN LOFTING.

A CHAMPION AGAINST BOLSHEVISM

THE WHITE DEVIL OF THE BLACK SEA—By Lewis Stanton Palen. Minton Balch & Co. New York. 1924.

It is a curious thing that throughout this book the proper name of the White Devil is never mentioned. Except that he was once the owner of vast estates and is now earning his living somewhere outside Russia as a carpenter—which might be said more or less of plenty of other Russian nobles—there is nothing to identify him, a rather unnecessary pique to curiosity as the Bolsheviks must know who he is perfectly well. His pseudonym he certainly earned. As a boy he was trained to ride by the Cossacks and no more testimony is needed. He is a swordsman, athlete, expert motorist and dead shot. And wounds and fatigue appear to have made no impression on his iron strength. His knowledge of motoring very nearly gave him an opportunity to change the history of Europe. With the aid of a faked passport he was earning a living in Moscow during part of 1918 as a chauffeur, driving his own car, and was frequently employed by leading Bolsheviks. One day he received orders to be at the Kremlin the next evening, to drive Lenin, Trotsky, Sverdloff, Kalinin and Kameneff to a conference in the suburbs. A careful plot was hatched with the aid of some brother ex-officers to make away with the whole party. But to the conspirators' grief, an abortive rising by Social-Revolutionaries broke out, and the Bolshevik chieftains stayed at home. The White Devil never got such another chance and not long after, realizing that the dreaded Cheka were after him, he decided to flee to the Ukraine. The account of the journey, during which he was once actually captured by the Cheka but managed to escape, is most thrilling. From the Ukraine he made his way to the Crimea. The Germans were still in control in these parts; but the Bolshevik tide was rising and, after the Germans withdrew, the White Devil had plenty more adventures against the Reds. Eventually he too had to go, which he did with the thousands of other refugees under the protection of the British Navy.

Long ago has the world become satiated with accounts of Bolshevik atrocity and, in reading this book, one takes unmoved its records of bloodshed—and worse, cruel tortures, the cessation of all justice and humanity, the ever present fear of arrest leading, on the merest suspicion, to instant death. It is only in retrospect that one realizes anew how hideous is the Bolshevik tyranny. The crimes of the old régime may have been great, but no offence could merit so hideous a revenge as the Bolsheviks have taken, especially remembering that the vast majority of their victims were wholly innocent.

The book is eminently readable, though a little too much in the style of a newspaper feuilleton. But if accepted as a story of adventure, which makes no pretensions to be anything else, it is good companionship for a leisure hour. In conclusion, one would pay a special tribute to the White Devil's wife. She shared all his adventures, was repeatedly exposed to the most horrible dangers, and to suspense worse than danger, and bore herself throughout with the greatest bravery and cheerfulness. Against the dark background of Russian Bolshevism the heroism of Russian women generally stands out in grand relief.

SONIA AND HER SURROUNDINGS

TO-MORROW AND TO-MORROW.—By Stephen McKenna. Thornton Butterworth. London, 1924.

No one who read that fascinating first installment of the series on "Sonia" and those about her—"the generation that grew to manhood in time to meet the shock of the war," as Mr. McKenna puts it—has been able to resist the temptation of trying its successors. Not, it must be confessed, with uniform satisfaction but surely always with admiration for Mr. McKenna's skill in delineating character, describing a scene and portraying an atmosphere. In the present volume (to quote the author once more) "the war ends in the first line and, before the last page, the Government that was charged to bring peace back to the sparse survivors has itself passed away. One phase in history has been concluded." Regarded as a treatise on that history, as an attempt to portray the confused hand-to-mouth existence of England both socially and politically, during the first two or three years after the war, "To-morrow and To-morrow" is brilliantly successful. Regarded as a novel it is less so. "Sonia" contained no plot in the orthodox novel sense, but we never felt the need of it. Nor does the present volume, but we are continually led by such phrases as "It was from this night that I date the beginning of the tragedy which followed" to expect one, only to be disappointed. It is a little like P. G. Wodehouse's description of the Russian novel "in which nothing happens until page 450 when the noujik resolves to commit suicide." For suicide read the death of that one quite impossible and exasperating character of Mr. McKenna's dramatis personæ, O'Rane, who, having inherited a vast fortune, declines to give money in public relief, because by so doing he would remove the obligation from other people of "doing their bit" and ultimately gets killed by the hunger-marchers. All one's sympathies are with Sonia, who really behaves with great forbearance and discovers an excellent trait in her character as a capable and devoted mother. O'Rane apart, the characters are drawn with consummate skill, and the whole description of one of the most extraordinary and hectic phases in English history, seen from a most interesting and intimate angle is masterly. "To-morrow and To-morrow" is in some ways a little irritating, but once begun it is not to be put down till finished.

GANDHI AND INDIA

Romain Rolland's Appreciation

"MAHTATMA GANDHI." By Romain Rolland. The Swarthmore Press. 6s.

It is almost impossible to understand the character, philosophy and policy of the subject of this book unless you have been to India, read Macaulay's essay on Warren Hastings, and come to definite conclusions on the differences in life, thought and habits which may divide for ever Englishmen from the peoples of India. Romain Rolland has contented himself by writing a biography and not a study of Gandhi; and although he is very sympathetic to his subject he refrains from committing himself. It is a well-written biography, but except for some clever passages showing the cleavage between the philosophy of Tagore and Gandhi's, adds nothing to what we already know about the most remarkable man in India. This is a pity, because M. Rolland has nothing to lose by declaring himself a believer, with qualifications, in Ghandi, if he really is one. Two notable Englishmen, Mr. C. F. Andrews and Mr. W. W. Pearson, and others, have done so without any loss of prestige. And, with certain reservations, I can see no grave reasons for not believing in what is true and wise in his policy.

The chief of these reservations is that Gandhi's policy, if it were adopted in its complete form to-day, would not produce happiness and prosperity in India, but the darkest chaos. When travelling in India you realise the dreadful ignorance of the vast majority of the people and their impotence to govern themselves. Gandhi does not believe this, no fanatical reformer ever accomplished anything by doing so. I referred to Macaulay's essay on Warren Hastings. Warren Hastings believed in one of the first articles of Gandhi's faith; education of the peoples of India in their own religions, philosophies and literatures, in all that belongs to their natures and the things of their peace. Of these the vast majority know nothing. If this policy had been carried out there might still have been the need of Gandhi to express the soul of a nation, alien in every way to us, but there would have been no need of his fanaticism and its practical application. His policy of passive resistance during a 20 years' struggle for the rights of Indians in South Africa earned its just victory, but on returning to India he made the mistake of beginning a similar campaign where the necessity for it did not exist. All that it was necessary to do to achieve his best purpose was to insist upon a system of education that would have made India and not England or Europe, a living country to the millions who are its peoples. That was what Warren Hastings desired, what Gandhi still desires, and what must be, if the British Raj is to remain safe and beneficial: if it is to be reversed as a benevolent protection for all these children of the sun, and not hated, to be finally overthrown because it comes to be regarded as a despotism backed by gun and sword, M. Rolland might have said as much, for reading between his lines he believes it to be India's chief need.—"Daily News."

WREYLAND ONCE MORE

Small Talk at Wreyland. Third Series. By Cecil Torr. (Cambridge University Press.)

The only sentence in this book which Mr. Torr's admirers will dislike is in his preface, when he writes: "This third (and final) volume. . . ." I can see no reason why he should not give us more volumes of this inimitable kind of memoir. The usual sort of contemporary autobiography is like one of those huge, boiled puddings in which, swimming in uncomfortable loneliness, appear a few plums. Mr. Torr rejoices the reader's and reviewer's heart by omitting the pudding. His brief, pointed and diverse paragraphs very often have no connexion—they are the sort of thing for which, when one finds them, one forgives the ordinary jejune book of reminiscences. He still writes mostly about his own Devon, remembering old men and old ways; recounting vanishing customs and at times gallantly attacking modern "improvements." His comments on education, on the alienation or sale of old endowments and on modern efforts to give villages water are all very sound. In lighter vein is such a tale as this: "I remember two old mathematicians dining with us; and after dinner they talked shop, and my father went to sleep in the middle of their talk. Recovering himself he said, 'I beg pardon, Mr. X; I fear I dropped asleep while you were speaking.' Mr. X replied, 'Not at all, Mr. Torr, not at all; it was Mr. Y who was speaking when you went to sleep.'"

And Chelsea Hospital

und three sides of a spacious rangle runs the plain but ified building which Sir Chris-er Wren designed to be a peace-haven for the old age of some ritain's warriors. The site was ppy choice. The gardens have aceful, old-world air, but near s the hum of busy life. Pen-rs proverbially dislike dull oundings. There is movement, lling of breadth and buoyancy, remembrance of adventure and ace in the Thames, which flows ose to Chelsea Hospital. Lon-rs keep a special corner of their ts for the veterans in the resque uniform which for ly 250 years has been a familiar in Chelsea.

The Royal Founder.

the centre of the quadrangle is a statue of Charles II., clad delightful inappropriateness in man toga. It might scarcely be e fitting, and yet not altogether propriate, if the statue repre-ed Nell Gwynne—orange girl, ess and royal favourite. A ition, so persistent as to amount act, claims that to Nell, frail but m of heart, the veterans owe r refuge. Early in the 19th ry an inn hard by the hospital displayed her head on its board, and underneath it the rd of the part she had played. en in 1837 the chaplain, the Rev. R. Gleig, wrote the history of lsea Hospital he paid his tribute Nell, acknowledging "though it s chiefly on tradition it is alluded n almost all the periodical pub-tions of the day, and has been ught not unworthy of record by nant himself." Here, then, is story as he gives it.

Duke of Hamilton's Rights.

Thame Shot" was the name given some ground on which James I. built a college for training of ties in religious controversy. er his death its numbers declined. it was abandoned in 1630. arles I. gave the old building to Duke of Hamilton, but during Commonwealth it was seized for sing prisoners, and finally for bling horses. At the Restoration, arles II. wished to grant the land the Royal Society, and the Duke's re-sentatives agreed to the sur-der of all his rights. The house found to be in too delapidated ate, and the site too far from the centre of London, so in 1681 it was purchased back by the King for £1800.

Nell's Summer-House.

Nelly had a charming summer-house at Chelsea, with gardens sloping down to the river, and there her royal lover spent many hours in her company. One day she began to plead with him to make some provision for the many soldiers wounded in his service or in fighting for his father's cause. One poor fellow had come to the door of her coach and told a pathetic story of health and strength broken in the Civil Wars.

Broken in the Wars.

The troops were just returning from an expedition to Tangier, many of them helpless through wounds and sickness, and it seemed that little care was bestowed on them by the master in whose service they had suffered. Charles set about founding some institution for broken veterans, having before him the example of Louis XIV., who had recently founded the Hotel des Invalides at Paris.

Nell's Generosity.

He was sitting with Nelly in her Chelsea summer-house when the Paymaster of the Forces came to discuss the project.

"Your Majesty could not do better than give up for the purpose your recent purchase from the Royal Society."

"'Tis well thought of," said the King, looking out of the window owards the ground suggested. "You shall have it." Then suddenly, rapping out one of his favourite oaths, he said: "I forgot: I have already given this land to Nell here."

"Have you so, Charles?" promptly broke in Mistress Nell Gwynne. "Then I will return it to you again for so good a purpose."

Her generosity was accepted, the plans went on apace, and on March 12, 1682, the King laid the foundation stone of Chelsea Hospital in the presence of a great crowd of famous people.—Fedden Tindall, in Glasgow "Herald."

MRS. WANGPOO AND HER THREE BOYS

By Douglas Andrews

One sunny day Mrs. Wangpoo asked her children if they would like to go with her to the river and have a picnic. Of course they jumped at the idea, and said "Yes, of course we will." So they started to pack the hamper with nice things, while their mother made the tea. and when all was finished they started out but just before leaving one of the boys said to their mother. "Can we please take our fishing rods."

"Oh! yes, said their mother, "that will be a fine idea, if you catch any fish we can have them for dinner," so off he scampered, and in a few minutes he came running back with all the boys' rods.

When they got there they found a nice spot against an old oaktree.

Just as the boys were getting all the things out, one of them suggested that they started to fish, so off they went a little farther down the river, and there they started to fish.

All a sudden one of them cried out "I have got a bite" and of course he was so excited that it jumped clean off the line into his mouth, but unluckily it stuck in his throat. Of course it made him cough ever so badly. They all ran back and breathlessly told their mother "He has got a fish in his throat," but she thought they were kidding her, but he kept on coughing, and she kept on patting him on the back, and she soon found out that what they had said was true, for in the next moment out jumped a big plaice.

Did'nt it give them a fright!

Mrs. Wangpoo said that they were to have no tea.

She made them wait for a quarter of an hour, then she made them promise not to do it again. She gave them tea, and then told them to pack up the hamper. Then she took them to the river bank, and fished with them. They caught lots of fish. They had a lovely breakfast on them the next morning.

PORTRAYED BY WOMEN

Is a Femininine Author Fair to Masculine Characters?

Some recent criticism has been directed against the types of men portrayed by women writers in novels and plays. The indictment is that, generally speaking, only the worst and weaker side of masculinity is presented, and that all the odds are against them. It is possible that unmarried writers are more prone to fall into this error, because they have had less opportunity of studying masculine human nature in the closest of all relationships. It is a very interesting theme this, opening the door wide to all sorts of speculations.

It may be contended against this argument that unmarried writers are not debarred from the opportunities of family life. They have all had fathers, most of them also possess brothers, and none so poor surely as not to have some men friends.

I read a very exhaustive article the other day on this very subject written by one of our ablest journalists. While blaming the women for their one-sided and, as he contended, unfair presentment of his sex, he asserted that the fault was in themselves, that they had become too self-central, too aggressively feminist in their views, and correspondingly unfitted to portray life as a whole.

The Self-Centred.

In my long experience of the literary life, its pitfalls and its difficulties, I have observed a tendency to becoming self-centred, in some cases a regrettable withdrawing from what I may call the ordinary commerce of life, which is so very educative, wholesome, and enlightening.

Devotion to one's work may very easily be translated into boredom with one's fellow-beings. All people are not interesting; some of them bore you inexpressibly, but the student of human nature and life who consistently seeks to spare himself or herself this kind of boredom may very easily fall into another error which will militate against good work.

If you surround yourself only with those like-minded with yourself, supposing you have the power and the opportunity, you at once limit the horizon and close a good many avenues of approach.

A Wide Outlook.

A catholic outlook can only be obtained by a somewhat generous experience, which will embrace even the bores whom the self-centred seek to eliminate. Generally speaking matrimony and family life provide a most excellent discipline for the student of human nature. There the gospel of give and take has to be translated into practice. All sorts and conditions of people have to be received at the house, unless one individuality grossly predominates dictatorship in matters of this kind. I have known several cases of shipwreck on this very rock.

I also think that sound family life disposes of a great deal of the morbid dwelling on sex matters which has often been hurled at the heads of women writers. There it is relegated to its proper place in the scheme of things instead of being magnified into the whole orb of existence.

On the whole I think it must be admitted that man are more successful in their portrayal of women characters than women are in dealing with men. That is the conclusion to which I have come after considerable study of contemporary fiction. I have no doubt that this will be denied in some quarters. It is a very interesting psychological problem to which we have not yet found the key.

I think it is also the principal reason why as yet we have produced no really great woman playwright.—Annie S. Swan.

WOMEN IN PUBLIC LIFE

Votes for French Women!

The question of woman suffrage is being agitated with great activity in France. A vigorous and far-reaching campaign is being carried on by the French Union for Woman's Suffrage, and the prospects are fairly bright. It will be remembered that a suffrage bill passed the Chamber of Deputies in May, 1919, and that ever since the Senate—familiar opposition!—has refused to consider the subject. Last month a similar bill, conferring the vote on women over 25 was introduced in the Chamber by M. Justice Godart, only to meet a snag. This was a counter bill for a family vote, by which every man and woman over 21 would have a vote, and the father of a family, or the mother if the father were dead, would have an additional vote for each child in the family—a measure intended to encourage large families. The linking of suffrage with the family vote confused the issue; and the conflict for priority between this measure and the straight woman suffrage measure introduced by M. Godart increased the confusion. As the result action was delayed.

A POPULAR MODEL

The women were successful in making the suffrage section of the family bill and the regular suffrage bill identical, and their hopes are high that when the next vote is taken the suffrage section can be uncoupled and sent straight along to—and through—the Senate. They would stoutly oppose the new inequality between men and women in the proposal allowing father to multiply votes; but would perhaps not oppose a revision of the bill by which father and mother divide the votes.

As a leader of the French Union writes, there is no sound reason against suffrage for French women. The Senate, she says, is hostile because it fears women may be more "religious" and more "reactionary" than men. Suffrage is coming, of course, and it's a pity these French doubters can't see they are trying to sweep back the sea with a broom.

Women Publishers.

"Women Publishers" is the name of a publishing house in London composed entirely of women, according to the Vote. Its field is the putting out of books written by women for women, the editing of a weekly paper, Every-woman—this is a new venture which was supposed to begin about the first of the year—and the training of girls in the field of letters. Miss Evelyn Gates is the founder and managing director. Miss Gates went to Norwich High School and later Newnham College, Cambridge. She was president of the college debating society and the college suffrage society. Business methods, publicity, staff control were next studied in a London store. For six months she acted as assistant editor on the Industrial Year Book, and then became secretary and assistant editor to a firm of publishers. The natural outgrowth was complete independence, so she established her own company. It was successful and the possibilities were so great that before long she registered as a limited company with a capital of £10,000. The board of directors includes five women besides Miss Gates.

So far the largest piece of work is the Woman's Year Book—a most comprehensive reference book for women—three editions of which have already been sold.

Australia's Women M. P.

Mrs. Edith Cowan, first and only woman member of Parliament for West Perth, Australia, has had one bill passed and is now working for a second, which will establish equality of sex in the matter of eligibility for public office. Mrs. Cowan sees no objection to women being ministers of the crown and thinks it ludicrous that a man should be Minister of Motherhood.

Mrs. Cowan was born at Glengarry Station, Western Australia. Her grandfather was one of the earliest magistrates of this district, so that public office is mingled with her childhood memories. Her husband was Master Registrar of the Supreme Court, and later Magistrate of the Local Court of Perth. She has four daughters and one son, who is a barrister in Perth.

Her activities have been almost too numerous to mention. She served on all sorts of committees during the war, and for her Red Cross work was honoured by the King. She is senior among the first five women appointed as magistrates to sit as members of the Children's Court. and is also senior woman justice of the peace. To sum up her activities, her interest is humanity, and in whatever branch it calls, she answers.—"Woman Citizen."

WHERE CAN WE FIND?

Time-saving Information for Busy Shoppers

(The sub-joined letter suggests a way in which this page may be of assistance to its readers, if those who want something and don't know where to find it may through these columns get in touch with those who want customers for the vrey thing desired. We hope that shoppers or merchants can furnish information which the Ed. cannot).

Dear Mrs. Pepys:

In your runnings about the shops have you happened upon a pen knife whose blades fly open by pressing a spring, thus avoiding the breaking of fingernails and the losing of temper? I'm sure the excellent stores of Shanghai must possess these convenient articles, but as I have too little time to pursue the quest I turn to you and your readers. I promise to speak right out in meeting should any similar inquirer ask a question which I can answer.

Thanking you for the hospitality of your columns,

Faithfully yours,

Home-tied Mother.

KUANGTUNG'S UNSETTLED STATE

Disaffection in Hunanese Army: Jealousy Between Yunnanese and Cantonese Troops: Lack of Protection Against Brigandage and Piracy: Press Censorship

Hongkong, June 29.

Because of disaffection in his army, Gen. Tan Yen-kai, commanding the Hunanese Army in Kuangtung, has tendered his resignation to Dr. Sun Yat-sen. Owing to lack of food supplies and ammunition from Canton, a division of Hunanese under Gen. Sun Hsueh-chin, on the East River front, recently concluded a temporary armistice with one of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming's divisions opposing it, thus causing Gen. Tan no little embarrassment, including charges of turning traitor to Dr. Sun.

The possible withdrawal of the Hunanese, it is believed, will have no great effect on Dr. Sun's strength on the eastern front, as he still has six other commanders in the field. No Cantonese troops are taking part in the operations on this front against Waichow, the forces being composed of Hunanese, Yunnanese, Kuangsi-ites and Honanese.

The Yunnanese troops, who consider the North river districts as their special sphere of influence, are alarmed at the intention of Gen. Hsu Chung-chi to detach his Cantonese troops there on the pretext that Northern troops are invading Kuangtung by way of Namyung from Kiangsi.

Armed Escorts Prohibited.

In order that there may not be too many unofficial armed organizations in Kuangtung, the Civil Governor has refused to sanction the provision by merchants of armed escorts for their goods coming into Canton by land or sea. Transport of goods is greatly endangered by brigandage and piracy and it is stated that there are still 28 mutinous gunboats at large, interfering with lawful trade. Most of the tow-boats plying between Canton and the ports of Tungkun, Heungshan and the Szeyap districts, have suspended service pending more effective protection against pirates.

Increased Cost of Living.

The interference with trade along the principal rivers and the rising cost of living owing to the war taxes are affecting all classes, especially the poorer and working classes. At the present time, in addition to the masons and carpenters, the skilled silk weavers, to the number of more than 4,000, and the Chinese pen-brush makers in Canton and the vicinity are striking for higher wages, some demanding an increase of 35 and others 50 per cent.

Deferring to the request of the Canton Press Association, the Chief of Police has finally withdrawn his censors from the publishing offices. On June 26, the editors made a joint declaration refusing further to submit their copy to the censors and themselves assuming full responsibility for what appeared in print. The reason for the declaration was that the censors had over-stepped their authority, which at the beginning was to suppress all news of military operations unfavourable to Dr. Sun. Later they went so far as editing and colouring news, and permitting some newspapers and forbidding others to insert identical reports.

Review of Police and Volunteers.

The much postponed grand review of the Kuangtung Provincial Gendarmerie, the Canton Police and the Canton Merchants' Volunteer Corps by Dr. Sun finally took place on the North Parade Ground on June 29. The foreign Consuls, local officials and leading citizens were invited to be present. Some 600 volunteers took part in the review and the presentation of colours to their corps. The streets were decorated with flags, and crowds cheered the volunteers as they marched through the streets.

After a period of three months from July 1 all real estate, the owners of which have failed to present their title-deeds for inspection and paid the fee of three per cent. of the value, will be confiscated, according to an official announcement. It is understood that a majority of property-owners have not yet taken notice of the order. The 72 villages south of the city in Honan have made a joint declaration that every lot within their jurisdiction is a private holding and that they will oppose any who treat their property as public lands. It is not believed in Canton that the matter will be pushed too far by the officials. On a protest by the citizens of Fatshan recently, Dr. Sun's men returned more than 200 buildings and grounds to their former owners.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PARLIAMENT AND THE PREMIERSHIP

Dr. Wellington Koo Willing to Take Over the Office Temporarily

DR. YEN NOMINATED BY THE PRESIDENT

Peking, July 3.

It appears that the mandate appointing Dr. Wellington Koo Taili Premier was issued without his concurrence and that Dr. Koo called on the President this morning with the intention of declining the appointment, pointing out that work at the Waichiaopu was heavy and that the forthcoming Sino-Russian negotiations would make additional calls on his time.

The President, however, insisted that Dr. Koo, as the senior member of the Cabinet, should carry on the affairs of the Premiership. Dr. Koo eventually acquiesced, but requested President Tsao Kun to nominate a new Premier as soon as possible.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, July 6.

The President submitted Dr. W. W. Yen's name to Parliament yesterday evening as permanent Premier. Voting on Dr. Yen may be carried out on Tuesday but it will be necessary for Parliament first to hold informal discussions which may delay the official vote.

As far as can be ascertained, it is now unlikely that there will be any changes in the portfolios of Finance, Foreign Affairs, War, Navy and Communications.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Strong Support for Dr. Yen but Opposition Parties with "Axes to Grind"

Peking, July 6.

The President submitted the nomination of Dr. W. W. Yen as Premier to Parliament at 9.30 last night. As no official business is transacted on Sunday and the next meeting of Parliament will be on Tuesday the idea was to give Parliament as much time as possible to consider the nomination before the next meeting. It is by no means certain, however, that the vote will be taken on Tuesday, as the political groups in the Houses are by no means unanimous in favour of Dr. Yen. The Members of the Forty-Second Club are apparently willing to support Dr. Yen for the Premiership, if their own man can be made Minister of Finance, while the smaller groups on the Opposition side have each an axe to grind. The Government supporters, or Constitutional Party, appear confident, however, that Dr. Yen will find a sufficient majority in favour of his appointment, and already a list of probable members of the new Cabinet has been drawn up. It consists of the following:—

Premier, Dr. W. W. Yen.
Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Wellington Koo.
Minister of the Interior, Mr. Chang Chih-tan.
Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Chang Kuo-kan.
Minister of Justice, Mr. Cheng Keh.
Minister of War, General Lu Chin.
Minister of the Navy, Admiral Li Ting-hsin.
Minister of Education, Dr. Wang Chung-huai.
Minister of Finance, Mr. Wang Keh-ming.
Minister of Communications, Admiral Wu Yu-lin.

It is expected that Mr. Tang Tsai-chang will be appointed Chief Secretary of the Cabinet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peing, July 7.

Dr. W. W. Yen is expected to explain his policy to Parliament on July 11. Consequently no vote on

Dr. Yen's nomination will be taken to-morrow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Decision as to Nomination of Dr. Yen Delayed Pending Usual Bargaining

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, July 10.

The decision of Parliament on the nomination of Dr. W. W. Yen for the Premiership is not expected until next week. Much bargaining has yet to be attempted, not only by M.P.'s but by the Palace Party, in whose hands the issue lies.

Besides being in constant communication with Marshal Wu Pei-fu, the President has sent an emissary to Loyang to explain the situation and secure Wu's continued support of the Presidential policies.

The first issue to confront the new Premier will undoubtedly be the gold franc question, which the Presidential Party has made up its mind to settle in terms of gold.

Dr. Yen has made no move to further his nomination beyond explaining his views to delegations of M.P.'s. Judging from the issues he will have to face if he becomes Premier, he is likely to remain inactive, allowing the cliques to fight it out among themselves.

NO PROSPECTS OF PEACE IN KUANGTUNG

Efforts to Reach Agreement Ended in Failure

Peking, July 1.

The "Chenpao" publishes a special telegram from Hongkong, dated June 30, which reports that the efforts to bring about an agreement between Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Gen. Chen Chiung-ming have ended in failure.

The message says that, at a conference at Haifeng, Gen. Chen supported the establishment of a provincial administration at Chaochoufu, where Gen. Yeh Chu has established the office of Civil Governor, while Gen. Lin Hu has established himself as Tuli at Kueishin. Gen. Hung Chow-lin meanwhile has established his headquarters as Military Commissioner at Swatow. Some details in connexion with these posts remain to be completed, and then the Central Government will be informed of the assumption of office of the officials appointed by mandate for Kuangtung last month.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE BOXER INDEMNITY

Idea of Bargaining With It in Trademarks Dispute Utterly Scouted

London, July 8.

It is announced that, in view of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce's disapproval of the suggestion that the Boxer Indemnity Bill might provide a means of bargaining with China for a revision of the Trademarks Law, Mr. A. M. Samuel, M.P. (Conservative), a member of the Executive Council of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, has withdrawn his opposition to the Bill.

The "Manchester Guardian" says that good hopes for the settlement of the Trademarks dispute are entertained and that the dropping of the indemnity claim as far as the British Government is concerned will probably increase the grounds for these hopes.—Reuter.

Marshal Wu's Suggestions.

Peking, July 9.

While the Cabinet was discussing the disposal of the remaining American portion of the Boxer Indemnity yesterday, a telegram was received from Marshal Wu Pei-fu urging that both the British and American indemnities should be used for railway construction.

The Cabinet resolved to refer the matter for consideration and report to the Ministries of Finance, Communications, Foreign Affairs and Education.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Ministry of Commerce has sent Mr. Hsia Hsun-kai, second-class secretary, to Shanghai to confer with the Consular Body on the question of trademark registration with a view to re-establishing the Shanghai Trademark branch office.

TIBETAN BORDER SUDDENLY DEPRIVED OF CHINESE TROOPS

A Chance to Reinstate the Native Princes: Chinese Soldiers Going to the Wars with Tibetan Wives Alongside

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, May 3.

The Chinese army of occupation has now been away from the Tibetan border for over one year. During February 1923, Chen Hsia-lin with his border warriors moved east to take part in the internecine struggle in Szechuan. The removal of the Chinese army from the Tibetan frontier gave us some cause for alarm; a year has now passed, however, and we have had no cause to fear. We are now beholding Eastern Tibet without a standing Chinese army and the Tibetan border without a Commissioner. The Chinese soldiers have vacated place after place during the past year and in spite of story and rumour the Tibetans have remained quiet. Will they do so, is hardly worth while asking. Anything and anybody at anytime will burst out anywhere here on the Tibetan frontier. This one fact remains—during the past year we have had a most remarkably quiet time. The border warriors have been browsing around Yachow, eight days from here, and the Tibetans have been browsing somewhere else.

The Native Princes' Chance.

During this interval ropes have been pulled in different directions and one that is being pulled very hard just now is being pulled to reinstate the native Princes throughout Eastern Tibet. What a pity these poor woollies are ignorant of the League of Nations. However, Peking is quite a long distance from Tachienlu and thither the simple Tibetan rope-pullers have resorted. Quite recently I passed three of them on the long trail across China to interview the President of this Republic. Unfortunately most of these rope-pulling delegates are pulling them for usurpers. The present members of the King of Chala's family are entirely confined to females. A clever Tibetan here in Tachienlu by the name of Chong Paoling is now putting himself forward as a prospective King of Chala. He has a rich and heavy following and might be as good as anybody, should another King of Chala be called for. In the days before the Republic, 18 native Princes ruled Eastern Tibet, and as far as we know ruled it well. Large and handsome gifts were continually being carried to Peking and all the native Princes asked in return was China's gracious smile. Costly furs and spices were carefully carried across China and as carefully laid at the feet of her Imperial Highness, and the menials who did so considered themselves more than repaid by the privilege of doing so.

No More Presents for Peking.

No more costly furs will travel across China, not if Lao Yang-ren can help it. At the present juncture in China's history it would demand the service of every lama in Tibet to see the presents carefully laid at the feet of Tsao Kun; and then there would be every brigand to bribe and every official to satisfy. In 1905 the Imperial Ambassador was murdered near Batang and the Chinese subjected Eastern Tibet; in 1921 a clever American physician was murdered near Batang and nothing was done. And now Eastern Tibet is today, 1924, in one respect as it was in 1904, namely, free from Chinese military rule. If someone in China at the present moment were only big enough and wise enough and kind enough to stand up and say, "Look here, this Chinese army of occupation must cease; it is costing the Republic so much each year in men, money, and time, and is bringing the Republic nothing in return. Let us reinstate the native Princes and put the onus on them of keeping the country quiet, and let us put no further burden upon them, more than sending once every year a small present in furs to the President of our Republic, and we will give ourselves entirely to the affairs of our own house."

Would Lhasa Accept?

The reinstating of the native Princes is a big question and would demand very wise and careful handling. When we begin to consider the question, it simply bristles with problems and difficulties. Will Lhasa accept it? Will China consent to it? Will the native people submit to it? Lhasa is keenly interested in Eastern Tibet, but whether she inclines towards the reinstating of the native Princes remains to be seen. Lhasa has her rope-pullers in Peking pulling just as hard as the others.

The Kanze Prince was the only one not removed by Chao Ehr-feng and during all these years this principality has remained loyal to China and by doing so we think has incurred the displeasure of the Lhasa government. Will Lhasa resist the reinstating of the Princes in order that she may widen the borders of her own governed territory and thus bring her direct rule to the horder of China? By doing so the border configuration will be greatly embarrassed and Ma-Chi, the Commissioner of Kansu, will find himself 30 days nearer Lhasa than the Szechuan border Commissioner.

Half Starved but Vigorous.

We are now minus an army and from what we can gather those half-starved, poorly clad, long-seasoned border warriers are giving a very good account of themselves. Every soldier who could walk was hurried from the frontier to withstand the approach of Liu I-chiu. For some days it looked as if Liu's well fed men were going to carry the day and that Chen would have to vacate the frontier, but somehow something happened and these ragged warriors made a fierce onslaught, captured 300 guns and the report says, killed 800 of Liu's men. There may be some truth in this as we now hear that the fighting has ceased and the two parties are arranging for peace.

We passed hundreds of those poor fellows going out to take part in the present struggle in Szechuan. A more dilapidated body of men it would have been difficult to find. Their garments were black with dirt and smeared all over with hard smelling Tibetan butter. What a relief it must have been to them to get out from their prison and back once more into Chinese territory. Some of them, half-starved though they were, were taking their young Tibetan wives and families with them. We could not help wondering what the lot of those poor Tibetan girls will be following their unpaid husbands down on to the warm plains of China. Very few of them ever come back to their wild mountain grass lands.

Now would be a splendid opportunity for readjusting the whole China-Tibetan situation. Unfortunately, however, Liu is marshalling his Szechuan soldiers and Chen his border warriors for no other purpose than to settle an old frontier quarrel.

PEKING POLICE TAX

To Be Enforced Despite Protests No Other Money Being Available

Peking, July 2.

General Nieh Hsien-fan, Commandant of the Peking Gendarmerie, has reported to the Government shortage of funds to meet expenses and salaries of the force under his command. It has been decided, therefore, to go ahead with the Police Tax, which is to be levied in the four suburbs of Peking, following as closely as possible the regulations of the House Tax.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

EX-RUSSIAN CONCESSION IN HANKOW

Matters of Administration

Peking, July 1.

Mr. Shen Tze-liang, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in Hupeh, has sent a delegate (Mr. Shen Jen-kun) to Peking to discuss with the Government matters connected with the former Russian Concession in Hankow. It is reported that Mr. Shen Tze-liang is submitting to the Government proposals for the future administration of the concession with a view to permanent settlement of such questions as municipal control and regulations.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE SINO-RUSSIAN CONFERENCE

Further Appointments of Chinese Officials

Peking, July 4.

The following officials have been appointed expert delegates to the Sino-Russian Conference Department: Gen. Kao Jen (appointed by the General Staff Office), Mr. Cheng Hsi-keng (appointed by the Minister of Finance), and Mr. Yen Teh-ching (appointed by the Ministry of Communications). — Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, July 6.

The Ministry of Finance has inaugurated a department to deal with financial questions which will come up for discussion at the forthcoming Sino-Russian Conference. Losses sustained by Chinese merchants through the depreciation in the value of the rouble and tariff matters are among the subjects to be submitted to the department. Mr. Cheng Hsi-keng, a member of the staff of the Ministry of Finance, will probably be in control of the department.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HSU YUAN ATTACKED BY KARAKHAN

Accused of Disinclination to Hand Russian Consulate Over to the Reds

Peking, July 9.

M. Karakhan, Soviet Envoy in the Far East, filed a protest with the Waichiaopu yesterday against the attitude of Mr. Hsu Yuan, Chinese Commissioner of Foreign Affairs of Shanghai, and is alleged to have told Dr. Wellington Koo that Mr. Hsu Yuan's attitude of indifference towards the question of the transfer of the Russian Consulate in Shanghai tends to nullify the Sino-Russian agreement.

The Rosta News Agency to-day reports that, although the Soviet Envoy, at the beginning of June, called on the Waichiaopu to deliver the four Russian ships at Woosung, the Chinese Government not only still fails to execute the delivery but also no reply has been given as yet to the Soviet Envoy in this respect. The same news agency furtner says that the ships in question are still under the charge of the Chinese Commissioner of Foreign Affairs of Shanghai with General Gleboff's followers aboard and that these Whites are constantly selling important materials of the ships abovementioned.—Eastern News Agency.

CHINA AND GERMANY

Agreement Said to Have Been Reached

London, July 4.

A telegram from Berlin states that the German-Chinese negotiations have resulted in an agreement under which German private possessions will be restored, the Deutsche-Asiatische Bank recovers its premises in Peking and Hankow and will be re-established as before the war and the Chinese war damages claim will be settled by the surrender of Chinese railway loan securities.—Reuter.

CANTON SALT REVENUE

Protest by Diplomatic Body against Dr. Sun's Meddling with Salt Gabelle

Peking, July 9.

The British, Japanese and French Legations have sent in another formal protest to the Waichiaopu regarding Dr. Sun Yat-sen's recent establishment of the Canton Salt Administration. The Consular Body in Canton have been instructed to do likewise.

Hitherto the staff of the Salt Gabelle in Kuangtung, Yunnan and Szechuan collected the revenues which for some years have been appropriated locally, but Dr. Sun Yat-sen has now turned out the staff of the Salt Gabelle.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE HAWLEY MURDER

Waichiaopu Demanding An Investigation into Cockchafer's Act

Peking, July 5.

Replying to the American Legation's protest regarding the murder of Mr. Hawley at Wanhsien, the Waichiaopu undertakes an official investigation.

Replying to a similar Note from the British Legation, the Waichiaopu makes a counter protest against the action of the Commander of H.M.S. Cockchafer. The Note says that Chinese official telegrams indicate that the case was one which might have been settled satisfactorily without resorting to extreme measures and finally requests an investigation into the conduct of the Commander in order if possible to prevent a similar occurrence in the future.

The Note is very calm and does not make any demand beyond the above.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LARGE SWORD SOCIETY

Invasion of Invulnerables in Anhui to Throw Out an Obnoxious Tuli

The Large Sword Society has invaded North Anhui, says the Chinese press. Its members claim possess all sorts of supernatural powers, including invulnerability. They caused a great deal of worry to the troops when in Honan. Their aim is to relieve people from oppression. They have established parent societies in Shantung and Honan, and military officers in these two provinces have been not a little indebted to them for the help readily rendered in the suppression of bandits. They have agents in almost every province.

Their present incursion into Anhui is said to have been made with the object of attacking Yunchow and driving General Ma Lienchia, the Tuli, from the province.

FRENCH LEGATION AND SINO-GERMAN TREATY

"In Contravention of Treaty of Versailles"

Peking, July 9.

The Cabinet yesterday discussed a recent Note from the French Legation saying that it understood that a Sino-German Agreement had been reached which contravened the Versailles Treaty as regards the disposal of German property. The Legation reserved the right to protest. The Cabinet resolved to send an early reply.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINA AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Peking, July 8.

A full meeting of the Cabinet this morning resolved to appoint Mr. Alfred Sze, Mr. Chu Chao-hsin and Mr. Wang Kuang-chi plenipotentiary delegates to the League of Nations Opium Committee.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMOY MIXED COURT

Demand for Rendition of Kulungsu Tribunal.

Peking, July 10.

The Ministry of Justice has taken up the question of rendition of the Kulungsu Mixed Court and has sent delegates to Amoy to inquire regarding the Court with a view to the Government taking up the matter with the Diplomatic Corps.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Hankow native press states that Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan has summoned the Commissioner of Finance, the manager of the Wuchang Mint and the chairman of the Hankow Chamber of Commerce to a conference at his Yamen to discuss the currency situation. It was decided that a telegram be sent to Chao Hung-ti, requesting him to prohibit further coinage of depreciated coppers in Hunan, and that severe measures be taken to prevent further influx of bad money into Hankow from the neighbouring provinces.

THE CAT FOR ARMED ROBBERS

July 7.

IN to-day's correspondence will be found a very urgent appeal for the reintroduction of corporal punishment for armed robbers. Our correspondent, who, we may be allowed to mention, can speak from many years' experience in China, does not write one whit more strongly than the case requires. The punishments at the disposal of the Mixed Court are no deterrent whatever. Doubtless the armed robber would rather not face a firing squad at Lunghua, but the remote prospect of having to do so in no way stops his armed robbing. As for imprisonment he is utterly indifferent to it. But corporal punishment has never been invoked against crimes of violence without immediate effect. It broke up the famous Liverpool roughs thirty years ago. When imposed, by special Act in England, for white slavers and men convicted of living on the earnings of unfortunate women, there followed a helter-skelter rush of these brutes out of the country. And in Hongkong it has been found necessary to abandon the practice of giving a man, sentenced to imprisonment and the "cat," half the number of strokes at the beginning and half at the end of his term, because the suspended punishment preyed on his mind.

The obstacle to the reintroduction of the "cat" at the Mixed Court is that, under the laws of the Republic of China, corporal punishment has been abolished. We will not raise the question whether that law is not more honoured in the breach than the observance. There it is, at any rate, and the Settlement obviously cannot inflict penalties which the law of the country bans as barbarous. But cannot that law be modified for special cases? In England there is in many circles the strongest dislike for corporal punishment, on general principles: but when a few years ago the Act mentioned above, to enable magistrates to flog white slavers, was being debated in Parliament, there was no opposition worth mentioning. It was generally felt that exceptional villainy called for exceptional penalties. So assuredly it might be felt in respect of armed robbers, and the Chinese Government and Parliament would be rendering an immense service if they would pass a law authorizing the "cat" for them and extending its application to the Mixed Court.

At the present time no Chinese is safe from the armed robber, who practises his trade with equal effrontery in broad daylight and under cover of darkness. The police, foreign, Sikh and Chinese, are doing heroic work and their bravery is above praise. But if they were twice as numerous as they are, they would still be powerless, while the armed robber is threatened only with death for which he cares little or imprisonment for which he cares less. We would ask the Diplomatic Body to address a note on this subject to the Government; but specially we urge the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and other representative Chinese organizations to petition Peking, for it is their countrymen whom the armed robber most persecutes. The infliction of the "cat" might be surrounded with all conditions required by national amour propre: a Chinese magistrate would pronounce the sentence; a Chinese constable carry it out; and a Chinese doctor be present during the process. Meanwhile the efforts of representatives of foreign Powers might suitably be concentrated on getting heavier sentences for smugglers of arms. With two such reforms, public order would be vastly more secure than it has latterly become.

THE HOUSE PROBLEM IN BRITAIN

July 8.

THE building strike announced yesterday, anticipating the lockout which the employers had threatened a few days previously, because they were weary of frivolous strikes, is a very discouraging result of the Government's grandiose building scheme. It is precisely the sort of thing that Mr. Wheatley, the Minister of Health, in explaining his scheme to the House of Commons on June 3, prided himself that he had guarded against; and precisely what his critics warned him he could not guard against by any means in his power. Mr. Wheatley told the House of Commons that during his negotiations with the master builders and operatives he said that it was no use talking about giving the number of houses asked for unless they could give an assurance that the cost of building would not be increased when they started to build more houses. In other words, he said he wanted to suspend the law of supply and demand in regard to house-building, and he wanted each section of the industry to pledge themselves that they would not take advantage of his launching this scheme to gain anything which they would not have gained if he had not launched it.

The trade, Mr. Wheatley continued, were quite agreeable, stipulating only that the manufacturers of building materials would not capriciously raise the prices on them. Here, again, Mr. Wheatley said that he had had no trouble. "He had to acknowledge that the building material manufacturers met him in a very generous manner, particularly the brick manufacturers." The Associated Brick Manufacturers indeed had promised bricks at a lower price than could actually be obtained. There were, however, other manufacturers not bound by pledges to the Government, and the temptation of the combine to regain their freedom in order to profit by the higher prices offering would be very great. Mr. Wheatley said, therefore, that he had prepared a bill couched in very drastic terms, to check profiteering in building materials. Mr. Wheatley went on to say that the manufacturers insisted on the importance of a long-term building programme, and pointed to the derelict brickworks all over the country as the result of fluctuations in the industry. The opponents of a long-term programme said that no other industry was given such protection. His reply was that the building industry was quite distinct from any other industry in the country. What the Government were doing was to order ahead, so that the people responsible for output would know what the condition of the industry would be for a given period. If hon. members wanted to get houses it was necessary to stabilize the building industry in the interests of the people concerned in that industry.

Interviews with local authorities had proved most satisfactory; though often politically opposed to the Minister of Health, they had done their best to meet him in every way. Thus buttressed and protected so far as human prevision can go, Mr. Wheatley believed that his scheme would really solve the housing problem at last.

How then comes it that within six weeks of this scheme being announced six hundred thousand men are on strike? We know that it has been most strongly opposed and modifications in detail have been accepted. We have not, however, heard yet that it has actually been thrown out or that in any essential it has changed its original form. In these circumstances the explanation of the strike appears perfectly clear. The building trade has long been a sheltered industry—one, that is, which cannot be threatened by foreign competition; and it is now doubly protected. It sees a prospect of a fifteen-year contract to put up 2,500,000 houses at £500 apiece, which is more than good workmen's houses can be and have been built for; and it is falling out over the division of the spoils. Whether the employers are to blame or the operatives, the public does not care; the result is all that matters and that is that, while thousands of families are herded in slum dwellings for which disgraceful is a mild word, the people who could build them houses will not and the Government cannot make them. Indeed the enormity of the remedy proposed really takes away the breath. We publish to-day a summary of Mr. Wheatley's scheme, what it would cost year by year, which shows that from the year 1940, when the maximum charge is reached, until 1963, the State and local authorities combined—in other words the taxpayer—would have to find £34,406,000 a year while the total cost to the nation would be £2,500,000,000. This is Sir William Joynson-Hicks' calculation, allowing for all charges, interest on loans, sinking fund and so forth. He might well inquire whether the Minister of Health had taken "the slightest trouble to inquire how that money was to be provided in years to come."

The right hon. gentleman smiled at that (said Sir William), but it was right that the Committee and the country should realize that they were putting on their shoulders another debt equal to, or greater than, all the amount of debt which we had paid off since the Armistice (Unionist cries of "Double"), and nearly as much as our total commitments to America at the present time.

Apart from finance, on which score alone the scheme stands self-condemned, there are not the requisite number of building operatives for the work.

All through since the war the Government had tried to come to terms with the building trade unions (said Sir William Joynson-Hicks). In 1920, at Manchester, the building trade unions resolved to resist dilution of the building trade labour with the utmost strength of their organizations. There was then a grave shortage of skilled men in the building trade. The trade unions declined to take the ex-Service men in. They were told about liberty, but he wanted liberty for unemployed men to work at a decent trade (Unionist cheers). Why should they keep a union closed like that?

And the speaker stated that, whereas twenty years ago there were 129,000 bricklayers in Britain, there were now but 53,000.

Is there no remedy which will teach the building unions that they cannot dictate to the country and keep the working classes living in conditions which, as one speaker in the House of Commons truly said, are the best possbile breeding ground of revolution? (Whether it is the unions or the employers who are to blame we have no means of knowing: at any rate, the demand for houses and the offer made for the building of them are such that we may safely conclude that nothing but greed and selfishness prevent the houses being supplied.) Mr. St. Loe Strachey, who has made a special study of small house building for many years, offers a suggestion in the "Spectator." He says that any man can quickly learn how to pour concrete, as indeed we see in Shanghai, and he would therefore call in the still employable of the thousands of unemployed and build emergency houses of wood and reinforced concrete, thus, not only providing at least wholesome houses in place of slums, but breaking the tyranny of the building unions. And he says, what is perfectly true, that, because houses are built of wood, there is no reason why they need be ugly; and we believe it may be added, that the wood can also be treated so as to make it practically fireproof. Mr. Strachey concludes with an earnest appeal: "Above all, let us not make housing a ground for party combats." With which all in theory will agree. But in practice, when the Government proposes to saddle the nation with a bill roughly one-third of the National Debt, the only visible result of which is to saddle the nation with more strikes, it is necessary for some one to protest.

ON DOMESTIC TYRANNY

July 9.

A short time ago a charming speech by Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires in London, was broad-cast to the children of England. He described his own Chinese education after the old style and compared it with modern education in England, and then told stories of virtuous Chinese children. One story was that of Min Tze-chien who was treated very cruelly by his stepmother, so that one day, being insufficiently clothed and very cold, he fell down unconscious. His father was very angry and decided to send the stepmother away. But Min Tze-chien knelt down before him and pleaded for her saying it was better he should suffer alone and not bring suffering to his stepmother and her own two sons. The stepmother was so ashamed that she confessed she was wrong and in time became a kind-hearted woman. The story was told to illustrate the filial piety of Chinese children and to show how they are sometimes examples of goodness to erring parents. It would be interesting if we had the comments made by English small boys who heard the story, especially if they had unkind stepmothers. It is extremely doubtful whether they greatly admired Min Tze-chien and his patient, uncomplaining submission; rather than submit to cruel neglect they would probably run away from home. As with the child so with the man. The love of fair-play, the hatred of injustice and cruelty and the determination to end it if possible, are qualities, whether inherited or acquired, which are ingrained in the average Englishman.

It is a question of this kind which shows the difference between the Oriental and Occidental in their consideration of social and political problems. Shakespeare deals with the same subject in the tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, but in a manner that must seem strange to the Chinese. Hamlet is overcome by the revelation that his mother and wicked stepfather had murdered his father and in obedience to a ghostly behest swears he will take vengeance. He does not accomplish his task in the way intended and the psychological reasons why he does not give to the play its deep interest. To the last, however, he meant to be avenged. In the West, stern justice is of greater importance than family ties. It is doubtful whether Chinese who read the play really understand it; certainly the young are not attracted by it. In schools and colleges Chinese students perform "Julius Caesar," "Merchant of Venice," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "As You Like It," and other well-known plays, but they do not voluntarily choose "Hamlet." To the Chinese Hamlet is no hero; he must seem as wicked as he is irresolute. For they hold it is the duty of children to submit to wrongs and to shield their parents from harm. And what they hold to-day they have always held. At the dawn of their history it is narrated that the father, stepmother and half-brother of the Emperor Shun (B. C. 2255) repeatedly tried to kill him when he was young, before he came to the throne, yet he never showed resentment; he was always dutiful to his parents and kind to his brother. In the "Sacred Edict" the people are taught that sons ought not to discuss right and wrong with their parents. "Under heaven there are no parents in the wrong." In the ethics of the Chinese filial devotion is of greater importance than strict justice. Consequently, "sons or grandsons who bring a charge against their parents or grandparents are beaten one hundred heavy blows and banished for three years; if the charge is false they are strangled." As a concrete illustration there is the case of Hsu Ch'ung-wu. A father on receiving a bribe hushed up the murder of one of his sons. Another son brought the murder to light and a lawsuit ensued. The father was excused—who can reject a bribe?—and the zealous son received the prescribed sentence of one hundred blows and three years transportation for bringing his father into danger of the law. According to the Chinese, in unfortunate affairs of this description there should be delicate adjustment, compromise, and "saving of face." If a Chinese dramatist were to adapt "Hamlet" he would make the pliant, politic Polonius the principal character.

The application of the same ideas to State affairs is very easy, for the Chinese officials are called the "fathers and mothers" of the people, and "to be perfectly loyal to them and to fulfil the duties of filial piety to the utmost, is the whole duty of man and the way to obtain the blessing of heaven." The rulers have been placed in their exalted position by Heaven, and doubtless in the case of many—the official "step-fathers"—as they may be called—the Chinese can only say, Heaven knows why; but there they are, and provided the people are not too heavily taxed and the country is fairly prosperous, there they remain unless turned out by stronger rivals, and the people are submissive being quite indifferent to the forms of government. At the present time, outside the small official and student classes, how many of the people know or care anything about the republican government under which they now exist? This raises the further question to which we so often refer. With their filial attitude towards officials and their utter lack of public spirit, is it likely that the Chinese people will ever become accustomed to democratic institutions moulded on those of the West. institutions which are the result of centuries of political clash and struggle. The Chinese should work out their destiny on their own lines, and not slavishly adopt political and social institutions which have not entered into their national development and which do not appeal to the spirit of the nation.

THE MURDER OF MR. HAWLEY

July 10.

It will be enough for most people, even for those who know nothing of the lawless conditions in China, that Mr. George Lansbury, Labour member for Bow and Bromley, has been trying to get the Commander of H. M. S. Cockchafer into trouble for his action after the murder of Mr. Hawley at Wanhsien, to enlist their sympathies for that officer. Mr. Lansbury will be remembered as formerly editor of the Labour paper the "Daily Herald," about which there was an unpleasant scandal a few years ago, never properly cleared up, in respect of a subvention from Moscow—at a time when the Bolsheviks were making furious efforts to excite revolution in England. His motto in life appears to be "my country always in the wrong." A few days ago his voice was raised to advocate the removal of Mr. Justice McCardie from the Bench, for his spirited and just vindication of the unhappy and unjustly condemned General Dyer. Now another of his countrymen has excited his venom by daring to intervene for the upholding of justice. It would pay the Labour party to ship Mr. Lansbury to some select portion of China; let him taste for himself the terrors of banditry and the indifference of officials; and let us then hear what he will have to say of naval and other officers of his own nation. Unfortunately persons of Mr. Lansbury's type, intent on vilifying those guilty of the crime of defending the British Empire and upholding British prestige, have a rooted objection to facts. They cramp their style.

Mr. Lansbury was properly snubbed by Mr. Frank Hodges, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, who, after replying that the Cockchafer was the only war vessel on the spot and "that her commanding officer took the action which he considered necessary," added that the American Commander-in-chief had thanked the British Commander for what the Cockchafer had done "which, according to the incomplete report received, had materially assisted in saving life." But while Mr. Lansbury is temporarily silenced, it is clear that other agencies are at work if possible to pull down Commander Whitehorn, and it is the more important to get a clear view of the situation. Even yet the reports of what precisely happened are incomplete; in such cases it takes a long time to sift out all details. The general outlines appear to be as follows. Mr. Hawley had gone over from Wanhsien to the junk anchorage, which lies on the right bank of the Yangtze opposite the city, to superintend the shifting of a cargo of wood-oil, which was to be taken down river for him by a foreign shipping firm. As everybody knows there has been a great deal of friction between the junkmen and the steamers over the trade which the latter are alleged to have taken from the junks; and an unwritten agreement has been come to that the steamers shall not take certain goods, among them being wood-oil. This agreement, however, does not apply in the high water season from June to October, when the junks cannot move. This season having begun, Mr. Hawley was perfectly within his rights in shifting the wood-oil by steamer. The junkmen, however, evidently thought otherwise; an altercation began, which speedily led to blows, and in the end Mr. Hawley was struck on the head with a bamboo pole and knocked into the river. We are told that the Cockchafer did fire a blank shot over the mob of junkmen; according to the wireless message received by the American Legation in Peking, her Commander, under threat of bombarding the city, compelled the leading military officials to follow Mr. Hawley's funeral on foot to the grave and also to execute two of the principal junkmen.

To be perfectly fair, we must here digress slightly to make an admission. Speaking quite generally, there appears no doubt that the junkmen have had and still have some cause of complaint against several of the so-called foreign steamers, and the Chinese officials also have their complaint against them. We have been told, and we believe truly, that some of these vessels act with but scant consideration for the junks and that deaths have been caused by their wash which might have been avoided. This grievance appears to have less weight now than formerly. The greatest complaint is that except for the British and American steamers, too many are foreign only in title. We mention no names, but there are undoubtedly Governments which ought to investigate closely the misuse for which the protection of their flags has been sold. Under that protection opium and arms are said to be smuggled with impunity and the foreign master of the ship is a mere tool in the hands of the compradore.

But these general admissions have nothing whatever to do with the case of Mr. Hawley who, as shown, was in no way breaking the unwritten law in moving his wood-oil and was moreover preparing to send it by a vessel belonging to a perfectly reputable firm. The special circumstances of Commander Whitehorn's action, which according to the American statement quoted in the House of Commons, "materially assisted in saving life," have yet to be detailed but may well be imagined. But looking to the general state of China it is impossible not to endorse his evident feeling that unless justice was done on the spot it would never be done. We have neither time nor space to recall all the examples of wrong done to foreigners in recent times and never requited. The Margary murder was one outstanding episode in a long period of years which remains historic to this day. The murders, woundings and outrages of the past three years are so many that even those whose business it is to keep in touch with Chinese affairs cannot carry them all in memory. And not a soul has ever been punished for them yet. This is the general situation with which, accentuated by an immediate crisis, Commander Whitehorn was confronted; and inasmuch as it is ridiculous to put responsible officers on board gunboats, send them up the river to protect life and then say that they are to do nothing, he decided to take "the action which he considered necessary." Emphatically we say that he was right as all his countrymen in the Far East say and, we are sure, all Americans.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR AND THE REDS

July 11.

Some weeks ago we commented on some of the leaflets sent out by the International Federation of Trade Unions, which continue to arrive by every mail. At the end of May and the beginning of June the I. F. T. U. held a Congress at Vienna, and the reports throw a very interesting light on the organization's dealings with the Reds of Russia. In the reports on which we formerly commented stress was laid on the fact that the Reds can claim no support in foreign unions. That the I. F. T. U. tried, however, to come to terms with the Russian labourers is seen from the following minute in the proceedings of the Management Committee which preceded the ordinary congress:

Our negotiations with the All Russian Federation of Trade Unions.

The correspondence exchanged with the Russian Federation of Trade Unions was submitted, and it was pointed out that the style and contents of the reply received from the Russian Federation of Trade Unions made any further attempt at rapprochement impossible. The attitude of the Bureau in this question was unanimously approved by the Management Committee.

The world has recently had some illustrations of the Bolshevik style as regards orthodox Labour in the rude remarks which Soviet speakers have been making about the Labour Government of Great Britain. It is easily understood that the I. F. T. U. did not relish Moscow's manner—and ill manners—in negotiation.

This, however, did not prevent Mr. Bramley, secretary of the British Trades Union Congress (should not the name be Bromley, by the way?) from reopening the question of relations with the Russians. We read that:

He reminded his audience that the last letter received from the Russians, dated February 7, had remained unanswered on account of its style and its general tenor. It would, however, be regrettable if the Russian trade unions were to remain outside the international trade union movement for any considerable length of time. He considered it to be an anomaly that the British and Russian Governments should be negotiating, while relations between the I. F. T. U. and the Russian trade unions were suspended. He therefore proposed that negotiations should be resumed, being convinced that this would promote the reconstruction of Europe.

With very few exceptions the meeting was dead against him. Fimmen, secretary of the International Transport-workers' Federation,—his nationality is not given—said that his own organization had long been endeavouring to effect a rapprochement with the Russians; and he maintained that the meeting of the Management Committee of the I. F. T. U. mentioned above had done nothing that really closed the door to further negotiation with the Reds. Some of Fimmen's statements appear from the report to be dubious and he himself was strongly censured by a Dutch representative for improper speeches made in Holland, the reverse of the views of the I. F. T. U. Mr. Thorne, another British member, "was against the machinations of the Red International of Labour Unions, but if they did not answer the letter of the Russians, this means closing the door to all future negotiation." To this extent he supported Mr. Bramley. The remainder of the speeches are worth quoting as summarized:

Grassmann (Germany), was of opinion that the proposals of the British could not be accepted so long as the Russians continued their campaign of calumny. The I. F. T. U. had always endeavoured to work for the reconstruction of Russia, but in view of the dishonest methods of the Russians co-operation with them was impossible.

Mertens, speaking in the name of the Belgian delegation, likewise rejected the proposals of the British delegation. Fimmen had pointed out that the reaction was steadily growing in strength and unity was more necessary than ever. But if it was asked who had destroyed unity, it would have to be admitted that the Russians (the Red International of Labour Unions) were responsible. There could therefore be no co-operation without certain guarantees. It was not true that the Russians were playing an honest game. For when the Russians were admitted to the International union of the workers in the food and drink trades, a statement at once appeared in the official organ of the Russian trade unions, to the effect that the flag of Communism must now be raised in the ranks of the trade unions. In the name of the Belgian delegation he declared that he was against the British proposals.

Lenoire (France) said he was against the British proposal. He regretted the discussions which had already taken place, because Mertens in his opening speech had fully explained the activities of the I. F. T. U., and no complaints had been raised. Although they recognized the good work done by Fimmen, they could not approve his present policy.

So far as can be seen no formal vote was taken. Obviously it was not necessary.

This expression of opinion from a body of the character of the I. F. T. U. is extremely interesting. Its members are offended by the characteristic rudeness of the Bolshevists; they find them treacherous and false as everybody else has found them; and it is clear that the I. F. T. U. "has no use for" Communism. In fact, the utter and appalling failure of Bolshevist principles as so vividly illustrated in Russia, has given to Capital the greatest opportunity it has ever had. In no country does any serious body of working-class opinion evince the least desire to experiment in revolution à la Russe. The danger of the moment is that Capital, as a body, has not yet realized the splendid chance offered to it. Certain capitalists have begun to do so. But the publications of the I. F. T. U. show clearly that it still regards Capital generally as the enemy. Here, then, is a state of three-cornered duel, which may easily open a door to the evil influence of the Bolshevists. We do not believe the danger is as yet great, because, while the Bolshevists themselves are personally abhorrent to all decent men, their creed has proved itself productive of nothing but disaster. But their propaganda is very subtle and unwearied and one wishes that there were more counter-propaganda from the other side—not in words, of which the world is surfeited, but in deeds, for the satisfaction of some of Labour's reasonable aspirations.

THE ARMED ROBBER CHALLENGE

July 12.

Very serious information reaches us to the effect that the armed robber has begun to turn his attention to foreigners. A case has occurred of an anonymous letter sent to one hong, threatening that if a considerable sum of money were not forthcoming by a given date, the manager would be shot. It is unnecessary to say that no notice has been taken of the threat. If once foreigners suffered themselves to be intimidated in this fashion, there would be an end of all peace and security. But the community of Shanghai cannot be contented to leave matters in this stage. Apart from the by no means improbable event that some foreigner will presently be shot by an armed robber—whose chances of getting away are at least nine to one and who is faced with no penalty in Shanghai for which he cares a rap—we have, all of us, to recognize that these villains have thrown down a challenge to society which it can no longer ignore. Furthermore we must recognize that the danger has already gone beyond what the ordinary organization of government is capable of controlling.

This was the feeling which prompted the Acting Commissioner of Police to invite representatives of the Street Unions to a conference last Tuesday. The meeting was imbued with the friendliest spirit. But from what has since appeared in the Chinese Press, it is to be feared that the results will not be great—at least not great enough for the need. The unanimous objection to the reintroduction of corporal punishment on the very flimsy pretext that it is contrary to democratic principles, notwithstanding that it is notoriously in use in practically every yamên in China, can only mean one thing. Any Chinese who writes in support of corporal punishment or puts his name to a petition advocating its reintroduction, has a lively mental picture of himself with a bullet through the small of his back, which effectually silences him. The appeal, therefore, for corporal punishment is to the Consular and Diplomatic Bodies, for urgent representations to the Chinese Government that a special emergency act may be passed authorizing the "cat" for armed robbery and unlicensed possession of arms. Let it be remembered that any British subject in Shanghai who committed a crime of violence could be sent to the British gaol and given the "cat." Yet for a Chinese similarly convicted there is, at most, the fear of being shot at the Arsenal, which in plain truth he very little fears, or imprisonment in the Mixed Court gaol, which is merely a holiday for him with plenty to eat and nothing to do. Corporal punishment he does fear and we most strongly urge that the Diplomatic Body will use every means in their power to get it authorized.

But even if the effort succeed, it must take a long time to do so and we cannot afford to wait. We may smile at the escapades of a Ku Klux Klan but something on those lines is what is needed now. No tribute too high can be paid to the police for what they have done and are daily doing. But it is no more than plain fact to say that the evil is now beyond their power to cope with unaided. Let us recall what was done by the Government of the Irish Free State to put down the gunmen after the signing of the treaty with Great Britain. These gentry continued to be as great a menace to Free State officials as they had been to the British Tommy. The Government therefore called in the aid of every able-bodied and athletic young man whom it could get—and the response, we are told, was enormous—it had them trained to such expert use of the revolver that they became dead shots in almost any position and it turned them loose to shoot the gunmen down wherever they could be found. In a very few weeks, there were no more gunmen. Precisely the same thing has been done in the Western States of America and in Australia, against train-robbers cattle-thieves and bandits, wherever outlaws have raised a challenge to society which the ordinary forces of the law could not deal with effectively; and we say that something of the same kind is necessary here in Shanghai today. We do not doubt that hundreds of young men and older ones too would respond with the greatest alacrity to such a call on their services; and it is probable that the mere knowledge that these men were being trained to expert use of the revolver, with a view to their using it instantly in an emergency, would send the armed robbers packing elsewhere.

We foreigners all, not only the Municipal Council, have a double duty as regards Shanghai. It is the place set aside for our residence which we govern and defend. It is thus a well conducted city where life is in the main peaceful and secure. And accordingly it is an Alsatia for the armed robber. In order to keep Shanghai peaceful and orderly we must stamp him out; and because we are responsible for the government of the Settlement it is to our own efforts we must look and not to the Chinese. The situation is not less serious now than it was in the epoch which culminated in the Battle of Muddy Flats. All able-bodied foreigners then made common cause to secure the Settlement and once again the same duty confronts them. If their help can be admitted, we do not doubt that it will be abundantly given and we are convinced that it will be effective. Incidentally, we do not see why the Volunteers might not be invoked to patrol roads and search all Chinese. That measure would at first cause offence and inconvenience to many respectable citizens, but they would soon realize the purpose of it for the common welfare. But the principal measure employed should be that which the Irish Free State Government found so successful. We are aware that many people will say at once "OK but we could never do that in Shanghai!" The answer is simply, Why not? An unparalleled evil has grown up amongst us which calls for measures of equal force or it will grow to such bounds that life in Shanghai will become impossible. The mob has armed itself against society and the only remedy is that society should be armed against the mob.

THE FILMED FAREWELL

I

Why is it, on the "silver screen,"
In each melodramatic scene
Of love reciprocated
'Twixt two who ne'er may wedded be Without committing bigamy,
The twain appear elated
To bid each other thus farewell—
Deprived of speech her grief to tell
She vouchsafes him a Wintry smile,
Her head in "chancery" the while
To prove her troth full plighted.
He, struggling long in grim despair,
Assumes a nauseated air,
Then, gingerly, he sniffs her hair.

II

One sees no clandestine embrace
That reason dictates would take place
In common walks of life.
Nor hint of furtiveness that marks
The bearing of a man who "sparks"
Another fellow's wife.
Mayhap such crude expedient
Might not convey the scene's intent:
But rather point to strife.
To demonstrate the full degree
Of his great ardour, we thus see
Marked symptoms of gastric distress
Upon the hero's face, no less,
As, cautiously, he sniffs each tress.

III

Occurs the thought—at Hollywood
Hair lotions perchance are not good—
Or face creams slightly sour.
Mayhap directors—astute men—
Release sulphide of hydrogen
When comes the parting hour,
For that actors cannot portray
Deep anguish any other way. Else why
That look fraught with disgust—
The countenance wracked with mistrust—
Expression grim and dour,
The hero seems perforce to wear
When, nostrils twitching in despair,
His brow descends to meet her hair?

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Journey to Mokanshan

"I wonder if you have been to Mokanshan," writes a correspondent. "We arrived up here yesterday (i.e. last Saturday) afternoon only four hours late. The train was good, but its boys were eyidently bought over by another traveller and his gang and we could not get any breakfast to speak of. (We travelled on the night train). The motor-boat Comet only broke down thirteen times and eventually was towed into Sanchiaopu. The sedan chairs were out of repair and it appeared to be no one's business to look after them. The Comet's engines are only fit for the scrap heap and her hull is totally unfitted for the service. So journeying to Mokanshan just now is not all as it should be." It is a great pity that the attentions of the Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway which is doing a great deal to popularize Mokanshan should be neutralized by want of care in details. Last year new sedan chairs were introduced, well designed and with good covers and aprons. But already by the end of the season they were in sad repair, footrests broken, aprons missing, hoods out of order. The accumulation of repair work necessary then must have been heavy. It is another case of "a stitch in time." A little regular inspection of the chairs would obviate big expense and many complaints; and there are quite enough employees in the Rest House for such inspection. Both the launches are of the wrong build. The engines are forward, the passengers aft, the bows are built up high into a cabin shutting off air, and when the awnings are down against the sun the heat is stifling. The engines are probably all right if only the engineer would let them alone. He is for ever tinkering with them unnecessarily, the result being breakdowns and stifling fumes. One reform can easily be made and it is highly necessary and would cost nothing. Start the Saturday morning launch at 4 a.m. instead of 6. Voyage over before the heat comes on. We pleaded for this before. We urge it again.

China Coast Piracy

Of particular interest is the letter which is reproduced in another part of this issue, stating that H. M. Government has decided to appoint a committee to inquire into the whole question of the prevalence of piracy in the waters adjacent to Hongkong. Apparently the Committee will meet as soon as a report from the Governor of Hongkong is received. It will be remembered that when questions were asked in the House some weeks ago on the subject of piracy, Mr. Thomas was very non-committal, stating that no definite information could be given out until a report, for which the Governor of Hongkong had been asked by cable, had been received. While it is satisfactory to know that this important subject is at last to receive official investigation in London, it is a matter for regret that the Committee which has now been appointed was not convened two years or so ago, when the rivival of the China Coast pirate became a real menace to all classes of shipping in these waters. It is peculiarly significant that representatives of both the Hongkong Government and of the ships' officers should be at Home at the present time (we refer to the Hon. A. G. M. Fletcher, Colonial Secretary of Hongkong, and Mr. J. Watson, Secretary of the Marine Engineers' Guild, both of whom have played an active part in past negotiations between the Hongkong Government and the Officers) and it is to be hoped that the Committee will take advantage of their presence to receive authoritative views from two sides of the piratical triangle; the third side—that of the pirates themselves—cannot, unfortunately, be represented. Incidentally, it is well-known that the Commander-in-Chief of the China Squadron has taken a great interest in the local piracy problem, and his views, also, should be of great assistance to the Committee. The Naval authorities have, however, been consulted comparatively so little in the matter that it would not be surprising if, even at the London investigation, they were again ignored.

Norway's Capital

A brief Reuter's telegram was received this week stating that the name of Christiania, the capital of Norway, had been changed by act of parliament to Oslo. An interesting story lies behind the change, which is the result of a recent press campaign in Norway. Oslo is not a new name; the name of the town was Oslo up till the middle of the 14th century. At that time Norway had an alliance with Denmark and Sweden, but trouble arose regarding the setting up of a monarch to rule the two countries. The Danes wished to set up one King Christian, to whom, however, the Norwegians had a rooted objection. Norway refused to accept him, and his monarchy was imposed upon them by force. King Christian came to the town of Oslo, as it was then called, and built an extension to it, naming the whole after himself, Christiania. The name remained for centuries, until recently, when, as already stated, the press of Norway started a campaign to have it altered. They pointed out that the name smacked of an old defeat and it would be fitting if it were changed back to Oslo as it used to be. The government were finally prevailed upon to agree, as told in yesterday's cable. It is interesting to note that even before this last change of name, there was a suburb of Christiania known officially as Oslo.

Our Money-Changers

The local situation as regards "small" money has been chaotic for a long time, but during the last year or two it has become more involved still, what with some shops demanding fractions of a dollar in "big" money and others being (presumably) content with "small;" with the ratio value of copper coins to the silver dollar being as constantly changing as that of small silver to coppers; with lightweight coppers arriving and being circulated in great quantities; with the tramway people accepting one class of copper but not another, but always reckoning a silver dollar as worth (to the tenderer) 100 coppers; with the circulation of spurious 20 cent pieces and, more recently, the arrival of Kuangtung coins which the Chinese look at askance; the shortage of 10 cent. pieces, the call for more, and the arrival from Hangchow of coins which the money-changers will not recognize; and with other small variations too numerous to mention. Truly, he is a wise man—and in any case a Chinese—that fully comprehends the small money situation, and the average unsuspecting foreigner can but trust to luck and hope for the best. But if the Chinese currency market needs drastic attention, so also do the Chinese money-changers, who rob the public and particularly the (more or less) innocent foreigner with an unblushing rapacity worthy of a native cook. In the International Settlement, changers are required to display a notice specifying the conversion values of dollars to subsidiary coins, and of the more important subsidiary coins to their lesser and baser brethren. At a visit to three money-changers on Saturday, a 20 cent. piece produced respectively 10 cents silver and 14 coppers, 10 cents silver and 12 coppers, and 10 cents silver and 13 coppers, so that obviously someone was indulging in a little high finance. In the French concession, where no sort of official supervision appears to be exercised, even wider disparities are possible. While doubtless the police do impose some control, a great deal more would appear to be necessary, and particularly in the neighbouring concession, where each and every money-changer seems to be a law unto himself, unfettered by officialdom and unmoved by any protests his victims may make.

The Tramways

Once again a tale of amazing profits has been told by the Chairman of the most criticized company in Shanghai. In the previous year the Tramway Company's profits appealed to non-shareholders as being very nearly big enough, but during the past year the operating profit amounted to a sum of £101,771, or an increase of £4,773. It should be impressed on the mind that there is no mistake here, and the sum is in pounds sterling, not taels or dollars. The shareholders—a considerable number of whom are permanently out of Shanghai—receive a dividend of 20 per cent. As usual, the main burden of the Chairman's address had to do with the large sums lost to the company by depreciated small coinage and the most of the rest of the speech was devoted to a cheery story of the further vast profits it is expected to make out of the tramway extensions, in connexion with which,

"A satisfactory feature of the railless concession is that our capital expenditure under it will be in respect of our own property. We shall have nothing to pay for the reconstruction of the roads, which is undertaken by the Council, and is already well advanced."

Would that the Chairman had been in a position to say, and had said, something like this:—"Out of our huge profits we have hired several thousand of the many unemployed people in Shanghai and thus have been able to complete the relaying of the tramway track in record time for such a work. Further, we have built a large number of additional cars to relieve the overcrowding and we have put effective gates on all our rolling stock." The Chairman could not and did not say these things, because, although the first has been started, the second is undeniably necessary, and the third is an order by the Municipal Council (who gave the Tramway Company the concession), the first and last have not been completed after a year's work and the intermediate reform, so far as anyone outside knows, as yet has not been commenced. Incidentally, one might ask why, if the Company's profits increased by £4,773 in a year to a total of £101,771, it was necessary during that year to increase the fares?

Democratic Officialdom

There was an interesting little feature about the letter regarding the Committee which the home Government is to appoint to go into the piracy question which was published in our columns on Saturday. Instead of beginning in the time-honoured way, "I am commanded (or directed) by His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies," it commenced, "I am directed by Secretary Thomas....," so that presumably His Majesty's Labour Government has commenced to democratize the country by instituting a more or less democratic phrasing in official letters, apparently based on the American form of address. It is, of course, quite possible that this is but a beginning of a wholesale departure from the old-fashioned custom of official correspondence being full to redundancy with titles and politeness, and though probably the omission of the old hackneyed phrases will tend to the saving of a little time and occasionally a little paper, one cannot help a slight feeling of regret at the likelihood of some of the dignified if at times sonorous-official titles and phrases giving way to those more terse and equally descriptive. It still is a matter for thankfulness, however, that the new phraseology is (presumably) to be on the American pattern and that there appears to be no probability of so drastic a procedure as borrowing the communistic code of letter-writing, when letters to unknown individuals would possibly begin "Comrade" and possibly contain references to such persons as "Brother" Haldane, "Comrade Inge," and so on. Anything but that.

China's Workshys

It was very satisfactory to note the enthusiasm with which the street unions responded to the suggestion that they should assist the police in coming to a decision as to what more can be done towards the suppression of armed robbers. As a matter of fact, the real remedy is perfectly obvious, and again it is satisfactory to note that several of the street unions are agreed that flogging is the antidote. If they are not already aware of the fact, it will interest the Chinese to know that it is the experience of the West that it is not the actual infliction of a flogging that proves a corrective, but the mere knowledge that the risk of one is being encountered. Hardened brutes and cringing cowards alike shrink from it and accordingly mend their ways or take their departure. One of the unions strayed somewhat from the course and suggested finding work for idlers, forgetting that the common loafer as a rule is not the type that becomes a violent desperado. The armed robber usually is quite an energetic fellow and not the sort who would accept humdrum steady work just because it was offered to him. Yet that particular union could be advised to go further with its suggestion and if it did it might bring about another much-needed reform in China. The Chinese cannot be classed amongst those curious people who regard beggars more or less as holy people, and indeed they seem to look on them with loathing and contempt, which makes it all the more strange that they should tolerate being sponged upon by millions of ease-ridden cadgers in every corner of the country. There are beggars in England—and even in Scotland may be found a few people who accost passers-by with, "Goot shentlemans, spare von coppers for der poor inzurance mans"—but when the police get them or they are driven by hunger and cold to apply at a workhouse, they are put to a stiff task of stone-breaking and they have to complete it before they get a meal, unless a doctor's attention is immediately necessary. The suggestion has been made before and it is repeated—if China would rope in all her beggars, give them a thorough scouring and then put them to work, she would have thousands of miles of roads built in no time.

Trade Marks Registration

The Tientsin correspondent of our contemporary, "Finance & Commerce," has drawn a very interesting conclusion from the message that Marshal Chang Tso-lin intends to set up an independent Supreme Court for Manchuria and has ejected the judicial official appointed by Peking, to the effect that, therefore, it is obvious the Peking Trade Mark Bureau will not have any authority in Manchuria. This seems to be perfectly logical. It appears to be the general impression that Manchuria's overlord will set up his own Trade Marks Bureau, in which case it may be taken for granted that he will give the protection he is quite competent to afford to all marks registered therein, for Chang Tso-lin invariably is fair and just, even if despotic, but if he has his own Bureau, taking in fees for his own treasury, about the last thing he would do would be to give protection to trade marks registered in Peking and not in Mukden. The same argument applies word for word to Canton and to any other independent administration which has been or may be formed. This latest development ranks amongst the very strongest arguments against the new bureau. From the beginning it has been under suspicion because merchants had very grave reasons for doubting the fairness of a Chinese judge's interpretation of the legal rights of foreigners, but now we come to the position where, even should the judge vindicate his character and give a perfectly just ruling, there would be no possible means of enforcing it, because of the possibility of Peking having absolutely no jurisdiction in the district where it applied. In a recent note it was mentioned that one Shanghai firm alone would have to pay at least $20,000 in registration fees and since then it has been ascertained that another will be involved for quite $30,000, whilst some may have to pay even more. With such figures before one, it is easy to understand why Peking wants to have the bureau established and to make it compulsory for foreigners to register there. It is just as easy to understand why foreign merchants are asking for further guarantees of protection before they register.

BOMBAY'S first experience of this year's monsoon has been unhappy and disastrous. Considerable damage to city traffic was caused on June 16 by heavy floods in Chowpatty, popularly known as Bombay's sea face, where sea water created a serious breach in the embankment, the waves actually throwing heavy stones on the road facing the Arabian Sea. The police station in Walkeshwar Road has been consumed by the sea opposite Harvey Road which was already blocked by a train. Some of the Bombay development projects have been washed away by the sea.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

FAMINE THREATENING KUEILIN

But City Still Holds Out Against the South: Populace Exising On Worm Eaten Rice: 68th Day of Siege: Hunan Intercedes Between Marshal Lu and Gen. Shen

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kueilin, Si., June 17.

The Peace Delegate sent from Hunan by Gen. Chao Heng-ti to try and effect a settlement between the warring factions entered the city again on Saturday last. A guard of honour was mounted for him inside the east gate and escorted him direct to Marshal Lu's yamên. This was three days ago. While there has been no official announcement, rumour has it that peace negotiations have failed.

The outside forces have heard reports of famine conditions prevailing in the city and civilians dying from starvation. Thus they think it but matter of a few days before the besieged forces will have to surrender. They on the other hand believe that relieving forces from Hunan are nearing the city and that soon the besieging troops will have to withdraw.

Fighting is not nearly so severe now as it was on Sunday, when five explosive shells were thrown into the city. Each side continued sniping day and night, while the old cannon roar from the city wall. The outside forces seem to have given up the thought of taking the city by force and are now just holding and trying to starve out the city. The reports that have reached them are that large numbers in the city are being starved to death daily, but these reports are exaggerated.

The food situation is severe, and the people outside the East Gate especially are suffering very much indeed. These are not allowed to enter the city to buy food, and although they may still have a little rice, they cannot get vegetables and many of them are almost driven to desperation. Some have tried to cross the river in their boats, but have been driven back by rifle fire and some of them have been wounded.

Inside the city wall conditions are a little better, but the siege is telling severely on the health of the people. The rice that is now being supplied the hungry populous from the city granary, is years old, and musty and worm eaten. As a result of this long prolonged starvation diet sickness is breaking out on all sides to an alarming degree and deaths are not infrequent. Diarrhoea and boils seem to be two common maladies. In some of the city institutions where a number of people are living together nearly every one is affected.

4,000 Casualties.

The supply of rice is undoubtedly running short. At the same time adequate supplies have been reserved for the soldiers, but the supply available for the civilian population has now been diminished. The siege has now lasted for 68 days and it is estimated on good authority that the casualties on both are 4,000.

One-hundred and forty big shells have have been thrown into the city and about 100 civilians have been killed or wounded while the loss to business cannot be estimated. Everyone sighs for peace, but whether it comes with a crash of arms or through peace parley will be decided in the near future.

RECORD FLOODS AT CHANGSHA

Wesleyan Mission Under Water: Villages Washed Away and Many Drowned

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Changsha, Hu., July 2.

We are suffering from the highest flood which has occurred since 1906, which was the highest yet recorded. The Customs mark at 11 a.m. touched 37ft. 4 in. The river side of the city is under deep water. In the Wesleyan Methodist Compound, which lies on the west side of the city, the water is about 3 ft. deep on the paths, 3 ft. 5 in. in one of the lowest parts; there are about 6 in. in the chapel itself. The rise was rapid. Yesterday morning at dawn, it just crossed one of the garden paths at one point; by breakfast every path was covered.

One cause of the flood was unusually heavy rain in the middle of June. In the county of Ninsiang, half way between Changsha and Yiyang, the rivers rose 30 ft. Many were drowned and thousands of homes were wrecked. One of the country villages on the river bank was one which was totally destroyed by Chang Chin-yao's soldiers in the summer of 1920. Some of the houses had never been rebuilt. Now, all that had been are again destroyed, as effectually this time by water as then by fire.

All fields within some miles of Changsha will lose their crops and have to be replanted with fresh rice. In all such fields there will be no second harvest this year.

THE FLOODS IN FUKIEN

Request for Government Aid

Peking, July 1.

Admiral Sah Chen-ping, Civil Governor of Fukien, has telegraphed to the Government suggesting that Government assistance should be floods in Fukien. The Cabinet regiven to sufferers from the recent ferred the matter to the President and it is expected that a mandate will shortly be issued announcing the relief to be given.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HUNAN'S GOVERNOR AT SCHOOL SPEECH DAYS

Three Girls Winners of Gold Wrist Watches: The Governor's Prize

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Changsha, Hu., July 2.

During the past two or three weeks we have been enjoying (or suffering) a long series of "commencement," "closing exercises" etc. At the Yale and Hunan-Yale Medical Schools commencement, the Governor of the province honoured the occasion with his presence. He also attended the similar gathering of the I-fang Girls' School and three fortunate girls won three gold wrist watches which he had presented. His praise of the I-fang School, which is presided over by Miss Tseng, a direct descendant of Tseng Kuo-fan, was well expressed, and as well deserved. There is not the slightest doubt that the school is a Chinese school, run by a Chinese lady with English helpers, for Chinese. But the work is as thorough as in any school in the country.

DARING TRAIN ROBBERY AT FENGTAI

Military Funds Stolen by Ex-Soldiers: Two Thieves Captured by Police

Peking, July 4.

A daring robbery occurred on the Tientsin-Peking train at Fengtai yesterday afternoon. Colonel Ho, a Staff Officer serving under Gen. Li En-kuei, was bringing money to Peking for his chief from Tsinanfu. Just as the train was leaving Fengtai two ex-soldiers, who had travelled on the same train from Tsinanfu, rushed into the Colonel's coupé, grabbed some bags containing $500 in silver and jumped off the train. The train was quickly stopped and the robbers were followed and captured by Colonel Ho and some police.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PRICELESS CHINESE ANTIQUES

Governor of Tsingtao Exhibiting an Unrivalled Collection of Curios

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, July 2.

Lovers of antiques and curios of Chinese art are rejoicing over the fact that the Administration is sponsoring a public exhibition of rare and costly objects which will be held from July 15. Governor Kao En-hung has placed his entire collection at the disposal of the Exhibition Committee, the Governor's collection being valued at several hundred thousand dollars. One of the attractive features will be fine old Chinese porcelain. There are porcelain objects of the Chuin Yao.

Among old porcelain objects, productions of the Chuin Yao have been very highly appreciiated in the history of Chinese fine arts. This kiln was founded during the dynasty of North Sung at Chuintai, now known as Yuchow, in the province of Honan.

Nearly all the Chuin productions which are still in existence, were manufactured during the dynasty of South Sung, with thick bodies and coarse enamel known to experts as "earth worms creeping in the mud or traces of boring ants" which although they are not of the best quality from the point of view of porcelain manufacturers, still fetch very high prices and are considered invaluable for collectors. As for manufactures during the North Sung period, they are now very rare and few collectors have the fortune of even meeting with them.

An Emperor's Favourite.

Among the collection of Chuin Yao wares of Mr. Heng (and these will be exhibited during the coming Exhibition of Fine Arts here) there is now a large bowl, made in imitation of Chai Yao, and genuine North Sung manufacture, with dark brown rim and iron grey bottom edge. After a period of a thousand years the bowl is still perfect, without the slightest defect; in fact its state of preservation is marvellous. The body is even, thin and heavy, the enamel bright and lustrous like polished jade. The surface is smooth and velvety with a colour known as "the clear sky after the rain" and brilliant spots.

The bowl was for some time owned by the Emperor Chien Lung of the late Ching Dynasty, but it is a well known fact that although the Emperor had a large collection of Chuin Yao wares, the bowl in question was his special favourite, for he wrote a special verse which may be found engraved on the bottom of the bowl.

In view of the forthcoming exhibition of Chinese paintings, writings and antiques arranged by Mr. Kao En-hung, the Governor of this territory, for the foundation fund of the Tsingtao University, Mr. Heng, who is an official connected with the Administration here, has agreed to have the bowl exhibited and a chance given to connoisseurs and lovers of Chinese antiques to add this unique specimen to their collection. The bowl has been valued by experts at $100,000 Mexican, but it is understood that in consideration of the purpose for which the proceeds will be devoted, any reasonable offer will be taken into consideration.

Previous to the opening of the exhibition, the bowl may be seen by appointment with Mr. Hong who may be found at the Tsingtao City Bank.

RUSSIA'S CHALLENGE TO JAPAN

Give up Saghalien and Be Friends or Take the Consequences

Moscow, July 4.

M. Stekloff, writing in the "Izvestia," says that the first necessity of a Russo-Japanese agreement will be the evacuation of Northern Saghalien. M. Herriot's policy finds an echo in the policy of the new Japanese Cabinet in its clauses and different "buts." The Government wants to establish peace on the Pacific Coast, but will not sacrifice the vital interests of the Russian Far Eastern population. Japan must choose antagonism or follow in China's footsteps.—Reuter.

ANTI-FOREIGN FEELING IN HANGCHOW

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

The anti-foreign feeling is increasing with the heat.

The rice boats which bring the rice to the city are scarce these days so the price of rice has gone up and the Chamber of Commerce is looking into the matter.

The Educational Association is making arrangements for the opening of Summer Schools both for scholars and pupils.

The second cocoon crop is reported as very good.

Twenty-cent pieces abound everywhere and are not wanted and ten cent pieces are in great demand but are not in circulation.

Miss Lang who was seriously hurt by being thrown out of a ricsha on her way to the Shanghai Station en route for Mokanshan is getting on well and it is hoped she may be fit to travel by boat on Friday night.

Miss Lock King who has been a missionary in Foochow for many years at her own charges, is retiring at 77. Her "Staying powers" have been great. She is paying a visit at present to Dr. and Mrs. Main before going home and is being warmly entertained.

AUTONOMOUS CHEKIANG

The "Constitution": No Votes for Women: Money and Brains Male Qualifications

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wenchow, Chê., June 30.

The Draft Constitution for Autonomous Chêkiang is causing considerable interest in Wenchow among businessmen and students. The Civil Governor's mandate for the election of three members from this prefecture to sit on the provisional deliberative council for five months has been obeyed. The Chambers of Commerce of the six hsiens each choose two men and these 12 elected one of their number to represent them on the council. Mr. Tang Kang, President of Wenchow Chamber of Commerce, was elected. The Educational Association and the Agricultural Association proceeded in the same way and Mr. Hsu Te-ming and Mr. Tsai Kuan-fu, a former secretary of the Provincial Council, were also elected.

The new constitution seems to be thoroughly democratic in conception —all officials from the Governor down to the minor local men, are to be chosen by the people.

The franchise is not to be extended to women, much to the disappointment of a considerable number of women students. The qualifications for the franchise are very much the same as under the former régime—partly dependent on person's education and partly on his financial standing.

The Egregious Student.

The shameful feature surrounding the resignation of the Principal of the 10th Chêkiang Middle School is the method by which it has been brought about. Former Wenchow students now living in Peking wrote many letters to the Peking and Shanghai Chinese newspapers point out the unfitness of the man for his position. All the man's foibles and weaknesses were laid bare and he was told that the only decent thing for him to do was to resign. This being unavailing the same former students got some influence to bear on the provincial Board of Education and finally a resignation was extorted.

BANDIT OUTRAGES IN IN ANHUI

A Serious Situation

Peking, July 7.

Foreign telegrams report that upwards of 1,000 tufei are terrorizing the central districts of Anhui. They killed the Chief of Police at Luchow. The Taoyin of Luhan is missing and the yamên has been looted. The Taoyin of Wuhu has been sent to Luhan to take charge. The Tuli has sent troops to the scene from Pengpu and Anking. The reports state that the situation is assuming grave proportion.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

EVERYONE ON CYCLES IN SHANSI

The Universal Wheel: Poor Scholars Hunting Hungrily for Next Term's Fees

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kiangchow, Shan., June 30.

That the school holidays are commencing is very apparent, for every where the modern schoolboy, and school-girl are in evidence. They crowd the shops purchasing (let us believe!) presents for their devoted parents (?) and other etceteras, not forgetting the new craze, for locally-made boiled sweets.

Bicycles are everywhere and speed records are discussed and compared. Ten-day cart journeys are now performed by "bike" in perhaps two days or a little more and many carters and innkeepers the poorer from the loss of customers.

The increase of cycling in Shansi the last two years is truly phenomenal and if statistics were available would certainly be interesting. In this and neighbouring cities where five years ago or even less, a bicycle was regarded as a curiosity rarely if ever seen, and of little practical utility, now every large business house possesses one or two, and the yamên officials find them indispensible and this even away from the motor-road.

One of the pathetic aspects of the students' holiday is the way so many have to devise ways and means to raise their next term school fees. The many notices which appear at this time calling for new scholars are eagerly scanned to discover what institutions are offering scholarships or, as often happens in the case of entirely new ventures, either offering financial inducements or remitting fees. Luck failing along these lines, a bombardment of the parents follows. Should these be of the old-fashioned type entirely out of sympathy with modern education, the holiday weeks will for Master Young China be a strenuous time. Maternal susceptibilities will have to be cunningly worked upon, and arguments prepared for repeated encounters with "paterfamilias" who may be not unwilling but parsimonious or unprepared to disburse fees on the entrance day and anxious to know when and what prospects of a liberal return in cash and "face" may be depended upon. Then there is the "elder brother" looking over his shoulder all the while with the ever ready "thou never gavest me" ——"and this thy son hath" It is wonderful what a convenient friend the maternal uncle seems to be in many cases. And in August there will be many a penniless youth scudding along on a bicycle towards Taiyuan or Peking, glad that the holidays are over and that a victory has been won which will tide him along perhaps half the term.

In the Good Old Days.

In the old Imperial days poor scholars frequently were helped liberally from funds for the purpose which existed in most "hsiens" Such endowments have disappeared with a good many other good things of pre-Republic times, and despite many advantages offered by Government and also Mission Schools or Colleges, ambitious but poverty-stricken youth is having many a hard struggle totally unknown or unthought of by the spectator who regards the students in the big city as irresponsible, care-free lads having a good time.

There is a vacancy for an Andrew Carnegie to discover latent talent in unexpected quarters, eliminate the undesirables, and set on their feet some of Shansi's brainy boys, who lack rich uncles!

And while we say this, we are not ignorant of the large number of Shansi men who, having risen themselves in the world, are lending a helping hand to poor relations.

The Terrible Drought.

There is still no rain. Thunder showers in localities are reported, but no general downpour such as is urgently needed to save the present acute situation. The heat is intense and continuous without a break. The shade thermometer keeps over 80 and registered as high as 107 last Saturday afternoon. Without records for reference, we venture to doubt if such a temperature has been reached in recent years.

HIRED ASSASSIN'S TRIPLE MURDER

Horrible Tragedy at Kirin: Victims Hacked to Death with Chopper

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kirin, July 2.

A ghastly tragedy took place in this city yesterday in the early hours of the morning.

In the East Suburb there is a wood yard near the river bank called Tai Sheng Mu Chang, employing a number of men. The manager of the firm and many of the employees live in a brick house iin the wood yard. As is the custom here a good number of men occupy one room at night. The room occupied by the manager, the cook and six other men was entered stealthily by a man called Chao between one and two o'clock yesterday morning. It is thought that he probably entered by the window, which was left open owing to the heat. Without awakening anyone he killed the manager by a few blows from a hatchet. He next attacked the cook in the same manner, and had stunned him before the others in the room awoke. A third man was struck down, and a fourth was wounded while grappling with the assassin. The others rushed from the room and summoned the police, who fortunately were not far away, and they managed to secure the murderer.

The cook and the two other wounded men were taken at once to the Mission Hospital. There the cook died while first aid dressings were being applied, and the third man attacked died before he was attended to. The fourth man was stitched up and taken to hospital and is likely to recover with many scars on his head and shoulders.

The murderer, who is a man of 40 years of age, is well known to the employer of the wood yard, and quite recently had lodged there for a few weeks while employed by a cartwright next door. He was on good terms with every one, and never showed any signs of insanity. He knew the premises and habits of the occupants. He must have known that no money was ever kept in the room he entered.

What then was the motive of the crime? The only conjecture that seems at all tenable is that he was hired by some person or persons unknown, who, for revenge or other reason, wished to take the life of the manager, and that seeing some of the others apparently waking up he attacked them also.

The fatal injuries were all on the head. The way in which Chinese sleep with their heads on the outer edge of the Kang made it easy for this vulnerable part to be reached.

The preliminary examination of the prisoner seems to confirm the hypothesis of revenge, and of his being a tool in the employ of others.

STREET CAR STRIKE IN OSAKA

Men's Demand for Higher Wages Owing to Companies' High Tariffs and Profits

Osaka, July 3.

The street-car drivers and conductors went on strike here to-night.

July 4.

The street-car strike is not authorized by the labour union. The cars were to-day run by overseers and men under training. At noon the number of cars operating was 150 against the usual 550. The police raided the car-sheds early this morning and arrested a number of the strike leaders. The Municipal Council is holding a meeting this afternoon to consider the measures to be taken.

Recently there have been several suburban tram-car strikes, the men demanding higher wages and better treatment on the ground that the companies are maintaining high dividends and high tariffs in spite of the lower cost of coal. The Hanshin strike between Osaka and Kobe has been on since June 28, but cars are running in greatly reduced numbers. There are signs that the strike is spreading to Kioto.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LARGE HAUL OF OPIUM AT TSINGTAO

Secreted in Paint Barrels: Opposition to Sale of Public Properties

Tsingtao, July 2.

It is reported that Mr. Kao Enhung, the Governor of the Kiaochou Territory, is being considered as a successor to Gen. Hsiung Ping-chi as Civil Governor of Shantung.

The Child Welfare Week came to a close on Thursday after a very successful campaign.

One of the largest hauls of opium ever made in the city occurred yesterday, when $10,000 worth was found secreted in false containers placed in the centre of paint barrels. The barrels were consigned to Tsingtao from Siangyang and had passed through the Hankow, Kiukiang, Nanking, Shanghai and local Customs. The barrels were burned by the police.

The U. S. S. Blackhawk and the American destroyer flotilla left yesterday for Chefoo. The visit of the sailors was productive of some interesting athletic contests, baseball and basketball games predominating. The sailors ruled supreme in basketball, but were forced to admit Tsingtao's supremacy on the diamond, winning but one out of four contests with the Tsingtao Baseball Club, which recently beat the powerful South Manchurian Railway nine. More than 6,000 spectators were on the field to see last week's tussle with the Manshus, when by a ninth inning rally Tsingtao emerged victorious by 8 to 6.

A hue and cry has been raised over the advertised sale of public properties by the Kiaochou Territorial Administration. The Shantung Provincial Assembly has taken up the cudgels against the move and threatens to serve an injunction on the local authorities. The vernacular newspapers have also taken up the fight and threaten united court action if the plan is carried out. They contend that the Administration should retain the property until the market is higher. The Administration state that many of the buildings are in poor condition and their renovation would entail the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars and such an outlay is not justified. There are over 200 buildings and residences advertised for sale.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PIRACY IN CHINESE WATERS

British Government Committee to Inquire into Whole State of Abuse

The following copy of a letter which has been sent to the Secretary of the Imperial Merchant Service Guild (England) by the Right. Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has just been received in Shanghai, and is of special interest in view of the recrudescence of piracy which has manifested itself recently in South China waters.

Downing Street,
London, S. W.
May 30, 1924

To the Secretary of the Imperial Merchant Service Guild, Liverpool.

SIR,—I am commanded by Secretary Thomas to acknowleldge receipt of your letter of 20th instant, regarding the prevalence of piracy in the waters adjacent to the Colony of Hongkong, and to inform you in reply that it has been arranged that when the report for which the Governor of Hongkong has been asked, is received, the whole matter—including the representations which have been made by the China Coast Officers' Guild and the Marine Engineers' Guild of China—will be considered by a committee of the representatives of the Departments of His Majesty's Government which are concerned in the matter.

I am, etc.,
Your obedient Servant,
G. GRINDLER.

ACCORDING to the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" three Russians who were imprisoned in the gaol used by the Special Police Administration at Harbin, broke out on July 1, killing their gaolers and throwing his body over a wall. Two were recaptured, but the third made his escape.

FOREIGN SWINDLERS IN TSINGTAO

Mean Tricks Played with Worthless Chits and Out-of-Date Notes

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tsingtao, July 2.

During the past week, Chinese here have been afforded the opportunity of pondering over the meanness and crookedness of a class of foreigners who think nothing of perpetrating shameful pranks upon native traders. There have been two particular instances, one a wholesale signing of worthless chits and another the palming off for the current face value of American money a $100 note of the American Civil War period.

In the first case, two Russian women made promiscuous use of automobiles and tendered in temporary settlement of their accounts a stack of worthless chits to three local garages. Their appetite for joy-rides is unparalleled in the annals of fast life in the Far East. In four days, from June 14 to June 18, they signed no less than $130 worth of automobile chits. They gave the name of a local company as their business address but when the shroff went round to collect—the garage operators apparently thought it was time to make an investigation—he found that neither of the two was known at the address given. The two women are now being handled by the Police Court.

The second instance was the palming off by a young man of a hundred dollar bill of the American Civil War period, at the current rate of exchange. Unfortunately, the money changer so stung is not able to give a clear description of the perpetrator of the shameful prank. At the time the note was issued, they bought and sold military horses in America for a million dollars of such notes per animal, in other words the note now in possession of the victim here is worth no more than the paper rouble or mark.

NON-CHRISTIAN TRIBUTE TO MISSIONARY DOCTOR

Affecting Scenes at Swatow Memorial Service to late Dr. G. D. Whyte

The undoubted admiration of many non-Christian Chinese for the missionary and his self-sacrificing labours for the suffering poor is testified to by the tribute paid recently by Swatow Chinese to the late Dr. G. Duncan Whyte.

In recording the memorial service to Dr. Whyte at Swatow, the "Presbyterian Messenger" says:—

Of both non-Christian and Christian speeches the one note was Sacrifice. "He gave himself to save others." His life effectively witnessed to this central Christian truth, and the Christian speakers were able to ask whence his capacity for sacrifice came, to point to his upbringing, and to explain how he came to leave home and kindred, and to serve in China.

An incident that struck the Chinese imagination, and which became emblematic in the speeches of his life's devotion, was his offering, as a student of 18, to have strips of his own flesh grafted on to the head of a baby, whose life he thus saved.

One of the non-Christian speakers said that the meeting marked a new departure in the relations of the Church and the non-Christian community in Swatow, and one felt how deep and abiding was the influence of the life they were remembering—a life spent to the uttermost for this people, and laid down at the threshold of the land, in a last effort to reach the folk he loved and admired.

Other speeches followed, and finally the gratitude of the sorrowing widow was voiced on her behalf.

Two Christian friends of Dr. Whyte, desiring that his relatives at Home should know the drift of the inscriptions, made their own in English: "Beloved Doctor! Why have you left us so soon?" It embraces the cry of the heart for renewed sight of him who has gone, and the sense of premature loss of one taken in the strength of his years.

PEKING TO PEITAIHO AIR SERVICE

10-Passenger Vimy: A Weekly Excursion at $80 for Round Trip

Peking, July 3.

An air service between Peking, Tientsin and Peitaiho will be started on the 11th instant, when a 10-passenger Vimy will leave Nanyuan at 3 p.m. This will inaugurate a weekly service from Nanyuan every Friday, starting at 3 o'clock from Nanyuan, leaving Tientsin at 4 p.m. and arriving at Peitaiho shortly after six o'clock. Passengers will thus be able to have tea and a swim after reaching Peitaiho. Refreshments will be supplied on board the aeroplane, which will also carry a gramophone.

On the return trip Peitaiho will be left at 8 a.m. on Mondays, arriving at Tientsin at 10 and Nanyuan at 11 a.m.

The single fare from Peking to Peitaiho is $45, from Tientsin to Peitaiho $35, and the round trips Peking-Peitaiho $80, and Tientsin-Peitaiho $60. Mr. Northridge, the well-known American pilot, will be in command of the flights, assisted by two thoroughly capable engineers.

Tickets may be purchased at the aerodromes at Peking and Tientsin before starting. The former is at Nanyuan and the latter near the Tientsin race course.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WONDERFUL ASSEMBLY HALL IN CHANGSHA

Perfect Properties of Modern Building Demonstrated at Big Conference

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Changsha, Hu., July 2.

The first Christian Conference has been sitting since Saturday. The members of the Conference consist of 240 Chinese and 60 missionaries. This is the first provincial gathering in which Chinese have been represented. In 1903, 1907 and 1913 there were provincial missionary conferences, the whole of the proceedings being in English. Chinese is not only the official language of this Conference; it is the only language. There has been no need for interpretation as all missionary members are conversant with Chinese.

The Conference has met in the new audience hall of the Hunan Bible School, a beautiful building of ferro-concrete, with sloping floor, comfortable chairs for an audience of 500. The lighting arrangements are done by throwing strong lights on to the white ceiling so that although there is good light everywhere, there are no shadows and no lights to bother the eyes. The acoustic properties are as perfect as I have ever known. Not only is a speaker heard if he speak in an ordinary tone of voice, one speaker on Saturday afternoon demonstrated that the hall was equal to the much more difficult task of conveying the words of one who was talking quickly, loudly and very vigorously. What in most of the buildings in the city would have been merely loud sound without sense, was here, it must be admitted loud sound, but also sense.

Mr. M. K. Hsiao, the Dean of the Bible School, was elected by a large majority to the chair and has presided with dignity and efficiency.

The Chinese attendance has been large; the missionary attendance less than the small proportion allowed. The Rev. Marcus Cheng of the Swedish Evangelical Alliance and Bishop Roots have been giving daily Bible Readings. At the opening afternoon session, the Rev. G. G. Warren gave a review of the early work of missionaries in the province which was listened to with great interest, especially by the Chinese to whom most of the story was quite fresh and new. Some of the heroes of the story were present in the Conference, including, indeed, the chairman whose hairbreadth escapes from Chalingchow in both 1898 and 1900 (the Boxer year) were very remarkable.

KIANGSI FLOODS

Peking, July 10.

Telegrams from Kiangsi report serious floods. Gen. Tsai Chenghsun, the Tuchun of Kiangsi, asks the Government to aid the sufferers. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

HANKOW RUSSIAN CONCESSION

S.A.D. No. 2 Handed Over Without Incident: Debased Money from Hunan Mint

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, Hup., July 3.

On July 1, the late Russian Concession was formally handed over to the Chinese authorities, who were represented by Mr. Shen, the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs. The Chinese flag was duly hoisted over the Municipal Building, and the painted letters which showed in Russian the "Russian Police Headquarters" were removed from the front of the Police Station. The whole affair seems to have passed off quite calmly and without attracting much attention. The late concession now becomes Special Administration District No. 2, the S. A. D. No. 1 being the late German Concession. To many minds the letters S. A. D. appear singularly appropriate, considering the sad state of affairs into which S. A. D. No. 1 has been allowed to lapse since its appropriation by the Chinese.

Traders' Losses from Currency Depreciation.

The dollar-cash exchange has been steadily mounting during the past few weeks. It has been over 2,000 cash to the dollar for some time past. Last week it was a 2,160 or 2,180, and to-day it has reached the unprecedented exchange of 2,290. The cause of this rise, which is having a very pernicious effect upon the Wuchang market, is a steady inundation of debased coins from the Hunan mint. While the Hupeh double Vang-ko-tzi, or 20-cash piece has a standard weight of 28 parts, these Hunan coins have a weight of only 21 or 22. In order to deal with this question, and to save the Wuchang trades-people from serious loss, Governor Hsiao a few days ago called together the Chief of the Wuchang Financial Bureau, the Head of the Mint and the two Chairmen of the Wuchang and Hankow Merchants' Guilds. A telegram was sent to Governor Chao of Hunan, requesting him to forbid the minting of these debased coins and to prevent their entry into Hupeh. Special orders have also been sent to the trading-centres between the two provinces, that a strict lookout be kept, and anyone found bringing these cash over the border shall be punished. The Wuchang Mint has also been directed, as quickly as possible, to mint and put into circulation a quantity of new copper cash.

Japanese Rioters Still Untried.

The case of the two Japanese shop-assistants, who were arrested in Hankow a short time ago for wounding three Chinese and causing a riot, is still sub-judice. It is reported that the three men who were wounded have died. On the other hand, such damage was done by the crowd to the premises that the Japanese Consul has a claim to present for over $10,000 compensation. Students of Changsha, who have not forgotten their own little anti-Japanese fracas of June 1 last year, have sent a telegram from the "Hunan People's Foreign Relations Society" to the "Hupeh Foreign Relations Society." In this telegram they urge their compatriots to agitate for due punishment of the offenders. The whole affair is put down as an instance of Japanese imperial aggression. It is wonderful how a mere street scrap between two Japanese shop-assistants and three Chinese coolies can thus be magnified into an incident of international significance.

The Local Athletic Craze.

The idea of establishing a specialized School for Athletics in Wuchang has had to be abandoned, owing, it is said, to the impossibility of procuring teachers who will give their whole attention to physical culture. It is rather remarkable that this difficulty was not foreseen when the scheme was first mooted. It is now proposed to open a new Middle School in the buildings on the Public Sports Ground, in which athletics will be a special feature in the curriculum. This is a good idea. The only better way that it is possible, would be to give more emphasis to athletics in the schools which already exist.

HEAVY SENTENCE ON A GERMAN

Seven Years at Mukden: Charge of Beating a Child to Death

Our attention has been called to a case which came before the Chinese District Court in Mukden recently, when Mr. E. Scherer, a German employed by General Chang Tso-lin at the Mukden Arsenal, was sentenced to seven years' hard labour for an offence described by the "Manchuria Daily News" as "beating a Chinese child to death."

We are informed that this description of the offence is a gross exaggeration and that a grave injustice has been done.

The "Manchuria Daily News" report reads as follows:—

The Chinese District Court, Mukden, handed down its judgment upon the German engineer in the service of the Chinese Arsenal. who had beaten a Chinese child to death. His Honour sentenced the prisoner to seven years' imprisonment with hard labour.

Mukden foreign rs criticize the sentence as rather heavy.

A Japanese pressman, who attended the trial, speaks well of the manner in which it was conducted. He adds that no one in the audience seems to have had occasion for fault-finding.

Mr. Scherer was formerly emloyed with the South Manchurian Railway at Dairen, where he was a respected resident. He was well-known to Dr. F. Wilhelm, at present stopping at the Kalee Hotel, Shanghai (where he intends taking up legal practice) and lived with him for some three years. Dr. Wilhelm's account of what happened at Mukden is as follows:

Mr. E. Scherer has a rather unusual appearance and wears a peculiar hat. Chinese children were wont to run after him calling out with the impudence common to all children. In his annoyance one day the unfortunate German turned round and struck out with his stick, but without hitting any of his persecutors. One little girl, however, fell down and cut her leg. Apparently she went back to her parents, and as a result of their taking no notice of the wound she contracted blood-poisoning. The parents asked Scherer for money, but he did not consider himself responsible in any way for the injury and looked upon the demands of the parents as an attempt at fraud. After 10 days the child died and Scherer was subsequently arrested, with the result already described.

This is Dr. Wilhelm's explanation as retailed to him by the accused man, corroborated also by a letter he has received from a third person, a Frenchman, by the way. On the strength of his evidence it certainly seems to us that there has been a grave error of justice and that investigation into the circumstances of the the case should be made by the authorities. Dr. Wilhelm, who lived with Scherer for three years at Newchwang, says that he is a particularly kind man who so far from maltreating children would often give them little presents of fruit and sweets.

DROUGHT AND ROBBERS IN NORTH HONAN

Roads Infested with Brigands: Chin River Dry

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Huaiking, Ho., July 2.

The Chin River is dry. There is still a small quantity of water, coming down from the mountains, but not more than 20 per cent. of that required for the irrigation ditches at Wulungkou. Three large hsiens depend on these ditches for irrigation and now most of the ditches are dry and the river bed from Huaiking to the Yellow River has become a dry, dust driven, barren desert. Insufficient rains for two past summers with practically no snow in winter has now so reduced the water supply that great suffering is imminent. The sheep herds in the foothills are in distress and no seeding is possible without irrigation on the plain.

A few days ago about 42 bandits attacked a village north of the Chin River. The villagers were taken by surprise. In one or two instances the demands of the bandits were not speedily responded to so firearms were resorted to. Two cases of bullet wounds were taken to hospital. One case resulted from very serious abdominal bullet wound and there was no hope of recovery.

Travel between Huaiking and Chinghua Station is unsafe at night. The road is infested with robbers.

Magistrate's Discomfiture.

One of the hsien magistrates of Huaiking district was petitioned by a group of villages for permission to open a new irrigation ditch. Without sufficient investigation as to how other villages might be affected permission was granted. Some time afterwards the magistrate was called to inspect the new project. Unhappily for him, however, some other villagers who thought that it injured them planned an attack on his guard, chair-bearers and him personally. When he was being attacked, his guard opened fire on the offenders. Some were wounded and one man was shot dead. It is reported that the affair has been explained in person by the magistrate to the Taoyin and Governor at Loyang.

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL

Suitable Address to Chinese Girls on Commencement Day

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Yangchow, July 9.

The annual Commencement exercises of the Julia McKenzie Girls' School were held on Friday morning June 27. Class work during the year was conducted in the large new building and this was the second commencement in the auditorium and gymnasium to the west of the school building. A large audience listened to a varied programme, consisting of piano solos and duets, songs, and declamations in Chinese and English by members of the graduation class. The commencement address was delivered by Dr. E. M. Poteat of Shanghai College who spoke to the girls on the subject "How to be beautiful." Rev James Orr very ably serving as interpreter. There followed two addresses by teachers in government schools after which diplomas were given to five girls graduating from the Middle School.

Mahan School had its 10th Commencement exercises July 2. After declamations in English and Chinese by three of the graduating class, the commencement address was given by Mr. Meng Shien Ch'en, head of the Chinese department of St. John's University. There were 15 students who received diplomas from the Middle School.

FOURTH OF JULY IN MUKDEN

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Mukden July, 4.

Independence Day was celebrated at the American Consulate in Mukden to-day by a formal reception at noon. The foreign community presented themselves and joined in a toast proposed by Mr. Tenney, the Consul-General in honour of the President of the United States. No speeches were made; the toast being drunk in respectful silence.

General Hsueh Liang-chang, accompanied by a few of his Staff officers and members of Marshal's Chang's Secretariat, represented the Chinese. Other officials present were Mr. H. Porter, the British Consul-General, the Japanese Consul-General, and the German Consul. The Marquis of Rochambeau, Père Croix, was present.

One also noticed that that bland air of informality, which is perhaps an inseparable trait in the racial character of our overseas cousins, did not seem to be absent feature in receiving the guests.

Further to celebrate the occasion, a half holiday was observed by the business community, and the singles finals of the Tennis tournament were played before a good attendance at the Club, the games being punctuated by scores called by Major Clark of a questionable infallibility.

Miss Porter gained a worthy victory over Miss Smalt in winning 6-1, 6-3. Parker then played Elder, the latter winning a very fine game 7-5, 6-4, 6-2. Parker's service is strong and he displayed good judgment in placing, but honours must be given to Elder for winning a very exciting tussle by more consistent play helped out by an advantage in agility.

A dance at the club in the evening contributed to make a pleasurable ending to the day.

THE GAMBLING FEVER IN PEKING

Everyone Speculating Madly: Amazing Prices Touched by Government Bonds

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, July 2.

Whatever may be said about the lack of political consciousness in China, China's capital does not suffer from that complaint. One would go so far as to say that Peking suffers from too much political consciousness. Politics obtrude at every tea party, on every constitutional; and foreigners themselves are no whit behind in their enthusiasm for the perfectly idle pastime of prognosticating political happenings.

There is ample cause for this absorption on the part of both Chinese and foreigners. Probably no capital in the world is so dependent on the chance of politics. Peking is flooded with officials, the families of officials, the hangers-on of officials and expectant officials; while the foreigner, whatever his business, has some portion of his interests intimately bound up in the ceaseless round of official life. With the Chinese, of course, the connexion is more intense. Unlike other countries with a Civil Service independent of the whims of politicians, Peking's officials are always on tenter hooks for the swish of the administrative broom. Without warning a Wu may be swept away to make room for a Wang, and with him many Wus for many Wangs, and it is not unnatural therefore that chances are discussed with the avidity one usually associates with the race course.

The Bond Fever.

But politics now take a second place in people's thoughts. For Pekiing has the bond fever. It is as catching as the fever that preceded the South Sea Bubble. Wherever official China foregathers, the talk is about bonds. Seventh Year, Fifth Year, Currency Reorganization, 96 Million—bonds, the kernel of Chinese gossip in Peking. It is a subject ripe with many a story. You hear of one young fellow—"he didn't know anything about politics, he had been away from China for two years"—who bought 96 Million at 16 only a few months ago and now they are quoted at 38. Oh yes, he has sold out. His friends had been as excited about his $5,000 almost as much as himself, and as is usual with amateur investment, had formed themselves into a Vigilance Committee as soon as 96 Million showed that it still had a kick left in it.

It is indeed remarkable how bond exchange operations have captured popular fancy in Peking. Almost as remarkable as the dramatic rise in the bonds themselves—a belated phenomenon, of course. Chinese all love a gamble, and judging by the business on the exchange (or exchanges, for an exchange in the Legation Quarter has recently been started to take care of the overflow), which showed a margin of eight points in 96 Million two days ago, they are getting it. But apart from sheer speculation, all classes of bonds have shown a rapid upward movement. In January, 1923, Fifth Year bonds were quoted around 44, by the end of December they had risen by about 14 points, or 58; to-day, they have topped the 80 mark, and like another commodity not wholly dissociated with bonds in Peking are still going strong. Seventh Year Long Term are now around 77; they started the year at 49. Seven per cent. Consolidated have jumped in the same period of time about 20 points. A gain of 200 per cent. from 14 to 40, has been registered in 96 Million. So runs the scale: all bonds started the year with a good resolution that has been amply justified.

Everyone Buying Bonds.

This increase of values is not wholly due to the reports of increased Customs revenue or the prospect of drawings. There are many factors to account for the phenomenon. Due to the unsettled conditions in the interior much spare money is draining into Peking and the treaty ports from the interior, and this finds its way eventually into the bond market. Insurance companies are being floated and are doing good business; their funds go in the same direction. New bank note issues are reported from time to time; part of the cash reserve is funded in government bonds. Bonds are so attractive nowadays that like insurance companies, educational and other institutions are investing their funds in Government issues, while the steadily-increasing accumulation of postal savings is diverted into the same channel.

But the main cause for several of the jumps is the speculation that has caught Peking like a contagious disease. Even when the Stock Exchange came into being, in 1918, there was little prospect of any thoroughfare in Peking being turned into a miniature Wall Street. A marginal transaction was a thing unknown a year or so ago; but today money shops are competing for the honour of accommodating people who want to get-rich-quick and have only about $5,000 with which to do it

HANTAN RAIN-MAKING TABLET IN USE AGAIN

To Be Brought from Chihli to Shansi Town: Christian Conferences

Taiku, Sha., June 30.

Three important summer conferences are being held in Shansi this summer. The first of these, the Evangelists' Confrence, closing today, was held in Yutaoho, the beautiful mountain valley near Fenchow. There special conference buildings have been erected for this and other similar gatherings. The attendance of men and women evangelists has been about 300. Speakers from as far away as Shanghai have contributed to the programme.

The second of these conferences, from July 1 to 18, is the Summer Institute for teachers in Christian schools conducted under auspices of the Chihli-Shansi Christian Educational Association. This conference is meeting on the grounds of the Farthing Memorial School of the English Baptist Mission in Taiyuanfu. It is anticipated that 130 teachers will attend. A strong programme has been arranged and the meeting should give a great impetus to the work of Christian education in the province.

The third conference, meeting from July 4 to 10, is the annual Student Summer Conference of the Y.M.C.A. The place selected this year is Chin Ssu, a famous market-town 17 miles southwest of Taiyuanfu. Here is one of the largest natural springs in the province, in a temple dating from the T'ang dynasty. The town of Chin Ssu is one of the most important industrial centres in mid-Shansi. The young students privileged to attend this conference will find plenty to interest them in their enyironment, aside from the attractive conference programme prepared for them.

Factory Chimney Collapses.

A sad accident occurred a day or two ago at the provinical mint in the north suburb of Taiyuanfu. A new chimney was being erected. At about four in the afternoon, while workmen were on the scaffolding near the top of the chimney a sudden freakish gust of wind blew down scaffolding, chimney and all. One man was killed outright and three others seriously wounded.

The long and serious drought continues throughout pretty much the whole of the province. From tomorrow, butchers throughout the province will be forbidden to slaughter animals and to sell meat of any kind.

The famous iron tablet is to be brought from Hantan hsien in Chihli Province in the hope that rains may be induced to fall.

In this part of the province wheat flour is selling at from 9 to 20 copper cents a catty, and millet is 200 coppers a small bushel. Never in the memory of the oldest inhabitant have such prices been reached before. At this writing the prospects are certainly much darker than they were at the same period in the famine year, 1920.

FLOODS IN KUANGTUNG

Canton, July 6.

Owing to the heavy rain during the last few days, the West River and other rivers north of Canton have all overflowed and very serious damage has been done. It is reported that the damage in the region of Wuchow is the most serious. The Prefectural Governors in the flooded districts are asking the Canton authorities for immediate relief.—Eastern News agency.

REDCROFT SCHOOL SPEECH DAY

Excellent Showing by Miss Tilley's Pupils at Kuling

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Kuling, July 1.

This anniversary is one that is looked forward to with keen anticipation by all friends of the school. Each year this ceremony seems better than the last, but this year we feel that the school reached its high-water mark of success.

We gathered in the new auditorium, which, with its greater seating capacity, and its fine stage, is a great improvement on the temporary building. In spite of the height of the hall, the children's voices, with very few exceptions, were heard clearly.

The first part of the programme included pianoforte music, songs, recitations and some charming items by the Kindergarten. One item deserves special mention. When the Upper School, 24 in number, marched smartly on to the platform with their dumbbells, the girls dressed in white "middies" and kilts, and the boys in khaki, with school ties and belts, we realized we were in for a treat. Through the exercises, which lasted about a quarter of an hour, there was not one blunder. Boys and girls alike drilled with a will, and with a sureness of movement that spoke of patience and careful training. Miss Shipway is indeed to be congratulated. In this item, too, it is interesting to notice that it was not a member of the staff, but one of the school girls—Jean Van Corbach—who accompanied them capably on the piano.

In the second part of the programme a representation of the "Water Babies" was given. The parts had been allotted with great discrimination, and the acting was so natural that the children carried us with them into the land of make-believe. The scenery and the costumes were excellent. Grimes with his soot-bag on his back, and his stumpy briar in his mouth, the much bullied little chimney-sweep. Tom, with his tattered clothes and sooty face, and the large-hearted Irish woman, are introduced to us in the first scene. Later on the Water Babies themselves appear in their scanty little garments of pale green sheeny silk, with long seaweed scarves with which they danced, imitating the rippling of waves. Playing in the pools and on the rocks with these Water Babies, Tom not only loses his sooty apperaance, but learns from them to be busy and helpful.

This play was got up by Miss Sharples and Miss Lamb, and they are indeed to be congratulated on their wonderful production. Much time and thought must have been put into the scenery and costumes.

After the play, the Head Mistress, Miss Tilley, put in her first official appearance. Till then the programme had been in the hands of the pupils, Lex Gordon, the senior boy, having made a most efficient chairman. Miss Tilley was accorded a very warm welcome as she stood up to announce the winners of the prizes. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Barrie, the school's oldest and best friend. (In the current number of the Redcroft Magazine, the "Evergreen," we are reminded that the school, which now occupies large quarters and has some 80 pupils, started only five years ago with four pupils in Mrs. Barrie's house.)

The Scripture prize needs special mention. A paper was set out by outside examiners, with a view to testing the pupils' general knowledge of the Bible, from Genesis to Revelations, and the results were remarkably good. The competition was thrown open to the Upper School, and out of the 30 who entered, 10 gained over 90 per cent. the prize-winner, Hilda Cockburn, scoring 99.

Reference was made to successes gained by old pupils of the school, now in England. Particular mention was made of John Berkin who has won three scholarships to Cambridge University.

In distributing the certificates for the Cambride Locals, taken last Christmas, the fact was mentioned that all who sat for the examination passed, and passed well.

After the singing of the School song, and the National Anthem, three cheers were given for Miss Tilley, and these cheers were packed full of the warm affection of her pupils and the complete confidence of their parents.

In the afternoon a bazaar was heldl at Recroft, in aid of the Cot supported by the Redcroft pupils in Sir William Treloar's Hospital for crippled children in London. Practically all the things for sale were made by the pupils and the staff, and they must have felt rewarded for their labours when the proceeds were announced, amounting to over $370.

DOES REVOLUTION MENACE JAPAN?

Mental and National Lassitude Following Earthquake Worse than Any Foreign Exclusion Act: Japanese Critic's Anxious Questions

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokyo, June 28.

"We eat the produce of the soil we cultivate and we drink of the well we have dug. What benefit do we derive from the Emperor?"

This ancient song of the Chinese, revived, it was said, when the Manchus were ousted, is, according to the "Oriental Economist," one of the best periodicals published in the Japanese Empire, descriptive of the mood of mind of many a Japanese to-day.

The article in the magazine, which questions whether revolutionary symptoms exist in the body politic of the nation, has attracted considerable attention. It declares, amongst other things, that, instead of determination and concentration of mind to extricate themselves out of the hole into which the earthquake landed them, the Japanese people in general do not care a brass button whether the work of rehabilitation is done or not, or how it is being done.

"Not even a surmise, much less a definite practical suggestion, as to what course the nation should take to extricate itself from its present impasses—social, political economic—has yet been seriously entertained," says the "Oriental Economist," and the public mind is filled with a vague fear and anxiety. while it gets more restless and unsettled as day follows day.

The Economic Impasse.

Some of the "stunts"—they are no more—that have been done here to express dissatisfaction with the American exclusion legislation, cabled abroad and dwelling on the dramatic and sensational side of such, rather than on the significance of the real motives behind such actions, which is largely the attempts of yourthful "patriots" to come into the limelight, might give people in other lands the idea that the Japanese are all wrought up and are straining every nerve to wipe out the alleged insult to their national honour. The Japanese, of every strata, are certainly very indignant over excluding them by legislative statutes, but, against this, even unofficial leaders of the nation are lamenting that the people, as a whole, are in a stupor of lassitude, while the majority of the speakers against the American "injustice" have trained their biggest oratorical batteries on the Japanese themselves "for the enervated and faintish condition" they are said to be in.

The "Oriental Economist" declares that the greatest menace that the Japanese nation is facing to-day is not the immigration legislation of America, but the dreadful economic impasse in which the country finds itself and insinuates that such an economic condition, unless remedied, might prove to be the fore-runner of revolution. The direct causes of the present economic difficulties can be subdivided into two sections—namely, the reaction from the war boom; and the earthquake calamity. Intertwined with these two is the fact that a good proportion of the nation has abandoned the old virtues of thrift and frugality for ostentation and luxury.

"Will juvenile vigour be recovered even if this reaction be overcome and post-quake reconstruction be accomplished?" asks the Oriental Economist which replies in the negative and declares that "no ray of hope of such vigour ever being recovered can be found. Production does not increase and prices remain exceedingly high. The markets that Japan had overseas are being captured or undermined by foreign competition and exports are shrinking. Even though there is a high tariff barrier, the import trade continues to be as active as ever. The bank rates and house and land rents are exorbitant; a large part of the income of private folks goes to pay house rent; and a large part of the huose rent is really land rent; while those who are victims of high interest rates and high rents recover their losses by charging high prices for their services or their goods.

"This is a vicious circle in which all eat up one another to the destruction of everyone and everything."

Hints at Revolution.

After inveighing bitterly against such economic tendencies, and declaring that the "mutual eating up of one another" is suicidal, and is causing the public mind to become more and more enervated and bored as time passes by, the Oriental Economist declares that.

"Should things be left in this deplorable state, the country will have to sustain a revolution, or choose the alternative of a gradual decline and fall."

The only way out, according to this periodical, is to increase production and thereby get back to prosperity.

"The lassitude of the popular mind has now advanced to a stage," it continues, "which is very lamentable. The increase of election expenses, which was so manifest in the general elections, is exasperating. Even 'ideal' candidates spent from Y.30,000 to Y.50,000 to secure a seat in the Diet, while many spent as much as Y.200,000 to Y.300,000. It is corruption of this sort and the apathy of the public to it that undermines the pillars of the state and rears the foundations of revolution. The nation is unconcerned at the changes taking place in the political world. All the fuss and goings-on in connection with choosing a new Ministry were confined to the Elder Statesmen, the powerful cliques and to party men. The rest of the nation hardly manifests even the slightest enthusiasm, so much as to say that it made no difference to them whether a new Ministry were in power or not, or whether the Cabinet would effect any drastic retrenchment and save the country from tobogganing downward to headlong disaster.

"The Chinese in ancient times sang: 'We eat the produce of the soil we cultivate and drink of the well we have dug. What benefit do we derive from the Emperor?' A large number of our compatriots also seem to have grown similarly anarchistic of late. As a man and his wife are no longer so when love has ceased to unite them, so when a people comes to lose interest in politics, the dissolution of the State must follow. If the rising generation has ceased to hope for anything from the Diet or the Government, and the majority of the people have come to ignore these altogether, matters are in a very serious condition indeed."

Readjustment or Revolution?

A phrase often on the lips of orators of all classes to-day is "Second Great Readjustment." The first "readjustment" was the restoration of the Imperial Family to power, which occurred about the time Commodore Perry knocked at the closed doors of Japan and was largely prompted by the presence of the "foreign devils" with their "black ships" off the rock-bound coast of Nippon. The Japanese do not like to regard the processes whereby the Shoguns were forced to abdicate in favour of the Emperor a revolution. They prefer to regard it as a readjustmentt and a readjustment i largely proved to be.

The period immeriately preceding the Meiji Restoration and the end of Shogunate rule, says the "Oriental Economist," was one of the greatest impasses in the history of Japan. Economic development had gone as far as it could under the feudal system and this was the fundamental cause of the prevailing unrest on the part of the people and the loss of prestige the Shogunate Government sustained, which the determination of Commodore Perry to have Japan unlock her doors intensified.

Thinking people are inclined to the belief that Japan has arrived now aat a similar impasse. They point out the parallel of general restlessness, intensified new by economic ills and, to some degree, through the American exclusion legislation. It is said that America prompted the first "readjustment" and it is being asked whether America will be the instrument wherby a second "readjustment" will be effected.

Imperialism Must Go.

"What shall it be—readjustment or revolution?"—asks the "Oriental Economist?" "What impediments or obstacles have to be demolished, and what sort of a new world do its advocates propose to have instead? The answer varies, but one clear under-note is discernible—imperialism must go and apurified liberalism take its place and be the basis and the pivot of all the country's policies, both domestic and foreign.

"Generally speaking," the paper continues, "the position of Japan to-day is comparable with the condition prevalent when Shogunate rule was on the verge of collapse, though very few then suspected that the Shogunate's days were numbered. The major part of the reforms on the occasion of the 'first great readjustment' centred round the opening of the country to foreign intercourse. In order to meet the situation successfully it became necessary to pull down the feudal system and to organize a solid and systematic political machine instead. This was the reason why the reformers made the Imperial Family the goal of their endeavours. The results achieved through the pulling down of the bariers of clans; rendering the ownership of land and purchase free to all; and depriving the samurai (warriors) of their hereditary emoluments and fiefs and turning them into productive citizens, were of no less a magnitude than those brought about by the French revolution. But, up to the time of the Saigo Rebellion (better known to foreigners as the Satsuma rebellion) in 1877, the authority of the Gentral Government was not fully established. The rate of progress afterwards made elicited the unbounded admiration of the Occidental world, but this progress was merely the radical conversion of the nation from feudalism to liberalism."

"Liberalism must be put at the helm again. Just as at the time of the 'first great readjustment' the nation was converted, from feudalism to liberalism, se it is necessary again to convert it from the imperialism that has crept in to liberalism. But how is this to be brought about—through readjustment or through revolution?"

Does Revolution Menace Japan?

Do revolutionary dangers really threaten Japan? It is very difficult to give a definite "yes" or "no" to this question. An analysis of present day conditions and the fears that are xepressed by people high in the esteem of the nation is the best reply can be made. Unrest everywhere is obvious, so much so that many of the nation's leaders are painfully conscious of the menace that lurks behind this unrest, and this unrest again has its genesis largely in economic causes, a fertile source for political violence in various other parts of the world. The earthquake has intensified the sufferings of a large section of the people, while, at the same time, the squandering of their substance by those more blessed with this world's goods, has become even more marked that before the great disaster of last September, presenting often a picture of dire misery cheek by jowl with criminally reckless dissipation. The Japanese to-day are a batter governed and more practically-minded people than were the French of the 18th century or the Russians before Red fury overturned Czardom. None the less one can't close his eyes to the fact that the radical elements are growing in strength and number throughout the country, largely through the pressure of economics.

The Prince Regent never goes out without a strong entourage for his protection, while the police practically parade the streets of his itinerary. The country is in a species of mental turmoil and confusion and something worth-while is badly needed to break the stagnancy of thought that is seeking satisfaction by craving dram draughts of dangerous "isms." It was thought that the visit to these shores or Dr. Tagore, the poet-philosopher of India, might to something towards remedying these defects, and when elderly greybeards, representing in an unofficial capacity important political and social forces in the country, almost begged of Dr. Tagore to send "other wise men from your India to teach us, for we have grave need of wise teachers to-day," there was more in the appeal than the spirit that merely asked St. Paul to come over to Macedonia and teach the Macedonians.

Soho Tokutomi, a member of the House of Peers and editor of the "Kokumin" (Nation), who has been regarded for years as Japan's most capable jouhnalist and who is said to understand the temper of his people better than anyone else, has often talked of revolutionary dangers. Mr. Takahashi, at present Minister of Agriculture and Commerce in the present Cabinet and at one time Premier and head of the Seiyukai when it was the biggest and most important political party in the land, has often talked of the possibility of revolution, declaring that the danger existed in a distant horizon—but a horizon still within the vision.

EMBARGO ON LUXURIES IN JAPAN

Tokio, July 7.

The import duties on luxuries are being raised all round to 100 per cent. ad valorem, according to a Bill introduced in the Diet, the purpose of which is an embargo on luxuries rather than protection of home industries. The list of dutiable articles includes tea and other beverages, liquors, precious stones, woollens, silks, knitted goods, wearing apparel, cameras, gramaphones, toys and toilet goods.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FRENCH VESSEL SEIZED AT WUSIH

Astounding Action Taken by Chinese Authorities: How an Illegal Arrest was Planned: "555" Cigrettes the Excuse: Supposed Attempt at Blackmail

An astounding piece of impudence on the part of Chinese officials in Wusih, Kiangsu, reached Shanghai last Friday. This was the placing under arrest of a ship, flying the flag of France and commanded by a foreign captain, for the purpose of extorting from her owners, the Oriental Press, the sum of $50, which, they are informed, "can be arranged through the Chief of Police." The excuse under which the arrest was carried out is that the vessel was carrying a quantity of unstamped "555" cigarettes, on which the likin tax has not been paid.

That the vessel was carrying unstamped cigarettes is true. But nevertheless there are a number of reasons why the local Chinese authorities have no right to place the ship under arrest. First and foremost of these is that she is a foreign vessel trading under a foreign flag. Any action to be taken in respect of such a ship must be taken through the proper consular authorities. The second is, that the only dealings with tax authorities foreign vessels are subjected to is with the Maritime Customs; and further, the tax in question cannot apply to the cigarettes while they are on the ship, but can only be inflicted on the Chinese dealer who buys them, after he has bought them.

A Mean Plot.

The outrageousness of the case is heightened by the despicable plot put into operation by the authorities to give them their excuse. The vessel is a schooner, known as the Oriental Advertiser II. She plies her way in the capacity of an exhibition ship each year from Shanghai to Changsha, passing through the provinces of Kiangsu, Chêkiang, Anhui, Hupeh, and Hunan, and taking eight months on the journey. She carries with her samples of all kinds of commodities, such as cigarettes, cocoa, scent, disinfectant and tobacco, laid out on shelves in a long show room. Chinese are invited on board at each port to inspect these articles, and at nights are entertained to cinematograph shows on the schooner's long flat top deck.

On her arrival at Wusih a man came aboard with other visitors and presented himself as a merchant. He looked the sample "555" cigarettes over and said he would purchase 10 tins. He asked for the laodah to carry the tins and the request was granted. As soon as they got ashore, however, the laodah was arrested and cast into gaol, and a squad of police were sent to take charge of the ship. The "merchant" was a police spy sent on board to trap the captain.

The Oriental Press in Shanghai received the first intimation of the affair in a letter from the captain, a Russian, dated June 19. The letter stated:

The laodah was despatched by the compradore with 10 tins of sample State Express cigarettes. In about an hour's time I heard that he had been arrested by the local police for carrying unstamped cigarettes. I asked the compradore to go to the police station and secure his release. Soon afterwards a squad of police came on board and placed sentries all over the ship, and I have just been informed that the boat is under arrest. Afterwards the Chinese likin official came on board and asked to see my cargo papers. I refused, for according to law all my dealings have to be with the Maritime Customs. . . I warned them that they had no right to arrest a foreign ship and that I would hold them responsible for all losses sustained by the company, which I put at $500 a day. The dealer who bought the samples appears to have been a disguised police officer. The police are threatening to confiscate all the tobacco on board.

Absolutely Illegal.

A further letter dated June 25 states after describing the trick by which the arrest was made:—

I refused to recognize the arrest of the boat as legal and I warned them that if they wanted to get anything out of me they would have to use force, and that I would immediately report the matter to the French Consul General in Shanghai. I refused to give them any information about my cargo of cigarettes as according to the treaties foreign ships do not pay likin and are subjected to inspection only by the Maritime Customs. The police did not dare to attempt to force my holds. . . Later in the afternoon the police withdrew the guard from the boat and placed a police junk alongside the Oriental Advertiser. The next day I went to see the Chief Magistrate and he confirmed the statement that the ship was under arrest. The laodah was sent to prison, and when he was finally released we had to bath him in Flyosan.

The letter goes on to explain why, but we consider unnecessary to publish that description here. In a further private letter written to Mr. Leashin of the Oriental Press, the captain describes how he went to the yamen when the laodah was tried. Close to his side were two bamboo poles, covered in blood at one end. He asked, through his interpreter, what these were for and was told they were used to make witnesses, as well as prisoners, talk.

Mr. Leashin, chief of the advertising department of the company, told a "North-China Daily News" reporter last Friday: "We can do nothing in Shanghai. We have written to the French Consulate here and they have done nothing; we have telephoned to the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, and he also has done,—nothing."

Blackmail.

Mr. Leachin went on to say that he had sent his Chinese secretary to Wusih to assist the captain of the vessel. This man had written back to the effect that he had seen the officials in the City Magistrate yamen and had learned that the arrest was not "perfectly official," but that the whole matter was one of blackmail. The arrest had been carried out under instructions from the Cigarette Tax Bureau, though without a warrant.

When the secretary interviewed Magistrate Fong, that worthy told him blandly that "the vessel was not under arrest, the police boat had been put alongside simply to protect it. But of course it was understood the vessel would not be allowed to go away."

"There are two ways in which we can settle the matter" wrote the secretary. "One is through the medium of the French Consular authorities, and the other is by paying the $50 demanded by the tax people. The Chief of Police told me that he is a friend of the man in charge of the Trade Office and "could arrange the matter."

The secretary went on to state that he had not much faith in the payment of this $50, since he felt moderately sure the money would be accepted, but the boat still detained.

Mr. Leashin was emphatic that the company would pay nothing. He emphasized the absolute illegality of the whole affair and said the Company would not rest till they had secured the release of their vessel through official sources.

The Vessel Released

The schooner Oriental Advertiser II. has now been released unconditionally.

The Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in Shanghai is largely responsible for the action of the Wusih authorities in allowing the vessel to go.

On hearing of the seizure the Commissioner, we are informed, immediately sent a strong telegram to Wusih, with the excellent result aforesaid.

The Secretary sent up by Mr. Leashin (of the Oriental Press) returned on Sunday reporting failure in his efforts with the authorities. They, he said, demanded the sum of $100 (not $50 as stated before) for the vessel's release, whilst every obstacle had been put in his way. It was shortly after this, however, that news of the vessel's release was received in Shanghai.

The captain wrote down a day or so later stating that the police who had been placed on board his ship had simply faded away in the night, and no further opposition was offered to his leaving the port.

TULI OF SZECHUAN

Gen. Yang Sen's Installation Ceremony Attended by Huge Gathering

From Our Own Correspondent.

Some reference to the rejoicings in Chêngtu in connexion with Gen. Yang Sen's formal assumption of the post of Tuli has already been made. The following is an account of the installation ceremony in his yamên.

Chêngtu, Sze., June 18.

Last Thursday Gen. Yang Sen was crowned "Tuli" in state. The ceremony took the form of a monster ceremony at the Chiang-Chuin Yamên at the hour of noon. A three-day holiday had been proclaimed and the streets of the city and the public buildings and shops displayed the rainbow flag and bunting most lavishly. Precisely at the hour of noon the minute guns began booming until a salute of 21 guns had been fired. The great assemblage included all the chief office-holders, military and civil, with the Consuls of all the resident foreign Powers together with a large turn-out of foreigners, both ladies and gentlemen. The military brass band in resplendent new uniform opened the ball with the National Anthem, while all stood to attention. Then the assembly solemnly saluted the great flag behind the Tuli who stood rigidly to attention attired in a magnificent new blue uniform with brass mounted cap and plumes of a Field-Marshal. The Court Crier then announced the despatch from Peking appointing. Gen. Yang Sen the Tuli of Szechuan. When the despatch had been read Gen. Yang Sen was invited to address the large audience.

In a clear voice with military, staccato accent he delivered a brief inaugural address. He promised that he would obey the Central Government in Peking, would put forth his best efforts for the advancement of Szechuan, try to keep in check the various armies in the province, clean up the robber infested districts, take strong measures in an attempt to control the military situation, reorganize military education, make his soldiers work, promote peace throughout the province, an assist in maintaining peaceful international relations. He then urged the people to assist him as well as the officers by working in harmony with the Government. He spoke briefly and to the point and at the close was given a great ovation.

Three or four speakers followed, among whom were Dr. Beech, President of the Union University, Cheo Tao-kang, the ex-Tutuh of Revolutionary days, and some old scholars.

The Scholar of Old China.

One old scholar reputed to be 100 years old was assisted to the front by two priests to perform the ceremony of opening the Library that the Tuli has lately started in the Yamên for the use of officers and gentry.

At the close of the ceremony the foreign guests were invited to the Tuli's residence next door, where a dainty luncheon was spread in foreign style. Ladies at the piano dispensed music while the guests partook of the refreshments.

The next day the papers stated that Ten Sieh-heo would not accept the position of Civil Governor. It is reported that the Tuli telegraphed him urging that he accept the Peking appointment, and in the event of his unwillingness, that he himself would resign the Tuliship. It is pointed out, however, in many quarters that the safest plan would be for Ten Sieh-heo to accept the Civil Governorship, but administer it from the Chungking end of the province. It is hinted that the possibility of the Tuli and the Civil Governor working together in the provincial capital is rather remote. In the meantime the head of the Civil Yamên, Chen Po-nie, is acting Civil Governor.

Peitaiho bids fair to rouse the jealousy of Japanese summer resorts, for not only are the residents of North China making it their Mecca, but it is being favoured more and more as a summer sanctuary by the foreigners in Japan. Sir Charles Elliott, the British Ambassador to Japan, who intends to visit North China during July and August, will probably spend several weeks at Peitaiho.

MACLAREN'S ARRIVAL IN TOKIO

An Enthusiastic Welcome: Dinner Party at the British Embassy

Kagoshima, July 5.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren arrived here at five this afternoon.

July 6.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren left Kagoshima this morning at 7 o'clock.—Reuter.

Tokio, July 6.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren has been forced to alight at Susami, 25 miles from Kushimoto, owing to lack of gasolene.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren arrived at Kushimoto at 5.08 this afternoon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Kushimoto, July 7.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren departed at 10.40 this morning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, July 7.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren arrived at Kasumigaura at 2.49 this afternoon. He was welcomed by enthusiastic crowds and by the Chief of the Kasumigaura Aviation Corps, who will be his hosts this evening. To-morrow the aviator is expected to arrive in Tokio, where he will stay for two or three days during which he will be the guest at many entertainments. When he starts off for the North he will be accompanied by Colonel Broome, who is awaiting him here.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, July 8.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren and party arrived here to-day from Kasumigaura and received an enthusiastic welcome from many officials and private persons. At the station, the Aviation Society of Japan presented a bouquet to the British flier.

After a short rest at the British Embassy, Major Maclaren called on the Minister of Communications, who presented souvenirs to him and Flight-Lieut. Plenderleith. His Royal Highness Prince Kuni, President of the Aviation Society, also presented them with medals for merit. They were entertained at a garden-party held this afternoon in the premises of Baron Iwasaki and it is understood that they will attend a dinner party to be given in their honour to-night by the British Ambassador.—Eastern News Agency.

FLOODS IN FOUR PROVINCES

Problems Before Relief Bodies: "Sinwanpao's" Appeal to Chinese for Self Help

Four Provinces, Hunan, Kiangsi, Fukien and Kuangtung, are suffering from floods, remarks the "Sinwanpao." Very extensive areas are being inundated, and buildings have been demolished, crops destroyed and persons and cattle drowned.

Of these four provinces, Kiangsi has, generally speaking enjoyed immunity from floods in recent years, although the province has not yet recovered from the effect of the military depredation of former years.

As the areas affected are extensive, it will be very difficult to offer relief to all. Even assuming that this is possible, the relief offered can but assuage the suffering of the people for a time and not permanently. The people in distress will then either die in the gutter or turn robbers and bandits. Robbers and bandits were rampant after the protracted spell of drought, causing famine to five provinces in the north. Even now, brigands are still infesting Shantung and Honan.

But the effects of serious floods are more destructive and all-embracing, changing whole countrysides. Let every one do his or her utmost to rescue the people in flooded parts not only from their present plight, but also from being tempted to adopt a criminal career in the future (concludes the "Sinwanpao").

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS IN REVOLT

Widespread Movement to Strike for Increase of Pay: 23 Ringleaders Arrested

Manila, July 7.

What is understood to be a widespread move among the Phillippine Scouts to "strike" for more pay culminated on Sunday in the arrest of 23 ringleaders at Fort McKinley by the provost guard, which raided a meeting. Further arrests are expected.

It is known that the leaders planned a demonstration on July 4 and threats are now made of a similar demonstration on August 2. It is also stated that the Scouts are forming a secret society with ramifications among 7,000 Filipino soldiers. The officers say that there is no objection to the scouts appealing through legal channels for an increase in pay, which is now 12 pesos a month as compared with 40 pesos for American soldiers.

Later.

It now appears that Sunday's raid at Fort McKinley was made prematurely under a misapprehension by the Provost-Marshal there, the intention of the authorities having been to arrest a much larger number, some say more than 100.

The situation at Fort McKinley is understood to be less acute than that at Camp Stotsenburg, where the garrison is exclusively Filipino, with the exception of a handful of American officers, a medical detachment, the staff, and others.

Two battalions of the Philippine Scouts refused to work this morning at Fort McKinley.

Later.

The white troops at Fort McKinley are one battalion of the 15th Infantry and one Anti-Aircraft Battalion. Manila has the 31st Infantry.

The Army says that the trouble is confined to the most ignorant of the men, who have apparently been inspired from outside.

The Naval Headquarters have issued a statement that no orders have been issued yet for movement of the Asiatic Fleet to Manila.

A statement by the Army says that the trouble is inspired by Bolshevik emissaries and that the movement is under control.

Later.

It is now learned that more than 500 Scouts are implicated at Fort McKinley. The men are being held disarmed in barracks. The Army is disposed to let the ringleaders off with prison terms, though their action is unquestionably mutinous. It is generally believed that the local Legionarios del Trabajo, a semi-Bolshevik labour secret society, is responsible though it has no direct connexion with Russia. There is no ground to suspect Japanese influence.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Many Returning to Duty: 90 Privates Discharged

Manila, July 8.

Officers at Fort McKinley spent the night examining individually the disaffected Scouts. They completed the examination of 100 of them, of whom all but six expressed willingness to return to duty. There still remain nearly 500, who are being examined to-day.

Similar investigations are being conducted at Corregidor and Camp Stotsenburg. No report has yet been received from these centres.

The tension is notably less this morning.

Later.

Some Filipino privates of the 12th Medical Regiment at Fort McKinley this morning refused to perform their duty, but later consented.

Ninety privates of the 57th Infantry refused to change their attitude, and will be dishonourably discharged immediately.

Camp Stotsenburg and Corregidor are reported quiet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Plot to Blow up Magazine at Cavite Naval Yard

Manila, July 9.

San Roque, adjoining Cavite, has been quarantined for the purpose of avoiding clashes between the 600 Filipino employees of the Navy Yard who are on strike and American sailors.

Major-General G. W. Readix, Commanding in the Philippines, left for Manila this morning from Baguio.

It is reported that another Scout Regiment is disaffected.

A plot to blow up the magazine at Cavite Naval Yard was discovered this morning. The Filipino strikers are implicated. The situation is becoming increasingly serious.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SOCIAL HYGIENE IN THE FAR EAST

A General Advisory Body to be Established in Great Britain

London, July 7.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons to-day regarding maisons tolerées in Hongkong, Singapore and the Straits Settlement, Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, announced that the constitution of a general advisory body to deal with social hygiene was shortly being established under the chairmanship of the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies; namely, two Members of the House, including Lady Astor; two representatives of the Council for Combating Venereal Disease, and representatives of the War Office, the Admiralty, the Ministry of Health and the Colonial Office.—Reuter.

MOTORING IN NORTH KIANGSU

Making Whole of Northern Part of Province Safe for the Motor

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingkiangpu, Ku., July 1.

Four years ago Mr. Samuel B. Woods demonstrated for the first time that automobiles may be used in this district, by bringing a car from Hsuchowfu to Haichow and then down to this place, later going south to Kaoyu where he had his car shipped by water to Shanghai. The seeds sown then are now bearing fruit, for Gen. Ma Yu-ren has recently purchased a car and we understand has a large truck for transportation of soldiers now on the way.

Automobiles mean road building and the second step is now being taken. Orders have been issued to five hsiens to proceed with road-building and the actual work has begun in places. If the projected roads are completed it will be possible for one to use a car over almost all of the northern part of Kiangsu, as Gen. Bei Bao-shan has already carried on extensive work in the Haichow district. The country people are complaining bitterly about the work required of them, but unlike most hardships imposed on them, this will really be a boon for them too, when completed.

Two good rains recently have made the prospect for summer crops good. The most pessimistically inclined have to admit that the wheat crop this year was a bumper one, and for this we all are most sincerely thankful.

Bandits do not seem to have become as frequent as usual either, another source of gratitude. An official said to me to-day, "good crops mean peaceful people," and he is probably right.

The Grand Canal is unusually low for this time of the year, the launches can scarcely get through. Unless we have good rains in the north they will have to stop running in another day or so. This is almost unheard of for July.

The first artesian well in this part of the world is now being dug in the hospital compound. About 120 feet down a thick bed of coarse sand has been reached which constantly caves in on the drill. The final result of this venture will be reported later, as many foreigners here are sincerely hoping good water may be obtained from the well.

President Tsao Kun, says the Chinese press, proposes to create an organization for the unification of China, and appoint Mr. Sun Hung-yi to be its President. But has the President specified how China can be unified.

THE YOUNG IDEA AND ITS TEACHERS

Monster Conference at Nanking: Educational Expert from Mongolia

From Our Own Correspondent.

Nanking, July 6.

The annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Education opened in Nanking on July 3, with an attendance from all parts of China of over 1,000 educators.

The spacious and beautiful grounds of Southeastern University are thronged with delegates and visitors, while the magnificent new Library, the Gymnasium (the largest in China) and other buildings are in constant use for exhibits and meetings.

Mr. P. C. Wang, president of the Law College, Nanking, is Chairman of this year's conference, Mr. W. T. Tao is Executive Secretary of the Association. Among the prominent leaders and speakers are Dr. Chang Po-ling of Nankai University, Fan Yuen-lien, former Minister of Education, Ma Yen-t' su the brilliant economist, Mr. Chang Tai-yuen of literary fame, Hsiung Hsi-ling, and Dr. C. T. Wang.

At the opening meeting, two educators from Mongolia attracted much attention. One spoke in Mongolian and the other interpreted for him into Chinese.

In addition to the open meetings with addresses, the programme is full with sectional meetings discussing Primary Education, Middle School education, Normal education, Higher Education, Political Science, Rural education, vocational education, the education of girls, citizenship training, physical training, educational administration, Scouting, the teaching of history, Chinese literature, science, the National Language and English. A large place is given to the Popular Education Movement. These discussions, and the pooling of methods and experiences from all over the country, are valuable and encouraging. The members realize more than ever the problems whiich face them and the need of united, determined effort.

A representative of Kao En-lung spoke at the opening meeting and invited the Association to meet in Tsingtau next year. Dr. W. W. Yen was unable to leave Peking but sent a representative. Liang Chi-chao and Hu Shih who expected to attend have not yet arrived.

The Association has published figures showing steady growth since the last meeting. The membership now includes 118 schools and organizations and 1471 educators.

The Association has been entertained by the Military and Civil Governors. On Saturday evening, the delegates gathered on the lawn of Ginling College and listened to the May Queen Musical repeated by the Methodist Girls' School.

The Convention will close on July 9.

FLOODS ALL ABOUT HANGCHOW

Lady Missionary Badly Hurt in Ricsha Accident in Shanghai

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, July 4.

The heavy rains have caused floods and much destruction of property in the river district. The heat is now upon us and the missionaries, especially those with children, have scooted to the hills.

Miss Lang, C. I. M. missionary, was thrown out of her ricsha in Shanghai going for the 8 o'clock train on Tuesday morning en route for Mokanshan. Serious symptoms developed in the train, and a telegram was sent from Kashing to Dr. Main to send an ambulance to meet the patient at the station. Miss Wetherell and Dr. Lasell met the patient and had her conveyed to the hospital where she is being treated and is getting on as well as can be expected.

The weather is very trying and sudden deaths are reported from many quarters of the City and some kind of epidemic is feared, rumours are in the air.

The schools have broken up and the students gone home to play for 10 weeks.

YELLOW PRESS OF AMERICA EXAGGERATING JAPANESE FEELING ON EXCLUSION LAW

How International Animosities Are Bred: No Antagonism to Americans in Japan and No Public Demonstrations

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokyo, June 30.

American papers that have just teached Japan possess exaggerated and misleading accounts of the Imperial Hotel episode when a dozen hooligans broke up a dance at the Imperial Hotel on June 7. These reports are followed by others to the effect that Americans in Japan are being maltreated and, therefore, the Japanese in America must be made the objects of retaliation. Apart from such "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" law being hardly justifiable, the plain and simple truth is that no Americans have been maltreated in Japan. Americans go about their usual duties just as they have done, though a certain amount of tenseness, largely due to the individual's point view and mental state, can be read on the faces of some.

Week-ends take Americans out of the city many miles into the interior. I travelled on a train to Nikko, the sacred city of Japan, where are the magnificent mausolea of the Tokugawa shoguns, last week end. In the same large bogie compartment were three young Americans and quite a number of Japanese of all classes. The Americans whiled away the hours playing auction bridge. The conductor passed them several times, and, although he would have been perfectly justified in asking them to cease their game of cards, gambling in any form, whether for fun or otherwise, is taboo in Japan, they carried on their game till they got to their destination. The seemingly trivial incident is mentioned to show that there is far from a desire to make Americans feel uncomfortable. Those who are trying to make citizens of the United States uneasy are the hotheads, not those in authority, as far as one can judge by careful observation.

The reports reaching the United States in regard to alleged misdemeanours of the Japanese public bear a striking family resemblance. This is easily realized when it is remembered that most of the American correspondents here come from one place, the majority club together, and work together. Thus, there is an interchange of ideas and sentiment, when sheer independence in each one making out his own reports and basing them on actualities instead of hazardous guesses and rumours is of paramount necessity.

"Leg Pulling" in Excelsis.

Fiendish mischief is also having its place in the present excitement. A group of American newspaper men were recently discovered in a state bordering on semi-panic, because they had received "authentic reports" that all American homes would be raided that night, Americans ejected and that they might not even live to see the morrow's sun. The ridiculousness of the whole thing was that most of these young men who were talking of guarding their sacred homes talked in a loud voice of where the holster with the Colt automatic was hanging and its contents. Even more ridiculous was the fact that no one was in a position to shoot at all—leave alone shooting straight—while it did not seem to dawn on any that the precincts of a hotel, miles from where they live, was hardly the proper place to guard inviolate their sacred homes.

It all turned out afterwards to have been a practical joke played by a mischievous Japanese, who, however, is learning, in a police cell, that there is a type of "leg pulling" that the law will always frown upon. This incident shows the frame of mind in which some of the younger Americans are, a frame of mind that might find its way into cables which are sent off post-haste, but which will—or ought—not to find their way into the calmer articles that follow when the first flush of excitement has disappeared and the real perspective of the events under consideration can be rightly guaged.

Business Firms Worried.

Several American and British firms have been compelled to send out lengthy cables on their own account, practically contradicting the cable reports of some of the press correspondents in Tokyo. I called on the heads of a British and of an American firm—two of the largest foreign firms in Tokyo—to ascertain their views on the subject. The former declared that he was "bitterly disappointed" at the "penchant shown for sensation," while the American director was blunt and said he was "totally disgusted."

A report that might have reached China too during the first week of June spoke of "the anti-American feeling in Tokio having reached its greatest climax in a day of demonstrations to-day (June 5)."

It was a day of demonstrations certainly, but it happenned to be the City of Tokio's celebrations of the Prince Regent's marriage, the farewell to the former U.S. Ambassador Mr. Cyrus E. Woods, while the only anti-American demonstration on that day was at a meeting held by some reactionaries in the Wrestling Theatre, at Ryogoku, on the banks of the River Sumida. The tens of thousands out were there because the city was rejoicing and was in festive garb and to express bon voyage to Mr. Woods. The meeting to discuss the immigration problem was said to have been attended by some 25,000 persons, and there is no doubt that a large proportion of this number went to this meeting because they were out for the other two reasons and wanted to take in all the excitement the day had to offer. Besides, 25,000 at a Tokio mass meeting is not by any means large. I have seen 50,000 to 75,000 at a labour meeting or at a "down with the Ministry" demonstration.

The American Embassy.

That the American Embassy had a cordon of police thrown around it is true, but this refers to the old American Embassy which was burnt to shreds last September and where, till recently, a band of U.S. marines, under the command of Major W. H. Sullivan, were encamped. The posting of police here was a precautionary measure that had the full co-operation and assent of the American authorities in Tokyo, as it was feared that, some notoriety-thirsting "patriot" might resent the presence of American soldiers on Japanese soil and attempt to use this as a lever to force a new development. The marines have gone away to Manila and the old America Embassy—known as Camp Cyrus E. Woods—is as good as deserted except for the Japanese employees of the Embassy who continue to live there on the tents that have been erected for them by the American marines. Business appertaining to the American Embassy is, and has been, conducted in the Imperial Hotel since the earthquake disaster, and there is no guard of any kind in this part of the Hotel, though there is ample evidence of police in other parts of the building ready to cope with any sakéfied (sake is Japanese rice wine) who might try to create a scene. In saying that the American Embassy is being guarded by police—which is true in a way—the impression might be entertained abroad that the Chargé d'Affaires and the staff are in danger, which is far from true. One can't be too explicit at the present time.

Authorities in a Dilemma.

It is nonsensical to infer that the authorities are purposely allowing matters to drift to a dangerous point. There is nothing at all to warrant such an assumption. First, it should be borne in mind that the Japanese are not in a position to use force, even if they should be inclined to do so; then despite the fact that the entire nation is exercised to a more or less degree by the American immigration legislation, the question of a resort to arms is not likely to find a unanimous assenting echo. The Government is in a dilemma. There is considerable unrest internally which the Government fears much more than the excitement caused by the immigration question, an unrest that might use the immigration issue to force something akin to civil war.

The next three or four months will be the crux of difficulties. Tomorrow, July 1, the day on which the immigration legislation is to go into effect, will undoubtedly be marked by demonstrations. July 4—American Independence Day—will also be used for a similar purpose. Then, if there are no untoward occurrences on the Pacific Coast of America, things will begin to die down, the humid and irritable Japanese summer aiding, and in this case being a veritable blessing.

HONGKONG NOTES

The British Aviators: Sergt. Andrews Among the Bison: A Lawn Bowls Feat

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hongkong, July 2.

The British world aviators, tired, unkempt, but happy arrived here on Monday evening from Haiphong. The crowds in their launches had waited patiently for nearly three hours, and for fully 10 minutes, when the keen-sighted spotted the graceful machine silhouetted against the clouds, the noise of the aeroplane was deafened by the thunder of welcome that had been pent up and ready to burst at any moment.

Unlike the Americans, Maclaren spotted the landing station immediately. From a height of 1800 feet the pilot circled the machine round Stonecutter's Island and then swooped down on to the water, landing with hardly a splash and stopping without taxi-ing. This was made possible by the ideal construction of the undercarriage which with the two small pontoons fitted to the wings enables the 'plane to skim gracefully on the surface of the water.

Sergt. Andrews, the mechanic, proved exceedingly modest. At first he stubbornly refused to be photographed, but at length in response to his leader whom he asked:"Is that an order, sir?" he yielded and faced the battery of cameras that confronted him. Of his experiences, Sergt. Andrews frankly confessed that at one stage of the flight, he had what is known as the "wind up." They were passing over huge tracts of jungle between Bangkok and Vinh. Once when they had to descend fairly low, he saw a squad of elephants and bison charging about in a wild state. Everywhere around there was bog and if they had been forced to land they could never have risen nor have got in touch with anyone.

The Portuguese Flying Men.

The Portuguese aviators, whose flight from Lisbon ended 20 miles away from Hongkong, have been fêted and thoroughly honoured at Macao during the past week. They intend returning to Hongkong where the Portuguese community have arranged an official celebration for next Thursday (July 10). It will be in the nature of a farewell gathering as the aviators will leave for Portugual soon afterwards. They are going home viâ Shanghai and America. They will be presented with souvenirs and will be entertained at a garden party at the Club de Recreio on Friday and at a ball at the Club Lusitano on Saturday.

A Lawn Bowls Feat.

Probably a unique performance was recorded in Hongkong's lawn bowls history yesterday. In a first round match in the Colony's championship tournament, Mr. Mill representing the Civil Service Cricket Club defeated Mr. Lee of Craigengower by 21 points to nil. Can any one of the Big Four in Shanghai equal this?

Japan's Disavowal of Any Arrangement

Peking, July 7.

The Waichiaopu, at the request of the Chiaotungpu, recently sent a note to the Japanese Legation asking whether the report was true that Japan had reached an agreement with Manchuria for the construction of a railway from Taonanfu to Tsitsihar. The Japanese Legation has now replied entirely disavowing knowledge of the matter.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE KIANGWO REFLOATED

Hankow, July 9.

The Indo-China S. N. Company's steamer, Kiangwo, which ran aground up-river on July 6, has been refloated and is apparently not damaged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANDIT SEASON OPENED IN NORTH KIANGSU

Famous Leader's Head Adorning the Walls of Haichow

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Haichow, July 2.

Two soldiers dead, others wounded:—

The ruins of a village still smouldering:

Nineteen heads on the wall of the city mark the opening of the Bandit Season in this section.

Ordinarily the execution or escape of a score of bandits in North Kiangsu is worth little more than a paragraph, so accustomed have we become to such recitals, but the present event is of unusual interest for many reasons.

First and foremost of these is that Li Gia-chi, whose deeds have been recorded previously in these columns, was among those who paid the extreme penalty for his crimes. A robber of ordinary standing for some years, he leaped into prominence 10 months ago by the awful vengeance he wreaked upon a neighbour who had given the military a tip as to his whereabouts. Late in August of last year, in broad daylight he swept down upon his enemy's home and slaughtered every living being within the walls, making a total of a round dozen—men, women and children—and then applied the torch. Li was a robber of unusual type. He was well-educated in the classics, quite-well-to-do as country people here are reckoned and stood well in the community—and in passing it may be said this standing was by no means injured in his immediate neighbourhood when he embarked once for all on the bandit's career.

Few but Ferocious.

Whether from choice or necessity he organized only a small band of followers, but they made up in efficiency and ferocity for the greatest numbers in bands with whom he was affiliated. There were four of these bands last autumn that had things their own way for several months until General Bei Bao-san got into real action with his system of roads, telephones and motor lorries for quick transport. One by one the bands were chased away, scattered and their leaders slain.

Big-nosed-Hsu was the first to fall, being wounded in the leg in December and soon after caught and executed.

Old Mrs. Djao, perhaps the most cruel leader the region has ever known, was caught at Weihaiwei, carried back over the scenes of her robberies and executed at Ichoufu about June 5.

Liu Hsiao Liu-dz escaped the net, but his mother and younger brother were both shot about Christmas time.

Li Gia-chi also escaped and was said to have spent the winter and spring in Shanghai, and the fact that this latest raid was pulled off by his men entirely armed with new automatic pistols is fairly good evidence that he spent his vacation in touch with some enterprising gun-runner. No one can study the bandit subject without seeing how immense an advantage the bandit has over the soldier who tries to bring him in. A mobile force, dogging from one huddle of huts to another, requires a force of five times as many soldiers for their surrounding. Li pinned his faith to this fact and substituting the automatic for the clumsier rifle came back to show what he could do.

Honours Rest with Troops.

There were known to have been 33 in his band and the company of soldiers that rounded them up deserve all praise for their courage and skill. Hemmed in at last, the ruffians died gamely and an observer declared that all the victims had been shot in the head, apparently as they peeped up for a return shot. As they were driven out of one house by firing the roof they fled to another until they were gradually wiped. Several escaped through the lines, several more were taken alive and the heads of 19 were brought back and hung on the city wall. There is still a question as to whether the above-mentioned Liu was among the slain as some were disfigured by the fire and were unrecognizable.

A second point of interest is the complete turning of the tables as compared with last year when the soldiers suffered defeat after defeat in actual fighting and rarely caught any but stragglers. Confident of repeating last year's successes Li made his first raid less than 15 miles from Haichow. He was caught at last at a village only a mile or two off the main automobile road and in sight of a telephone station.

Again, whereas last year the soldiers fought only half-heartedly and that requiring the pressure of the general himself, this brilliant performance was pulled off in his absence at Nanking.

So the situation stands at the opening of the season with all honours resting with the soldiers.

THE HANTAN TABLET IN SHANSI

Reverent Reception of Famous Rainmaker: The End of a Noted Outlaw

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Taiku, Shan., July 4.

In my letter of a few days ago I reported that the people of Taiyuanfu had sent to Hantanhsien in Chihli Province for the rain-producing iron tablet. The tablet was received in Taiyuanfu on the afternoon of July 1. Elaborate ceremonies were carried out in a "water temple" outside the west gate of the city, led by Governor Yen in person. Then he and the other provincial and local officials followed the tablet in procession through the streets of the city to its resting-place in the Fu Kung Ssu. There, again, prayers were offered for rain. That evening rain fell in some of the northeastern districts of the province, but thus far the drought remains unbroken in Taiyuanfu city and throughout the central plain. The supply of "iron tablets" in Hantanhsien seems to be able to meet all demands, for the officials and people of Pingtingchow have sent for one on their own account. Their prayers were answered with a sprinkle of rain on the evening of the first. In this part of Shansi unusually high winds have prevailed for several days, but from a dry quarter, the southwest.

In Sankiaots'un in Kihsiensha a few days ago the people met to pray for rain in the Lung Wang temple. An unusual amount of incense was burned and from it the temple took fire and burned to the ground.

Desperate Bandit Shot Down.

In Wenshuihsien a few days ago a desperado who had terrorized the people of that and neighbouring districts met the fate he had richly earned. His name was Ch'en Nan-tse. The story of his misdeeds, which included both highway robbery and rapine, reached the ears of the Governor, who ordered the local officials to capture him dead or alive. Ch'en Nan-tse had at least three murders to his credit, two of them being members of the pollice in Kihsiensha and Ch'ing-yuan. The local magistrate, Mr. Yang, deputed his chief of police and the prosecuting attorney of the district to effect the capture or killing of the bandit. Leading a strong force of police these men scoured the district for some days, finally learning that Ch'en Nan-tse was hiding in the Hu Shen temple in Wen Shui city. Just before daybreak he would remove to another place. He was followed one day to an enclosed threshing floor, where the police closed in on him. Seeing that he was surrounded, and being armed with two revolvers, the bandit opened fire first. The police promptly replied and in all 73 shots were exchanged. The outcome of this fusillade was that Ch'en Nan-tse and the man in whose property he was taking refuge were both killed. If any members of the police force were injured no report was made of it.

TELEGRAPHIC reports from Changsha, Hankow, Nanchang and Canton all tell of ever-rising floods, inundating fields and streets and drowning many people and cattle.

FROM SEA TO KANSU BY RAILWAY

Proposed Extension of Lunghai Line to Far Away Lanchow: Wu Pei-fu Approving

The part played by overseas Chinese in the development of business enterprises is sufficiently known not to require detailed repetition. Wing On, Sincere, the M. Y. San Co. and many other merchandizing organizations are the result of the enterprise of Chinese from Australia, the Straits Settlements and Hawaii. The overseas Chinese have, however, played only a small part in the politics of China nor has their vast capital been used in the financial rehabilitation of the country. They are mostly of the conservative Cantonese stock, often Hakkas, who know how to keep as well as earn their money.

Now comes the Lunghai Railway and fosters a scheme said to have the approval of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, to complete the Lunghai Railway from Haichow in Kiangsu to Lanchow in Kansu, an enterprise enormous in its commercial, political and social possibilities. For it will connect the Yellow Sea with Central Asia; it will bring the Moslem population of China closer to the Yangtze and Yellow River Valleys; it will make possible the migration of surplus population from overpopulated Chihli, Shantung and Kiangsu to thinly-populated Kansu and Sinkiang.

Line Open and the Cost.

The scheme is for the overseas Chinese, the emigrants abroad, to finance the railway. The prospectus says; in part:

"The total amount of the loan on this railway was originally Frs. 250,000,000, but it was subsequently altered to £10,000,000. The first instalment issued was £4,000,000. As China was then in great turmoil, it is not quite clear as to how the money was spent. The war in Europe soon broke out, making subsequent issue impossible. After great trouble, the officials concerned managed to raise sufficient funds to start work; and it was only on January 1, 1917, that the Kaifeng-Hsuchow section in the east, and the Loyang-Kuanyintang section in the west were built; and traffic on these sections was begun, being regarded as business during the construction.

Later, it was extended eastward to the Grand Canal and westward to Shenchow, traffic on which was opened as soon as possible. The length of the line in operation is 675 kilometres; but the amount of indebtedness, calculated as on January 1, 1924, has reached $122,868,930.

Hopes of Profit.

The prospectus at this point touches on the repayments of the loans and the eventual deficit.

"As the political situation is settled, trade is reviving, and considering that Haichow will be open to traffic the next year, (according to the Belgian-Dutch Loan Agreement), we are not too optimistic in hoping for an additional profit of $540,000. Moreover, in so long a time as 34 years, the revenues of our railway will certainly increase from year to year, as has been the case with other railways, provided there be no untoward incidents happening in the meantime."

Thus, it will be seen that the profit from working the present mileage of the Lung-Hai Railway, can only maintain its own ground and meet its loan service. If we want to extend the line from Shenchow westward, first to Sian and then to Lanchow, the sale of Chinese bonds cannot be readily effected owing to financial stringency in Europe after the Great War. Even if the Belgian Company is willing to do its utmost to raise funds, nevertheless we should not allow any time and opportunity to slip by, if our Chinese emigrants will give us financial help. Both sides can co-operate together, and the work will be more expeditiously done with a less effort.

Don't Let Europe Get Them.

After discussing in detail the bonds issued with regard to this railway, the prospectus continues.

"The 7 per cent. Treasury Bonds and the 8 per cent. Treasury Bonds all beng short term bonds, are worth above 90 per cent. in European markets.

"Why allow the above-mentioned bonds to drift into European markets and their value to be manipulated by other people? Would it not be better for Chinese emigrants to rise to the occasion by buying them up, especially at this time when the franc is quoted at so low a rate? It needs no prophet to say that very large profits will reward their buyers. If you wait till France and Belgium have recovered their pre-war financial position, the loss to China will be so great as to defy description. Note what happened in the Gold Franc question.

"You may buy any of the above mentioned bonds through the Belgian Railway and Tramway Company at Brussels, or through the Banque Belge pour L'Etranger in China."

FROM FISHING VILLAGE TO BIGGEST PORT

65th Anniversary of Yokohama's Participation in World Trade

The 65th anniversary of the opening of Yokohama to international trade was celebrated on the 2nd instant under the joint auspices of Kanagawa prefecture and Yokohama municipality.

The ground was packed by 5,000 people, including Mr. Seino, new governor of Kanagawa, and other prefectural government authorities, the Mayor, Mr. Watanabe and municipal officials, Mr. Kodama, governor of the Yokohama Specie Bank, and many leading business men of that port. Speeches were made by Mr. Seino, Mr. Watanabe, and Mr. Hara, a prominent silk merchant of Yokohama.

Mr. Watanabe spoke on behalf of the promoters of the celebration saying that the earthquake and fire of last September would never be forgotten by the people of Yokohama. By dint of their hard labour the city had grown from a straggling fishing village to the most prosperous port in the country during the 65 years since it had been opened to foreign trade, and in a few short hours it was razed to the ground.

Nor will the people forget, he said, the deep sympathy shown by Japanese and foreigners during the days which followed the September calamity and that special thanks is due to the Yokohama Specie Bank which came forward with the liberal contribution of Y.1,000,000 to the municipality. The mayor concluded by saying that the time will not be long before the Yokohama city and port will be restored to its former prosperous condition through the joint efforts of the Government authorities and people in rebuilding one of the leading trade ports in Japan.

JAPAN'S EXPANSION OF NAVAL AIR FORCES

FAMINE RELIEF WORK CHEKIANG

$41,000 Expended Last Year: Attempts to Prevent Recurrence of Floods

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taichow, July 1.

Heavy summer rains always cause a certain amount of anxiety to the inhabitants of Taichowfu and neighbourhood. We have had almost continuous rain for the last three weeks of June. Although the river has risen considerably now and again there has been no flood to speak of. The Bridge of Boats was removed as a precautionary measure, but the river being tidal even above Taichowful the water has largely been carried away.

The dangerous floods are caused by very high tides meeting the flood waters. Last year, typhoon and big floods combined caused a lot of damage. To meet the distress which followed, a Famine Relief Fund was started. A great deal of Relief Work has been done owing to the generous support given to this Fund both by Chinese and foreigners. A local Sub-Committee was formed, and superintended expenditure of the money. Two foreigners were on this Committee, the rest being Chinese. It has distributed in relief and paid for work done, no less a sum than $41,000. A large part of this sum came from the Chinese foreign famine relief committee—the remainder coming from Chinese sources. The present Magistrate, like his predecessor, has taken a keen, active part in the distribution and spending of these funds, both of them showing special anxiety that they should be expended in the best interests of those most needing relief. The flood spread devastation over a large area, relief work has been correspondingly extensive in its operations. Work done has not only sought to repair damage but as far as possible to prevent its recurrence. For instance dykes and sluices opposite Hainen, on the north bank of the river, have been repaired—a new stone retaining wall has been built outside the city wall of Ling-hai at the southeast corner, formerly known as the Fongtaimen, A sum of $7,000 is being spent upon this latter piece of work, though this sum will not be sufficient to finish it; 3,000 is being supplied by the Committee from the Relief Funds, the remaining $4,000 is being provided by the Chinese Provincial Authorities. A strong stone wall is being built just outside Taichow city to prevent further encroachment of the river, which at this particular point is washing up dangerously close to the wall's foundations.

To fill up outhouses, courtyards and part of the street with dry inflammable straw is courting disaster from fire. This is what the Chinese down here do with their straw as soon as they have beaten the grain out of it. A little child was allowed to play with a box of matches amidst heaps of straw, with the natural result that much of it was soon ablaze. Owing to the prompt energetic action of local firemen, who soon appeared on the scene with helmets and axes, the fire was checked, but not before about a dozen houses had been destroyed. This is the first time I have seen Chinese firemen at work outside Shanghai. That they had to fight this fire with hand pumps and buckets of water, and axes and the fact that they so quickly got it in hand is very much to their credit.

As in Virgil's day so to-day "Fama....mobilitate viget, viresque aequirit eundo." A wild rumour soon spread abroad in the country that 600 houses had been completely burnt down. It is quite true that had it not been for the firemen's efforts this number of houses might have been destroyed. After all was over a relic of bygone superstition appeared, although the origin of the fire was quite easily explained. Some good people declared it was caused by spirits of Mon-tin-de hill, in revenge for their having been disturbed by soldiers cutting a road from the city up to the foreign hospital. Most of the Chinese city dwellers to-day, however, feel that to believe such foolish tales is a reflexion upon their intelligence, and the tales are soon forgotten.

According to a telegram from Hunan to Hankow papers, Gen. Ma Chi inflicted upon Shen Hung-ying's army a crushing defeat and the siege of Kueilin has been raised.

MR. H. E. MORRISS ON TRANS-SIBERIAN

Account of Journey to London: Railway in Bad Repair: Mishaps Frequent

"I believe I am the first Englishman to travel from China viâ the trans-Siberian Railway since the war," Mr. H. E. Morriss, said to "Evening News" representative on his recent arrival in London.

Mr. Morris went on to say that he had made the journey between London and China by seven different routes, but he described this journey through the entire breadth of Soviet Russia as by far the most interesting.

"I found the trans-Siberian Railway greatly changed," he said. "The luxurious compartments of the wagon-lits were dilapidated.

"The rails in some places had eaten into the rotten wooden sleepers, and accidents frequently occur.

"My carriage was overturned about the seventh day of the journey. No one was hurt, but we had to wait for the next train from Moscow and borrow two of its carriages, as there were none to be had elsewhere.

"There is a great shortage of rolling stock and of money.

"We got our food at the little Siberian stations along the route, as there was no dining-car on the train.

"The food was good and very cheap. Eggs were 50 for 2s.

"In Moscow there were practically no foreigners in business. The factories were mostly closed down. British appeared to be the most popular, Americans the least popular.

"Lord Parmoor's son, Mr. Cripps, was the only Englshman I found investing capital there. He showed me a number of houses he had built in Moscow, and he hopes to obtain good interest on his money by this speculation, and is quite content with results so far."

Mr. Morriss remarked that he had been treated with the greatest courtesy by the Soviet officials throughout the journey.

SERVICE OF CHINESE LOANS

China's Belated Repentance

London, July 4.

Commenting on the Chinese Government's decision to resume full service of loans, the "Manchester Guardian" says that the action of certain Governments in continuing from motives of self-interest to turn a blind eye on the Treaty concluded four years' ago is not an inspiring example of financial morality and it is a good thing that China for her part has now seen fit to bring the episode to an end.—Reuter.

The monsoon forecast for this year, says the "Pioneer" of June 11, has special interest in that it is the last to be issued by Sir Gilbert Walker, who retires shortly, after having devoted 20 years to the service of Indian meteorology, and in so doing has wrought remarkable changes in the system of forecasting an event that is of vital moment to the prosperity of this country. It is pleasant to note that he is able to make his bow with a not too unfavourable prognostication.

SHANGHAI NEWS

SQ.-LDR. MACLAREN'S DESCRIPTION OF HIS FLIGHT FROM HONGKONG

Propeller Found to Be Chipped but Soon Replaced with Chinese Authorities' Help: Machines Generally Behaving Splendidly

A "North-China Daily News" representative was granted an interesting conversation with Major Maclaren at H. M. Consulate last Friday, in the course of which the journey from Hongkong to Shanghai was described in detail.

"We took off the water from Hongkong, just behind Stonecutters Island, at 9.32 on Wednesday morning" he related, "and a large crowd came down to see us off. There were a number of launches, the usual hooting of sirens and letting off of crackers, etc., and after circling the harbour once we set off on our course. We experienced some rather bumpy weather at first, but the day was clear and calm, excepting for a few low clouds. We kept well out to sea, and with a slight, but favourable wind, averaged some 85 miles per hour and alighted in Pagoda Anchorage at Foochow at 2.35 p.m.

"Everything was there waiting for us. The Asiatic Petroleum Company, as usual, had made all the arrangements and provided us with a launch which towed us to the buoy."

Chinese Authorities' Help

"On our arrival at Foochow" he said, "we found that something from the machine, probably a nut or a bolt or something of the sort, had flown out into the propellor, chipping the blades rather badly. The accident might have been more serious had it not been for the assistance very kindly extended to us by the Chinese authorities at the port, and that same evening we had everything repaired and O. K. We spent the night aboard a steamer that was handy to the machine. We were not able to get into Foochow itself, owing to the fact that the Pagoda Anchorage is some distance out.

"We left Foochow punctually at 7 o'clock in the morning. The day was fine and bright and there was no wind on the surface. The wind when we started was very slight, but was again with us. When we reached Goodridge Point, however, shortly before 10 o'clock, quite a strong wind was blowing and we made excellent progress. After Wenchow Point we met with heavy clouds which obscured the land from view and further on ran into more low lying clouds. We sighted Shanghai at about eleven o'clock and landed in the river at 11.25."

In reply to a question as to how he found the landing place here, Major Maclaren replied: "Oh very easily indeed, we could see it from a long way off, and the cross helped us considerably. There was no difficulty about that at all. With regard to the wind direction, the smoke from the ships in port was sufficient to give us that."

"Were the machines you used both of the same pattern?" Major Maclaren was asked.

Machines Behave Splendidly

"Exactly," came the reply. "They are both Vickers Vulture amphibious flying boats. Their behaviour throughout the trip has been perfectly wonderful. With the exception of those two incidents, at Korfu and in the Sind desert the engines have not even missed once. On the two occasions I just mentioned the trouble was due to the reduction gear, and in neither case was the machine at all damaged. As for the smash at Akyab, that was due almost entirely to the weather. Certainly you could not find a better type of machine today than this for the work."

When the "North-China Daily News" representative passed the remark that he supposed all idea of a race had been dropped by now, the aviator answered at once: "There never was any question of a race at all. The two expeditions are so entirely different. The one is a well organized affair backed by millions from the Government, the other, our show, is purely and simply a private venture. Vickers have supplied us with the machines, Napier's with the engines, and the A.P.C. with oil and petrol and general arrangements en route."

"Well, how do the Royal Air Force figure in the matter?" he was asked.

"They don't," replied Major Maclaren.

"Technically speaking, then, you are on leave?"

Just Taking a Holiday

"Of course" was the answer. "I am on half pay and the Air Force has nothing at all to do with the matter. I am on leave purely and simply. Just taking a holiday, that is all, only instead of big game shooting or something of a similar nature we are doing this. Of course," he added, "we should like to get round first."

Major Maclaren also had something to say about the action of the United States destroyers Paul Jones and William B. Preston in bringing the new machine to him at Akyab.

"It was a wonderfully sporting thing to do" he said. "Indeed it is one of the best things I have ever heard of."

After Japan the airmen round the Kurile and Aleutian Islands and then run for Alaska and down to Vancouver. From there they will make straight across Canada, stopping at Winnipeg and Montreal, on to St. John's and the Azores, Lisbon and then England. They hope to arrive there some time in August, having started from England on March 25.

The most unpleasant stretch of flying will probably be across the North Pacific over the Aleutian Islands to Vancouver. This was where the Americans had such a bad time. There is not too much traffic round those seas, and the country is inhospitable and bleak to get blown on to. The longest stretch they will have to make, however, will be from St. John's, New Foundland, to the Azores, a distance of some 1,350 miles. The winds should be fair, however, and weather conditions generally good.

LUNCHEON AT SHANGHAI CLUB

Aviators Entertained by British Members

A large and representative gathering assembled at the Shanghai Club to welcome the British Round-the-World fliers at lunch. Squadron-Leader Maclaren arrived at the Club at 12.45, accompanied by Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, and was received with cheers. Flight-Lieut. Plenderleith was detained, trying to repair damage caused to the machine last night by a junk running into it, but he arrived at 1.40.

After lunch Mr. R. G. MacDonald, President of the Shanghai Club, proposed the health of the aviators in a few felicitous words. He mentioned the bad luck that had attended them, but pointed out that they had stuck to their job, and assured them that the members of the Shanghai Club looked forward to their completing their world flight, and hoped that they would meet with no more troubles.

Squadron-Leader Maclaren, who was received with vociferous cheers, expressed the thanks of himself and his colleagues at the wonderful reception they had received in Shanghai, and assured the members of the Shanghai Club that they would carry away with them very pleasant memories of their short stay in Shanghai. Squadron-Leader Maclaren expressed his regret at the illness that had overtaken Sergeant Major Andrews, but stated that the latest advice was that he was again normal, and it was expected that he would be able to leave to-morrow. Squadron-Leader Maclaren emphasized the fact that he could not have arrived here had it not been for the wonderful assistance he had received from the American fliers and the American Navy. After drinking to the health of the members of the Shanghai Club, he proposed a toast to the American fliers, the American Navy and the American nation in general, and this was very cordially responded to.

He said that, considering the American fliers were doing the same thing, he thought it was very sporting of them to give the help they did.

When Squadron-Leader Maclaren sat down there were persistent calls of "We want Plenderleith." The latter then arose, and said that he had no remarks to make but to thank the members of the Shanghai Club. The gathering then broke up.

DINNER WITH MEMBERS OF BRITISH R. A. F.

Reminiscences of the Flight

Major Maclaren and Lieut. Plenderleith and Mr. Barton, H. B. M. Consul-General were entertained at dinner last Friday by 29 former members of the Royal Air Force, Mr. Swann in the chair.

Replying to the toast of his health Major Maclaren told some fine stories of his journey from Home. The world flight was first thought of two years ago when Maclaren returned from his duty in the Near East. He had already discussed it with Lieut. Plenderleith and they together discussed it with the Chief of Air Staff who was very keen. Having decided on the two senior officers they looked round for a mechanic and selected Serg. Andrews out of many and after a three months course at Napier's they were all ready for their trip. On March 25 they started from England and in easy stages got through Europe without any troubles or mishaps. They were forced to land near Corfu on a small lake, and found trouble with their reduction gear, which necessitated a new engine. They proceeded after 16 days and got as far as Karachi when more trouble with their engine caused them another delay. They landed on the desert about 200 miles from Karachi and about 20 from the railway. They were very well received in spite of the distance, every assistance was given them and they were able to get away again in seventeen days. They then went on to Calcutta and them to Akyab where they were forced to land on a small body of water. They were forced to stay there for three days owing to the torrential rains.

As a result of their mishap at Karachi everything had been tightened up, but during the rains the strain was so much that everything tended to buckle. They took off with a machine that was practically waterlogged and got up a few feet when she came down, and broke her back. This necessitated a new machine, which through the kindness of the American navy they were able to get from Hakodate, where it had been sent in case it should be needed for the trans-Pacific flight. It arrived in a very heavy case and was almost lost in the sea as the crane, which was putting it overside, fell overboard, but fortunately landed the case in safety. They were able to rig the machine and get it under way in a very short while after its arrival. They had rigged up a temporary hanger and had to work in about six inches of water, with rain the whole time. They were ready to leave Rangoon when they received a wire from the American fliers saying that they would be there next day. They waited but the Americans did not turn up and they started.

Refuge in a Creek.

On their trip from Rangoon they ran into a very bad storm and had to take refuge in a creek and while there the Americans, who were flying before the storm, passed over them. Between Haiphong and Hongkong they had several narrow escapes as their maps showed no mountains and the whole country was covered with mountains. They were flying at about 4,000 feet and were between the very black clouds and the mountains and were continually going up to see if they could get through the clouds and down again to see if they could land. They eventually were able to get through a small clear space and saw the sea and made for it. They arrived in Hongkong after one of the most adventurous parts of their journey. Their journey from Hongkong has already been told above.

A hearty vote of thanks was also extended to Mr. Dymond for the work he had done on the machine in the absence of Sergt. Andrews.

DEPARTURE FROM SHANGHAI

Perfect Take-off in Fair Weather

Squadron Leader Maclaren and Flight-Lieut. Plenderleith got away in their flying boat at half past nine on Saturday morning, followed by the enthusiastic cheers of the crowd which turned up to see them depart, the sound of crackers and the hooting of sirens.

The two airmen, accompanied by Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, and members of the Royal Air Force Association, embarked on A. P. C. launches at about 8 o'clock and arrived at the machine some 20 minutes later, tied up to her buoy opposite the Standard Oil Company's factory. An hour was spent getting stores on board, testing compression, screwing everything down for the flight, etc., and then the little flying boat coasted gently down the river for about a quarter of a mile.

A light southerly breeze was blowing and a very strong ebb tide was running in the river. The machine was seen to turn, and the engines, from a gentle clock-clock, broke into a roar. Huge feather waves were cast up by the pontoons and she speeded up the river for a few hundred yards and rose beautifully in the face of the wind. She was steady the whole time, and after circling round once, when Maclaren could be seen waving his hand to those below, she turned and made off in a southwesterly direction.

Major Maclaren expressed himself as being quite pleased with the weather conditions, and was heard to remark that most of the way they hoped to have the wind abeam. They expected to be flying for some six or seven hours before Kagoshima was reached.

We regret to record that Sergeant Andrews was still unfit to proceed, but he will try and catch the boat up in Japan. At Montreal the plane will be completely overhauled at Vickers' works and probably a new engine will be installed.

SGT. ANDREWS BETTER

Left on Sunday to Join Major Maclaren in Japan

Sgt. Andrews, who has spent several days in hospital from the effects of sunstroke, is now somewhat better, and has been allowed by the doctors to proceed.

He left Shanghai on Sunday by the R.M.S. Empress of Asia and was due to arrive in Kobe on Tuesday. From there, if well enough, he is to continue his journey by train and join the other aviators.

OBITUARY

Mr. A. A. Adee

News has been received in Shanghai of the death of Mr. Alvey Augustus Adee, U. S. Second Assistant Secretary of State, which occurred on Monday.

The late Mr. Adee was born at Astoria, New York, on November 27, 1842, and was appointed Secretary of the Legation at Madrid in September, 1870. After acting as Charge d'Affaires at different times, he became Chief of the Diplomatic Bureau in June, 1878; Third Assistant Secretary of State in July 1882; and Second Assistant Secretary of State in August, 1886. He was present at the signing of the Peace Protocols between the United States and Spain, was appointed Acting Secretary of State ad interim to fill the vacancy from September 17 to September 29, 1898, and was Acting Secretary of State during a critical period of the Chinese troubles in August and September, 1900.

Mr. Benjamin G. Lamme

The Westinghouse Electric International Company in Shanghai received a cable from their head office in New York on Wednesday informing them of the death of Mr. Benjamin G. Lamme, Chief Engineer to the Home Company.

Mr. Lamme was one of the greatest electrical engineers of the world of to-day, and his loss will be universally felt. Born in Springfield, Ohio, on January 12, 1864, he graduated from the Ohio City University at the age of 24 years and entered the employ of the Westinghouse Company a year later. He soon proved himself a man of brilliant electrical engineering attainments and in 1907 was appointed Chief Engineer to the Company, a position he held till the time of his death. He has more than 150 patents to his credit, among which are included some of the most important improvements in electrical fields. Among his many achievements are the following.

He was the originator of methods for calculating designs of electrical machines.

He invented the first tram car motor with single reduction gear.

Improvements in alternating current generator design, which increased output by 50 per cent.

His was the first successful induction motor with the distributed type of winding.

He designed the great Polyphase generators for the Chicago World's Fair 1892.

He designed the first 5,000 h.p. generator for Niagara Falls.

He designed the first Squirrel Cage Induction Motor.

His greatest achievement was the Synchronous Converter for converting alternating into direct current, while he also designed and developed first single phase railway motors.

Whilst not a prolific writer, many of his papers are considered classics in the engineering world. Among other honours showered upon him, the late Mr. Lamme was one of the two members of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers to be elected to the Naval Consulting Board during the war, and was made chairman of the Inventions Committee of that board. He was awarded the Edison medal by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and the Joseph Sullivan medal by the Ohio State University.

The late Mr. Lamme was a very studious man and of a retiring disposition. He spent a great deal of his time assisting students. Nearly every branch of electrical science is indebted to him in some measure.

GUY FAWKES!

Rumour of a Plot in the Russian Consulate Basement

In a quiet way, Red and White Russians in Shanghai have agreed to differ like gentlemen, and have never yet allowed their political antagonism to infringe upon the monopoly at present held by armed robbers. However, a bold, bad rumour went round the town yesterday. As everyone knows, the business of handing over Russian property to the Bolsheviks about to assume office locally has been neither smooth nor swift and still remains a matter of nice adjustment between the parties concerned. We have all been thinking it might be settled in an amicable manner, but now comes this nasty, disturbing rumour. The tale is that a number of White Russian officers have installed themselves in the basement of the Russian Consulate, have armed themselves with bombs and other lethal weapons, and are pledged to give a lively reception to Red representatives when they call to take over the building. It is whispered that the story emanated from a Red source: one wouldn't wonder in the least if it did.

All was quiet on Monday afternoon however. It is true there are Russian officers in the basement of the Consulate building, but they have been there for some time, glad to make use of the accommodation afforded, and using the place also as a little school wherein to pursue their studies of the English language, and other matters. Any secret service agent peeping through the cellar windows would have observed nothing more startling than a blackboard used in pursuance of the aforesaid studies, and with nothing more incriminating in chalk upon it than phrases of kindergarten simplicity, such as "This is the book of my aunt," "The dog of my uncle is called Fido," and more words done in scholarly hand to the same effect. As far as could be seen, there were no bombs bulging from the pockets of the schoolmaster and his pupils, and one rather suspects that if the officers ever possessed any, they must have long since been sold to buy new chalks and school books. However, if a "divarshun" of the interesting type mentioned really has been agreed upon, it is to be hoped that due notice may be given in order that non-combatants may keep out of the way. But we would much rather hear that this basement rumour is baseless.

AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Record Attendances at This Year's Celebrations: Declaration of Independence Read by Judge Purdy at Flag-raising Ceremony

The Fourth of July flag-raising at the U.S. Consulate-General is always an impressive ceremony and the number of Americans and their friends who were in attendance last Friday morning was larger than ever before.

Just before 8 o'clock two buglers from the U.S. Marines sounded "Reveille" to bring the onlookers to attention. Then, to the notes of "Colours," the flag was run up smartly to the top of the flag pole by the American Co. S.V.C., commanded by Capt. V. Olsen, while all stood at attention. A detachment from the American School Troop of Boy Scouts was also present.

Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U.S. Consul-General, then welcomed those present, saying that he was greatly pleased to see so many more than at previous flag-raisings. "The inspiring sight as the flag gradually ascended to the top of the mast, was something that produced in all a feeling that nothing else could be compared with," he said, "a ceremony to inspire every American with a greater love and loyalty to his country and a desire to do greater things for it, something which children and young people would remember all their lives.

"We can recall," went on the Consul-General, "instances in our personal experience when the sudden and unexpected sight of our national emblem has brought comfort and inspiration to us which nothing else could give. And that is why I like to invite you all here to see the flag-raising on the morning of the Glorious Fourth, to share this thrill and to participate in this ceremony.

"Another reason that I am glad to have you all here is to have brought to our attention anew a little of the history and the proper uses of the flag, which Lt.-Cdr. Loder has kindly consented to tell us about."

Lt.-Comdr. Loder of the U.S.S. Elcano then gave a very interesting history of the flag and its development from the emblems of the different colonies to the first continental flag flown by Paul Jones and called the Grand Union flag. Different sections had their own emblems and there was no national flag carried by the army until the Mexican War. The first salute to be paid to the American flag as representing an independent state was accorded to Paul Jones on the Ranger, on February 14, 1778, and was a nine-gun salute fired by a Freach Admiral.

In outlining the uses of the national emblem Commander Loder gave explicit instructions as to the proper etiquette in raising and lowering the flag, never allowing it to touch the ground or the deck of a ship, giving it preference to other flags when used in groups, its place in processions or on a wall and the like. Among a long list of instances in which the flag should not be used, as lacking in the proper respect due its prestige, the speaker reminded his audience that the flag should never be draped over doors or benches, and that nothing should ever be placed upon it. It should not be used as a decoration of clothing or placed on paper napkins, nor should it ever be used in connexion with advertising.

Declaration of Independence Read.

Mr. Cunningham then announced that as a statement of the principles for which the flag stood he would ask U.S. Judge Milton D. Purdy to read the Declaration of Independence. Before reading it, Judge Purdy said that it was just 148 years ago since this document was signed in the city of Philadelphia. They were accustomed to think that this agreement was signed in Philadelphia, but as the Continental Congress had been in session for some time over a year, Washington was with the army in Massachusetts, and Boston had just been evacuated by the British, all the men who eventually signed the Declaration were not in Philadelphia.

Judge Purdy told his hearers of the first time he read the Declaration, at a Fourth of July celebration when he was a boy of 17—"The proudest day of my life," he called it, adding, "I didn't read it, I learned it by heart, and it has always been a great satisfaction to think that in after years I could repeat so many paragraphs, and I hope that the young people here will have the opportunity to read it and learn it by heart for I think that it is one of the most magnificent and splendid pieces of literature in the English language, a model of sound, forceful, majestic English."

Mr. Cunningham then called on Mr. C. L. Boynton to announce the best essays by American boys and winners of the prizes offered for the girls in Shanghai on American history, especially in connexion with China. George Main, in the second year of the American High School won the first prize of $15; Edwin Worley, of the same class won the second prize of $7 and Maud Gray, of the 8th grade of the preparatory school, won the 1st prize ($15) in the Junior Division. It was announced that this competition would be a permanent feature of the Fourth of July celebrations in the future.

Men-of-war in harbour, not only American but those of other nationalities, were "dressed" in honour of the Fourth.

Reception at the Consulate.

The usual formal reception was held at noon in the U. S. Consular grounds, where a specially built pavilion sheltered guests and officials from the hot July sun. The mat shed was decorated with various service flags of the Republic.

The ceremony itself was simple and consisted of the toast to the President, proposed by Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, Consul-General, after which the Russian Cadet Band, which provided the music, played the "Star Spangled Banner," to the strains of which all stood at attention.

Among those present were:—Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, Comm. de Rossi, Consul-General for Italy and Doyen of the Consular Body, M. A. Wilden, Consul-General for France, Mr. S. Yada, Consul-General for Japan, Mr. J. Van Haute, Consul-General for Belgium, H. N. Aall, Consul-General for Norway, Mr. J. O. Lilliehëök, Consul-General for Sweden, Major J. L. Isler, Consul-General for Switzerland, Fr. Thiele, Consul-General for Germany, Mr. T. Raaschou, Consul-General for Denmark, and Mr. A. Casanova, Consul-General for Portugal and Col. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, Mr. S. K. Chen, Chief Secretary, and Gen. Wong, representing Gen. Ho Feng-lin, were the Chinese officials present. Col. Lu, of the Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary, and Mr. Tong Shao-yi, were also present.

Mr. Klein, war veteran and holder of the Congressional Medal of Honour, was an enthusiastic guest.

The Race Course Party.

The Lawn Party at the Race Course, attended by a record crowd, was an event very much enjoyed by Americans and their friends in the afternoon. Opening with the singing of the "The Star Spangled Banner," the next item on the programme was a picturesque and amusing series of tableaux which demonstrated conclusively that Mother Goose must have had American history in mind in writing her famous rhymes, so aptly did they accommodate themselves to the portrayal of past and contemporary phases of life in the United States. Mrs. Gardner Crane, who originated the "Melting Pot" pictures which elicited so much praise a year ago, arranged these living pictures, assisted by a number of American ladies and a large bevy of children who took part. Mrs. R. I. Clapp was Mother Goose herself and her characters were even more delightful in real life than inside the book.

No pains had been spared in reproducing the well known actors in these nursery dramas, and as the "Grand Old Republican Party" had its papier mâtché elephant, and the Democrats their familiar donkey those of other nationalities viewing the show got a better insight into the significance of American cartoons than many of them had enjoyed before. Mother Goose, of course, came first, the dearly beloved dame of our infancies, next Mary in her garden, which sprouted a record crop of celebrities; Jacky Horner found Alaska in his pie; Jack Spratt and his wife were as incompatible as Labour and Capital have found themselves; Humpty Dumpty illustrated the fall of slavery, Hey Diddle Diddle gave a comedy turn to the Tea Pot Dome Affair; "To Market to buy a fat pig" represented the Alaska purchase; The Song of Sixpence, with all its tiny blackbirds, had a diminutive Kaiser Wilhelm overpowered by the allies; Peter Piper's green pepper tree helped to illustrate the tax burden; "Little Pussy" showed politicians pleading for the woman's vote; "Little Miss Muffet" showed the United States frightening away Spain from Cuba; Sulky Sue was applied to the Philippines, Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat where have you been, was asked with reference to Ford's Peace Ship; the lack of harmony between Mexico and the U.S. was hit off, and the death of Cock Robin was paralleled in the fate of John Barleycorn.

Men-of-war Illuminated.

The daylight fireworks pleased young and old and were more effective than ever. An informal picnic supper allowed an opportunity for friendly visiting and 10 men from each of the U. S. Navy vessels in port were the special guests of the American community. A good programme of moving pictures concluded the lawn party; but special mention should be made of the illuminated ships in the harbour, the spectacular search lights which flashed out from 8.30 to 9.30 and the illuminated flagpole of the U. S. Consulate-General, which could be seen for a long distance.

FIGHTING ARMED ROBBERS IN SHANGHAI

Joint Action by Chinese and the Foreign Police: Conference with the Street Unions at the Council Chamber: Excellent Feeling and Desire to Help

Major A. Hilton Johnson, Acting Commissioner of Police, spent two hours on Tuesday afternoon in conference with representatives from the various street unions in Shanghai to discuss the problem of armed robberies in the Settlement and methods of dealing with them. The delegates came at the invitation of Major Johnson.

Suggestions by Unions.

Following is a summary of some of the suggestions submitted by the unions:—

From the Canton Road Union:—As robbers are mostly recruited from disbanded soldiers and unemployed loafers, as well as members of the Ts'ingpang, the fundamental plan would be to give all these work, which requires a large amount of money and would prove a slow task. To meet the urgency of the situation, the Settlement authorities should co-operate with the Chinese officials in preventing the disbandment of provincial troops at Shanghai, that is, forbidding them to land if shipped here.—The Municipal Council should take a census of all unemployed persons and provide factories to give them work. This is necessarily slow work, but the ultimate benefit must be great.—Foreign and Chinese official should jointly prohibt people from becoming members of the "Pangs" (gangs of desperadoes), allow any person to inform against lawless people and deeds, and notify lodging houses not to harbour suspicious characters, the discovery of whom on their premises would make the proprietors liable to severe punishment. Street unions should be permitted to form a volunteer corps for their own protection.

The Peking Road Union nominated three delegates to attend the Council Meeting and to submit the following six proposals: — Firms and shops to be permitted to instal a special system of alarm bells to be directly connected with the nearest police station, especially for the purpose of reporting robbery. All police stations to be provided with an armed motor-car which should at once proceed to the scene of robbery upon receiving the warning. Shops and dwelling houses to be connected with each other by alarm bells, so that mutual warning and help may be given. Chinese members of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps who have served four years to be provided with pistols and allowed to carry them when strolling about in the Settlement in plain clothes, so that they may protect people who should happen to be robbed. Increase armed policemen on point duty so that they may see each other and communicate by hand signals, thus making the robbers' escape impossible. Robbers captured to be immediately sent to the Military Governor for execution; no leniency must be shown. We request that permission be granted members of merchant shops to become special constables to patrol their own respective streets day and night.

A Chinese Proverb.

The Hankow Road Union writes to Major Hilton-Johnson: Your diffidence in inviting an expression of public views arouses our admiration. The Chinese proverb: "Exemplary rewards will bring forth brave men" applies to the present case too. Please deal as vigorously as possible with all those caught trafficking in arms, etc.

The Broadway Union would propose:—Policemen and detectives who have died in the execution of their duty be generously compensated, both in cash to their families and by erecting memorial tablets at public places, such as on the West Lake in Hangchow, etc.—The capture of robbers be substantially encouraged, both the police and the informant.—Merchants doing all kinds of legitimate business to be allowed to apply for pistols from the Settlement authorities.—Shop people be chosen to serve as special constables to be trained and controlled by the Council.—Merchants to be at liberty to instal alarm bells to communicate directly with police stations.—Prohibit smuggling of arms into Shanghai, in co-operation with the Customs authorities.—

Other street unions have also held meetings and prepared suggestions for discussion at the meeting in the Council Building. But the nature of their proposals is more or less similar to those reproduced above.

Disorder Breeds Disorder.

Major Hilton Johnson welcomed the delegates, of whom there were some 50 or 60, and expressed the hope that their efforts that afternoon might come to something. He promised to sort out the various petitions which had been presented to him, and to study the suggestions contained in them at length.

The Commissioner then went on to address the delegates on the reasons for the prevalency of armed robberies in the Settlement. He reminded them of the conditions reigning in China at the present time, and said that there was to be found in those conditions the reason for the lawless men and the quantity of arms existing in Shanghai. Within the last few months hundreds of thousands of soldiers had been disbanded in China, and many close to Shanghai. It was not surprising that they came to Shanghai to pick up a living, and they could not be prevented from doing so or from coming into the Settlement. With regard to pistols and revolvers, these, unfortunately, largely came into Shanghai in foreign ships from foreign countries. Many, of course, were seized by the Customs officials, but these were, necessarily, only a small proportion of the total amount that entered the port. The S.M.P. had no jurisdiction on the water and on the wharves, most of the latter being privately owned, and this fact increased their difficulties tremendously. The Commissioner pointed out that he was making no excuses for the police, but was simply stating the facts as they were. But the police had taken certain measures. Search parties extended their activities all over the Settlement every night, visiting lodging houses, tea houses, and similar institutions, questioning the inmates and examining the books. Then again they had detectives working all over the Settlement at all hours of the day and night, collecting information concerning suspicious characters and their doings. But this system was not, of course, perfect. Indeed, if they only could get a perfect system of receiving information armed robberies would never occur because they could always be forestalled.

How the Unions Can Help.

This was one of the ways in which the police could be assisted by the street unions, if they were really as anxious to stop gang robberies as they said they were He felt sure that they must have considerably more knowledge of suspicious characters and people possessing arms than they ever gave the police. It was possible of course that they were afraid of the consequences to themselves if they did. If that were the case, then they could accept his assurance that all such information was always treated by the police in the strictest confidence. A very common suggestion that had been made to him was that more police should be placed on duty. Well, with regard to that, experience went to show that a large number of police on duty in a road did not necessarily mean surer prevention of robberies. In many cases the crimes were committed so noiselessly that a policeman standing only a few yards away would know nothing about it. They would all agree, he thought, that when a policeman did hear of robbery he did his best to catch the armed robber. In proof of this they only had to think of the large numbers of policemen, European, Chinese and Indian who laid down their lives each year in the course of such duties. Only a few days ago C. P. C. 770 had been shot and killed by robbers. Then again there was the question of expense. Each year, before the departmental estimates were submitted, the chief inspectors in charge of each district went very carefully into the question of how many constables were needed for each road. They had to bear in mind that each Chinese constable cost the council something like Tls.150 per year, and they had carefully to preserve the balance between efficiency and economy.

But the great need was for information, and that information could be supplied by the street unions.

More Drastic Punishment.

Then there was the question of punishment. He believed severer punishment should be inflicted. Of course they knew that in cases where a man was convicted of being implicated in an armed robbery he was handed over to the Chinese authorities to be shot. They would possibly ask what severer punishment you could have than death. To this he would reply "flogging." The dread of the punishment was enough to act as a deterrent to the criminal, as a rule. For some reason which it was difficult to understand corporal punishment had been abandoned by China after the revolution. He would suggest to the street unions that they make every effort to get it reinstated in Shanghai. It was a form of punishment commonly used in England for crimes of violence, and in outbreaks of robberies which had occurred in London and elsewhere the application of the cat had been found a most effective cure.

The delegates thanked the Commissioner for granting them the hearing and offered to extend every possible support they could in the matter of information. On the subject of floggings they were not enthusiastic. All the other suggestions made by Major Johnson they heartily sympathized with, and having learned that information supplied to the police would be treated with confidence they would see to it that they were kept well informed.

With that the meeting broke up amicably and the Commissioner will now spend his time examining and considering the petitions.

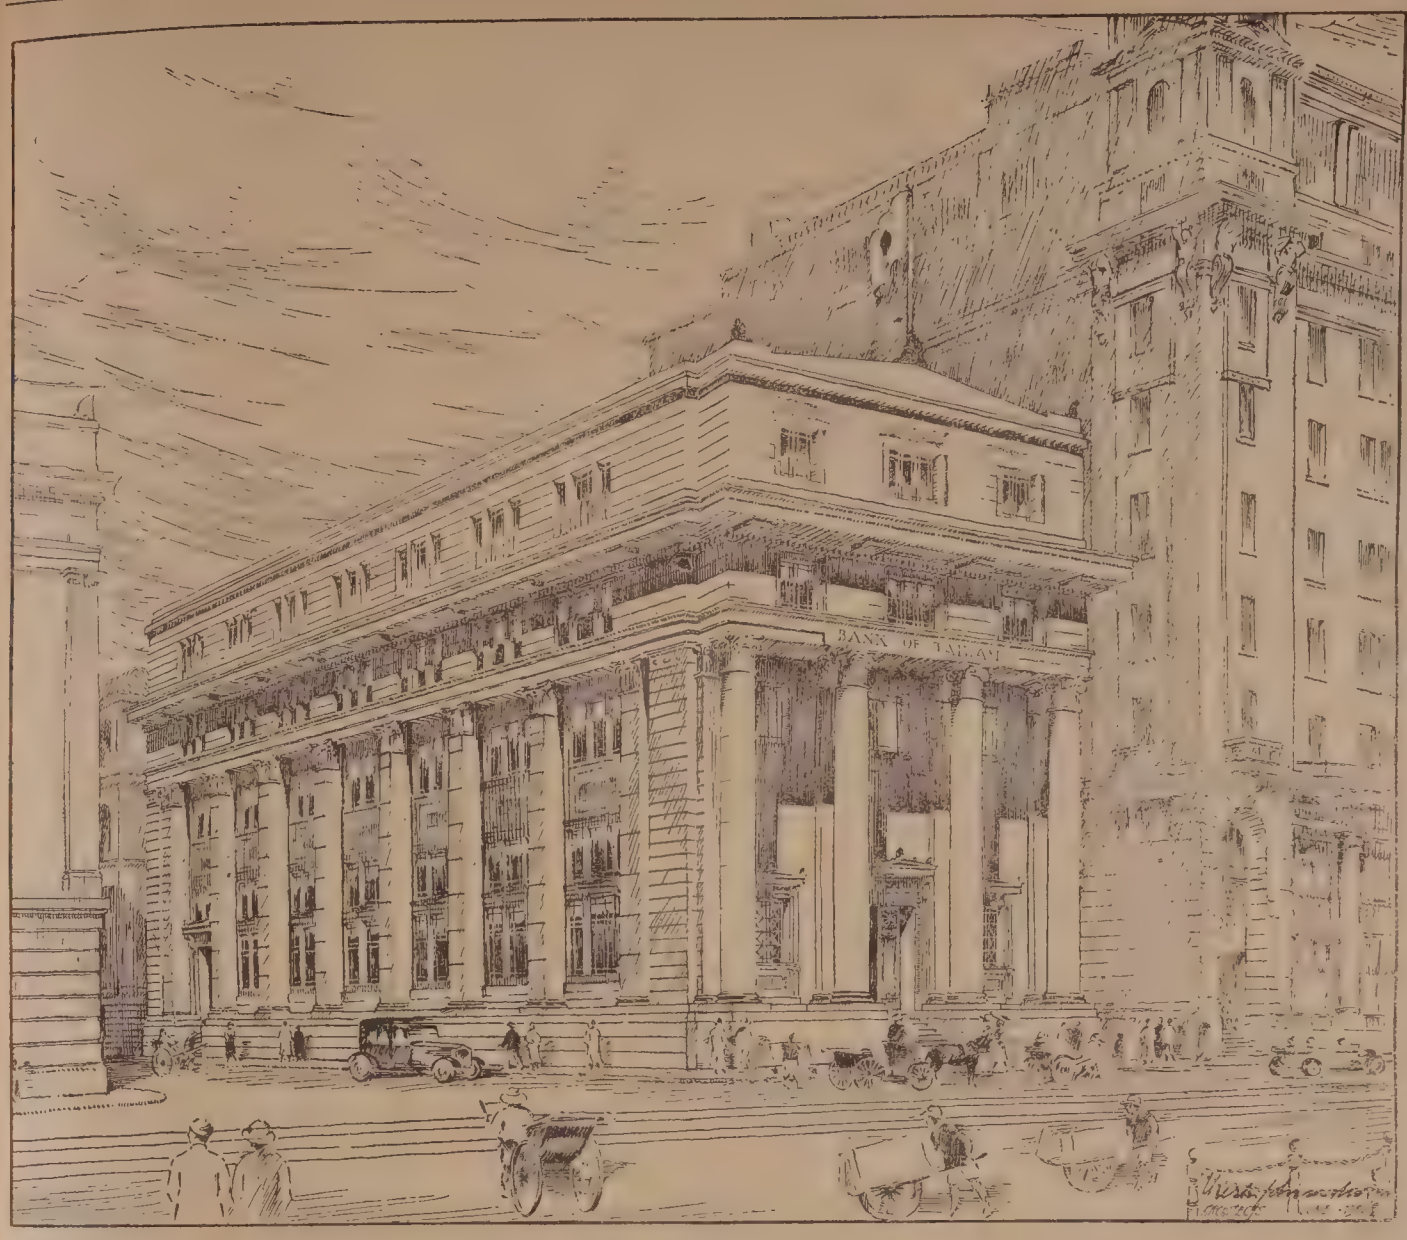
Chinese Press Against the "Cat"

Chinese press comment on Tuesday's conference on the armed robber menace between Major Hilton Johnson, Commissioner of Police, and representatives of the various Shanghai street unions, is cautious. All are unanimous in agreeing that the Council are acting with the best intentions, but all are unanimous against the re-introduction of corporal punishment.

The "Shunpao" believes floggings and bambooings to be against the wishes of the merchants. The paper agrees that better results might be obtained that way, but thought it to be inconsistent with all ideas of improving the legal code. Also the paper believes its re-introduction to be unnecessary.

The "Eastern Times" expresses the view that no corporal punishment could be severer than the present punishment, which is death. Furthermore, if the robber has no dread for death, and it appears he has not, then he will certainly not dread being flogged. The paper believes, also, that the reintroduction of corporal punishment would be totally unnecessary if the other suggestions are adopted by the police, viz., the more careful searching for arms, the introduction of alarm bells and close watch kept on suspicious characters.

These expressions are common to all the Chinese newspapers.



THE NEW BANK OF TAIWAN

Now that the old premises of the Bank of Taiwan situated on the corner site of the Bund and Kiukiang Road are nearly demolished it will no doubt be of interest to Shanghai residents to know what the proposed new building will be like in plan and design. Messrs. Lester, Johnson and Morriss are the Architects.

The new Bank will have a frontage of 54 feet to the Bund, and 150 feet frontage to Kiukiang Road, and will be 72 feet high to the underside of the flat roof. The main banking hall is to be 120 feet by 50 feet wide with a clear height of 26 feet with the exception of a portion of the side where a mezzanine floor has been introduced, partly for the use of the bank staff and also for commodious lavatory accomodation.

The main entrance to the bank is arranged in the centre of the Bund facade. The entrance to the three floors of offices above the bank is provided at the west end of the Kiukiang Road frontage.

The large banking hall is to be carried out in Italian marble of soft, harmonious colours, with the large spaces for the public, having marble floors. Manager's and brokers' rooms will also have panelled walls in mahogany. The Chinese department of the Bank is placed at the Western end of the building with a separate entrance.

In the semi-basement is placed the large sycee vaults, and strong rooms for the Bank records, etc.

The three upper stories of the building are designed for offices to be leased out and and are so arranged that each room is conveniently accessible and very well lighted.

Two fireproof staircases are provided as entrances to these three floors of offices. Ample lavatory accomodation is also provided.

The facades have been treated in a broad, plain and dignified manner, the Corinthian order being used through three stories with a plain attic storey on top.

The Bund elevation is treated as an open portico having four columns with their corresponding pilasters. The main entrauce in the centre of this front is to be carried out in white marble.

The Kiukiang Road frontage has been designed in seven bays flanked at each end with plain wide pilaster wall treatment.

The whole of these two frontages will be carried out in Japanese granite. The entrance gates will be of bronze, and the casement windows to the banking hall also in bronze, The remainder of the windows are to be of steel.

The general construction of the building is to be of reinforced concrete, and fire-resisting throughout. The semi-basement to be made thoroughly waterproof with approved waterproofing materials. The lifts are to be of the best quality, and the heating, ventilation, and sanitary system are to be carried out on the most up-to-date principles.

The wood floors are to be of Japanese Oak Parquet flooring, applied directly on top of the reinforced concrete floors. The electric wiring is to be in steel conduits. The Bank ceiling is to be coppered and carried out in fibrous plasterwork.

NO MORE SUPPORT FROM NANKING

Chinese Ratepayers Assns. in Both Settlements to Lose Govt. Subsidy

Mr. Huang Shen-hsi, a member of the local gentry, has telegraphed to the Civil Governor at Nanking as follows:—

"The Office of Chinese Councillors in the French Concession and the Chinese Ratepayers' Association of the International Settlement, organizations for the protection of the interests of Chinese residents in the foreign settlements of Shanghai, should be supported. The appropriations for these two organizations have been disallowed by the Financial Commission on the Budget Estimates, probably because of its ignorance of the purposes for which they have been established. Kindly refer the question to the Commission for reconsideration, so that the appropriations may be included in the Budget Estimates."

Mr. Han Kuo-chun, Civil Governor, in reply, admits that the Chinese Councillors' Office and the Chinese Ratepayers' Association look after Chinese interests in foreign settlements, but as the appropriations have been excluded from the Budget by the Financial Commission, and as national revenue during this year will fall short of the expenditure, even appropriations now allowed must be either curtailed or cut out entirely. Those appropriations already disallowed cannot be readmitted.

WEDDING

Wilson-Sheret

A wedding of especial interest to Shanghai people took place at St. Columba's Church, Pont Street, London, on June 17, when Miss Sheret, daughter of Mrs. Sheret, of 16 Barnes Common, was married to Mr. G. L. Wilson of Messrs. Palmer & Turner, Shanghai, the Rev. Archibald Heming performing the ceremony. The bride given away by her mother and Miss Winnie Sheret acted as bridesmaid. Mr. C. A. McLellan was best man. At the reception, which was held after the ceremony in Hyde Park Hotel, Sir James Stewart Lockhart, formerly H. M. Commissioner at Weihaiwei, proposed the toast of the bride and bridegroom.

Among the "China hands" at the Church and reception were noted Sir James and Lady Stewart Lockhart, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Simms, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Crossley, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Skinner, Dr. and Mrs. Billinghurst, Dr. J. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Johnson, and Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Clark.

PEDICABS FOR HIRE

Newest Conveyance Available to Public: Special Care in Training Coolies

The Shanghai Pedicab Service, Co., Ld., introduced their new machines on the streets of Shanghai on Saturday, though to the many who go to the business district daily, this means of transportation is not a novelty, for during the week many of the vehicles had been seen on the various Settlement roads. Of course they were not for hire, but were just being sent round, that the people of Shanghai might become accustomed to seeing them. The company is charging the usual tariff, as allowed by the Municipal regulations and the new ricshas, if one may call them such, are clean-looking. Also, the neatly uniformed pedallers are somewhat of a change from the ordinary ricshaman.

By way of introduction, the company proposes to put but 50 machines on the streets, but is prepared to increase this number to any extent that public service may demand. They are of Belgian make, of good material, and should be of particular value where a fare wishes to travel a long way.

Though a corps of experts has been training a large staff of coolies has chosen fewer than 50 per cent. of those in the school, maintaining that the remainder are without proper qualification. One of the tests which have been strictly applied has reference to the physical condition of applicants and unless a man is in good health he must seek employment elsewhere. Another stipulation is that each pedaller must have a sufficient command of English to be able to understand directions given by patrons and to be able to respond to questions. If it is possible to continue with this standard of puller the company will, indeed, be doing the Shanghai public a great favour.

At tests made laso Friday morning at headquarters in Connaught Road the entire staff were found sufficiently up to the mark and the vehicles pronouncer to be in first class condition.

ANOTHER "magistrate" story, and one that occurred much nearer Shanghai. Some years ago a prominent resident of the port failed to attend a Court at which he was summoned as a juryman (says the "P. & T. Times"). The Judge promptly fined him $50. As it happened, the Judge was entertained by the juryman the same night, and before the Judge got to bed the juryman recovered his fine, and another $50 as well. How? Poker.

ANOTHER SNAKE STORY

Reptile Three Feet in Length Concealed Within a Typewriter

More snakes again in Shanghai. on Monday afternoon another big one (three feet long and several inches round) put in an appearance in the offices of the Small Investors, Ld., in the Brunner-Mond Building in Szechuen Road. When the staff of the company returned at 2 o'clock after tiffin, one of the Chinese noticed the head of a snake protruding from the meshwork of one of the typewriters. Tucking up their gowns round their waists the force made a quick exit, falling over themselves in their anxiety to get out. Shortly several of the more bold ventured to return to the room and with a pair of scissors, a ruler and a variety of pens, pencils and reinforced by still another pair of scissors, valiant attempts were made to dislodge the reptile—but to no avail, for the bobbing, snapping head and magic eyes of the snake, so inviting and yet so repulsive, kept them all at arm's length. Who would care to be bitten by a snake? Any way it was a good excuse for not indulging in laborious toil and half-hearted endeavours were further indulged in.

Finally reinforcement in the person of a good natured, humorous, big and broad-shouldered broker arrived, who laughingly declared, "Let me get at him, I've caught hundreds of those creatures in my school days." Dramatically seizing the peaceful and restful rear portion of the reptile's anatomy, he tried to draw it out from within its fortress, but, "Not so fast," remonstrated Mr. Snake. Uncoiling his sinuous folds, he sprang at the detaining hand, as a broken mainspring of an eight-day clock unwinds, and imprinted his jaws on the back of the hand. Just for an instant did the jaws close upon the flesh and then they released their hold—back into the typewriter again.

More cautious, but fully determined to get the agent of the Fall of Man, the broker edged up sideways with an enormous pair of scissors, and with Mr. Snake distracted by the sight of a fresh victim, in front, the execution was accomplished. A terrific closure of the two-bladed weapon and the decapitation was history, the body writhing in its death agony. The head on the floor, it was now a simple matter to draw the body from the interior of the typewriter.

Afraid that poison might set in, the hero jumped into his trap and was driven post haste to a physician's, but the latter had not returned to his office.

Off to the Health Department was the next idea, and urging his mafoo to hurry, the broker drove through the Settlement streets to the laboratories—only to be informed, "We don't know anything about snakes here. Why don't you see Mr. Sowerby?"

So, snake in hand on his way to the scientist. Here he was informed that he should see a doctor, but insisted that Mr. A. de C. Sowerby should look at his hand. Instead of inspecting the wound, Mr. Sowerby asked to look at the reptile—nothing to worry about, merely one of the millions of Elaphe taeniurus, non intoxicantia, non toxicania.

The hand was finally inspected and the double row of red spots, not cut by fangs, but looking as though the teeth of an angry hen might have made them, were given a peroxide bath and the cure was fait accompli.

The problem now confronting Shanghai financial experts is why did the snake go into a hong so prominent in rubber; they do not eat rubber, especially in the Shanghai form and it could not having been looking for Langkats—nobody does that nowadays. Besides this was not a tropical snake, but quite temperately inclined. Perhaps it smelled a rodent, but why look for Rodentia in typewriters; perhaps he was merely installing a dictaphone.

Authentic reports at 10 p.m. indicated that the snake was 5ft. long and still growing. There were plenty of inquiries on the market for Snakes, but no sales.

Mr. C. C. Nieh has been in conference with the local gentry on the matter of raising funds for the relief of Hunan, whose people are suffering from floods.

AMERICAN POETESS LAUREATE

Edna St. Vincent Millay and Her Husband Absorbing the Orient in Shanghai

Edna St. Vincent Millay, an American poetess acclaimed with the publication of "A Few Figs From Thistles," as the laureate of the younger generation, is spending a few days in Shanghai, stopping at the Astor House. Her husband, Mr. Eugen Boissevain, explained when seen by a representative of the "North-China Daily News," on Tuesday afternoon that they were taking this trip through the Far East for rest, and "to get away from people," he admitted with a frank smile. It is unlikely, therefore, that Miss Millay's many admirers will be allowed the privilege of hearing her read from her poems, since she is leaving for Singapore on Friday, but those who watch for her lyrics in current magazines will be on the look-out for reflexions of the Orient in her published works. They party will go on to Europe viâ Suez and thence return to the United States.

Miss Vincent began writing as a child and her first published poem was the remarkable, mystical "Renascence,' submitted in a prize poem contest and published among other poems in "The Lyric Year," when she was only 19. While she was at Vassar College she wrote two plays and acted in them, "The Princess Marries the Page," and "Two Slatterns and a King," the latter of which was published in 1921. "Renascence and Other Poems" gained the admiration of real poetry lovers immediately, but were not widely known; they were expressed in classical rhythm, with nothing of the contemporary post-impressionism about them.

After college Miss Vincent came to New York and settled down in a Greenwich Village attic, in the days when struggling genius could afford to live in the "Village." Here she brooded and wrote memories of her early days spent on the coast of Maine, when as she says:

Always I climbed the wave at morning,
Shook the sand from my shoes at night,
That now am caught beneath great buildings,
Stricken with noise, confused with light.

The editors were not immediately responsive, and there were many discouraged days when returned manuscripts suggested that she should make a more practical use of her education and find a definite, unromantic but remunerative job. But fortunately the creative gift would not be denied and she kept on writing.

Vers de Bohemia.

The first poem in "Figs from Thistles" strikes the familiar half-reckless, half-buoyant note in which so many of her songs are sung:

My candle burns at both ends;
It will not last the night;
But ah, my foes, and oh, my friends—
It gives a lovely light!

And the second is similar:

Safe upon the solid rock the ugly houses stand:
Come and see my shining palace built upon the sand!

It is youth come to a sudden, flaming awareness of itself, the post-war, mood of freedom. To some of the older generation it may sound merely cynical but to the young-hearted of any generation it expresses a passionate truthfulness, an unwillingness to give lip-service to outworn tradition. She writes again:

Oh, think not I am faithful to a vow!
Faithless I am save to love's self alone.
Were you not lovely I would leave you now:
After the feet of beauty fly my own.

And in the concluding sonnet she phrases her philosophy:

If you entreat me with your loveliest lie
I will protest you with my favourite vow.

The Ultimate Sifting Dust."

"Second April" shows a deeper mood, for this author has many nuances, an even franker handling of love, a repudiation of the body, and exaltation of the immortality of art; as she puts it:

Ah, when the thawed winter splashes
Over these chance dust and ashes,
Weep not for me, my friend!
My, by no means dead
In that hour, but surely
When this book, unread,
Rots to earth obscurely,
And no more to any breast,
Close against the clamorous swelling
Of the thing there is no telling,
Are these pages pressed!

Besides these poems Miss Millay has written two plays, "Aria da Capo," which was first presented by the Provincetown Players and "The Lamp and the Bell," the Vassar play for 1921. She is also the author, if we are not mistaken, of a strange romance in prose, of which the name escapes us. About a year ago she became the wife of Mr. Eugen Boissevain.

Capt. Eldridge Surveys the Scenes of his long Activities

RETIREMENT OF CAPTAIN T. J. ELDRIDGE

Thirty-six Years in the Customs Service: Valuable Work for Shipping Interests and for China

Capt. T. J. Eldridge, Coast Inspector to the Chinese Maritime Customs, so well known to all shipping and business people for the exceptionally efficient services he has rendered, will retire on July 15 on reaching the age of 60 years, though we might perhaps say that no one would think so to look at him. Capt. Eldridge, who was a son of the late Mr. George Jackson Eldridge, British Consul-General at Beyrout, Syria, was educated at the Naval Training College, H.M.S. Worcester and on completing his term was commissioned in the Royal Naval Reserve. Subsequently he served with the British India Steam Navigation Co. and in October, 1886, he received a commission in the Royal Indian Marine. Two years later he joined the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs and was appointed to the revenue cruisers, reaching the rank of Commander in 1896. In 1899 he was made Assistant Harbour Master at Shanghai, in 1901 Deputy Coast Inspector, and since 1918 he has been head of the office.

Capt. Eldridge's retirement from China means that the shipping interests of the Far East in general are losing the assistance of one of the most experienced and capable mariners who have ever served this country, for it is not an exaggeration to say that, during the years when he was patrolling the coast in the revenue cruisers, he became acquainted with every inlet, cove, harbour and rock throughout the length of the China coast, besides obtaining a wide knowledge of all the navigable rivers, from the Sungari to the West River, and it was his constant purpose to use this knowledge and experience for the benefit of others. Hence, his retirement will mean a great loss to many. As frequently is the case where improvements to navigation are concerned, the effects of an expert's work are not always immediately felt or even apparent, particularly to a layman, and it is so with much of Capt. Eldridge's work, but an idea of what he has achieved may be gained by tabulating some of the outstanding works which he initiated:—

1.—Arranging suitable positions for lighthouses on the coast and in the rivers.

2.—Arranging suitable positions for fog signal stations.

3.—Organization of the river inspectors' offices on the Yangtze.

4.—The buoying of harbours and rivers.

5.—Surveys of numerous sections of the coast and rivers.

6.—Weather warning stations on the coast.

7.—Regulation of navigation in harbours and rivers.

8.—Provision of charts and plans to assist navigation.

The above all have been under Capt. Eldridge's supervision as Coast Inspector and continuously have been undergoing improvement and further organization as his vast knowledge showed was necessary. There is no doubt that the efficiency of the numerous branches of the Marine Department of the Customs, of which he has been the technical chief, is principally due to his untiring efforts in keeping things up to date.

Capt. Eldridge gained the first prize for Seamanship on the Worcester in 1880 and he received the China Expedition medal in 1900. Since then his good services in so many ways have been recognized officially by the award of the following Chinese decorations:—Civil Rank of the Fourth Class, 1904; Double Dragon, 3rd Division, 3rd Class, 1908; Order of the Chia Ho, Fifth Class, 1914; Blue Medal, Third Class, 1915; Order of the Chia Ho, Fourth Class, 1917; Order of the Chia Ho, Third Class, 1921; Order of the Wen Hu, Second Class, 1923.

ATTEMPTED ROBBERY ON THE BUND

Thief's Foolhardy Attempt to Hold Up Bank Messenger in Full View of Public

Optimism is a boundless virtue if used with discretion, but its powers can be abused, as was discovered by a young man who was optimistic enough to believe he could rob a bank coolie in broad daylight on the Bund on Tuesday.

The time was about half past eleven in the morning. Suddenly there came a mighty blowing of police whistles, and the pedestrians on the pavement awoke from their heat lethargy and took notice. The whistles were followed by the cries of "Robbers, robbers," and a chase was immediately begun. A man came flying down the Bund from the direction of the Chartered Bank. A battery of Sikh and Chinese constables pressed on his heels, and these were soon joined by a number of passers-by, including one foreigner who was seen to throw away his hat in his excitment. The hunt was not a long one, for the hunted man was caught on the corner of Hankow Road and his wrists were bound together with what looked very much like a dog chain, and he was escorted to the Central Police Station.

The arrested man is alleged to have attempted to rob a bank coolie employed by the China Commercial Bank. He had been to see a friend in the "North-China Daily News" building, according to the police, and walked down the Bund in the direction of the bank. He is stated to have seen the coolie emerge with a blue cloth bag containing $6,000 in notes and to have caught him by the neck, at the same time grabbing the bag. The coolie, however, yelled out "Robbers, robbers," and the chase already described was set in motion.

The arrested man was stated by the police to have been found in possession of a revolver but no ammunition. He is said to have had a number of imitation cardboard cartridges wrapped up in silver paper.

The money was recovered.

A Movie Inspiration.

It would seem from authentic reports that the youthful, but foiled, robber got his inspiration from the American "movies," which have long been blamed by moralists as leading to crime, taking his cue from the film shown in Shanghai three years ago," The Red Ace," or a similar title. This film, as we understand, appeared in serial form and the hero had many miraculous encounters with police departments and burning forests and, incidentally, overcame the forces of nature.

He is stated to have found the pistol several days ago in Whangpoo Road and kept it, though the weapon is antiquated and broken and it is alleged that he put the silver-wrapped pellets of paper into the barrel and the chamber more to convince himself that he carried a real weapon, than for any other purpose.

Accused is said to come from a well-to-do Chinese family, whose father is owner of several flourishing pharmacies in the Chinese City, and has been employed by a ship chandler in Broadway since 1920.

Accused Before Mixed Court.

The central figure in the chase on the Bund on Tuesday morning cut a wan and dejected appearance in the dock at the Mixed Court on Wednesday, before Mr. Martin, British Assessor and Magistrate Loh, when he pleaded guilty to attempted daylight robbery.

Det.-Sergt. Hunter described the chase and the arrest. The coolie, he said, having come out of the China Commerical Bank with a bag containing $6,000 in notes on his back, was attacked by the prisoner outside of the "North-China Daily News" building. Accused drew a revolver and putting it to the coolie's stomach demanded delivery of the bag. The coolie at once struggled with him and called out "Robbers, robbers," whereupon the prisonner bolted. A Chinese police constable immediately blew his whistle and gave chase. Other constables, including a Sikh, blew their whistles and also gave chase. The prisoner was captured and taken to the Central Police Station. On being searched he was found to be in possession of a revolver and imitation cardboard cartridges, wrapped round with silver tinsel and inserted in the chambers. Close at hand a long knife was picked up thrown away by the prisoner, and when his quarters were searched a similar knife was found in his room. He was employed at No. 117A Broadway where these knives were used for opening packing cases, etc.

Det.-Sergt. Hunter went on to say that the police were asking for a remand.

Corroborative evidence was given by a Chinese constable and the coolie, and the case was remanded for a week.

HUGE ARMS SEIZURE IN SAILING SHIP

Thousands of Rifles and 100,000 Rounds of Ammunition Found Under Poop

The four masted schooner W. H. Talbot, flying under the American flag and run by a crew of Scandinavians, was on the 3rd instant the scene of one of the biggest single hauls of arms and ammunition that has been made in Shanghai for a number of years.

The vessel arrived in Shanghai 15 days ago, and was tied up to a berth near the Arsenal. On Thursday a squad of Customs officials were sent on board to search her cargo of timber. After a careful hunt they discovered the contraband hidden away beneath the poop deck. The arms were found in boxes and barrels, and amount to several thousand rifles and revolvers, and about 100,000 rounds of ammunition. It is reported that the authorities intend taking steps to prosecute the master. His crew all state they knew nothing of the arms being on the ship.

The destination of the arms is unknown, though the probability is they were for one of China's many war-lords.

The W. H. Talbot is a wooden schooner, believed to be one of a fleet of 29 built by the United States Government during the war, and tied up in the Puget Sound. Many of them were sold for very low prices.

NATIONAL STADIUM FOR CHINA

140 Mow of Land Secured in Shanghai Western District for Future Olympiad

The need for a National Stadium in China has long been felt in view of the rapid growth of interest, on the part of Chinese in, Western sport. So far games have been held in Hongkew Park kindly lent by the S.M.C., but this has proved unsuitable for modern requirements. Till recently the main difficulty has been to procure a ground, and two possible places have been considered, one at the Aviation field and the other out Chapei way, but both again are impracticable owing to their remote situation.

The Contest Committee who organized the Fifth Far Eastern Games held in Shanghai from May 30 to June 4, 1921, has given much thought to the matter and has devoted Mex. $10,000 from their funds hoping to raise this sum to $200,000 which will approximately make the project a reality.

On the question of ground already mentioned, a four years' lease with a good likelihood of renewal has been obtained for the property of the Rockefeller Institute, which at one time intended founding in Shanghai an institution similar to that in Peking. The ground consists of 140 mow of connected land, and may easily be reached by way of Rue L'Observatoire. Already have been constructed a football ground, a track field, and several tennis courts. The complete project involves a large Stadium, where football, hockey or baseball matches may be played, 120—220 yds. straight track, grounds for jumping and volley-ball, and what is most urgently needed in Shanghai, a really good floor for basketball. When complete, there will be 18 to 20 tennis courts, both turf and hard.

Here will be held the Far Eastern games in 1927 and all Chinese tennis championships. The position of Chinese tennis players has so far been rather a difficult one. Save for a few private courts, amongst the wealthier Chinese there has so far been little or no provision for other players.

The new athletic grounds are to be quite international, so that Chinese and foreigners can meet here on common ground. Should the Lawn Tennis Association join in the project as was at one time their intention, the new grounds might eventually become the Wimbledon of China. Such an athletic centre should be as much or more to China than was the Coliseum to Rome, the Stadium to Greece say the Contest Committee.

Sport and athletics in China have made great strides within recent years, though there still remains a large following of the old school of Chinese who regard such amusements as a mere waste of time. Such was the view of the traditional education which was adhered to for hundreds of years. The years following the Boxer Rebellion, however, brought a change in China and a new interest in Western pastimes.

AMMONIA TANK BROKEN

Nanking Road Full of Gas

The ammonia tank, used for freezing purposes, at the Chocolate Shop broke on Thursday night shortly before 11.30 o'clock and a panic ensued. With blinking eyes, stinging nostrils and suffocated lungs, the entire staff broke into a run, coolies and cooks leading the procession for the front door, while the boys and foreign cashier, being near the door did not feel the effects until the remainder had hustled past for the fresh air.

A call was sent for the Fire Brigade and the Relief Wagon was on the spot immediately. Two firemen, a foreigner and a Chinese, slipped into gas masks and went inside post haste, but after a careful search returned to Nanking Road with information that no one was inside. Substituting for his tank a fresh oxygen container the foreign fireman went back to see if he could by any chance remedy the trouble but in a few minutes appeared again on the pavement, saying that the expansion tank had broken and he could do nothing.

Soon the fumes poured from the alleyway beside the shop and drove the many spectators from the direct line—a few minutes previously a foreigner attempted to walk back but after proceeding about 25 feet, came back, tearful, and feeling as if a red-hot instrument had been inserted in his nostrils.

The midnight breezes whirled the vapour along the road and motorists felt the reviving tang as they passed. The front door was opened, the van motored back to Central Station and tranquillity reigned again.

CHAUFFEUR'S PLUCKY FIGHT WITH ROBBERS

A chauffeur living in a house in the country between Jessfield Road and Connaught Road put up an unusually good fight against armed robbers in the early hours Thursday.

At about 1.30 a.m. a gang of seven or eight men entered the house and, upon the chauffeur attempting to bar the way, the usual threats were made and he was told he was "about to die," the remark coming from one of the gang who flourished a revolver. The chauffeur did not share this idea and suddenly made a dash at the robber. In the struggle which ensued he was lucky enough to get hold of the weapon, firing a shot which struck his assailant and brought him to the floor. Another member of the gang fired two shots, and the chauffeur responded, but none of the shots took effect. The firing, however, thoroughly alarmed the gang, and they decamped, taking their injured companion with them.

Although the house stands on Chinese ground, a message was sent to Bubbling Well Police-Station for assistance, and a number of officers were sent out in search of the gang. They had police dogs with them, but were unable to trace the party. Before leaving the house, the thieves managed to lay hands on $36.

LAWN TENNIS

Kumagae's Exhibition Game at Majestic: Far Too Many Guns for Canavarro

Wednesday was the first opportunity Shanghai enthusiasts have had of seeing Kumagae, the Japanese Davis cup man, on the Majestic Hotel court, and a big crowd turned out for the three exhibition games arranged by the Lawn Tennis Association. In singles with R. Canavarro, holder of the Shanghai championship, and J. L. Wade, last season's runner-up, Kumagae won easily, although not altogether playing up to his reputation, and in partnership with Y. Kuybara, a newcomer who has the stamp of a clever and resourceful player, won the doubles match against the local pair.

There was nothing very exhilarating about either of the singles matches. Canavarro started well and looked at least like giving his very able opponent a close game, but it was an unequal struggle after the middle of the first set had been reached, and it was only on rare occasions that Canavarro had his man in difficulties. Kumagae has a very dangerous service, which he used with effect, and a great forearm drive, one of his best strokes. Both Wade and Canavarro frequently found it absolutely unplayable. Canavarro was beaten in two straight sets, 6-4 and 6-3, and Wade fared even worse, getting four games in his first set but only one in the second. He opened well, with careful play from the back line and some delightful strokes at the net, but his game was not sufficiently forceful for a man of Kumagae's calibre.

The doubles match was a very spirited one, play being fast in all three sets and with a deal of clever work on both sides. The Shanghai pair started off in great style, and winning the first three games in decisive fashion, they appeared likely to make more than a match of it. After this success, however, they quite unaccountably fell away and the Japanese players had no difficulty at all in winning six successive games, and thus the set. But the Shanghai pair were not easily vanquished and there was a great struggle for the second set, five-all being called, this after the Japanese had led at four-two. Each side then won a game, and then the greater steadiness and judgment of the Japanese gave them the next two deciding games. The third set was equally interesting, particularly in the final stages, when there were a number of rallies and many fast and pretty exchanges at the net. Steadiness combined with rare pace and accuracy of placing put the Japanese in the lead and they deservedly won at 6-4. They were generally more consistent and more resourceful, Kumagae especially using a variety of strokes with rare judgment.

Both Wade and Canavarro showed very uneven form. Many of their scoring strokes were as good as anything done by their opponents, but their best work was neutralized by a good deal of rather wild play. The Japanese, on the other hand, were never in the least flurried. Though not in the first class, Kuybara is a very sound player, and the pair will make a powerful combination for any of this season's competitions in which they participate.

The Ladies' Doubles

The final match of the Ladies Tennis Doubles of the Shanghai Lawn Tennis Association between Mrs. Hicks and Mrs. Irwine and Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Ford, took place on Monday in the grounds of the "Majestic," at 5 p.m. before a large gathering of spectators.

The game commenced with great vigour in spite of the warm weather, but was a little one-sided though both sides played well. Mrs. Irwine and Mrs. Hicks put up a good offensive by winning a love set. In the second set their opponents made a hard fight. There were lucky shots on both sides besides some very skilful play. The score stood finally at 6—3 in favour of Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Ford.

Another hard set followed, in which Mrs. Irwine and Mrs. Hicks again beat their opponents, this time with a score of 6—2, bringing their score in sets to 2—1.

Sir Skinner Turner then presented the cups to the winners, and expressed his pleasure in witnessing such excellent play. Mrs. Irwine and Mrs. Hicks, Sir Skinner observed, were the winners last year, but he hoped that next year someone else would win the cups; otherwise the present winners would want to keep the trophy permanently.

American Tournament

The Cricket Club American Tennis Tournament took place on Sunday in scorching sunshine, starting at 10 a.m. and continuing till 5.30 in the afternoon. There were 17 couples in all, two couples having scratched owing to the heat. Altogether 85, five-game sets were played during the day.

The winners were Mr. J. A. Thomas and Mrs. Stafford-Smith, with a score of 57 games; Mr. W. C. G. Clifford and Mrs. Duff with 53 games; were second, and Mr. Barker and Mrs. Seaborn third, with 52 games.

WIMBLEDON TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Two French Competitors in the Men's Singles Final: The Ladies' Doubles

Wimbledon, July 3.

The weather was cool and cloudy and there was a moderate attendance at the resumption of the Lawn Tennis Championships, today.

Lacoste opposed Williams in the first semi-final. The Frenchman's placing and footwork were superior. He took the first set 6-1, Williams frequently returning into the net. In the second set the American improved, driving and volleying delightfully. He won the set 6-3. Lascote led 4-2 in the third set, when rain interrupted the game. The match was resumed later, and Lacoste won, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. The attendance was sparse after the interval. Williams made a great effort to retrieve his position, but Lacoste was tenatious and drove very accurately and hard, while the American made an unusual number of double faults.

Borotra won from Raymond in the other semi-final without having to extend himself. Raymond was plucky, but was handicapped by an injured ankle. The score was 6-2, 6-4, 7-5.

In the semi-finals of the Ladies' Doubles, Mrs. Covell and Miss McKane beat Mrs. Lambert Chambers and Mrs. Shepherd-Barron, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, and Miss Wills and Mrs. Wightman beat Miss Goss and Mrs. Jessup, 8-6, 6-4.—Reuter.

Miss McKane's Great Win in Ladies Singles

Wimbledon, July 4.

Miss McKane beat the American, Miss Wills, in the final of the Ladies' Singles, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4.

It was a thrilling final. Only her indomitable will and courage enabled Miss McKane's wonderful recovery against the brilliant hard driving of the American. Miss McKane lost the first set and was 1/4 in the second, when she won six games running. The 15,000 spectators cheered her to an echo. After this the Englishwoman seemed inspired. She hit harder than ever, her length and placing were magnificent, and she volleyed superbly. Miss Wills played wonderful tennis. Her back-hand was invulnerable but was countered by Miss McKane's clever anticipation, net-play and beautiful side-line shots. There had never been such a cheer at Wimbledon as that which greeted Miss McKane's victory.

The weather at Wimbledon today was cool and cloudy, with the sun shining at intervals. The attendance was large, including the Queen and the Duke and Duchess of York.

Lycett's Sprained Ankle

The first match played on the centre court was the semi-final between Williams and Washburn and the holders, Godfree and Lycett. The score stood at 4/6, 12/10, 6/3, 7/7, when Lycett retired with an injured leg, the Americans thus winning the match.

The Americans were always slightly better, though Williams really carried them through. Lycett excelled at very remarkable saves and splendid close volleying. Towards the end, he rather overdid the poaching, but otherwise it was his best display in the championships. He sprained his ankle in attempting to retrieve a shot but continued for one game. The great pain, however, forced him to retire. Godfree was good in his service and overhead work.

Africans Knocked out.

In the other semi-final, the Americans, Richards and Hunter, beat the Africans, Raymond and Spence, 6/4, 6/4, 6/2.

The African pair were beaten but not disgraced. Raymond's weak ankle was again a handicap. The Africans nevertheless hit hard and volleyed magnificently. Spence made some miraculous returns, but Richards was the star of the match. He frequently left the Africans standing with middle-court drives. Hunter was safe and accurate. Both gave an exhibition of effective killing shots at the net.

The semi-finals of the Mixed Doubles resulted in Godfree and Mrs. Shepherd-Barron beating Woosnam and Mrs. Covell, 6/4, 4/6, 6/4, and Gilbert and Miss McKane defeating Lamb and Harvey, 6/2, 6/4.

Men's Singles

July 5.

Borotra beat Lacoste 6-3, 1-6, 6-1, 3-6, 6-4 in the final of the Singles.

Borotra was very speedy in following his service to the net. He cut up his opponent's returns in a spectacular manner. Lacoste countered with effective lobs. Borotra appeared to be tiring in the third set and occasionally his volleys found the net. In the fourth the 19-year old Lacoste fought gallantly against his more experienced compatriot and drew level. The fifth set provided a very dour struggle. Lacoste was leading 2-1, 3-2 and 4-3. Then Borotra equalized and won the next two games, smashing and volleying superbly. There was very great enthusiasm at the finish.

Ladies' Doubles

Miss Wills and Mrs. Wightman beat Miss McKane and Mrs. Covell 6-4, 6-4 in the final of the Ladies' Doubles.

The weather was fine and cool after the morning showers. The stands were packed. Miss Wills was the outstanding player. The British pair, however, in spite of Mrs. Covell's frequent double-faulting, led 3-1 and 4-2. The Americans were the harder-hitting pair and won 6-4. The losers were better in the second set and brought the games with their service to 4-4, but failed at the critical moment, the Americans winning 6-4. The play generally was unworthy of a final.

Mixed Doubles

In the Mixed Doubles final, Gilbert and Miss McKane beat Godfree and Mrs. Shepherd-Barron, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Gilbert and Miss McKane made use of fine tactics in keeping the game out of the hands of Godfree and consequently Mrs. Shepherd-Barron took the brunt of the attack and was overwhelmed in spite of a game response.

The Men's Doubles

The finalists in the Doubles were both American pairs. Hunter and Richards beat Williams and Washburn 6-3, 3-6, 8-10, 8-6, 6-3.

Washburn was weak in the opening set, but after that his back-hand volleying was the best feature of the game. The most exciting interlude was in the fourth set. Washburn and Williams were severely punishing their opponents' short lobs and the couple had only their own service game to win for the Championship, but at the crucial point Williams served a double fault, after which he failed to recover his form.—Reuter.

INTERNATIONAL GOLF IN FRANCE

Chantilly, July 3.

Hagen and Sarazen, the Americans, defeated the leading French professionals, Massy and Gassiat, in a 36-hole four-ball golf match here to-day by 2 up and 1 to play, for stakes of Frs. 10,000.—Reuter.

"Over 30" v. "Under 30"

The old adage that "youth will be served" was proved not always to be the case on Saturday afternoon when, in the annual match between those over 30 years of age and those under 30, the older men, after making a disastrous start, came near to winning. After the men of maturity had knocked up the respectable score of 159 after some bright cricket, it seemed that the younger men, with two and a quarter hours to get 160, would easily be capable of the task, but their second wicket partnership laid, strongly and firmly, the foundation of a draw, and in so doing gave one of the stolidest, steadiest, dullest and most generally uninteresting exhibitions of first-class club cricket that can have been seen in Shanghai for many seasons.

S. R. C. 2nd XI v. S. C. C. Ind XI.

Played on the S.R.C. ground. A close and enjoyable game resulted in the home team winning by the margin of 12 runs. The S.C.C. batted first and made 104, in the compilation of which the "tail" of the team played quite an important part. The Recs replied with 116, three of their batsmen making the quarter century and Mr. Extras contributing a valuable 17.

FRENCH AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Tolley Defeated in the Final Round

Paris, July 6.

In the final of the French Amateur Golf Championship at La Boulie, Anderson (United States) beat Cyril Tolley (Britain) by one up.—Reuter.

BOXING IN ENGLAND

"Kid" Lewis Retains British Welterweight Title

London, July 3.

In a boxing contest to-night at the Albert Hall for the Welterweight Championship of Britain, Kid Lewis, the holder, beat Johnny Brown, of Hamilton, on points.

Brown was doing most of the attacking in the early rounds and doing well at long range work. There was a good deal of clinching and Lewis was warned for holding. The Londoner from the fifth round scored with a good variety of blows. He established a lead on points at the half-way stage. In the 11th Brown got home several lefts to the face and a right swing to the jaw. There were several sharp rallies towards the end. Lewis won by a narrow margin.—Reuter.

South Africans Draw with Yorkshire: The County Championship

Bradford, July 3.

The match between Yorkshire and the South Africans was resumed to-day in dull and threatening weather before a small attendance. The wicket was good. There was a 10 minutes' interruption by rain before lunch and rain fell during luncheon.

The South Africans were all out for 279. Nourse made 68 in 90 minutes by magnificent driving and powerful cutting. He hit 11 fours. Taylor made 79 in 175 minutes. He hit 10 fours. He started cautiously but afterwards batted brightly. The innings took 4 hours and 35 minutes. Macaulay took 6 wickets for 66. Rain then fell and there was no play after tea.—Reuter.

Bradford, July 4.

There were 1,000 spectators on the third day of the match between Yorkshire and the South Africans. There were several interruptions for rain. Yorkshire made 147 for 4 wickets in their second innings. Oldroyd made 35 not out and Sutcliffe 36. Dixon took 3 wickets for 32.

The Africans had made 64 for 3 wickets when stumps were drawn. The match thus ended in a draw.

The African fast bowler, Bissett, broke one of the small bones in his foot while bowling to-day, probably necessitating a rest from cricket for three months.—Reuter.

South Africans' Easy Victory Over Northants

Northampton, July 5.

The match between Northamptonshire and the South Africans began to-day in fine weather after morning rain. The wicket was easy. Three thousand people were present.

Northampton were all out for 157. Jupp played a forcing innings for 84, hitting fourteen 4s. Blanckenberg took 7 wickets for 57.

At the close of play the South Africans had scored 191 for 6 wickets. Nourse batted for two hours without giving a chance for 62. Taylor made 67 not out.

Northampton, July 7.

The match between the South Africans and Northamptonshire was resumed to-day before a small attendance. The weather was fine, but dull, and the wicket hard. Jupp was an absentee owing to his having injured his hand on Saturday.

The South Africans made 380. Taylor scored 113 in 175 minutes. His driving was brilliant and he hit 16 fours. Nupon made 59 and Pegler 50 not out. Thomas took 8 wickets for 96.

Northamptonshire were all out in the second innings for 87. Blanckenberg took 3 wickets for 17 and Pegler 6 for 22.

The South Africans thus won by an innings and 136 runs.—Reuter.

London, July 7.

The start of the Inter-Varsity match at Lord's to-day was delayed by rain until 12.15. Four thousand people were present.

At Nottingham, Notts beat Lancashire on the first innings. Notts made 290 and 141 for 9 wickets. Lancashire made 267 (E. Tyldesley 72) and 178.

At Gloucester, Gloucestershire beat Derbyshire on the first innings. Gloucester made 317 (Smith 97 and Salter 135) and 187 for 7 wickets, declared. Derby made 281 and 49 for 3 wickets.

At Swansea, Worcestershire beat Glamorgan by 4 wickets. Worcester made 232 and 95 for 6 wickets. Glamorgan made 186 and 138.—Reuter.

OPENING OF OLYMPIC GAMES

Paris Brilliantly Decorated: Athletes of 44 Nations in Procession

Paris, July 5.

The city is beflagged in honour of the brilliant ceremonial opening of the Olympic Games. Packed stands at the Stadium applauded The arrival of President Doumergue. The Prince of Wales was enthusiastically cheered.

A procession of white-clad athletes, representing 44 countries headed by South Africa, marched round the arena. Each nation's flag was dipped as it passed the Presidential Tribune. The athletes finally formed up in the bright green centre of the Stadium, presenting a magnificent picture of youth and fitness against the blue and gold Stadium colour scheme.

The Americans' mighty quota received a tumultuous welcome from their compatriots, and the splendid British contingent, headed by Cameron pipers and followed by a bevy of English girl competitors, were given a rousing reception.

The assembly was thrilled by the sudden appearance of a flying-boat flying over the Presidential stand at a height of 500 feet with a cinema operator daringly leaning out. Then in sudden silence President Doumergue rose and solemnly proclaimed the Games open.

Paris, July 3.

The United States beat Britain in the Olympic Polo Competition by 10 goals to 2.—Reuter.

July 4.

The French champion, M. Ducret, won the Olympic Foils competition. Miss Osier (Denmark) won the Ladies' Foils. Two English ladies were second and fourth.—Reuter. Reuter.

World's Records Broken

Paris, July 6.

At the Olympic Games to-day Ritola (Finland) won the 10,000 metres in the world's record time of 30 min. 23-1/5 sec.

Wide (Sweden), who was second, was 300 metres behind Ritola, while Berg (Finland) was third.

The Throwing the Javelin final was won by J. Myrra (Finland) with a distance of 62 metres 96 centimetres.

In the polo competition Argentina beat the United States by 6 goals to 5.

The Javelin Throw at the last Olympic Games was won by J. Myrra with a throw of 65.79 metres.

Note.—The previous record for the 10,000 metres was held by Bouin (France) with 30 min. 58-8/10 sec.—Reuter.

Paris, July 7.

At the Olympic Games to-day the high jump final was won by Osborn (America) with I metre 98 centimetres. Brown (America) was second and Lewden (France) third.

The British sprinter, Abrahams, won the final of the 100-metre dash in 10-3/5 sec. Scholz (America) was second and Porritt (New Zealand) third.

At the Colombes Stadium Taylor (America) won the 400-metre hurdles final in the world's record time of 52-3/5 sec. Vilen (Finland) was second and Riley (America) third.

In the Pentathlon long jump Legendre (America) broke the world's record making 25 ft. 6 in. —Reuter.

Colombes, July 7.

Lettronen (Finland) won the Pentathlon at the Olympic Games. Sonfay (Hungary) was second and Legendre (United States) third.—Reuter.

Long Jump and Weight-putting Won by America and 800 Metres by Britain

Paris, July 8.

There was a poor attendance at the Stadium when the Olympic Games continued to-day, on account of the hot weather. It is noteworthy that Legendre (America), who yesterday broke the world's record in the Pentathlon long jump, is not participating in the individual long jump competition. He was not considered of sufficient class to represent the United States in it when the entries were sent in.

The 800-metre run final was won by D. Lowe (Britain). Martin (Switzerland) was second and Enck (America) third. The time was 1 min. 52-2/5 sec.

The long jump final was won by Hubbard (America), who made 7,445 metres. Gourdin (America) was second and Hansen (Norway) third.

In putting the weight the result was as follows:—Houser (America) won with a put of 14 metres 99.5 centimetres. Hartraft (America) was second and Hills (America) third.—Reuter.

Further American Successes on the Flat: Steeplechase Won by Finland

Paris, July 9.

The 110-metre hurdles final was won by Kinsey (America) in 15 sec. Atkinson (South Africa) was second and Peterson (Sweden) third.

The 200-metres final was won by Scholz (America). Paddock (America) was second and Liddell (Britain) third. The time was 21⅘ sec.

The 3,000-metres steeplechase final was won by Ritola (Finland) in 9 min. 33⅘ sec. Katz (Finland) was second and Bontemps (France) third. Montague (Britain) jarred his foot on a hurdle and finished sixth. Newey retired. —Reuter.

Silver.

The price came yesterday at 34⅝d. ready and 34 1/16d. forward, against 34 1/16d. ready and 34⅛d. forward a week ago, showing rises of 1/16d. on both prices. The London market has been quiet and steady during the week, and apparently not very much doing. The Continent has again been reported as a buyer.

Bars in stock, 2,638, including Silver Yen 10 lakhs. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 386⅓ lakhs and $406 lakhs, against Tls. 389½ lakhs and $386½ lakhs last week, and Tls. 224 lakhs and $290½ lakhs on July 10, 1923.

Exchange.

The official quotation has remained unchanged at T.T. 3/3⅛d. since June 26, in spite of fluctuations in the price of silver. A few more bills have been making, but, on the whole, business is very dull indeed. Owing to the decline in the value of the yen the speculators have brought the price of gold bars down in our local market, with the result that rates for sterling and gold dollars have risen. There are sellers of T.T. just now at 3/3 1/16d. July, 3/3 1/16d. August, 3/3⅛d. September, and gold $71⅛ July, 71⅝ August, 71⅜ September and 72 October, with buyers probably 1/16d. and ⅛ cent higher respectively. Estimates of the speculators' position still vary widely, but a conservative estimate gives it as oversold about £400,000 and oversold Y.2,500,000.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

A More Cheerful Atmosphere, but Few Sales: Speculative Interest in Piece Goods

July 12.

The story of this week is not a great deal more cheerful than that of the week before, for no great increase in business was apparent. There was some tendency to better prices and optimistic experts in reading signs discovered evidence of a speedy change for the better, but there have been so many disappointments of late that it is necessary to be very cautious when making predictions. An unpleasant feature which cannot be ignored is the undoubtedly true information that the crops all over the country are in a very bad state—in fact, practically ruined. In the north, and especially in Chihli Province, there has been a prolonged drought, whilst in the Yangtze Valley and the south there have been heavy and continuous rains, the crops suffering equally in both cases. This does not apply to the cotton districts, from which all reports are optimistic and there is the confident expectation of a bumper crop. There have been further signs of life in the export market and dealers in produce rapidly are becoming almost cheerful again.

Piece Goods.

Indent business has remained very depressed. Here and there a suggestion of interest has been noticeable and a limited amount of buying has been done for Szechuan, but opinions do not agree as to the attractiveness of the prices. In most cases, it is said, dealers will not even worry to make their customary daily calls. Medium Whites and imitation Venetians are enjoying a measure of popularity. More inquiries have been made on behalf of the Yangtze and northern ports, leading to hopes of something being done there.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—The week has been marked by extensive speculation and the market has shown itself very sensitive, sellers being desideedly active on account of the reports. Yesterday's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—July, 46.60; August, 46.55; September, 41.65; October, 38.65; November, 37.75; Decmber, 37.70. There were no spot quotations.

Yarn.—This market again was disappointing and there were very few sales beyond some secondhand transactions. Yesterday's closing quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchangs were:—July, 173.-30; August, 170; September, 165.80; October, 160.40; November, 157.90; December, 157.90.

American Cotton.—The New York market has risen slightly during the week as a consequence of the daily crop reports. Boll weevil is reported to be increasing in the Eastern Belt, but elsewhere the crop is progressing favourably. The latest cables tell of another slight rise in New York and on Thursday the market closed steady at quotations somewhat above those of last week, viz.:—Mid-American, spot, 30.73; October, 24.41; December, 23.73; January, 23.59; March, 23.76; May, 23.85. Highest October, 24.95; lowest, 24.41 On the same day the Liverpool market was firm, at the following quotations:—Fully middling, spot, 17.26; October, 14.48; January, 14.06.

Egyptian Cotton.—Sakellarides, July, 43.65.

Sampin.—The latest quotations on the Osaka Exchange are:—

	Thursday Closing	Yesterday Closing
July	Y.299.30	Y.300.00
August	299.10	300.10
September	297.20	298.90
October	295.00	295.50
November	291.00	290.60
December	287.80	288.00
January	286.60	287.10

Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld & Son, in their weekly report, issued yesterday, state:—

China Cotton.—During the early part of the week it looked as if cotton were of absolutely no intrinsic value and the market was pounded down by disgusted bulls and elated bears until October cotton was well under Tls. 38 Prices showed in one day a gross decline of about three-quarters of a tael, making a total decline of about one tael from the level of a week ago. The violent fluctuations caused considerable nervousness on both sides of the market and at the close prices continued to fluctuate in a nervous and erratic manner. As to the new crop, we thing that the outlook may almost be called "average." The past week's weather has been favourable for the plant and fairly good headway has been made practically throughout the entire cotton belt. In the circumstances, believe that as long as the outlook for the next crop remains favourable, no improvement in price can be looked forward to. In the meantime, however, the market will be governed by weather conditions in the cotton belt and by the action of professional operators and also the world markets.

Yarn.—During the past week the yarn has been nervous and erratic, and prices declined some three to four taels as compared with last week's level, due to the weakness of the raw material. In all some 2,000 to 3,000 bales have changed hands for export to Szechuan, Newchwang, Wuhu, Tsingtao, Swatow, Tientsin, Fukien and northern ports.

Produce.

The general position of the export market is unchanged. The demand for groundnuts still continues, but in spite of advanced prices in Europe supplies in China are difficult to procure. As far as can be seen, business in old season cargo is almost at an end. There is a certain amount of interest in hen albumen in Europe and prices have appreciably advanced, but the short production of last season renders business difficult. There are also inquiries for new season sesamum seed, but local dealers are not prepared as yet to make offers.

BILLS OF LADING

International Shipping Conference Resolution

The following extracts are made from the City Notes of "The Times" of May 21 as being of importance to the mercantile community in the Far East:—

"A number of questions which were the subject of a resolution at the recent International Shipping Conference and closely affect other classes of business men than shipowners may be grouped under the general heading of 'Clean Bills of Lading.' These questions concern, besides shipping managers, merchants, bankers, and underwriters, and, if certain evils now apparent are to be eradicated, the active support of all classes of business men will be necessary. Probably some of these questions have become especially important in recent years, owing to the epidemic of pilferage of goods in course of transit, and the successful efforts made to fight it. One of the most effective ways of reducing the extent of the pilferage evil was found to be the careful checking of goods as they were received by the responsible authorities at the various stages of transit, with the result that the mate's receipts, and consequently bills of lading, were marked when the goods were found to be in not "apparent good order and condition." This was an obvious and proper course to adopt, but a difficulty arose when bankers protested against making advances on the strength of documents that were not quite 'clean.'

Letters of Indemnity.

"To overcome this difficulty merchants are known frequently to have approached shipowners and to have offered them 'letters of indemnity,' provided the carriers would give them a 'clean' bill. The effect of such a practice has been that shipowners have, in effect, accepted goods for transport as being in 'apparent good order and condition' when they were, in fact, not so; and then, should the consignees demand payment for damage from the carriers, the latter were able to recover from the shippers, under the letters of indemnity, the amount of their payments. To many shipowners—indeed, it is to be hoped, to most—participation in such transactions must be revolting, and it was to put a stop to such a system that the resolution was approved at the International Shipping Conference last week. This is clearly a matter in which the best hope of a remedy is to be found in the development of a healthy public opinion.

"So long as there are any shipowners of any nationality who succumb to the temptation put in their way by shippers, it will, in time, be difficult for those who cordially dislike the practice to hold aloof, for competitive reasons. The proper course for all engaged in transport is to face the facts. The shipowners should continue to mark the shipping documents when the goods entrusted to their care are not in 'apparent good order and condition;' and the bankers might, perhaps, consider the possibility of adopting a less rigid attitude towards bills so marked. Often local knowledge should enable both bankers and merchants to assess the marking of the shipping documents at its true value, and to know that the goods are little, if any, the worse for signs of 'apparent damage' and fully deserve to be financed without trouble. Certainly the real remedy for the trouble is not to be found in the proffer or acceptance of 'bribes,' in order to smooth the passage of goods. The continuance or extension of such practices could not fail to lead to a general lowering of the standard of commercial morality, to the disadvantage of international commerce."

There has been more life in the local share market during the past week and marked improvement in buying quotations generally is noticeable. Local "Rubbers" have recovered considerably in sympathy with the advance in the prices of the raw product on the Singapore and London markets which according to cables to hand to-day now stand at 37 cents and 11½d respectively.

London market quotations with the exception of Chinese Government Loans show an improvement during the week and the following are the latest prices quoted us by cable :—

COMPANY MEETINGS

CARLTON LIMITED

Big Loss on Year's Working: Unfair Competition After 1 a.m.

The annual meeting of shareholders in the Carlton, Limited, was held on Monday afternoon at 10 Canton Road. Mr. G. Grayrigge presided, and the other directors present were Messrs. W. J. Gande, E. Bell, and L. Ladow, the attendance representing 5,355 shares.

The notice convening the meeting, and the auditors' report, having been read:—

The Chairman said:—Gentlemen. Our chairman, Mr. Welch, is absent on leave and again the privilege of addressing you to-day has devolved upon me.

Our first full year in our beautiful new and stately premises has been one of continued anxieties and hard work, but now I am grateful to say the fortunes of this company seem to have turned the corner. The ball-room is crowded nightly, but I am afraid our patrons have none too much money to spend during these hard times. I dare say I am correct in saying that nowhere in the world, or the Far East at any rate, will you get the same continuous and high-class entertainment at the price Carlton, Limited, charges to its guests.

The continued trade depression and the early closing law combined dealt a heavy blow at the company's turnover, for whereas last year with nine months in the old premises and three months in the new, we took $433,709, this full year, in the new premises sees us turn over $426,193 only. The 1 o'clock closing law should either be observed both sides the Yangkingpang or abolished. I am told it is not observed at all south of the Yangkingpang; thus our patrons when the Carlton closes at 1 o'clock simply go elsewhere and spend money that otherwise would be spent with us, which constitutes a severe hardship on this company. I am also told that this company was verbally assured by City Fathers that no discrimination as to closing or other privileges enjoyed by such institutions either in the French Concession or in the Chinese territory would be withheld from it.

Costly Decorations.

Turning to the accounts, I told you last year that the furnishing and decoration of such a large place cost more than was estimated and this year the sum total of our assets is considerably increased, but, as you may gather from the balance sheet, the considerable item of sundry creditors discloses the fact that a goodly amount is owed by the company. Our creditors, however, are very obliging and are being paid off in monthly instalments.

Our bad debts as usual are about half per cent. on our turnover, which is a very creditable showing.

After providing Tls. 24,857.35 for depreciation, the year's working resulted in a loss of Tls. 57,406.09 which, after deduction of the profit brought forward from the year previous, is reduced to Tls. 735.48.

It is too early yet to give any forecast of what the current year is going to do for us, but if crowded houses nightly are any criterion, this year must be an improvement on the past. One thing I am sure of, and that is if hard work by an enterprising manager—I refer to Mr. Ladow—and his equally keen staff can turn a loss into a profit the future of Carlton, Limited, is secure.

The company's auditors, Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews, who have audited the accounts before you, have resigned, and you are asked to elect Messrs. Mortimer Reid & Slee to this position.

I now beg to propose that the report and accounts as presented to shareholders for the financial year ended March 31, 1924, are hereby adopted and passed. This is seconded by Mr. Gande.

Gentlemen, the accounts are in your hands, the resolution is before the meeting and is open to discussion.

The resolution was then passed, as also were the following:—

That Messrs. G. Grayrigge and W. J. Gande be re-elected Directors of the company, and that the appointment of Mr. Edward Bell as a Director of this company be and hereby is confirmed. Proposed by Mr. Ladow, seconded by Mr. F. Scarborough.

That Messrs. Mortimer Reid & Slee be appointed auditors to the company for the ensuing year. Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Scarborough.

SUNGALA RUBBER ESTATE, LD.

Annual General Meeting

The annual general meeting of the Sungala Rubber Estate, Ld., was held at the Company's offices, 40 Kaingse Road, on Monday. Dr. Chadwick T. Kew presided in the absence of Mr. Holliday, and was supported by Messrs. A. H. Mancell, and Chang Nieh-yun (directors) and Mr. R. C. Phillippo, Acting Secretary. There were 32,018 shares represented:

The Chairman said: Gentlemen.—I regret to state that Mr. Holliday will not be able to be present to-day owing to ill-health. I am sure you will join with me in wishing him a speedy recovery.

The Report and Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1924, having been in your hands for some days I will now, with your permission, follow the usual custom and take them as read. Your directors have again followed their former policy, and have included in the report all that they considered it was possible to say about last year's working, which leaves me with very little fresh to tell you now. The Estate has now been assessed at 163,040 lbs. which is an increase of 25,640 lbs. over the old figure allowed for standard production and is the maximum permissible under the revised rules, and this may in the circumstances be considered satisfactory. I may mention that the outputs this year have been:—

April	8922
May	8838

(The output for June is not yet to hand).

You will appreciate the fact that the Company is again on a dividend paying basis and that we are able to distribute 5 per cent. accordingly. Before putting the first resolution to the meeting if there is any point any shareholder would like elucidated, I shall be pleased to answer his questions to the best of my information and ability.

There were no questions.

Dr. C. T. Kew proposed and Mr. Chang Nieh-yun seconded the adoption of the report and accounts, and the resolution was carried unanimously.—The following resolutions were also carried:—

That the Directors be authorized to pay a dividend of 5 per cent. on the paid-up capital of the company to shareholders on the register at this date.—Proposed by Dr. C. T. Kew; seconded by Mr. A. H. Mancell.

That the remuneration of the Directors be Tls. 1,000 (Taels One Thousand) for the year ended March 31, 1924.—Proposed by Mr. Y. K. Zea Sih-vang; seconded by Mr. Woo Li-fan.

That Mr. Cecil Holliday, the retiring Director, be re-elected a Director of the company.—Proposed by Mr. Y. K. Zea Sih-vang; seconded by Mr. Chin Tsz-fong.

That Messrs. Mortimer Reid & Slee by appointed auditors of the Company for the ensuing year at a remuneration of Tls. 150.—Proposed by Mr. J. Jamieson; seconded by Mr. F. O. Madar.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

THE National Association for the Propagation of Road Construction held a committee meeting at a Chinese restaurant on Saturday, with Mr. Hsu Yuan, the President, in the chair. Mr. Wu Shan, General Secretary, reported the establishment of branch associations in Szechuan and Shansi. Among other matters discussed, a resolution was passed, authorizing Dr. C. T. Wang, the absent President, and the General Secretary to make a tour of the provinces, lecturing on road construction and advocating the employing of troops to build roads.

CLUB AND SOCIETIES

ENGINEERING SOCIETY OF CHINA

The Annual General Meeting: Membership: Year's Papers: Mathematical Prize

The annual meeting of members of the Engineering Society of China was held on Tuesday afternoon at the Old Carlton, and was of a formal character.

In their report for the year the Council announced a membership of 304, made up as follows: honorary members 9, associates 16, members 276 and students 3. This is a net increase of 40, and an improvement upon the previous year, when there was a net decrease of 13.

Seven papers were read last Session, these being:—"A Brief outline of the Military Railways of the Egyptian "Expeditionary Force" 1916-1919 by J. Oswald.

"The Discharge of thick fluids" by Dr. H. Chatley.

"Harbour Equipment and the Shanghai Harbour" by F. J. Blom.

"The Choice of a small electric lighting installation in China" by V. Rose.

"Deep Draft Wharves in the Whangpoo" by K. Bryhn.

"Electric Ship Propulsion" by A. J. Percival.

"The Design and Development of the Shanghai Sewage Scheme" by H. W. Reah.

Through the courtesy of the managing director of the "North-China Daily News" an invitation to inspect the plant in the new building on the Bund was accepted by the Society. This visit proved to be of general interest and was well attended. Mr. Harpur arranged a visit to the Municipal concrete ware yard and afterwards to the Municipal sewage disposal works. This visit proved to be a most timely one coming immediately after the delivery of Mr. Reah's Paper on "Sewage."

The winner of the Mathematical prize offered by the Society was F. H. Castro, of St. Francis Xavier's School.

A miniature of the Engineers' Challenge Cup has been sent to the winner C.-S.-M. H. G. Mackenzie.

The Council for the 1924-25 Session was elected as follows:—President, Mr. A. W. Brankston; Vice-Presidents, Messrs. C. S. Taylor and M. H. Logano; Council: Dr. H. Chatley and Messrs. E. T. Forestier, A. Gimson, D. P. Griffith, F. S. Heyes, O. L. Ilbert, E. A. Mills, C. D. Pearson and E. C. Stocker.

MRS. H. C. Mei, who was elected a vice-chairman of the World's Committee of the Y.W.C.A. to represent the women of the Far East, returned to Shanghai last week after attending the conference of the World's Committee in Washington last May. During her absence in the United States, Mrs. Mei also attended the National Convention of the Y.W.C.A. at the Hotel Commodore, New York. She was entertained by Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, JR., after addressing 3,000 delegates to the convention on "The Y.W.C.A. as a spiritual force."

MR. Yang Tao-lin, Adviser to the Nungshanpu, has sent a report of his work of investigating into the conditions of silk and tea trades, to Gen. Ho Feng-lin, Military Commissioner of Shanghai. Mr. Yang has conferred with the leading merchants in these two trades both at Hangchow and Shanghai. In his opinion, a "Preparatory Office for the Improvement of Production and Consumption" should be established here, as a central port of China, from which it would be easy to get into touch with officials and merchants interested in tea and silk at other places. A director to plan and direct the affairs of the office, and several assistant directors each to take charge of either the tea, silk, banking, shipping or any other department, he says, should be appointed. Gen. Ho has addressed a letter to the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, introducing Mr. Yang, and asking the Chamber to invite the tea and silk merchants to meet him and discuss the project in detail.

CORRESPONDENCE

IMPARTIAL JUSTICE

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The paragraph at the foot of the first column on page seven in this morning's issue of your esteemed paper quoting an instance of the impartiality of British justice recalled to my mind two stories which may amuse your readers.

In the early days of Rhodesia, to be exact in 1893, the late Captain Lendy, seconded for service with the British South Africa Company from the Royal Horse Artillery, was Resident Magistrate at Victoria, Mashonaland, and while imbued with the usual traditions of British justice certainly knew more about soldiering than law. One evening while strolling round Victoria he chanced to meet an old prospector acquaintance, who persuaded him to lay aside the "cold isolation of the bench" and to join him in a drink at one of the numerous bars of that prosperous little town.

One drink, and the recalling of old yarns, led to another, with the result that at closing time they parted in somewhat convivial mood, both declaring how much they had enjoyed the evening and expressing the wish that their next merry meeting might not be long delayed.

It wasn't. On the way home the prospector fell into the hands of the law for being drunk and Captain Lendy managed to put one of his eyes into mourning by stumbling over a stump.

Next morning the prospector was brought before the magistrate, Capt. Lendy, and charged with being drunk.

After finding the accused guilty and reading him a short homily on the iniquities of getting drunk, Captain Lendy solemnly sentenced him to a fine of one pound. At the same time pulling a pound out of his own pocket and laying it on the table, he remarked to the clerk of the Court that "he believed that was the amount of the fine imposed on the prisoner by the stern hand of the law."

On another occasion a Dutchman was being tried for "Dacoity" and stealing cattle from the natives.

The accused having secured the services of the only lawyer in town, Capt. Lendy, the Magistrate, was left without legal advice, an advantage the lawyer was not slow to realize and by his eloquence so befogged the legally untrained mind of Capt. Lendy that he delivered the following somewhat unusual judgment:—

"Prisoner at the bar, I am exceedingly sorry that your solicitor has succeeded in convincing me that on purely technical grounds I cannot find you guilty, but you must give the cattle back."

Enclosing my card,

I am, etc.,
MAKUBELE.

Shanghai, July 4, 1924.

The paragraph our correspondent refers to is as follows:—

A magistrate and a local doctor (says an Indian paper) were stopped by a native policeman for driving their cars without lights. They decided that a case must be brought to show the impartiality of British justice. So the Magistrate tried the doctor, delivered a little homily on the dangers of driving without lights, and fined him five rupees. Then the doctor, who was a deputy magistrate, took his seat on the bench and tried the magistrate. "This dangerous practice, of which the Court has already issued a warning, is on the increase," he said. "This is the second case we have heard this morning. I must make an example and fine you 50 rupees."

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—A great deal has been said and written on the subject of the increasing lawlessness of the lower classes of Chinese and the grave danger to law-abiding citizens from armed robberies. It is a problem which calls for very strong repressive measures, but it is futile to blame the police forces for the ever increasing number of bad characters infesting Shanghai.

The physician while using his best endeavours to cure disease is not entirely oblivious to the causes which lead to the complaint. So it should be with those whose duty it is to suppress wrong doers; they should not overlook the primary causes of crime. It cannot be gainsaid that the present unsatisfactory state of affairs is in a measure, if not entirely, due to the policy of mistaken kindness which resulted years ago in the abolition of the cangue and the bamboo. It is somewhat late to cry over spilt milk but without a doubt the urgency of the matter calls strongly to those in authority to reintroduce corporal punishment for Chinese criminals. As certain classes of the population can only be influenced through their pockets so the criminal classes can only be controlled through their hides. A certain section of social reformers will always argue against corporal punishment as degrading to society; but surely it is better to rid the place of these dastardly criminals at any cost rather than allow respectable residents to be foully murdered. If the miscreants get to know that the bamboo is again in force it will not be long before they leave the settlement severely alone. This is no idle theory, but a suggestion made in all seriousness and one which should meet with the approval of all law loving citizens both Chinese and foreign. Those who sit in arm chairs comfortably away from the seat of danger should not be allowed to influence the authorities in this matter and the situation is already grave enough to justify the course now recommended. It may be somewhat late in the day, but urgency demands that steps be taken in the direction indicated before it is really too late.

I am, etc.,
BRUTUS.

CHRISTIANITY AND WHAT IT HAS DONE

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—During the now closed controversy about missionaries, you published (on July 1) a long rigmarole from a correspondent in Chingkou and there would have been no reason for taking any notice of that letter had it not been for the following remarks, found therein:

(1) "Is it not a certain amount of arrogance on the part of the Christians that they have the nerve to try to tell people that their religion, which according to the age of the world is an extremely infant one, is the only one leading to heaven?"

(2) "I should say that before trying to transplant our religion to a foreign field we ought to ask ourselves what has that religion done to us? Have we morally or financially or in any other respect benefited by same?"

A great deal of anti-Christian propaganda is, as you know, going on here in China, mostly by young Chinese who have received a more or less foreign education which has given them swollen heads and intellectual indigestion. The propaganda is, of course, anti-foreign in its aim, and the youngsters who cry the loudest are generally those whose eduucation has been, to a great extent paid for by the despised Christian foreigners.

Remarks, as the above quoted, are just such as these gentlemen are on the lookout for. Cannot their poor deluded countrymen see, here, how intelligent foreigners look upon Christianity? etc., etc., etc.

This letter is an endeavour to undo the harm the remarks quoted may possibly do, or have done.

(1) As regards the age of the Christian religion. Your correspondent's remark can only mean that the supposed age of the Christian religion, viz: 1900 years, is as nothing if compared with the Buddhist, Taoist and (if we may call it a religion) Confucian systems which antedate the Christian era by about 500 years. This idea is generally accepted by unthinking or ignorant Christians, as well as non-Christians who forget, or do not know, that the Christian religion is the fulfilment and exaltation of the Jewish religion; that, if the Christian is not the true Jewish religion, then it is not true Christianity. As such Christianity dates back to, at least, the patriarch Abraham, who lived about 1800 to 1900 years before Christ, or one thousand three hundred years before Buddha and Confucius.

(2) Your correspondent asks "what has that religion done to us" and "have we morally or financially or in any other respect benefited by same." Christ did not come to teach people how to become millionaires, so this, the financial part of the question, will not be answered, but a short historical review of the benefits mankind has received from Christianity may perhaps be permissible.

Nineteen hundred years ago the Roman empire was at the height of its power and prosperity, but it was, at the same time, in the utmost moral decay, its religious rites had degenerated into acts of absolutely unmentionable obscenities; its emperors declared themselves to be gods and demanded, as such, to be publicly worshipped; its officials ere thoroughly corrupt and oppressed unmercifully the people they ere ruling, they plundered them nd they butchered them on the least retext, or without any pretext at ll; in war the prisoners, men, women and children were either massacred or sold as slaves; in Italy wo-thirds of the population were laves and the owners of these slaves ould, and did, kill them or sell them r use the women just as they fancied; under the law of pater familias he free women, wives of the Romans ere treated as slaves and could be ivorced at the will of their husbands nd children were, if not wanted, hrown out on the streets or in the elds, to be devoured by the dogs or die of exposure or starvation; rostitution flourished everywhere; he poor and old were left to starve, here were no charitable institutions care for them; there were no hositals where poor as well as rich ould be attended to when sick; the normous majority of the population as absolutely illiterate.

All these conditions were reversed y and through Christianity. It is ithin the frame of a letter, impossible to more than name some of the uses which Christianity found ourishing and fought against and onquered. Anybody who will take little trouble in the study of hisory and who will especially try to void tainted sources, may easily erify the above assertions.

With many apologies for taking so much of your valuable space ith this letter, but finding it imossible to make it shorter.

I am, etc.,

PAUL.

HE MURDER OF MR. HAWLEY

o the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Having heard it expressed hat there is a rumour afloat that the ommander of H. M. S. Cockchafer ay be losing his job owing to his tion at Wanhsien following the urder of Mr. Hawley, I venture to rotest against any such procedure y the British Government and I m sure I am voicing the feelings of ractically the entire foreign popula- on of China whether they be Briish, American or any other naionality. I do not say that this allant gentleman is being "sacked," ut the rumour is about to that effect nd what we want to know in due ourse is its truth or otherwise. he foreigners in China and elsehere in the East understand the atives, those at home do not. We now that action taken by the Comander of the Cockchafer was just he very thing to make the natives ealize we are not in their country o be murdered every day and that e must have some acknowledgment f our status. What is the good of ll these official telegrams and proests between London and Peking? ction is what is needed, similar to hat taken.

We had one taste in India in 1919 f the home folks' narrow-mindedess and ignorance over the O'Dwyer case. We want no uch rot repeated. This time the oreigners in this country must ull together early and strongly and protest to the right quarters gainst any action being taken to he detriment of the Commander of H. M. S. Cockchafer, but there is no eed to do anything until we hear of he correctness of the rumour.

Something has got to be done irectly by foreigners here regardng their own safety in this country or murders are too frequent, far oo frequent. "Apologies" "notes" nd "scraps of paper" are so much ubbish. We are not abroad for he benefit of our health or to be murdered. We want the protection nd joint actions of our various Governments strongly and firmly. Matters at present just "die down" fter a couple of days' sensation. Soon they will "flare up" if the lives of foreigners are not more respected. But we wish to avoid a "flare up" by strong action now. Unless improvement takes place, we must put our thinking caps on.

DRESSED SHIPS

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Could any of your readers enlighten me as to when warships and others in harbour should "dress ship" on national holidays.

To-day being the "glorious fourth" I noticed that the French cruiser Jules Ferry had not "dressed ship" during the morning but had done so after noon.

On June 3 the King's Birthday, I noticed no other warship was "dressed" other than the British, so perhaps some well informed reader of your valuable paper may be able to explain the reason.

ILLICIT TAXATION

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—On page 3 of your to-day's issue, under the heading "Illicit Taxation," appears an extract from the "Times" City notes, saying that the evil is one that calls for redress. All the suggestions following, however, are unworkable and useless, if not ridiculous, especially the one coming from China herself asking the Legations to do their dirty work. The suggestion is dishonest and impertinent, and can only have been made by officials lost to all sense of shame, either of themselves or the government they represent.

No, Sir, the remedy against these official bandits' extortions will not be by providing them with further opportunities for inland "squeeze" from outgoing goods.

Let us see. We pay transit dues, in commutation, at the port of loading, to the Chinese Customs, who issue a transit pass and similar documents guaranteeing that there will be no further charges or interference in the interior. We are not concerned with their powers, of which we have no knowledge. We only know they have broken their contract. The effective, remedy therefore is to charge up all illegal and illicit payments and extortions, every single copper cash, to this institution, and exact prompt payment, leaving it to them to find out, as it is their proper business, how to recoup themselves. One would think that this is easier said than done, and one would be right if our own officials are spineless.

I repeat. Let these Tuchun bandits do what they like. You cannot stop them anyhow unless you do so by force of arms, which is not yet called for, but may be very soon. By Treaty the Customs are under obligation to issue transit passes wherever required; they cannot even refuse to issue them, and, so far, they have not so refused. Now, these super-bandits think they cannot be reached by their victims, but I beg to differ. Let these illicit impositions be debited to the Customs at port of loading, and payment exacted, by deducting from dues, or in cash. The Customs shall not lose by it. They have their remedy against the perpetrators who are always under control by a higher official in their district, whether he be a minor tax-bandit, or the Tuchun himself. The net result, if this method is carried out, will be a huge loss to the whole caboodle, seeing that every cent they collect in the interior through their bandit-agents will have to be refunded by themselves. And, since force is the only thing these people recognize, and they are within reach, then by all means let them have force, to the uttermost.

I am, etc.,

FRERE.

AN ANGLO-AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The suggestion of "Briton," that an organization should be founded in Shanghai with the express aim of promoting and cementing friendship between the peoples of the United States of America and the British Empire, comes most opportunely at this time when our American friends are reminding themselves of the noble origin of the Constitution of their great nation, and is a proposal deserving of every encouragement and support.

Nothing is more important to the welfare of the world than that goodwill should exist between Americans and Britons, and that very truth it should be so that

"Two Nations by the sea,
Two peoples great and free,
One anthem raise"

(I am a little uncertain of the words, but the sense is preserved in my rendering.). I write as a Briton —an Englishman—and am assured that I am voicing the true aspirations of the best elements of our Empire, when I say that we desire the goodwill and friendship of the American peoples. Anything calculated to achieve this end should be given every encouragement and support—and effort is needed, if only to counteract those insidious forces that are ever at play to undermine the good relations that, happily, at present exist. These forces are for the most part born of ignorance, ill-founded mistrust, and mad jealousy, and therefore they are forces which we should do all in our power to overthrow.

Fortunately, we are basically and at heart friends, since we share the same noble sentiments and are imbued with the same great ideals of justice, fairplay, sportmanship, and humanity, attributable to our common ancestry and to a common recognition that moral and spiritual factors count for most in the life of a people and a nation. Because this is so, goodwill and friendship are not only possible, but natural.

Compared with these great welding factors, the superficial differences (those irritant pinpricks) of habits and customs should carry little weight and count little in our relations. But yet we have to be on our guard that these little things are not permitted to provoke real animosities. There are some Britons, it must be regrettably admitted, so narrow and foolish as to find occasion even for war (!) in such inconsequential matters as a higher regard for their own mode of articulation as compared with the other's, for their own style of habiliments as contrasted with the other's, or for their own vocabulary as opposed to the other's. What matters it if one does speak with a "nasal drawl," as compared with a "pronounced English accent," or whether one wears glasses rimmed with tortoise-shell instead of something else, or is a "beer swilling" Englishman instead of a "gum chewing" American, or whether we call it a "lift" and they an "elevator?" If one finds in these things occasion for a good-natured chaff, well and good, but to find in them reason to consign the other party to perdition, is class foolishness and evidence of a conceited, proud and altogether perverse nature. Let us be careful to differentiate good-humoured chaff from malicious criticism.

But, as I have said, these small superficial differences between Americans and Britons matter little as against the great fact that basically we are akin and at one, and we should do all in our power by association and co-operation to remind ourselves that this is so. Will not some of the leading American and British members of our local community come forward and sponsor a movement to the very desirable end of an Anglo-American Association?

I am, etc.,

SPECTATOR.

LIGHTNING JUSTICE

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—It is good to be alive to-day in China! At no time in the history of this country has safety for the foreigner been so accentuated.

Any molestation of foreigners is at once dealt with by the stern hand of justice or it may be a Chinese hand, but justice is enforced.

Take the Lincheng affair for example; could justice have been swifter?

Were not the recent murders of Mr. Hawley and the Rev. George H. Byers investigated at once?

Did not a gun-boat during the Hawley affair fire a lot of blank ammunition to scare the Chinese? What more could be desired in the way of protection?

For much of the pleasure which we derive from living in China we must thank the noble men and true who sacrifice themseves at the Legations in Peking. Not one of those august names ever appears in connexion wth any social offair. No. Unless to speak of something which those men may be doing for their respective countries, one sees no their names.

More fortunate than other nationals here are the Japanese. In numbers they for exceed other foreigners and yet not one has of late lost his life in any little mix up. This, naturally, is the will of Buddha.

Thanking you for allowing me to draw attention to the happiness and the peace and especially to the bravery existing in China to-day.

DISCRIMINATION IN SHANGHAI SPORTS

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The above heading is offered at my own risk as you unfortunately classed my last effort under the heading of "Fuhle Collision," a correspondence which apparently has closed itself. It was vaguely rumoured that the letter signed "Mariner" was dictated by a man who has acted as sole arbiter of more local collision cases than the rest of the population of Shanghai combined. Be this as it may, sufficient time has elapsed for it to have been answered if anyone had an answer for it. My own humble contribution was intended as a eulogy on the Mixed Court and should have been entitled "Justice."

I now venture forth with a little anecdote far removed from the sea which I trust may inspire some of our sportsmen to come forward with some such spirit as animated the valiant defenders of Nybsky and the much advertised ladies at Henli.

Seated in our Public Gardens one afternoon with a friend I watched with much interest one of the frequent "Harbour Races" held by the Shanghai Yacht Club. There are few sights more inspiring, but, being both of a more commercial training nautically, our interest was frequently distracted by the constant stream of traffic which proceeded up and down the river, with apparently little respect for the high principles involved in the race.

The master of the Ningpo boat had certainly been in Shanghai all day and might easily have learned of the race yet he left his pontoon promptly at 5 p.m. True he avoided the yachts by putting his engines astern on the Garden Bend but he might well have postponed his sailing until the following morning.

Scarcely had he passed the Hongkew Wharf when we noticed a French cruiser leaving her buoys on the first of the flood tide and instinctively looked to the Customs Flagstaff to see if the channel had been cleared for this majestic flight, as we had previously heard an unfounded rumour to the effect that her Commander had wagered the cocktails with the Commander of one of the American destroyers that he could beat the latter's record from the Customs House to the Standard Oil Wharf. But no: there was a ball and pennant signifying that a vessel was about to swing in the Garden Bend and looking down the reach we saw one of the big President boats coming up on the flood tide. Not to be outdone by Lawrence's "Don't give up the ship" the gallant Commander of the cruiser shouted to his lieutenant: "Let her swing where she may or swing not at all, I'll sign for no cocktails on this bet," and forged ahead, answering the President boat's two blasts with one. We will give him the benefit of the doubt and assume that he had previously assured himself from the Rules of the Road that each vessel shall keep to that side of the channel which lies on her own starboard hand. Instead of proceeding up the Soochow Greek and swinging on the Garden Bridge the President boat disregarded the signal and came around on starboard helm while his port anchor could still reach the bottom. Having no channel left on his own starboard hand and no intention of signing for the cocktails, he headed for the open space between the President's stern and the N.Y.K. mail wharf.

Now due to a long standing defect of naval construction a ships length is much greater than her beam, consequently when the cruiser arrived at his hole it was much smaller than when he started for it; in fact it might not have been there at all except for reasons I will proceed to elucidate. The length of a President boat is 535ft. The distance from the place where her bow touches the mud on the Pootung Point to the outermost of the lighters which lie ten abreast off the N.Y.K. Mail Wharf is sometimes 550ft., sometimes a little more or less. Avessel swinging on her anchor in such a position s acted upon by a number of forces which may be worked out with about the same mathematical precision as the course of a billiard ball after touching six or eight cushions. As in the case of the professional billiard player, the pilot is guided rather by his experience of the ultimate effect of such of these forces as are under his control than by any mathematical analysis.

To depart further from my story and add to its complications, it so happened that two cargo boats shoved off from Hunts Wharf shortly before, bound for Soochow Creek. One of Shanghai's most prominent sportsmen in the shape of a brother laodah sensed the possibilities and shouted: "I'll bet you 10 coppers you can't get by the stern of that ship before she swings around." Equally blest with good sportsmanship but short of cash, the two laodahs decided to split the bet and taking five coppers each, the race was on. As they approached the converging opening they saw the cruiser coming on and seeking the lesser of the two evils hauled for the stern of the President boat. At this point comes into the story the pilot of the latter. No sportsman this. Little recked he of the yacht race, of who signed for the cocktails, or who got the 10 coppers. Something roared across the waters, through the trees in the Gardens and penetrated the offices of the Bund which you would not publish. Oblivious to the sportsmen in the cargo boats we distinctly saw the burly brute slam down the telegraphs for full speed ahead on both of her powerful engines. Responding promptly the vessel shot ahead, her bow took the mud and her stern swung clear of the cruiser by three feet. But the gallant cargo boats were no more on earth's parade to meet—the brave and fallen few were martyrs to Shanghai Sports.

Now appears on the scene the pride of the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co. Making for the bow of the President boat he suddenly perceives that he is approaching the line of racing yachts and with a vision of four months in gaol he reverses his engines and retires to the vicinity of the Time Ball leaving the President boat to her own devices. However, they prove sufficient, she is around and heading for the wharf.

Back to the race: No. 26 is coming down before the wind with a good lead. But again our attention is distracted. A big Blue Funnel boat is coming up the river meeting head on a graceful pleasure yacht, a lady at the helm of the latter with an amateur navigator, erstwhile taipan, by her side. Guided by an instinct of self-preservation the lady luffed, the amiable pilot of the Blue Funnel, good looking and unmarried, smiles blandly and ports. They would have cleared but the taipan saw the smile and dug up his handy reference. "My dear lady," he remonstrates, "it distinctly states here that a sailing vessel has the right of way over a steamer and you should keep your course and speed. Come back." Back she came and the amiable pilot stopped smiling but he couldn't stop his ship from swinging and went full astern. Now when the engines of a single screw ship are put full astern she is virtually turned over to the genius who designed her and from that time on has no more respect for those on the bridge than she has for the cook. As the width of the channel exceeded the length of the ship she turned around and all was well.

Inspired by all these exhibitions of sport it was but natural that we should revert to a long unsettled dispute. My friend has one failing: he is under the impression that his high-powered sports car is faster than my own and the inevitable result was that I accepted a challenge for a race. Now as we are both busy men and have not the time to go out to the great open spaces we decided on something after the order of a "Harbour Race." We were to start at noon an Saturday from the Astor House, thence along the Bund, up Avenue Edward VII, across Thibet Road, down the Maloo to Szechuen Road and along this thoroughfare to the Rifle Range. Allowances were agreed upon for retardation of speed through coming into contact with lighter traffic and the final details being settled we proceeded the next morning to the Traffic Office to arrange for Mr. Springfield to act as starter and various traffic officers to act as timekeepers, etc.

In view of the precedent established by the Shanghai Yacht Club you can well imagine our consternation when we were informed that not only would we be given no assistance but that the race would not be allowed. I earnestly appeal to all good sportsmen to come forward and assist me in protesting against this outrageous discrimination against a sport which I am sure would attract far more attention in Shanghai than any yacht race.

THE SEVEN WONDERS

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I am curious to know what constitute the renowned "Seven Wonders of the World," of which one hears very often. Perhaps one of your correspondents will kindly supply the required information.

I am, etc.,
"Full of Wonder."

Nanking, July 4, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—If your correspondent "Full of Wonder" will turn to page 394 para. 162 on this year's edition of Rule Britannia the following will be found to constitute the Seven Wonders:—

(1) The June Settlement
(2) The Small Investors
(3) The Peking Government
(4) The Elusive Ten Cent Piece
(5) The "North-China Daily News"
(6) The Tea Pot Dome Oil Scandal
(7) Mr. Cubby Dent's Hat.

Sir,—With regard to your correspondent's question on the "Seven Wonders of the World" Whitaker's Almanack gives the following:—

"The Pyramids"
"The Hanging Gardens of Babylon"
"The Tomb of Mausolus"
"The Temple of Diana at Ephesus"
"The Colossus of Rhodes"
"The Statue of Jupiter by Phidias"
"The Pharos (lighthouse) of Alexandria."

I am, etc.
"Interested."

Shanghai, July 7, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In answer to your correspondent's inquiry as to the "Seven Wonders of the World" the following paragraph copied from the preface of a book compiled by a local Chinese firm may be of interest.

"Creative genius has from time immemorial been esteemed and honoured; history teaches us that the characteristics of a Nation are shown in their Architecture and it was said the seven wonders of the world created by men's hands were:—

The Tower of Babel,
Pyramids of Egypt,
The Statue of Jupiter at Olympia,
The Tomb of Mausolus,
The Temple of Diana at Ephesus,
The Colossus at Rhodes; all symbolic of the people who designed and built them."

Before the above mentioned was published in April last, exhaustive inquiries were made and various learned men consulted, therefore I believe the information is correct and the list set out by "Interested" is, like the parson's egg, only good in parts.

THE DAZZLING BEAUTY OF CAPT. D'OISY'S UNIFORM

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In your to-day's issue, you express the fear that the sartorial appearance of the British heroes could not approach "the dazzling beauty of Doisy's uniform."

It may interest those who were not at Kiangwan, to know that Doisy, for his arrival was clad as follows:—

A khaki coat
A pair of khaki shorts
A khaki shirt
A khaki topee

—all bought at Calcutta and all, of course, pretty dirty, greasy and passably worn out. Moreover, Doisy had a spare outfit, contained in a very small kit bag, consisting of:—

A military cap brought from Paris,
Two blue shirts
A pair of white shoes
A white suit transformed in uniform by the addition of two gold stripes on each sleeve.

That is all, and believe me, was badly in need of a good washing as the kit bag fell in the water at Kiangwan.

For the information of people, interested in the high cost of present living, wishing to maintain their sartorial appearance at little expense, I can give the tip I got from Doisy that an Annamite tailor of Hanoi will make for them "on order," the same suit of "dazzling beauty" Doisy wore during his stay at Shanghai, at the cost of 10 dollars.

But of course, this suit was sent to the washing every night during Doisy's sleep.

I am, etc.,
Dr. E. L. Tartois.

P.S.—Please note that Doisy's name is Doisy and not d'Oisy as it is written even in the French papers, and excuse my bad English.

THE RELIEF OF RUSSIAN REFUGEES

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The Russian Orthodox Confraternity was formed in February, 1923, in order to provide assistance, where needed for those Russian refugees, who have arrived at this port. Since its formation it has done much to alleviate the position of many unfortunate individuals.

An out-patient Hospital has been established, where free attendance and medicine is provided, and at the present time about 60 patients are attended it daily.

A free boarding-school has been established for boys and girls, and about 30 in all are receiving an education in this way.

Evening classes were opened for adults between 15 and 45 years of age, where the following subjects are taught: Russian, Literature, English, French, Mathematics, Anatomy, Chemistry, etc. At present there are about 170 people attending these classes.

A special course has been available since March for tuition in practical motor-driving.

The means of support for the above were provided by subscriptions kindly donated by the foreign community in Shanghai; funds are well nigh exhausted, as the attached statement of income and expenditure will show, and we unwillingly find it necessary to appeal once more to the generosity of the community, and we hope you will be able to see you way to lend your support to this worthy cause.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE AND KUEILIN

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I should like to draw your attention to the following reply made in the House of Commons on June 2 by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. (The italics are mine).

Mr. MacDonald replying to Mr. Lumley (Hull, E., U.) said:—No information is at present available as to the safety of the British subjects now at Kueilin, who are understood to be travellers and not permanent residents. It is believed that Kueilin is being besieged by Chinese forces who, presumably, belong to one of the opposing armies of the Peking and Canton Governments.

Seeing that the C.M.S. has been working in Kueilin for at least 15 years, the Foreign Office intelligence system seems decidedly at fault. Perhaps, however, they got their information from the Chinese Minister in London, which would account for the stupidity of Mr. MacDonald's reply. They would naturally ignore Sir James Jamieson, who was in London at the time, although he has had to do with Kuangsi affairs for a good many years past and could have framed a reply which had some resemblance to the facts.

NURSE'S NAME

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The river steamer passenger-list in to-day's "North-China Daily News" states that Mrs. X's nurse has arrived. I omit the real name of Mrs. X. Is it not rather hard lines that a woman presumably British) so entirely loses her social identity as to become on a miserable passenger-list only Mrs. Somebody's nurse? It is distinctly British and just as distinctly un-British. It is the expresion of the vulgarity of a self-styled local aristocracy and it is miles away from true British democracy. Let her be nobody in London,she will soon automatically be absorbed by her own set there; but allow her here, where she is thousands of miles from her own country, to keep the human name which distinguishes her from her daily associates Mesdames amah Ah Foo and amah Ah Toy. Did, after all the war teach us nothing? And is the Shanghai ex-counterjumper aristocracy so anxious to imitate old-style British exclusiveness that it must make the class distinctions sharper than they are already, even against the background of China's even-coloured masses? After all, the white nurse out here is an absurdity and a sacrifice to snobbishness. And heaven only knows how much unhealable humility and tragedy has been caused through nurses abrupt awakening to the fact that her pay while in figures three times that in England does not go any further and that she has to associate with the Chinese coolie-class. Let her at least keep her name.

YEAST SAID

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—What is this yeast that is advertised so much in your valuable paper? A friend told me that it made fine bread and would raise anything.

How does it raise bread, cakes, etc.? And will it raise the children in time to get breakfast and go to school and the old man to go to his office.

Who are the manufacturers, can it be bought and in what way is it used to get satisfactory results.

Is it a real article or is it a joke? If I could make bread with it, I would be glad to have it.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Referring to the letter from "Harassed Housewife" regarding the use of fresh yeast, I was ordered by my doctor to give it as a tonic food to my son who was suffering with stomach trouble. It has done him so much good that the whole family is now using yeast, and we have also tried it for baking purposes.

The yeast makes excellent bread and cake and has proved itself a "real article" indeed, and I think "Harassed Housewife" will be satisfied with the result if she tries it. She can obtain it as I do from the company, the Asiatic Yeast Works, 16 Canton Road, who deliver twice weekly to me.

The yeast contains a large percentage of vitamines, which are so very necessary to keep the body healthy.

The Nippon and Shochiku Cinema companies have announced their decision to abandon the boycott on American films, says the "Japan Advertiser," after representatives of the companies had held a conference with the police at the request of the latter. The police are said to have urged abandonment of the boycott on the ground that it would only aggravate a situation already fraught with unpleasant possibilities. But concurrence in the advice of the police does not necessarily mean that the two companies have permanently given up the idea of barring foreign films. It is reported that an attempt is to be made to organize moving-picture theatre owners and get all to promise that they will show only firms which have been produced in Japan. Such a move, it is argued, would check the importation of foreign pictures and at the same time given additional impetus to the producing industry in Japan.

LAW REPORTS

NORMAN W. BOWLER AGAIN IN COURT

arged with Fraudulently Obtaining Motor-car and Other Goods

orman W. Bowler last Friday de another appearance in H.M. ce Court, this time being brought re Mr. G. W. King upon five rges of having obtained goods false pretences and with intent defraud. These charges were: June 11, obtaining a pair of s valued at $8.50, from Messrs. res, Bingham; June 18, obtaina silver cigarette case, valued 60, from Messrs. J. Ulmann & Nanking Road; June 28, obing from the Shanghai Horse ar a Studebaker car valued at ,800; June 28, obtaining from srs. A. S. Watson & Co. a ca-a, case and films worth $89.60; 1, obtaining from the Young o Co. a camera, case and worth $58.80.

reply to a question by the istrate as to what had happento the motor-car, Mr. Maitland, he prosecution, said the police d it outside Eddie's Café and ned it to the Horse Bazaar.

he Magistrate—I only ask beause this is the only charge in ch there is any great deal of ey at stake. The others are paratively small amounts. As the case at present, I propose y the accused summarily.

r. Maitland, in opening the case the prosecution, said the charges e all similar in effect. In two s, Bowler gave his address as g that of a respectable newser, the "Far Eastern Review," on the strength of that he given credit. In the other he gave different addresses, in one signed himself "W. en," of 16 Jinkee Road—an adss he had never inhabited. He never had anything to do with "Far Eastern Review."

Arrested at Cafe.

t.-Sub.-Inspector Hunter inmed the court that at 1 o'clock Thursday he arrested accused Eddie's Café, Broadway. As ess had not then the warrant, sked accused to accompany him Central Police Station, which er did. They drove round in tudebaker car which witness saw ding outside the café when he ved. Accused made no reply he charge, which was that of ng obtained a camera from rs. Watsons by false pretences. r. W. C. Rea, manager of the Eastern Review" and publishf the "Asiatic Motor," 16 Jinoad, stated that accused callpon him some time in May asked for a job on the "Far ern Review," but was told there no position then available. ess suggested that he might t and get advertisements and cribers for the "Asiatic Motor," work strictly on a commission and accused agreed. He had ng at all to do with the "Far ern Review."

r. Maitland produced a receipt 2, given to a Chinese and signed accused, but witness said he never received any "Asiatic r" subscription from accused. ess added that accused had no ority to use the "Far Eastern ew" office as his address.

answer to the Magistrate, witness said there was no connexion between the "Asiatic Motor" the "Far Eastern Review."

cused—They are both situated e same office. If a person emed by one brought in an adsement for the other, would accept it?

itness—I should not turn it .

cused asked for an adjournd until the afternoon, to enable to obtain legal assistance, and plication was granted.

hen the proceedings were re-d in the afternoon, Bowler nced that he had not been to obtain a lawyer, but, added think it possible we might ed with the case."

e Worship agreed.

arage Manager's Evidence.

e case of the Studebaker car first dealt with, and Mr. D. Frazer, manager of the Shang-Horse Bazaar Motor Department, gave evidence. He said that the proposed purchase of the car by accused was first dealt with by their salesman, and on June 28 he saw accused. An agreement was made whereby accused was to pay Tls. 200 down and the balance of Tls. 1,600 on the 2nd instant. Witness, the salesman, and accused then signed the agreement. Accused, whose name witness understood was "Bowen" called on the Saturday and asked if he might be allowed to take the car without paying the deposit, saying that he was putting through a deal and would pay in full on the following Wednesday. He said it was some big Chinese business, but did not go into detail. Witness took it for granted that the money would be forthcoming on the Wednesday.

Said Defendant was a Broker.

The Magistrate—Why did you take it for granted?

Witness—Well, I took his word. The salesman told me he was a broker, and I let him have the car. I never saw him again until this morning. The car was returned by the police.

Accused—I did not even suggest I should take the car. Don't you remember saying that the deposit did not make much difference?

Witness—It did not make much difference if you were going to pay on the Wednesday.

G. Harnovick, formerly employed as a salesman by the Horse Bazaar Co., described how, upon accused calling about a friend's car which was in the garage, they fell into conversation about other cars and the purchase of a Studebaker by accused was discussed. At Bowler's request, witness took him for a run round in the car, and three days later he called again, went out in the car, and then said he would buy it. The agreement, as stated by the last witness, was signed and, upon witness pointing out that accused's signature was not quite clear and asking how he spelled his name, accused answered "Bowen." He attached this signature, in block letters, to the application for a licence.

Bowler's Big Business Deal.

In answer to the Magistrate, witness said he made no inquiries as to what accused's business was, because it was a "cash transaction." On the Saturday he called at the garage, mentioned that he was putting through some big Chinese transaction—something to do with ships—and added that it was then too late to go to the bank for the Tls. 200 deposit. Witness referred the matter to Mr. Frazer, who said: "Let him have the car. It will be quite all right." The car was accordingly handed over to accused, who gave his address as 16 Jinkee Road.

Mr. Maitland—Had you known he was not a broker and that he was living in the Y.M.C.A., would have let him have the car?

Witness—I don't know. He said he was going to pay cash. He would not have had it had I known he was Norman W. Bowler.

With regard to the camera purchased from Messrs. Watsons, Mr. J. S. Chisholm gave evidence as to having served the accused. He seemed a very capable and well spoken young gentleman, said witness. "I interested him in a much more expensive camera than the one he asked for and said that, if money was no object, it was the better instrument. He replied that money was an object and that he had better take the cheaper instrument which he did." He said he would send a cheque if we would send the chit to the "Far Eastern Review" office.

"Very Intellectual Young Man."

Why did you let him take it away?—Because of his appearance and his manner of speaking. He seemed a very intellectual young man, and his honesty seemed to be vouched for by his taking the cheaper camera instead of the expensive one. He signed "W. Bowles," and gave the name of a respectable firm, the "Far Eastern Review." Had I known he was Norman W. Bowler he would certainly not have had the camera. Witness added that the camera had not been paid for, as promised, and that he communicated with the police upon finding that accused was not in the employ of the "Far Eastern Review."

A Chinese pawnbroker, doing business in Woosung Road, gave evidence as to this camera having been pawned by the accused, who had been to his place on several previous occasions.

Pawned Cigarette Case for $7.

The charge preferred by Messrs Ulmann's was next taken, complainant's assistant saying that he allowed accused to have the silver cigarette case on credit upon his saying he was employed in the office of the "Far Eastern Review." Other evidence was given that accused pawned the cigarette case for $7, at another pawnshop in Woosung Road.

In the case of the camera obtained from the Young Photo Co., an assistant stated that he allowed accused to have the camera on credit because he signed in the usual way foreigners did, and it was not a rule for foreigners to behave so badly as accused had done. Also, accused drove up in a motor-car, and witness thought he was trustworthy and would not cheat for such a small amount.

In this case, a pawnbroker gave evidence that the camera was pawned for $18.

The hearing was adjourned until Monday morning.

Silver Cigarette Case at Boyes, Bassett's

The proceedings against Norman W. Bowler, charged with having obtained various articles from Shanghai tradesmen by means of false pretences and with intent to defraud, were continued on Monday.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, appearing for the prosecution, now intimated that a further charge had been brought against the accused: that on June 14 he unlawfully obtained by false pretences, from Messrs. Boyes, Bassett, a silver cigarette case valued at $45.

The Magistrate commented upon the bringing of this charge when practically all the evidence in the other cases had been heard, saying that it seemed to be trying the case piecemeal.

Mr. Maitland—If you prefer it, I will withdraw that charge.

The Magistrate—I don't ask the police to withdraw, but I say that from the point of view of the defendant and of the Court it makes a lot of difference if the defendant knows what he has to meet and the Court knows what it has to try.

Mr. Maitland—The police only found out about this charge on Saturday.

A Present for England.

Mr. G. M. Boyes, proprietor of Boyes, Bassett & Co., was then called and said that on the afternoon of June 14 accused went to his shop and was attended by the Japanese salesman. He said he wanted a silver cigarette case, and he selected one at $45. He then told the Japanese that he was sending the case to England and therefore wanted it carefully packed for the post. His instructions having been followed, he then asked if he could sign a chit, and the salesman consulted witness who questioned accused. He said he was employed by the "Far Eastern Review," and that he would pay on the 21st of the month. Knowing the "Far Eastern Review" was a reputable firm, witness allowed him to have the goods, but first made him sign a paper. Witness took his signature to be "Bowles." He took the cigarette case away with him, and witness had never seen it since, nor had payment been made. Before leaving, accused declared how very pleased he was to see such a beautiful display of cigarette cases, but witness told him it was nothing unusual. Witness would certainly not have let him have the case had he not said he was employed by the "Far Eastern Review."

Mr. R. W. Squires, of Squires, Bingham & Co., gave evidence as to accused purchasing a pair of shoes at $8.50, and signing as coming from the "Far Eastern Review," which witness accepted as a sufficient guarantee. A shroff was sent to this office, but no money was obtained.

Seizures at the Y.M.C.A.

Det.-Sgt. Tinkler, who made inquiries about accused after Messrs. Watson & Co. had lodged a complaint at Central Police Station, said he found that Bowler had been occupying a room at the Navy Y.M.C.A. He had been seen driving about the town in the motor car obtained from the Horse Bazaar, and the police were given instructions that this car was to be stopped. This led to the arrest of accused outside Eddie's Cafe and the seizure of the car. On the morning of the 3rd instant witness went to Bowler's room at the Y.M.C.A. and with the consent of the manager, removed certain property, and also nine pawntickets, issued by three pawnshops in Woosung Road, some of the property being in this way recovered. This included a hat, some clothes, two leather suit cases, two pipes, and another camera.

The Magistrate—There is no charge referring to those things. They may be his own property.

Witness went on to say that he had some conversation with the accused that morning when reading over to him the charge in the Boyes, Bassett case.

The Magistrate—Did you caution him.

Witness—No, he had already been cautioned in the other instances.

The Magistrate—Technically, he should have been cautioned to make the evidence admissible. But I will hear what the conversation was before giving a ruling.

Witness—He said he could recover the cigarette case through his friend Mr. Boyd, but that it would take him three days. I then asked him how he would get it supposing he were convicted. . . .

The Magistrate—I do not think we want to hear that.

Witness went on to say that accused had lived at the Y.M.C.A. for 10 days. He had never lived at 16 Jinkee Road, and he had never been a broker, unless one took a very broad definition of the word "broker." Bowler had also stayed at the Union Jack Club, at the Palace Hotel, where he stayed a night without paying his lodging, at the Kalee Hotel, where he stayed another night, one night at the Continental Hotel and one night at the Savoy Hotel. He had formerly stayed at the Hanbury Institute, also at the Wuchow Hotel and the Far Eastern Hotel.

Too Many Shroffs.

Mr. T. C. Leach, a partner in the Taylor Garage, said that he employed accused immediately after the previous case against him. He remained some six or seven weeks, leaving about the middle of May. On account of so many shroffs coming round witness told him he would have to get out. The job he did was only about two hours' work a day, and he was paid $100 a month for it.

Questioned by accused as to there being some other reason for his discharge, witness observed: You were discharged because there were too many shroffs calling. They came round about an abnormal number of boots which no sane man could have worn.

Accused—I was discharged because you wanted a cheaper man.

Witness—You were discharged because we were afraid of you, that is all.

This concluded the case for the prosecution, and the Magistrate pointed out to accused that he would have to meet two cases of obtaining credit by fraud and four of obtaining goods by false pretences.

On the application of accused, the hearing was adjourned until 10.30 this morning.

Accused Sent to Prison For Three Months

Sentence of three months' imprisonment was on Tuesday passed by Mr. G. W. King on Norman W. Bowler, at the conclusion of his trial in the British Police Court.

When the hearing was resumed, accused gave evidence at length in his defence, reading from a prepared statement of his case. He began by saying that, as might be imagined, the last case against him left a certain stigma upon his character which made it difficult for him to find employment. He went on to speak of his employment at the Taylor Garage, saying he was discharged because the services of a qualified accountant were required, and then gave details of his interview with Mr. Carter Rea at the offices of the "Far Eastern Review." It was agreed between them that he should endeavour to obtained advertisements and subscribers for the "Asiatic Motor." It was also understood that if possible he would obtain advertisements for the "Far Eastern Review," but he was not specifically engaged for the latter journal. As the "Asiatic Motor" and the "Far Eastern Review" were closely related, in that they were both published from the same offices, that of The Far Eastern Review Publishing Co., he considered himself justified in using the "Far Eastern Review" as an address. Bowler drew an analogy between his position and that of a person working for the British Cigarette Co., who would most certainly sign his address as the B.-A.T., those offices being in the same building. He denied, therefore, using a false pretence in giving the address of the "Far Eastern Review," which might only be regarded as separate and distinct from the "Asiatic Motor" in a legal sense, as, say, in connexion with bankruptcy proceedings.

Ease of Obtaining Credit.

Dealing with cases brought against him by Messrs. Squires Bingham, Boyes Bassett, Ullmann & Co. and Watson & Co., he said that both Mr. Squires and Mr. Boyes knew him and had done business with him before. In both instances he signed the chit even before they knew who he was working for, and without asking any questions. Mr. Boyes agreed that he might have credit. As to Messrs. Watson and Messrs. Ullmann, he did not tell them that he was actually a member of the staff of the "Far Eastern Review," but he claimed he was justified in giving that address because it was the parent paper of the Far Eastern Review Publishing Company. It was exceedingly easy, accused continued, to obtain credit in Shanghai. It might be a pity, but the fact remained that any Tom, Dick or Harry could obtain credit for the asking. This being the general rule from Suez to Yokohama, he did not see how he could be convicted for having utilized it. He denied having used any false pretence in the case of the Young Photo Company. His driving up in a motor-car was not done to impress the manager of the shop; in fact, he parked the car some 200 yards away from the premises. In this case, as in the others, he gave his address as 16 Jinkee Road, where he certainly could be found, and it was not likely he would have given this address had he wished to act fraudulently.

The Motor-car.

With regard to the motor-car, Bowler went on to say that he first visited the Horse Bazaar to see a car belonging to a friend, and got into conversation with the salesman about other cars. At that time he (accused) had two or three people interested in purchasing cars; in fact, two weeks previously he made arrangements with another garage in Shanghai for the sale of a roadster with a Shanghai sports body very similar to the car he was accused of having obtained with intent to defraud. Therefore he naturally took an interest in the Studebaker which Mr. Harnovick showed to him, especially as the price was Tls. 1,900 and his own client has agreed to pay Tls. 2,200. He told Mr. Harnovick he might be able to sell one or two cars for him, and signed an agreement to purchase the Studebaker. His client agreed to have the car if it was in good condition, but unfortunately he later decided not to have it. The car had then been handed over to accused, the Horse Bazaar having agreed to dispense with deposit money. This left him with the car on his own hands and with no facilities to pay for it, and he began to look round for another purchaser. Had he done so, it would have been impossible for him to have kept the money himself. When one sold a car, in Shanghai and anywhere else in the world, one had to give a bill of sale, which had to be transferred every time a car changed hands. Therefore it would have been absolutely necessary for him to have paid the Horse Bazaar before he could have handed the car over to a client.

Importance of an Address.

Accused protested that, if he had meant to act fraudulently, he could have given a wrong address, since by giving the name of some reputable firm, such as Jardine Mathesons, Butterfield & Swire, or the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank, it would have been easy to obtain credit. Instead of this, he gave his proper address, even telling the Horse Bazaar that he lived at the Y.M.C.A. As for the shroffs finding him, they ought all to be detectives, for they very easily scented a man out. It had been complained that he described himself as a broker, but there was nothing false about this. He did not say he was an exchange broker, a tea broker, or any other kind of broker, and his interpretation of the word was, an agent, or middleman, or one who bought and sold for others. In conclusion accused expressed regret for any inconvenience he had caused, and said he was very willing as far as was possible to put things right with the people from whom he had obtained these things.

Under Cross-examination.

Accused was cross-examined at length by Mr. Maitland, who conducted the prosecution. He said that he had earned some small commission in connexion with a property sale, but did not know exactly where the property was.

You bought two cigarette cases and two cameras without there being the faintest chance of your being able to pay for them?—I would not say "without the faintest chance." Supposing I had sold this car!

Who was going to buy it?—That I am not willing to state. But I had a client who proposed to buy a Cadillac.

Why did you pawn the camera immediately you got it from Watsons?—Because I wanted some money.

Yes, you got the camera with the idea of selling it cheap and living on the proceeds?—It might be that I got the camera with the idea of selling it cheap and living perhaps, but it does not follow that I never intended to pay for it.

And you did the same with the other cigarette cases and the cameras, for the same reason?—That might be true.

What you were doing, in fact, was to go round signing chits in the name of a respectable firm and pawning the proceeds to live on?—True. But that does not mean I had no intention of paying for the things.

The Assumed Name.

The Magistrate—You will have to show me that you had a reasonable chance of paying.

Accused—I have just said that there was the prospect of my being able to sell two motor-cars, which is sufficient proof that I was endeavouring to do some kind of work.

Mr. Maitland—Even if you had sold three cars, the commission due would have been a drop in the ocean compared with what you owe. What have you paid off the Arts & Crafts accounts?—May be that is true, but the money would have been of some assistance.

Why did you sign your name as "Bowen?"—I signed my own name as a matter of fact.

Why did you print the name Bowen?—The simple reason was that I did not wish Mr. Harnovick to know that I was Bowler.

Why?—Because it might have influenced his doing any further business.

So you wanted to deceive him?—Well, I was not exactly deceiving him, but it might have influenced him.

What is it but deceit if you make him think you are somebody else?—Well, in a way it is.

Is it anything else but deliberate deceit?—If you think it is deceit, all right.

A Deliberate Lie.

Why did you say you were sending the cigarette cases abroad, when you pawned both of them the same day? You told a deliberate lie?—After a good deal of hesitation, accused said he did not think this had any bearing on the case.

Asked by the Magistrate if he could show he had any hope of being able to pay for the things, accused said he had been negotiating with Chinese to start a garage and had actually secured two agencies, but, he added, "it was difficult to raise money from Chinese unless they know you yourself have some money."

The Magistrate—Why didn't you return the car to the Horse Bazaar when your client let you down?—I agree that I should have done that.

But why did'nt you do it?—I thought it probable I could sell the car to somebody else.

Accused asked for an adjournment in order that he might call a witness who would prove that he had some prospect of being able to sell the car, and the Court adjourned until the afternoon.

When the hearing was resumed, accused said that his witness, Mr. Tsu, of the Vacuum Oil Co., could not attend until the following morning. He would be able to prove that accused had a deal in prospect which would bring him in about Tls. 500 commission.

No Ground for Leniency.

The Magistrate—But supposing you had got that Tls. 500, does that justify you in getting property from other people and pawning it? That is the worst feature of the case, and I am afraid I am against you on all points. You are right in saying that credit is easily obtained, but there are limits. The last case should have been a warning to you that extravagance is not to be encouraged. I regret that there is no ground for leniency in this case, and although I intensely dislike sending people to prison, I have no alternative but to sentence you to three months' imprisonment.

The Magistrate added that, the Court having no jurisdiction over Chinese, he could make no order as to the return of the property.

Accused—If the pawntickets are left in court, I will make an endeavour to redeem the articles and return them to their original owners.

THE NEW TRAFFIC REGULATION

The Owner's Responsibility in Furnishing Police Information

There was an argument on the new traffic regulation when on Saturday C. P. Rakusen appeared in H. M. Police Court before Mr. G. W. King, summoned that, on or about June 24, he failed to supply the police with information of an offence said to have been committed on the 19th.

Chief Inspector Kinipple, appearing for the police, first called evidence to show that on the night of the 19th ultimo, a Sikh police constable on point duty at the Garden Bridge, observed that car No. 4574, driven by a foreigner, had neither front nor rear lights. The Inspector went on to say that, on the following day, a letter was sent to defendant (the licensee of car No. 4574) requesting him to state who was driving the car at the time of the alleged offence, but no reply was received. A reminder was sent four days later, and three days after this a letter was received from Rakusen and Sons asking for particulars of the alleged breach. As this appeared to be nothing but further procrastination on defendant's part, a summons was issued.

Defendant said he thought he was entitled to such particulars.

The Magistrate—The letter states "breach of traffic regulation No. 39," which would seem to give you all the necessary information.

Defendant—I overlooked that. I thought it was the new regulation which provides that one must give information.

The Magistrate—That is not the fault of the police. You cannot expect them to set the whole regulation out in full.

Defendant put forward the argument that, even if he had given the information asked for, and had admitted that he was the driver of the car, he could not be convicted because it was against English law to convict a man on his own evidence.

The Magistrate—That depends upon circumstances. A prisoner is cautioned that what he says may be taken down and used as evidence against him. You say this regulation is unfair because it makes it possible for a man to give evidence on which he can be convicted?

Defendant—Yes, and I believe it is ultra vires.

The Magistrate—Well, the by-law has properly been passed and this court cannot query it. One way of getting at it would be to get the ratepayers to say the by-law is an unfair one. I myself do not think it puts an unfair advantage into the hands of the authorities.

FACTORY CONDITIONS IN SHANGHAI

Child Labour and the Lack of Supervision or Inspection by Any Authority

The very unsatisfactory conditions under which men, women and children work in factories in the Settlement formed the subject of strong comment on the part of Mr. Martin, British Assessor, in the Mixed Court on Saturday. The matter arose out of a case in which a factory foreman was tried for beating a nine-year-old girl. The story behind the case is not without interest.

The accused was sentenced to three months' imprisonment by the Court on June 12 for the offence, after convincing evidence had been produced by Superintendent Vaughan. Subsequently a meeting of the Shanghai Silk and Cocoon Guild was held, at which it was decided to attempt to obtain a re-hearing of the case. A Chinese lawyer was engaged to make the attempt and failed. Then Mr. Lewis was retained, and applied, for a re-hearing again on Saturday.

Mr. Lewis brought witnesses to prove that the actual beating was done by the child's mother to force the unwilling infant to work each morning. It was alleged the woman would follow the child to the factory each morning thrashing her all the way. Witnesses agreed that they had seen the foreman pull the little one's hair, but added that he was not responsible for the beatings.

Superintendent Vaughan told the Court the police had every reason to believe the Guild was attempting to interfere with the course of justice.

In reply to a question put by the Assessor, Superintendent Vaughan said no inspection of factories was carried out by the Municipal Council.

The Assessor refused the application for a rehearing, and said:

"The case was heard and the accused convicted after hearing the evidence of the child and the statement of the accused. He only admitted having reprimanded the child because she was not working, but we had evidence that the child was beaten by the accused, which he now states was done by her mother.

"The first witness to-day, stated that she saw the child being dragged to the factory, and I do not think such a possibility, should exist in the Settlement. We do think the factories in the Settlement should be supervised by an Inspector who could go into the factories at any time, as it impossible to know what is going on inside at the present time."

Superintendent Vaughan promised to bring the remarks of the Court before the authorities, and added for the Court's information that Dame Adelaide Anderson was in China inquiring into factory conditions at the present time, and he felt sure these remarks would do much to strengthen the hands of that lady and her supporters.

SLAVE GIRL'S CRUEL TREATMENT

Helpless Little Prisoner Compelled to Lead Immoral Life

Another of those tragic little tales of slavery with which China abounds came to light in the Mixed Court on Saturday. The central figure in the story was a girl, sold by her mother at the age of five years in order that a coffin might be purchased for her father. She charged her purchaser, a woman, with assault.

The girl's story was that she was sold at the age of five in order that her family might not be disgraced by burying her father coffinless. Her price was $50. Till she was 20 years of age her new owner trained her as a slave girl, and then sent her to a sing-song house where she was trained as a sing-song girl. She did not like the life, but was compelled to continue it and was later sent to a brothel, where she was kept a prisoner in an upstairs room. She was repeatedly beaten and produced a doctor's certificate to prove it.

The accused woman corroborated the girl's story of how she was sold to buy her father's coffin, but denied the beatings.

The case was dismissed on the ground that the evidence was inconclusive, but the girl was ordered to be sent to the Door of Hope.

AN AMERICAN BEFORE BRITISH MAGISTRATE

Accepted Summons in the King's Name "Not Quite Realizing His Position"

Shanghai, with it mixed nationalities is often the scene of curious international complications. In H. M. Police Court on Thursday an American citizen stood before a British Magistrate to answer a summons brought against him by a Spaniard—this in Shanghai, an International Settlement in the Republic of China.

There was a mistake, of course, though this time "your reporter, sir" was not to blame. R. L. Moore, the American defendant, was summoned by Mr. G. Alvarez for assaulting him by beating him with his fists and kicking him in the Parisien Hotel at 5.45 a.m. on Monday last. The summons was served on Mr. Moore, and he, in ignorance, accepted it.

The Magistrate, before commencing proceedings, asked Mr. Moore if it were true that he was an American.

Mr. Moore replied in the affirmative and went on to say that when he accepted the summons he did not quite realize the position, and it was explained to him by his lawyers two days later. They, of course, wrote to the Court at once.

The Magistrate said if that were so he had no option but to dismiss the case. Obviously an American citizen could not be a defendant in a British Court in Shanghai. Mr. Alvarez would have to take the case to the United States Court if he wished to go on with it.

INCREASING SALE OF NARCOTICS

Successful Raid by Police on Houses in Pakhoi and Yunnan Roads

There is hardly a day passes without an opium case being heard before the Mixed Court. Tuesday, however, brought to light a case of no common order, two opium dens having been discovered in which evidence showed that large quantities of narcotics had been sold. Supt. Vaughan appeared for the police, taking action against 12 persons accused, who had previously been released on bail of $100. The charge, Supt. Vaughan stated, was based on the analysis of material sent to the Health Department. Certain pills found in the previous raid, when analyzed, were shown to contain morphia, caffein, strychnine, and soluble salts of strychnine. At 186 Pakhoi Road the police seized books, a bundle of chits, and some documents. Prior to their visit an agent had been sent to purchase opium and had bought opium to the value of $6.80. On the ground floor of 186 Pakhoi Road was found a telephone book marked with the number 8271. There was no telephone in the building, but No. 8271 proved to be the number of 36 Yunnan Road. Inspector Hermitage made another raid at the latter address and the two buildings were found to be back to back. On entering six persons were found, and on a table was some sliced Indian opium. Through a door the police saw a woman who was in the act of hiding a key. This key was found to open a safe which contained opium dross and some poppy leaves. Another key was found which opened a door in the partition of the room behind which was another safe, and this when forced was found to contain Indian and Persian opium. Documents were found giving minute details of sales of opium and other narcotics on a large scale. At the top of the stairs was a partition behind which pills were made. In every room opium was found.

There was no further evidence and Supt. Vaughan said that the police would not be doing their duty to the community if they allowed such a case to pass by without asking the Court to inflict as heavy a sentence as possible on each of the accused. The evidence before the Court was conclusive, and he hoped it had convinced the Court as to how increasingly difficult it was for the police to deal with these cases. "These smugglers are not content," he said, "with having one house to carry on their illicit business, but are now, to increase the difficulty of the police, engaged in at least two houses as a subterfuge. Books and documents point to an enormous trade. In a similar case it will be recollected the principal accused received four years and others received six months."

Three of the accused persons failed to appear. Warrants are to be issued for their arrest. Their bail was forfeited and was increased to $1,000 each in view of the additional charge of selling morphia pills. Seven of the accused were fined $100 each, and the remaining two were fined $30.

The two French seamen of the M.M.S. Angers, arrested on June 1st while in possession of 19 automatic pistols and 973 rounds of ammunition, were tried by court-martial on board the French man-of-war Jules Ferry on July 2 and sentenced to three months' imprisonment each. They were also fined Frs. 16.

That heroism and foolhardiness go hand in hand was demonstrated in a case of drunken and disorderly behaviour which came before Mr. Lurton at the U. S. Commissioner's Court on Thursday. It was stated that the defendant, James Winger, of the U.S.S. Elcano, after gallantly jumping into the Huangpu at the Garden Bridge to assist in the rescue of a foreigner whose boat had overturned, had followed up the exploit by climbing up the dredger which is moored further up the Bund and threatening to jump into the river from a height of 50 feet. He was restrained from this by two of his shipmates who, however, had to call upon two policemen to assist them in dissuading him from his purpose. Nevertheless he did fall into the river from the bunding and was fished out with considerable difficulty, using abusive language towards his rescuers. As the evidence showed that he was under the influence of liquor it became the painful duty of the Commissioner to fine him G.$5, remitting the costs.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury, S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

BRITAIN PROPOSING A NEW WAY OF DEALING WITH GERMANY

If Dawes Report Is Accepted the Reparations Commission's Authority Must Yield to Some Other Instrument: Strong Objections Raised in Paris

London, July 4.

Political circles in London are greatly surprised at the French attitude in regard to the conversations at Chequers. It is maintained that the British Government has done nothing contrary to any understanding with the French Government in causing an account of the happenings at Chequers to be communicated to the other Allies. It is emphasized that there is no intention whatever of interfering with the work of the Reparations Commission, but that the Commission cannot deal with the matters outside the Treaty provided in the Dawes report. Britain was submitting no hard and fast decision or proposal, but merely suggesting her own view and repeating the expressions used at Chequers, which were not binding without consultation with the Allies.

Later.

The Premier, M. Herriot, to-day sent a Note to London saying that the French Government did not consider themselves bound by the suggestions contained in the British invitation to the London Conference.

The Anglo-French misunderstanding over the terms of the invitation to the July Conference appears to centre round the French contention that the British Foreign Office inserted in the invitation suggestions amounting to suppression of the authority of the Reparations Commission. The authoritative statement, issued in London and already cabled, was intended to refute this contention.

Meanwhile Reuter's correspondent at Paris says that the report of the French Ambassador, who interviewed Sir Eyre Crowe to-day with regard to the misunderstanding, is anxiously awaited at the Quai d'Orsay, which hopes for a satisfactory explanation from Britain. It is realized, however, that the difficulty of reaching an agreement at the London Conference may be considerably increased. The situation is most embarrassing for M. Herriot in view of the debate on foreign policy in the Senate on July 8, when he will be asked to explain the apparent contradiction between the "complete agreement" at the Chequers and the disagreement with regard to the right of the Reparations Commission to decide with regard to German defaults in the execution of the Dawes plan.—Reuter.

Paris Papers' Protest.

Paris, July 4.

The newspapers, in a chorus of protest such as has not been heard for many months, declare that Mr. MacDonald has virtually renounced the Treaty of Versailles.

The "Journal des Débats" advocates French abstention from the Conference until they are assured that no proposal infringing the treaty will be discussed.

July 5.

The Left organs assert that the Opposition has deliberately exploited and magnified the incident with regard to the invitations to the London Conference with a view to torpedoing the Conference and M. Herriot.

French Leaders Preparing Their Own Agenda

Later.

The air has somewhat cleared as the result of the Marquess of Crewe's explanations, but, according to an official statement, divergencies between Britain and France still persist with regard to the scope of the London Conference.

M. Herriot, M. Barthou, the Chairman of the Reparations Commission, and General Nollet, the Minister of War, assembled at the Quai d'Orsay to-day and drafted a tentative agenda for the London Conference, which will be circulated to the participants.—Reuter.

German Demand for Military Evacuation of Ruhr.

Berlin, July 5.

Commenting on a Paris newspaper report that the German Foreign Minister had demanded prior or at least simultaneous evacuation of the Ruhr as compensation for obligations exceeding the Treaty of Versailles which it is proposed that Germany should undertake, "Die Zeit," Herr Stresemann's organ, says that this demand has undoubtedly been made and emphatically declares that without indispensable certainty with regard to the military evacuation of the Ruhr no final result can be attained at the London Conference.—Reuter.

Strong Opposition to M. Herriot

Paris, July 6.

The Opposition have launched a big anti-Herriot offensive. The extremists are demanding the immediate overthrow of the Government. The more moderate members of the Opposition are trying to prevent M. Herriot from going to London until he has reassured the public that French interests will not be sacrificed.

M. Herriot, in the course of a speech at Troyes, declared that the experts' report offered France the best chance of securing peace and payment. He deplored the efforts of the Opposition to distort and belittle the character of the Chequers meeting. He stated that the Government's method was to pursue what unites and not what divides.—Reuter.

Further Meeting of British and French Premiers

London, July 7.

In the House of Commons to-day, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, announced that the Government had decided against construction of the Channel tunnel.

The Prime Minister also announced his intention to visit Paris tomorrow on the proposal of the French Premier, M. Herriot, and to return on Wednesday.

Mr. MacDonald declared that there was absolutely no foundation whatever for the storm which had arisen regarding the invitations to the Conference in London on July 16. He pointed out that the communications made to Belgium, Italy, Japan and the United States were merely a repetition of the British suggestions concerning the task of the forthcoming Conference, which he had already submitted and fully discussed with the Belgian Minister and M. Herriot at Chequers. These suggestions had at the same time been embodied for purposes of record in a semi-official communication from the permanent head of the Foreign Office to the permanent head of the French Foreign Office. No communication in that connexion had been made either by or on behalf of the British Government to the German Government. The communication would be published with a more lengthy one later.

Mischief-Makers at Work

The Prime Minister said that he was not going to allow, if he could help it, any mischief-maker on either side of the Channel to destroy the prospects of an Anglo-French settlement. It was too horrible to contemplate. The charge that the British Government was trying to abolish the Reparations Commission was false. He hoped that, if an agreement could be reached on the experts' report, it could be supplemented by an inter-Allied Agreement that in the event of wilful default by Germany after she had accepted the experts' report the Allies should stand shoulder to shoulder in pressing her responsibilities upon her; but who was going to decide in respect of the experts' report whether Germany was wilfully defaulting or not? Any agreement, he declared, would be additional to, not substitution for anything proposed by the Versailles Treaty.

Mr. MacDonald emphasized that Belgium, Italy and Japan were all satisfied at the form of the invitation. He declared that the complaint against it was made for purposes which required further explanation (Ministerial cheers). The whole affair was a mere storm in a teacup.

Both Mr. Asquith and Mr. Baldwin will demand publication of the text of the invitation in order to resume the debate on Mr. MacDonald's return to London on July 10.—Reuter.

Paris, July 7.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald comes to Paris to-morrow to confer with M. Herriot.

July 8.

The papers comment on Mr. MacDonald's visit in appreciative terms.—Reuter.

Hopes of an Understanding.

London, July 8.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, prior to departing for Paris, said that his visit must be taken as an indication of his desire to see a settlement of the relations between Britain and France and to remove all misunderstanding. This was more particularly so in view of the fact that he was suffering from a severe attack of bronchitis. The duration of his visit would depend on circumstances, but he hoped to return by Thursday.

Later.

There appears to be strong ground for hope that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's decision to go to Paris will clear up the misunderstanding between the French and British Governments and materially assist in averting the downfall of M. Herriot and, with it, indefinite postponement of the inter-Allied conference and a reparations settlement.

The decision immediately produced a change of tone in Paris, where it was received with the greatest satisfaction. A debate in the Senate, in which a big Opposition attack had been anticipated, was postponed till after the visit.—Reuter.

British Premier in Paris

Paris, July 8.

Rarely has a British Prime Minister had a more cordial reception in France than Mr. Ramsay MacDonald had to-day. The vicinity of the station was densely crowded and the route to the Embassy was lined by spectators, cheering and shouting: "Good old Ramsay! Vive MacDonald!"

The two Premiers conferred at the Quai d'Orsay for three hours, after which Mr. MacDonald said, "We are right in the middle of things."

London, July 8.

The text of the British invitations to the London Conference has been issued in the form of a White Book.

The invitations open by referring to the unanimous decision of the Allies to adopt the Dawes report. Consequently the informal discussions between the Allied Premiers centred on exact measures to give effect to the recommendations rather than upon the principles of the report.

They then state that these recommendations impose upon Germany obligations altogether beyond what is laid down in the Peace Treaty. It is, therefore, necessary that they shall be embodied in a formal document, signed by the Powers responsible for their execution. If Germany is to give her assent, she will be justified in expecting to receive, as a counterpart to the obligations she is assuming, a corresponding undertaking that the economic and fiscal sanctions imposed upon her shall be withdrawn.

"It would be undesirable," the invitations continue, "to give the instrument of agreement a form which would have the appearance of a treaty explicitly modifying the Treaty of Versailles. The most convenient form would be a protocol, which might contain provisions covering the following points":—

Fixing a date by which Germany would complete the legislation and other measures she is required to adopt, and a later date, perhaps a fortnight after the first date, when all economic and fiscal sanctions at present enforced in Germany should be withdrawn.

A stipulation establishing, in the event of flagrant failure on the part of Germany, an authority that will decide with regard to non-execution of the Treaty.

The engagements into which Germany will enter being beyond those laid down by the Treaty of Versailles, the British Government is of the opinion that the task of deciding the question of flagrant non-execution cannot be entrusted to the Reparations Commission, the functions of which are strictly determined by the Versailles Treaty. It is proposed that recourse should be had to the Financial Committee of the League of Nations. Differences with regard to interpretation of this stipulation should be referred to the International Court of Justice.—Reuter.

U.S. Ambassador to Berlin on Leave.

New York, July 8.

Mr. Houghton, the United States Ambassador in Berlin, arrived home last week for two months' leave. He will return to Germany immediately, however, following conferences with President Coolidge and Secretary of State Hughes relating to reparations.—Reuter's American Service.

BRITISH NOTE TO ITALY

Aim of Conference to Pledge the Allies to Parts of Dawes Report

Rome, July 5.

The British Government's letter of invitation to Italy to attend the London Conference says that the main aim of the Conference will be to forge an instrument of accord formally pledging the contracting parties to the execution of some of the suggestions of the Dawes report, which would be signed by the Allies and Germany.

The instrument might be in the form of a protocol, as it is intended to avoid any appearance of a desire on the part of the Allies to mo the Treaty of Versailles. British Government favours fi in the protocol a date by wh Germany should complete legislation and other measures would be required to adopt, an later date, perhaps a fortnight a the first date, when all the econo and fiscal sanctions at pres enforced on Germany, which terfere with the economic activi of the country, would be withdra

The invitation proposes that protocol should include a stipula establishing, in the event of flagrant failure on Germany's p an authority that would decide w regard to non-execution of Treaty.

Reparations Commission Superse

Engagements into which Germa may enter according to the Da report would rank before those posed on her by the Treaty Versailles, and therefore the Brit Government are of opinion that task of deciding the question flagrant non-execution cannot entrusted to the Reparations Co mission, the functions of which strictly determined by the Trea It is proposed that recourse sho be had to the Financial Commit of the League of Nations.

The protocol would also incl a clause providing that differen in regard to interpretation of t stipulation should be referred to International Court of Justice.

The invitation emphasizes that Herriot and Mr. Ramsay Ma Donald have not entered into a engagement. It says that it is p posed that, as soon as the Confe ence has arrived at definite acco Germany should be invited to me the Allies in discussions, but not f the purpose of being confront with a document in a final form be accepted or rejected.—Reuter.

BRITISH AND FRENCH PREMIERS IN COMPLETE ACCORD

Reparations Commission to Continue Its Work with the Probable Addition of an American Representative in Case of Default by Germany

Paris, July 9.

It is understood that as a result of the conversations between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Herriot the misunderstanding has been completely removed. The Premiers have agreed on the suggestion to be made to the Allies in regard to the agenda of the Conference, but it is obvious that difficultiies must be surmounted with regard to the creation of the machinery for putting the Dawes report into operation.

The opinion is unanimously expressed that M. Herriot and Mr. Ramsay MacDonald will agree to suggest to the Allies that certain outstanding questions should be referred to legal advisers, notably the very difficult question of the procedure for declaring a default by Germany under the new conditions created by the Dawes report. Obviously it is felt that it would be no good to have a repetition of the Ruhr situation.

British diplomatic quarters consider that what is wanted is to devise means to make it quite clear to France that the Reparations Commission remains to do its work and also to make clear to would-be investors that their investment is secured.

While British and French official quarters are very reticent, some newspapers guardedly indicate that the French proposal for the solution of the difficulty over the Reparations Commission is that the American delegate, as a representative of non-Allied holders of German reparations bonds, should sit and vote with the Commission on the question of German defaults on the execution of the Dawes plan, thus neutralizing the French President's casting votes. The newspapers also hint that M. Herriot will raise the questions of inter-Allied debts and security so far as they are affected by the question of strategic railways and the Ruhr.

Later.

The conference between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Herriot ended at three o'clock this afternoon Mr. MacDonald informed pressmen that an agreement had been reached in regard to joint Franco-British proposals to be submitted to the London Conference on July 16 in the form of a Franco-British note, which was being forwarded to the Allies.

Mr. MacDonald has left for Lo don.—Reuter.

Summary of Note to the Allies.

London, July 9.

The text of the Anglo-Fren Note is a long document, especiall the preamble, which details the term of reference of the Dawes Com mittee and cites the sections of th Treaty from which the Committe derived its competence.

It states that the two Govern ments, recogizing the importance o the economic and financial points o view and particularly the necessit of creating a condition of confid ence,—which, however, they do no consider incompatible with respec for the Peace Treaty—declare tha the arrangement which shall b agreed upon does not prejudice th authority of the Reparations Com mission, but, in view of the fact tha a guarantee must be given to the in vestors furnishing 800,000,000 gol marks and to bearers of bonds, th two Governments will unite thei efforts to obtain the presence of an American on the Reparations Com mission, in the event of the latte having to establish default on the part of Germany.

If this solution is impossible and in the event of the Reparations Commission failing to reach agreement, the two Governments recommend that the Commission should call in an Agent-General of Payments, who must be of American nationality.

The Note proceeds that, in the event of the Reparations Commission declaring an important and wilful default, the Governments concerned will undertake to confer immediately on the necessary measures.

The inter-Allied conference will decide on plans to re-establish the economic and fiscal unity of Germany, in which connexion the Reparatons Commission will be asked to submit suggestions. Any necessary modification of the experts' plan dictated by experience will only be introduced with the necessary guarantees and by common agreement of the Governments concerned.

A special organization shall be created to advise the Governments on the question of a system for distributing reparations payments.

It will be expedient to settle what authority, if necessity arises, should be entrusted with the interpretation of the Dawes report. The Governments have agreed to refer any juridical difficulties in the present text to their legal advisers.

Inter-Allied Debts.

The Britsh Government will seek an equitable solution of inter-Allied debts, taking into account all the elements affecting it, and the question has, therefore, been referred to Treasury experts for preliminary examination.

As regards the question of security, the two Governments have agreed to seek the best means of obtaining complete pacification either through the League of Nations or some other channel and to continue the examination of the problem until a solution is finally achieved.

July 10.

Mr. MacDonald on his return from Paris declared that the conference with M. Herriot was a complete success and cleared up all misunderstanding.

A telegram from Paris states that M. Herriot said that it had been the best day for the Entente Cordiale since the Armistice. It was the beginning of a new era in Europe.

London and Paris Pessimistic

London, July 10.

The opinion in London and Paris with regard to the results of the Paris conversations is somewhat divided. While satisfaction is expressed in London that a fresh agreement has been reached and that the Conference will be held, it is doubted whether the real difficulties have been faced and overcome.

It is feared in some quarters that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald may have been asked to sacrifice more than he can afford to give. Most of the newspapers of Paris are satisfied, but some are not so enthusiastic and declare that the only result at present is that rupture has been avoided and that Mr. MacDonald is right when he says that the road is still long and full of pitfalls.—Reuter.

MILITARY CONTROL IN GERMANY

Ambassadors' Note Insisting on Execution of Five Preliminary Conditions

Paris, July 9.

The Conference of Ambassadors has addressed a Note to Germany, noting with satisfaction the German acquiescence in the proposed general military inspection, and intimating that, providing Germany cooperates, the Control Commission will do its utmost to conclude its operations by September 30, although a definite date for the termination of its labours cannot at present be fixed. The Note points out that the Allies adhere to their claim for the execution of the five other categories of operations, which the German reply does not mention. It intimates that the Commission will resume its final operations on July 20, carrying them out in the spirit already indicated.—Reuter.

THE ANGLO-RUSSIAN CONFERENCE

Ominous Lack of Information: Final Efforts to Reach an Agreement

London, July 7.

The silence regarding the Anglo-Russian negotiations, which was beginning to be regarded in some quarters as ominous, was partly broken in the House of Commons to-night in the debate on a motion by Sir A. Steel-Maitland (Conservative), complaining that the Government had failed to fulfil their promise to keep Parliament informed of the march of events.

Mr. Arthur Ponsomby, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said that he hoped to submit the outcome of the conference before the summer recess, but it was difficult to deal with the matter fully at the present critical stage, just as it was reaching the last three weeks, when it had picked up various threads and was trying to come to an agreement. He said that those old treaties with Russia which were to be continued had been revised and would be ready for signature.

Referring to Soviet press attacks, Mr. Ponsonby declared that the Bolsheviks were more afraid of the Labour Party as a bulwark against Communism than they were afraid of the Conservatives (cheers and laughter).

The debate was adjourned until Thursday.—Reuter.

Negotiations Likely to be Protracted

Moscow, July 8.

Mr. Arthur Ponsonby's hopes, expressed in the British House of Commons last night, are not shared by the London correspondent of the "Izvestia," who declares that the British delegates to the Anglo-Russian Conference have hitherto only placed obstacles in the way of agreement, and, while it is not true to suggest that a complete rupture is pending, the Conference is likely to be protracted.—Reuter.

BRITAIN AND TURKEY

The Dispute Regarding Mosul

Constantinople, July 8.

Replying to the British Note, the Government rejects the proposal to submit the Mosul question to the Council of the League of Nations on the ground that the Treaty of Lausanne is not yet in force. It suggests direct negotiations, expressing the opinion that these will yield better results.—Reuter.

THE IRISH BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Efforts to Reach an Agreement Before the Appointment of a Commission

London, July 6.

In the course a statement to the press with regard to Mr. MacDonald's references to the possibility of the two Irish Governments reaching an agreement before the Boundary Commission is constituted, Mr. Justice Feetham, the Chairman of the Commission, says that Mr. Cosgrave and Sir James Craig have agreed to his acting on those lines and giving him opportunities for informal discussion for the purpose of seeing whether an agreed settlement can be reached. They have also given facilities to tour both sides of the border and study the economic and geographic conditions.

In the meantime Mr. Feetham appeals to the English and Irish public and press to abstain from controversial comment on the questions involved in Article 12 of the treaty.—Reuter.

THE BUILDING TRADE TYRANNY

More than 100,000 Workmen Now on Strike: Some Employers Making Concessions

London, July 5.

The building trade strike, involving 600,000 men, began to-day at noon.

The court of inquiry into the dispute began hearing the evidence for the employers and the operatives, the latter giving evidence under protest against the terms of reference.

The Communist Party has issued a manifesto congratulating the workers on their stand against "the insolent and arrogant challenge of the building trades employers" and suggesting that the Government should take steps to carry on building houses for workers by direct labour and pay the increased wages demanded by the workers.—Reuter.

London, July 7.

It is estimated in trade union circles that between 100,000 and 150,000 operative builders have hitherto gone on strike. The position in London is stated to be more serious than anywhere else.

It is understood that some employers have conceded the operatives' minimum demands of a halfpenny an hour increase in pay and a graduated week.—Reuter.

RAILWAYMEN AND THE 48-HOUR WEEK

A Demand for Exclusion or Threat of Stoppage of Work on Sundays

London, July 9.

A conference of the National Union of Railwaymen at York today passed a resolution demanding the exclusion of railwaymen from the 48-Hour Week Bill under the Washington Convention. Mr. C. T. Cramp, the Industrial Secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen said that, if the Government persisted in passing the Bill unamended, the railway would close down the railways on Sundays, not merely in regard to traffic but also for repairs.—Reuter.

CONSERVATIVE VICTORY AT LEWES

Liberal Candidate Heavily Defeated at By-election

London, July 10.

The Lewes by-election owing to Col. W. R. Campion's appointment as Governor of Western Australia, resulted as follows:—

Capt. Tufton Beamish (Conservative)	9,584 votes
Capt. Basil Hall (Labour)	6,112 „
Mr. Howard Williams (Liberal)	2,718 „

MR. DAVIS DEMOCATIC NOMINEE

Unanimously Elected after Two-thirds Majority Reached: Mr. Davis's Statement that There Can be No Compromise with Reaction

New York, July 4.

There was another tedious day of unfruitful ballotting at the Democratic Convention to-day. Telegrams were received from Senator Ralston and Mr. Cox withdrawing their names. Thereupon the Indiana delegation divided its support, giving 20 votes to Mr. McAdoo and 10 to Governor Smith, whilst the Ohio delegation gave the whole of its 48 votes to Mr. Baker.

What is regarded by Mr. McAdoo's adherents as a test of their strength occurred in the late afternoon, when they defeated a proposal to adjourn until the evening and reconvene in executive session and invite the various candidates to address the Convention.

July 5,

The Democratic Convention adjourned after midnight. The 69th ballot gave Mr. McAdoo 530 votes, the highest yet reached, Governor Smith 335 votes, Mr. Davis 64 votes and Mr. Newton Baker 56 votes.

Later.

The deadlock at the Democratic Convention now overshadows all other events in America. The determination of the delegates is exemplified by Governor Brandon of Alabama who, when asked to join the movement to eliminate "favourite sons," shouted: "We will be here voting when they kill hogs in the fall if necessary." The Chairman, Senator Walsh, in attempting to restore order, banged off the heads of gavels, one of which struck the head of a New York delegate, who was taken to hospital with concussion.

The humorous side of the Convention is exemplified by the fact that one vote was cast for the well-known comedian, Mr. Will Rogers.

A Possible Way Out.

Later.

The Democratic Convention to-day rejected measures advanced to relieve the deadlock, including proposals to adjourn and re-convene the Convention at Kansas City on July 21 and also to drop the lowest candidate after each ballot and to abrogate the two-thirds majority rule.

The 77th ballot resulted in Mr. McAdoo receiving 513 votes, Governor Smith 367 votes and Mr. Davis 76½ votes.

The Convention adjourned until Monday. A possible way out was indicated by a resolution adopted calling on Congressman Hull and Senator Walsh and the managers of the candidates to confer on Monday morning in order to try to break the deadlock.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, July 6.

The representatives of 14 minority candidates before the Democratic Convention have agreed to release their delegates in the hope that Governor Smith and Mr. McAdoo will do likewise.

Later.

Governor Smith's managers have announced that their supporters have never been under any obligations as regards their votes and could vote as they pleased. Mr. McAdoo's men have summoned their forces to rally, and reaffirmed their determination not to withdraw.

July 7.

All the candidates at the Democratic Convention, except Mr. McAdoo, have approved the declaration that each is willing to release all delegates who had arranged to vote for him as completely as if his name was withdrawn from the Convention.

Mr. McAdoo has conditionally accepted the proposal to release all delegates.

Later.

The condition on which Mr. McAdoo accepted the proposal to release the delegates is accompanied by a proviso with regard to the two-thirds majority rule and stipulates that the lowest man should be dropped on each succeeding ballot until a nomination is made and each delegate is entitled to cast pro rata the vote of absent delegates. The representatives of the other candidates have rejected Mr. McAdoo's counter-proposal.—Reuter's American Service.

Release of Delegates Results in Governor Smith Heading the Poll

New York, July 7.

Brushing aside the proposals for the suspension of the rules and the release of delegates, the Democratic Convention to-day returned to the dreary business of balloting. The 78th ballot resulted in practically no change being recorded.

Later.

The Democratic Convention agreed to release delegates from all pledges and instructions on voting, after which balloting proceeded on more independent lines. The 83rd ballot resulted as follows:—McAdoo 418: Smith 368: Glass 76: Davis 72½.

Mr. McAdoo received only 388 votes at the 84th ballot.

McAdoo's Stock Slumping.

Later.

At the 87th ballot Mr. McAdoo slumped to 333⅓ votes, Governor Smith securing 361½ votes, Mr. Ralston 93 votes, Mr. Glass 71 votes and Mr. Davis 60½ votes. The Convention, after the ballot adjourned until Tuesday out of respect for President Coolidge's bereavement.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, July 8.

Mr. McAdoo's slump was due to an allied drive against him, staged in accordance with the rules of his veto power and deserted by Mississippi, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Oklahoma and Nevada, Mr. McAdoo, with his back against the wall, now only hopes that the deserters will return after leaders and candidates are determined to keep Mr. McAdoo down, to show the futility of his candidacy and to open the way to a compromise candidate.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, July 8.

The managers for Governor Smith announce that he will withdraw, provided Mr. McAdoo withdraws. Senator Ralston's candidacy has been withdrawn owing to his again refusing to accept nomination.

Later.

The feature of the latest ballots has been the steady decline of Mr. McAdoo and the rise of Senator Ralston. The 93rd ballot resulted as follows: Smith 355; McAdoo 314; Ralston 196.

Later.

Mr. McAdoo has refused Governor Smith's offer of joint withdrawal. The 95th ballot resulted as follows: McAdoo 471½; Smith 367½; Davis 139¼.—Reuter's American Service.

Smith First: McAdoo far Down

New York, July 9.

Mr. McAdoo released his delegates as the Convention continued voting in the 99th ballot. The Convention adjourned last night after the 100th ballot, which resulted as follows: Smith 351 votes, Davis 203 votes, McAdoo 190 votes Meredith 75 votes.—Reuter's American Service.

Ex-Ambassador Davis Elected

New York, July 9.

Ex-Ambassador Davis has been nominated Democratic candidate for the Presidency.

The delegates arrived at the Convention to-day, weary and half awake. They found a new spirit dominating the assembly. Messrs. Smith's and McAdoo's supporters early began a considerable re-distribution of votes. Mr. Davis soon took the lead for the first time. The 102nd ballot gave Mr. Davis 415 votes and Senator Underwood 307.

After the votes cast for Mr. Davis in the final, 103rd, ballot had reached the necessary two-thirds majority, the States were called upon to discontinue balloting and the nomination was made unanimous.

Mr. Davis in the course of a statement said: "There can be no compromise with reaction. Liberal principles must and will prevail. This is the mandate of the hour and I shall obey it."

Mr. McAdoo's Withdrawal.

A thrilling drama occurred at last night's session of the Democratic Convention. It opened with Senator Ralston's withdrawal, then Governor Smith's conditional withdrawal and, lastly, Mr. McAdoo's epic performance, like that of a man signing his own political death warrant. He took stray pieces of paper and the stub of a lead pencil and, sitting in bed, scribbled the fateful letter releasing the delegates. He showed the letter to his wife, who readily approved. The letter was then read to the delegates. It brought bitter tears to the eyes of many of the women delegates, who for weeks had been marching, shouting, waving flags, singing hymns and praying for the success of Mr. McAdoo.

The violence of the struggle in the mind of Mr. McAdoo is indicated by his pathetic messages, saying that he felt that if he withdrew his name from the Convention, he would be betraying the trust of the people; yet he was not willing to contribute to the continuance of the hopeless deadlock. He would continue to fight for the principle and ideals of progressive Democracy and for righteousness. He hoped that the Democratic party would always hold aloft the torch carried to such noble heights by the late President Wilson.—Reuter's American Service.

THE VICE-PRESIDENCY

Brother of William Jennings Bryan Nominated

New York, July 10.

The Democratic Convention has nominated the Governor of Nebraska, Mr. Charles Bryan, brother of William Jennings Bryan, for the Vice-Presidency. This is regarded as a master-stroke on the part of Mr. Davis to checkmate the latter's opposition and to appeal to the farmers for support.—Reuter's American Service.

LA FOLLETTE'S PLATFORM

Cleveland, July 4.

Senator La Follette has accepted the invitation of the conference for progressive political action to stand for the Presidency.

He termed President Coolidge a "frank defender of organized wealth" and appealed for the support of the farmers on the ground that the Republicans and Democrats had failed to give them relief.

July 5.

The conference for progressive political action has nominated Senator La Follette as a candidate for the Presidency and has adopted a platform by acclamation. The platform sympathizes with the aspiration for freedom and independence of the Irish people. It favours public ownership of the railroads, restoration of the excess profits tax, lowering of excessive tariffs, creation of Government marketing corporations, abolition of injunctions in labour disputes and control of meat-packing. It also favours common international action to bring about the economic recovery of the world from the effects of the war. The platform does not mention the Ku Klux Klan or Prohibition.—Reuter's American Service.

The Progressive Conference

Cleveland, July 6.

The British Labour Party has sent greetings and congratulations to the Progressive Conference. The messages are signed by Messrs. Cramp, Middleton and Brockway. They express the hope that the Conference will lead to the formation of an American Labour Party and the assertion of its political independence.—Reuter's American Service.

Cleveland, July 7.

The Socialist Convention has endorsed the candidacy of Senator La Follette.—Reuter's American Service.

DEATH OF MR. CALVIN COOLIDGE, JR.

Blood Transfusion Resorted to Without Avail

New York, July 4.

President Coolidge's youngest son, aged 17, is dangerously ill from septic poisoning, following a blistered toe received while playing tennis. Five physicians are attending him.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, July 5.

There is a good deal of anxiety with regard to the condition of Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Jr., who is suffering from blood poisoning, supposedly as a result of a blister on his foot while he was playing tennis. A second conference of physicians was held this morning.

Later.

Mr. Calvin Coolidge, Jr., has been removed to hospital for an operation. The doctors are of the opinion that the poison is sufficiently localized to permit partial removal. They described the patient as making a brave fight.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, July 6.

President Coolidge's son was operated on last night. He is worse this morning. It was stated at the White House this evening that his condition is critical but not hopeless.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, July 7.

President Coolidge's son, Calvin, had spells of sinking throughout the night. He was thrice reported to be near death, but was comfortable in the morning. Blood transfusion was resorted to, to which the patient reacted well.

Later.

President Coolidge's 16-year-old son, Calvin, died to-day following an operation for blood-poisoning. The deceased scratched and blistered his foot when playing tennis a fortnight ago with his elder brother, John, at the White House. His illness imposed a heart-breaking strain on his parents, who have been almost hourly at his bed-side since Saturday. Blood transfusion proved unavailing.—Reuter's American Service.

London, July 8.

The King and Queen have sent a message to President and Mrs. Coolidge expressing their heartfelt sympathy in their deep sorrow.—Reuter.

LABOUR CONFERENCE AT GENEVA

Weekly Holiday in Glass Factories and No Night Work in Bakeries

Geneva, July 5.

The International Labour Conference to-day adopted the first reading of the draft International Convention on a weekly 24-hour stoppage of work in glass factories and also approved a proposal that exceptions to the rule should be laid down in the general terms.

The British Government and workers' delegates voted in favour, while the employers' delegates voted against the Convention.

Two reports, those of the majority and the minority, were submitted with regard to the question of night work in bakeries. The employers' delegates voted against the International Convention and a six-hour break during the night, while the workers' delegates held out for the Convention and a seven-hour break at night.

Later.

The International Labour Conference has ended after, inter alia, passing by 73 votes to 15 the first reading of the Convention on the suppression of night work in bakeries, giving a seven-hour break at night. The second reading was postponed until 1925. The prohibition applies to both employees and master bakers.—Reuter.

MOSCOW'S FLOWERY REPORT

Industry Said to Be Nearly Half Pre-War Level in Petroleum Output

Moscow, July 4.

Addressing the Congress of the Communist International to-day, M. Rykoff said that industry had reached 48 per cent. of the pre-war volume. The export of petroleum was approaching the pre-war output and 2,600,000 workers were at present engaged in industry and transport, being double the number in 1921. Wages had reached 70 per cent. of those before the war and continued to advance. Unemployment was rapidly decreasing.

M. Rykoff said that it seemed unlikely that Britain at present could place much capital into Russian enterprises.

Ninety per cent. of the pre-war acreage was under crops. In spite of partial famine wheat export was expected to equal that of last year.—Reuter.

A FOURTH OF JULY TRAGEDY

Fire on Baltimore Excursion Steamer: Indescribable Scene of Panic

Baltimore, July 5.

A large number of people are missing as the result of an Independence Day tragedy, when the steamer Three Rivers caught fire at midnight.

The vessel, which was returning here with 350 passengers who had been celebrating at Cove Point, Chesapeake Bay, was burned to the water's edge. Survivors declare that there was an indescribable panic owing to the difficulty of launching the lifeboats.

Many passengers were asleep. They were awakened and donned life-belts. Some were injured when breaking through windows to avoid the flames. Hundreds flung themselves into the sea. The loss of life was minimized owing to the prompt arrival of assistance. The number of casualties cannot yet be ascertained.—Reuter's American Service.

MILITARY RISING IN BRAZIL

Mutineers Entrenched in Sao Paulo Driven Out by Federal Troops

Buenos Aires, July 6.

It is reported that the city of Sao Paulo in Brazil is in the hands of revolutionaries, who have occupied the Federal buildings after fighting. The Federal Government has declared a state of siege at Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo and has rushed warships and troops to suppress the revolt.—Reuter's American Service.

Rio de Janeiro, July 6.

It is announced that the military rising at Sao Paulo has been suppressed and order has everywhere been restored.—Reuter's American Service.

Rio de Janeiro, July 7.

The mutineers are entrenched in the barracks at Sao Paulo and are besieged by Federal troops. The Government is confident of quelling the movement very shortly. There is complete order elsewhere.—Reuter's American Service.

DANGEROUS SITUATION IN MOROCCO

Spain Sending More Troops: Tribesmen Defeated

Madrid, July 4.

The latest communiqué does nothing to relieve the anxiety about the Spanish military position in Morocco. It speaks of the enemy assembling in large numbers in the unpacified area. Spanish troops have come into conflict with their outposts in the Ellau region.

The Government has decided to send reinforcements to Ceuta and Melilla.—Reuter.

Madrid, July 7.

A communiqué states that the general situation in Morocco has improved. Strong reinforcements have arrived at Melilla and Tetuan from Spain. The besieged position at Cobadarsa has been relieved. The enemy has retreated in disorder, leaving many dead and wounded. The Spanish troops lost about 100 men.—Reuter.

MEMORIAL TO BRITONS KILLED IN THE WAR

Unveiling of Tablet at Notre Dame by the Prince of Wales

Paris, July 7.

In the presence of the Marquess of Crewe, Field Marshal the Earl of Ypres, Major-General Sir Fabian Ware, Vice-Chairman of the Imperial War Graves Commission, and many Allied officers and British and French spectators, the Prince of Wales, accompanied by Prince Henry and President Doumergue, to-day unveiled a tablet at Notre Dame in memory of the British dead in the war, erected by the Imperial War Graves Commission as representing the whole Empire. The various parts of the Empire shared the cost proportionately to the number of dead from each.—Reuter.

A CHINESE DINNER AT WEMBLEY

Sir Robert Ho Tung and Mr. Chow Shou-sun Host to a Distinguished Company

London, July 9.

The Commissioners and Committee of the Hongkong section of the British Empire Exhibition entertained a large and distinguished company at a Chinese dinner at the Hongkong restaurant at Wembley yesterday evening. Mr. E. R. Halifax, the Secretary for Chinese Affairs, presided. Sir Robert Ho Tung and Mr. Chow Shou-sun were the joint hosts.

Sir John Jordan proposed the toast: "To Hongkong and our Chinese fellow-citizens." Mr. Chow Shou-sou, Sir Robert Ho Tung and Mr. Stanley Dodwell replied. The speeches were very cordial and the function a great success.—Reuter.

PRINCE OF WALES

Visiting America for Forthcoming Polo Matches

New York, July 8.

BRITISH SHIPBUILDING RETURNS

Increase in Tonnage Under Construction

London, July 9.

An improvement in shipbuilding is shown in Lloyd's Register shipbuilding returns for the quarter ended June 30. They show that 1,465,000 tons were actually under construction in the United Kingdom on June 30, the highest total since March 31, 1922. The tonnage commenced was 375,000, as compared with 227,000 in the corresponding period last year. The tonnage launched was 364,000, the highest total for 2½ years. Merchant tonnage actually being built abroad was 960,000 which is 35,000 tons more than on March 31.—Reuter.

THE SEIZURE OF ARMS AT COLOMBO

Marked as for Kobe but Apparently Intended for China

Colombo, July 9.

The contraband, which was seized yesterday on board the German steamer Schlesien, consists of 100 rifles and 200 revolvers, all of which are of the German service pattern.

The consignment was marked "Machinery for Kobe," but was apparently intended for China as it was not stored with the cargo for Kobe and was readily accessible so that it could be easily transhipped at sea. The vessel was searched on the instructions of the Secretary of State.—Reuter.

TEXTILE TRADE MISSION TO FAR EAST

British Chancellor Invited to Reconsider It

London, July 5.

Speaking at a luncheon of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce to-day, at which Mr. Sydney Webb, President of the Board of Trade, was a guest, Sir Edwin Stockton, President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, revived the proposal to send a textile trade mission to the Far East.

He said that, if Mr. Webb entered into the subject again, it would probably be found that the time had come when the suggestion would be acted upon.—Reuter.

DISORDERLY SCENES AT MEXICAN ELECTIONS

Polling Booths Stormed

Mexico City, July 7.

Supporters of General Calles claim an overwhelming victory in the Presidential election. They assert that in 15 out of 28 States of the Republic he polled 90 per cent. of the votes cast.

Owing to disorders the results will not be known for some weeks. The rival electors stormed some of the polling booths in Mexico City and carried off the voting urns. The followers of General Flores now demand that the election in such districts be declared void.—Reuter's American Service.

DUTCH PURCHASE OF WAR MATERIAL

Large Order for British Firm

The Hague, July 4.

The Second Chamber to-day passed a vote of credit of 2,000,000 florins on account of the War Department estimates, to enable them to carry out a contract with Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth for the delivery of war material.

The Chamber also passed a Bill facilitating co-operation between the Holland-East Africa and Holland-South Africa Steamship Companies.—Reuter.

BRITISH TRADE RETURNS

London, July 10.

Imports into Great Britain for June totalled £89,501,000, as compared with £89,307,000 in June 1923. Exports totalled £.62,024,000 against £62,883,000 in June, 1923, and re-exports £10,023,000 against £10,954,000.—Reuter.

GERMAN MISSIONARIES IN BRITISH COLONIES

London, July 10.

The Colonial Office, after consulting the British Missions Committee, has agreed that German missionary societies may again be recognized in the Colonies, Protectorates and Mandated Territories on the same terms as other foreign missionary societies, the British Government reserving freedom to consider questions affecting the appointment of individual missionaries in Tanganyika and other Mandated Territories.—Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

DIFFICULTIES FACING THE INTER-ALLIED CONFERENCE

Experts' Suggested £40,000,000 Loan Impossible Unless Germany's Economic Security Guaranteed: Reaparation Commission's Functions to be Discussed by Legal Experts

London, July 10.

In the House of Commons to-day, asked whether he had withdrawn from his attitude that matters in the Dawes report outside the Treaty of Versailles could not be dealt with by the Reparations Commission, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said: "No. It has not been definitely withdrawn. The matter has been deferred for the judgment of British and French legal experts, which will be presented to the Conference on July 16. The whole matter will be considered in the light of that judgment."

Replying to Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the Prime Minister said that he went to Paris to try to remove the unfortunate situation which had arisen there and which threatened to destroy the work done to arrange the Inter-Allied Conference. The Government, he said, were of the opinion that a very supreme effort should be made to put the experts' report into operation without delay. French opinion was not willing to allow the experts' report to be regarded as a substitute for the Versailles Treaty, but was willing to accept it as a new and better way of dealing with reparations. On the other hand, an essential foundation of the experts' report was the raising of a £40,000,000 loan, which was impossible unless would-be investors were assured that their investments would not be destroyed by political or military action on the part of the Allied or German Governments. Investors would not be forthcoming as long as the political and economic security which the German State as a going concern offered investors could be destroyed by action similar to what occurred last year.

The Government had therefore agreed, firstly, to try to add to the Reparations Commission, when it was dealing with defalcation under the experts' report, an American member who would care for the interest of investors, or, failing that, to use the services of the American Reparation Agent-General. The British Government suggested that this gentleman should arbitrate in the event of failure to get a unanimous decision by the Commission. The French Government had wished for time to consider this and to leave the final decision to the London Conference. The British Government had finally agreed to this and meanwhile they would consult financial opinion. Unless this was settled to the satisfaction of investors, no loan would be forthcoming. The French Government had further desired to associate the question of inter-Allied debts with the experts' report, but the British Government had been unable to agree to it.

Mr. MacDonald said that he had warned M. Herriot at Chequers that the British Government could not allow this matter to drag out indefinitely, and he proposed to ask the Treasury to take the matter up where it had been left by Marquess Curzon's Note of August 11. He had further suggested that a French Treasury official should come to London for preliminary discussion of the question with British officials, and it had been agreed that this should be done and that in negotiating a settlement account should be taken of all considerations.

Further, the French Government had desired to keep the question of national security alive. The British Government had made it definitely clear that no proposal in the nature of a military pact could be entertained, but had repeated their desire to continue the conversations in that connexion, especially as regards arrangements through the League of Nations, disarmament conferences and other acceptable means.—Reuter.

M. Poincare's Disapproval

Paris, July 10.

Interpellating the Government on foreign policy in a crowded Senate to-day, M. Poincaré in a four-hour speech deprecated the action of Mr. MacDonald and M. Herriot in substituting persuasion for constraint against Germany. He was of opinion that the London Conference ought not to have been called until Germany had voted the measures required by the experts' plans. He expressed dissatisfaction with the communiqué issued after Wednesday's conference. In conclusion, M. Poincaré contended that the Reparations Commission should continue to decide the question of German defaults and each ally should retain the right to act alone in the event of default, though concerted action was preferable.

M. Herriot will reply to-morrow.—Reuter.

Germany's Disappointment

Berlin, July 10.

There is bitter disappointment in political circles at the outcome of the meeting between M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald. Fears are expressed that the London Conference will virtually fail in its objects. The newspapers are particularly dissatisfied with the Reparations Commission being the final arbiter of the manner in which the experts' report will be carried out, while the uncertainty whether the German delegates will be invited to London in a consultative capacity, or whether they will simply be confronted with a protocol to sign, is a point on which official circles are urgently seeking enlightenment.—Reuter.

THE INSURRECTION IN BRAZIL

Rebels Still in Control of Sao Paulo: Anxiety as to Attitude of Navy

Buenos, Aires, July 10.

Both official and unofficial news from Brazil indicates that the situation at Sao Paulo is still very serious, while there is a great deal of unrest elsewhere. There appears to be little doubt that the rebels are offering formidable resistance at Sao Paulo, which they aparently still completely control. The streets are described as strewn with dead and wounded. Food is short. A battalion of Federal troops from Santos is alleged to have joined the rebels.

Anxiety is expressed with regard to the spirit of the crews of three warships, including the dreadnought Minas Geraes.—Reuter's American Service.

PORTUGUESE AVIATORS IN HONGKONG

Reception at Club Lusitano: Cordial Welcome by the Portuguese Community

Hongkong, July 10.

The Governor and other notable personages attended a reception at the Club Lusitano to-day in honour of the Portuguese aviators. The Portuguese Consul-General in a speech cordially welcomed the aviators on behalf of the Portuguese community and congratulated them on the success of their flight from Lisbon to Macao. Referring to Sir Edward Stubbs's presence, the speaker declared that his attendance added dignity to the function.

The Portuguese community presented a suitably inscribed gold cigarette case and a cheque to each of the aviators.

Major Paes cordially thanked his compatriots. He said that he greatly appreciated the demonstration and prized the souvenirs.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LIQUOR PIRATE ON FRENCH SHIP

Raiders from New York Board the Mulhouse and Steal 33,000 Cases

Halifax, July 11.

The French Consular authorities are investigating the seizure of $500,000 worth of liquors from the French-owned steamer, Mulhouse, by pirates. The Mulhouse on arrival reported that it was held up on June 24 and boarded by 30 pirates from a New York "speed boat."

The skipper, M. Ferreno, says that all the crew of the Mulhouse were imprisoned and scantily fed for ten days. Meanwhile the pirates unloaded 33,000 cases of brandy, whisky, champagne and French wines to eight schooners of which five are believed to be on the Nova Scotia Registry. The Mulhouse and the cargo are fully insured.—Reuter's American Service.

JAPANESE MINISTER TO SAGHALIEN

Inspection of Local Conditions Before Conference with the Bolsheviks

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

UNWEPT, UNHONOURED AND UNSUNG

Congress Closes Its Session with Record Blunders: Caustic Comment by Leading Non-Politicians: Prohibition Issues Becoming More Acute

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Washington, June 9.

The first session of the 68th Congress came to an end on Saturday, "unwept, unhonoured and unsung." At loggerheads with President Coolidge, whose policies it has flouted and whose vetoes it has overridden, and utterly discredited in legal, financial and religious circles, its members are on their way to their constituencies relying for their re-election mainly on the votes of ex-soldiers, votes purchased by the promise of between three and four billion dollars of public money, in payment for their "patriotism" in the war.

Vetoed by three Presidents—Wilson, Harding and Coolidge—both on principle and as imposing an enormous burden upon the taxpayer, besides seriously demoralizing the national finances, the bonus bill was finally carried through by one of those extraordinary exhibitions of moral cowardice that have been so strikingly exemplified in the case of prohibition. But in keeping with the ineptitude so characteristic of many of the doings of the present Congress, the legislators finally adjourned without making any appropriation for so much of the bonus as should be paid during the ensuing year. Could anything better illustrate the hollowness of the entire proceeding?

The effect of this faux pas upon the distribution of the soldier vote at the next election is, however, extremely problematical. The majorities by which the bonus bill was carried through Congress represented both parties in about equal proportions, each party being afraid of the other. Moreover the next election will see an unusually large number of cross currents in the political waters, many important questions pressing for settlement.

The Reduction of Taxation.

Another great mistake, from the standpoint of sound finance, was the form in which the Finance Bill was finally passed. Early in the session the very able Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. A. W. Mellon, submitted to Congress a plan for the reduction of taxation. In the case of persons of moderate means the proposed reduction was simply one of much-needed relief; but in the case of large incomes it was that and something more. The high taxes and surtaxes that came in with the war have had the effect of driving thousands of persons with large incomes to invest in securities that are non-taxable, and to such an extent has this been carried that it is estimated that the national Treasury has lost $400,000,000 a year through the exemptions thus secured. Not only so, but the billions of dollars thus invested have of course been unavailable for new industrial enterprises that would have been more profitable to the investor, have yielded the Government millions of dollars annually in the shape of taxation, have benefited labour, and stimulated industry and trade in innumerable directions.

But a large section of Congress, chiefly Democrats and radical Republicans, rebelled against making any change in the incidence of taxation that might be construed by demagogues as relieving capital of its legitimate burdens, and the argument that the country at large would be benefited by the reduction had not the slightest weight with them. Finally some reduction of the tax on large incomes was agreed to, but it will not be sufficient to accomplish the very important purpose sought by the Secretary of the Treasury.

These are just two of the legislative blunders committed by Congress during its recent session,—blunders that have led a Representative of clearer vision and greater courage than the majority to decline re-election; have prompted Judge Gary to declare Congress a greater menace to the country than is Bolshevism, and have seemed to one of the leaders of the Washington bar to justify him in saying to a recent gathering of 3,000 businessmen, representing every state in the Union, "You keep your wise men at home and send your fools to Congress."

It will be interesting to see the attitude of the Republican National Convention that will assemble this week at Cleveland towards a Congress that, while nominally Republican, has defied and so far as it was able humiliated the man whom the Convention will, with practical unanimity and the greatest enthusiasm, renominate for the presidency.

Present Status of Prohibition.

Despite the self-deception of fanatics and the baseless claims of enforcement officers who have not yet been sent to join their former fellow-officers—530 in number—who have been dismissed from the service for accepting bribes or being guilty of other corrupt practices, anti-prohibition sentiment is gathering force more rapidly than at any previous period since the adoption of the 18th Amendment. To this result many things are contributing, the utter breakdown of the law, especially in the large centres of population, being of course the principal. In the city of New York, forr example, the closing (padlocking) of a large number of reputable restaurants has had no apparent effect upon the facility with which liquor may be obtained, and the city is said to be "wetter" than ever before in its history. In Washington there was recently found on the person of a bootlegger a list of more than a thousand reputable citizens who were customers either of the bootlegger himself or of his associates. When there arose a demand for the publication of the list (which the "wets" were more anxious to see published than were the "drys") the authorities replied that it had been "lost," so damaging to the cause of prohibition would its publication have been.

Then the conviction and imprisonment for forgery of William H. Anderson, New York State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League and probably the best known advocate of prohibition in the entire country, gave the "antis" a much relished opportunity to scoff, as was also the case when a member of Congress called public attention to the fact that a certain representative who never missed an opportunity of voting for prohibition had been on the floor of the House in a state of intoxication.

A great impression—I might almost say a sensation—has been created by President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, New York, lending his powerful advocacy to the movement for a modification of the prohibition law, and declaring that from personal investigation he was convinced that unless the Republican party to which he belongs favoured some relaxation of the prohibition law, it would lose 11 states it might otherwise carry.

Foreign Shipping Scores.

Very distasteful to the American people in general is the concession the Government has had to make to foreign nations to secure their assistance in putting down the smuggling of liquor into this country in foreign ships. As readers of the "North-China Daily News" are doubtless aware, that assistance was secured only by granting permission to ships of foreign registry to bring liquor into American waters under seal, which admits of their having a sufficient supply for their homeward voyage, while American ships are prohibited from carrying it at all. In the trans-Atlantic passenger service in particular this discrimination is greatly to the advantage of the British and other foreign lines.

MAJOR BAILEY DROWNED

Thames Discovery: Probable Solution of Hove Mystery

It is probable that a body, with a bullet wound in the head, found in the Thames off Carron Wharf, City, last month, is that of Major Norman Percival Bailey, for whom the police have been searching ever since December 7 last, when his wife was discovered murdered in their flat at Hove.

Scotland Yard issued the following statement:

At 7.20 this morning the body of a man with a bullet wound in the head and in an advanced state of decomposition was found floating in the river off Carron Wharf, City.

The following articles were found on the body, from which it would appear to be that of Major Bailey, wanted for murder at Hove, Sussex: Motor driver's licence and membership card of the A.A. in the name of Norman Percival Bailey, 25, Adelaide-crescent, Hove; a yellow metal case, "N. P. B." thereon; three photographs—an Army officer, an elderly lady, and a young lady.

The body is now at the City of London Mortuary, Golden-lane, awaiting inquest.

In the clothing the police also found a masonic charm, a white metal matchbox, containing a gold tooth, and a George III. shilling. There was no other money in the clothing.

The body, found close to Tower Bridge, was taken ashore at Swan Pier. A doctor who was called came to the conclusion that it had been in the water several months.

The Crime and the Search.

Discovery of the tragedy in the Hove flat in December was made by the caretaker. Mrs. Bailey's body was on the bed, and by it was a note saying: "I have parted with my dearest possession, and hated to do it. Please forgive me. She knew nothing. I did not do it for jealousy or cowardice, but just love. Look for me by the sea."

Two wounds had been inflicted on Mrs. Bailey, one by a knife and the other by a bullet.

According to evidence given at the inquest, Major Bailey, a traveller in motor accessories, had been happily married for two years, the Major and his wife having been exceptionally devoted to one another. During the war the Major served in the Machine Gun Corps.

The police carried out an active search for Major Bailey. Reports from various localities were received from time to time of the detention of a person believed to be the Major. At one time it was thought he had been discovered in the Channel Islands, and in the latter part of December a man suspected of being Bailey was detained at Turin.

LORD DARLING AND ART

Lord Darling, presiding at the Artists' General Benevolent Institution's 106th annual dinner, said that it was certain that no one who painted a really good picture would ever sell it. He had tried to paint himself occasionally. He supposed everbody did now. (Laughter.)

There were those who divided art and artists into two categories, Academicians and those who were not. There was a very strong opinion that no Academician could paint or make any work in marble, but that all those who were not Academicians could paint, without any instruction, remarkably well—(laughter)—even accomplish work in clay, marble, or in bronze. He was always sorry when it was done in bronze, because it lasted longer. (Laughter.) We could not all be Cubists or Vorticists, but we should all be Futurists, and we should have some regard for those who came after.

He was not a member of the Government, but if he were, and there were painters living in Coventry, say, and doing well, as the result of the efforts of a previous Government, he should be bound to say; "This must stop. People are doing work and being paid for it. This is wrong. This is retrograde. This is Toryisn. (Cheers and laughter.) I must prevent them from working and painting in Coventry. If they don't paint, it is true, they can't live. I won't allow them to paint, but they can all do nothing, and as I disapprove of people earning their livelihood, I will pay them not to earn it." (Laughter.)

LABOUR GOVT'S HOUSE-BUILDING SCHEME

2,500,000 Houses in 15 Years at Total Cost to the Nation of £2,500 Millions

Below will be found some details of the British Government's house-building scheme, as regards number of houses anad cost, which was published on May 30 last.

The amount of the increased contribution proposed to be paid by the State to local authorities is £9 a year for 40 years, or, if the house is situated in an agricultural parish in England and Wales or in a rural area in Scotland, £12 10s. a year for 40 years. The special conditions applicable to houses for which these increased contributions will be payable will include the following:

(a) That the houses are let for occupation to tenants who intend to reside in them.

(b) That they shall not be assigned or sublet by the tenants except with the consent of the local authority.

(c) That they shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of except with the consent of the Minister of the Scottish Board of Health.

(d) That contracts for the construction of the houses shall contain a fair-wages clause.

(e) That the rents to be charged for the houses shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount which would be payable if each house were let at the rent at present commonly charged in the area for pre-war working-class houses, except where the average deficit on the houses after receipt of the Exchequer subsidy would exceed the equivalent of £4 10s. a year for 40 years.

The object of the proposals for which Exchequer provision is sought is the completion of approximately 2,500,000 houses of the type required in 15 years. Following negotiations with representatives of the building industry, the representatives of the industry had indicated that they were prepared to adopt means of augmenting the resources of the industry, which would render practicable a programme for providing the following numbers of houses in each of the next 15 years:

1925	90,000	1933	210,000
1926	100,000	1934	225,000
1927	110,000	1935	225,000
1928	120,000	1936	225,000
1929	135,000	1937	225,000
1930	150,000	1938	225,000
1931	170,000	1939	225,000
1932	190,000

The charge on the Exchequer consequent on these provisions will depend, it is stated, on the extent to which the full programme is carried out and on the variation of the amount of contribution made from time to time. On the assumptions (a) that the full programme of 2,500,000 houses is carried out; (b) that 7½ per cent. of the houses are built in agricultural parishes, and (c) that the full Exchequer contribution is payable in all cases, it is estimated that the maximum charge on the local rates would be as follows:

Year.	Exchequer charge	Charge on local rates
1924-25	278,000	135,000
1925-26	1,072,000	521,000
1926-27	1,905,000	925,000
1927-28	2,823,000	1,371,000
1928-29	3,827,000	1,859,000
1929-30	4,946,000	2,403,000
1930-31	6,195,000	3,010,000
1931-32	7,601,000	3,693,000
1932-33	9,180,000	4,460,000
1933-34	10,930,000	5,310,000
1934-35	12,824,000	6,231,000
1935-36	14,761,000	7,172,000
1936-37	16,699,000	8,113,000
1937-38	18,636,000	9,054,000
1938-39	20,573,000	9,995,000
1939-40	22,511,000	10,936,000
1940-41 to 1963-64	*23,156,000	*11,250,000
1964-65	22,878,000	11,115,000
1965-66	22,084,000	10,729,000
1966-67	21,251,000	10,325,000
1967-68	20,333,000	9,879,000
1968-69	19,329,000	9,391,999
1969-70	18,210,000	8,847,000

THE LUCK OF THE STANLEYS

First Derby Won by a Lord Derby Since a Derby Started the Derby

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, June 5.

Lord Derby won the Derby yesterday with Sansovino, whose victory means that, for the first time in 137 years, a member of the House of Derby has won the race named after the Lord Derby of long ago.

Lord Derby will not now need to change his nationality. He said at the Press Club on Monday that, having read that a Rumanian had won the Rumanian Derby 26 times, he thought of going to that "paradise for racehorse owners." The present Lord Derby has been trying to win this race for 31 years.

He has won every other classic race—the St. Leger is an especially lucky race for him—but up till today his efforts to win the Derby have been in vain. Three times he has run second—

In 1911 with Stedfast;
In 1920 with Archaic; and
Last year with Pharos.

During the whole of his racing career Lord Derby, who, to use his own words, "started racing in order to spur his father on to greater efforts" has only had one trainer—the Hon. George Lambton.

Never Bets Himself.

Lord Derby is perhaps the owner most beloved of the racing public. He will not have his horses thrashed in order to achieve victory. There is the fact that he always "broadcasts" his tips if he thinks he has a chance of winning a big race. As he never bets, he does not mind the price at which his horses run. Thus he tipped Pharos last year, and did the same with Sansovino this year.

The only fear he had, Lord Derby said before the race, was the weather and the number of runners. "All I can say," he added, "is that if you back my horse you will have a good run for your money, but I must warn you that, unless Mr. Lambton has done it within the last 24 hours, he has had no practice in swimming."

Lord Derby's victory was indeed a very remarkable scene, popular no doubt in a way because the favourite—it became so at the last moment—won, but also because everyone likes the owner. When the black and white colours flew past the winning post like a hare before the pack of the pursuing horses, amid the wild hubbub of cheers and indistinguishable yells, you could hear louder still cries of "Derby! Derby! Derby!" from the crowd. It was not "Sansovino" they shouted, but "Derby." It is no offence to a gallant horse to say that in a sense the real favourite was its owner.

Rain Damps Nobody.

The drenching rain made little difference to the wild excitement after the victory. There was Lord Derby making his way down the steps from the club stand, his face beaming, taking hands thrust at him from every side. In the weighing enclosure people gathered round him so closely that he could hardly make his way on to the course; Lord Lonsdale and others went ahead fighting a passage for him.

When finally he managed to reach Sansovino to lead the winner in, the excitement was delirious. The multitudes along the rails on every side were cheering and shouting "Derby!" and the winner and the owner and Weston, the jockey, formed the centre of a swaying, pushing crowd the police had all they could do to contain. It looked like a small revolution. Lord Derby, holding on to the rein, beaming like the sun, pushed this way and that, slapped on the back by innumerable hands. Weston looked as if he would almost be pulled from the saddle.

Mounted and foot policemen, some with their helmets lost, struggling to preserve order and make some way for the procession; Sansovino, amid a crush of admirers, sometimes quite unable to advance a pace; Mr. Lambton, his trainer, scrambling with the rest, driven into the flanks of the horse—it was a Roman triumph for the House of Stanley.

After the weighing-in, Lord Derby was received by the King and Queen, whose congratulations were as warm as those of any of their subjects. Then he came out to a fresh ordeal of handshakes.

Weather Alone Unkind.

I am not going to pretend that it was a satisfactory Derby from the weather standpoint—it wasn't. It rained the whole day with a steady downpour and was none too warm. Perhaps it was the dullest Derby day on record. The weather killed all the brightness and all the attractive charm of the gathering. Most people looked profoundly miserable.

The view from the Grand Stand was depressing. There was scarcely anything but the tops of umbrellas to be seen. The slope of the hill opposite, under its 10,000 umbrellas, looked like a field of evil fungi, and even Tattersall's was a solid roof of umbrellas—the domestic umbrella and the larger, or bookmaker's, umbrella being there in almost equal numbers. There was very little movement anywhere. The people on the hillside seemed to take up their positions once and for all and to stand as close as possible to each other in the hope of keeping dry by that means. Those who attempted to walk about could be seen slithering in the mud, like geese on ice, and balancing themselves with waving arms.

It seemed to me that it was a comparatively small crowd for the Derby, but that may have only been because the people huddled close together for company. But, after all, who would have gone to the Derby yesterday if he could have helped it? You cannot imagine how depressing the Derby can be on a day on which some of the very tictac men, standing on ginger-beer crates placed on carts and playing the windmill with their arms, have to wear sou'-westers. As a matter of fact, most men who could afford to do so stayed away from the Derby yesterday.

Women to the Fore.

If the crowd still attained considerable dimensions it was because their places were filled to some extent by their sisters and their aunts. "I tell you one thing I noticed today," I heard a man saying, "I never saw so many women and girls at the Derby. I don't know what racing's coming to. In 20 years' time there'll be nobody but women at the Derby."

The truth is, women have invaded the racecourse as they have invaded the professions, and one result of their presence is that bookmakers now accept small five-shilling bets in Tattersall's that they would have laughed scornfully aside a few years ago. But, perhaps, the general scarcity of money has also helped to bring about the day of the small bet.

The race itself does not call for much description. After a false start, the field were despatched to a fairly level start. The line was soon broken by Dawson City, who was followed by Arausio, Defiance, and Polyphontes. Salmon Trout and St. Germans were crowded out at the start and lost several lengths. Before the hill down to Tattenham Corner was reached, Dawson City was still in front, followed closely by Sansovino, who had made up a lot of ground rapidly on the far side of the course. St. Germans had also come through his field and was now fourth, just behind Polyphontes. I could see Hurstwood and Parmenio prominent also at this time. Halfway down Tattenham Corner Sansovino was in front and Dawson City was beaten. He was, however, still second when the straight was reached, but was soon passed by St. Germans and then by others.

Won with Great Ease

But his retrogression and the progress of the others did not really matter, for the race was already over, Sansovino increasing his lead at every stride and finally winning with great ease. So far as the winner was concerned the race lacked interest, for after he took the lead Sansovino (9-2) was never in danger of defeat. There was an interesting race for second place between St. Germans (100-7) and Hurstwood (20-1) the former winning by a neck, but Hurstwood was travelling much the faster of the two at the end. Parmenio was officially placed fourth, and then came Polyphontes, fifth; Salmon Trout, sixth; Obliterate, seventh; Spalpeen, eighth; Bright Knight, ninth; Corolet tenth; Browside, 11th; Diophon, 12th; Grand Joy, 13th; Resinato, 14th; Great Barrier, 15th; Thundercloud II, 16th, Tom Pinch, 17th; Donzelon, 18th; Skyflight, 19th; Canusa, 20th; and Arausio last.

So ended rather tamely a Derby which has aroused more interest and created more discussion than any other of recent years. No one knew what would win, and everyone believed that quite a number of the runners would finish in a line. They did finish in a line, but it was a line down and not across the course. Many equine reputations were shattered and only one was made. Diophon, as I had always believed, does not stay; and Tom Pinch is at the moment another Leighton—always going to win with ease and invariably failing.

Stuck in the Mud.

So ended the Derby of 1924. It is an experience which most people will never forget. Hundreds of motor-cars and charabancs remained on the Downs after the race, held fast in the mud. Private cars which got over the hill earlier in the day were in the worst plight, for in the dip they sank 12 to 18 inches in the soft earth. Buses were stuck fast, and all efforts to get them free were in vain. The mud in some cases reached almost to the axles. Passengers were forced to alight, and some of them literally put their shoulders to the wheel, and themselves floundering in the mud, pushed valiantly. Vehicles that had managed to reach hard ground remained to help out the others and two traction engines were utilised for hauling purposes as well as a number of horses hired from the gipsies.

I should only in conclusion like to hear the views of those who came from overseas and saw the race for the first time. They must think that it is a bit of a dreadful function.

THE FRENCH DEBT TO GREAT BRITAIN

A Counter Calculation of Debt Supposed to Be Due by Britain to France

"The total amount of money which this country lent to France in order that the Great War might be prosecuted is in the neighbourhood of 600 million pounds," says the "Manchester Guardian."

"It is a painfully large sum, and from the indignation which the thought of it arouses among Frenchmen it might almost be supposed that they were the creditors and we the debtors who had no suggestions to offer about payment. Perhaps this indignation will be a little eased by the curious discovery, just announced by the "Echo de Paris," that a great deal of that debt is not really owing at all.

"If France were to have what is popularly described on this side of the Channel as 'a fair do,' she ought, we are now told, to be able to claim from England a sum of Frs. 9,000,000,000, which represents, according to the writer in the "Echo de Paris" the amount of damage done to French belongings during the war by British troops and guns. It may be wondered whether the writer, in arriving at this figure, has made any allowance for the damage that was paid for as it occurred. The inhabitants of the Pas Calais and the Somme had a shrewd eye for damage. 'The British Army,' it has been said by one writing with knowledge on the Claims Commission of G.H.Q., 'paid for everything, even to an orchard tree that an army mule had nibbled at.' Towards the end of the war it even paid the octroi duties on food entering French towns for the use of British troops.

"No one, again, can estimate accurately the vast amount of their pay which the British troops disbursed during four and a half years to French traders. In all these matters the British Expeditionary Force was a proposition which paid its way. On the subject of damage done by gun-fire it seems almost indelicate to comment. It is just a little too like presenting a bill to the fire brigade for damages done in the course of saving the bulk of the claimant's household; a reverent and sympathetic hush in the presence of the distraught appears the more seemly and even the more helpful attitude. But it is an interesting example of what happens when finance becomes an aspect of indignation."

OUR SCOTTISH LETTER

Is Golf too Easy? The Amateur Championship and St. Andrews

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Edinburgh, May 28.

The great events in golf have their finest setting on the classic links of St. Andrews. Nowhere else does the Championship glamour so enfold one as in this historic burgh where golf tradition has its root, famous players have come and gone, and the very street names speak of the game. As the eye took in the spreading vista of the course last week, one felt that it had never looked greener and more enticing, not even in dreams. St. Andrews is a grand sporting course. As George Duncan says, "it is to my mind the greatest golfing test in the world. It demands the greatest variety of shots, and if I had a money match to play it is to St. Andrews I should ask the venue to be taken."

With its character as a test, the Old Course has also the romantic atmosphere. When the great players strike off, do not shadowy spectators who knew the Links in bygone days, steal silently out again on the old trail? The games take a large place in the past of which the town is proud. There have been keen "gowffers" hereabouts right down the centuries. The men who in revolt went out in the night and opened up a famous bunker which had been officially filled in will live through all history. Eleven Amateur Championships have been held here, and though great names stand in the roll of honour, one feels a recurrent regret that those of Freddie Tait and John Graham are not of that famous company. The list is doomed to incompleteness without them. But it is pleasant to know that Mr. Harold Hilton, the winner, and Mr. Robert Harris, the runner-up, for 1912, when the Championship was last held here, are still to the fore, and are again taking part in the play.

Edward Blackwell, who figured in the international as captain of the Scottish side, is the doyen also of the Championship. Just 20 years ago he figured at Sandwich in the historic final, when he had for opponent Walter Travis, of New York, the man who made such a splutter with his Schenectady putter and the first "foreigner" also to win a British Championship. Mr. Blackwell was the prince of drivers in those days and he still hits them far and sure.

Mr. T. M. Burrell, of Troon, as Scottish Champion, came into the international for the first time. Last year in the winning of the Scottish Championship he was conceding to his oponents putts of all lengths. And then at the close when he had won, remembering how often he had been in trouble and got himself well out of it, his apology was, "I'm not a golfer at all; I'm only a recoverer!"

Question for Enthusiasts

Is golf becoming too easy? One does not suppose that this is the first time such a query has been made within the recent rather wonderful golfing years, but it is prompted at this time by the amazing happenings of last week. It was nowhere suggested that C. A. Whitcombe's wonderful performances were due entirely to his long hitting off the tee, a department of the game in which the virtues of the golf-ball of to-day must be admitted. Whitcombe is a long hitter certainly, but was it not the deadliness of his mashie play that was chiefly responsible for his creating a new Deal record one day and hitting it out of existence the next? More remarkable even than the Whitcombe wonder, although it was not accomplished under championship conditions, was the contemptuous treatment which F. F. J. Brown, from Honolulu, accorded the terrible Old Course at St. Andrew's, expressed in his smashing of the George Duncan record of 68 by returning an astonishing 67. Presumably it was Mr. Brown's long hitting that did the trick here. And what of last year's "open" at Troon? In one forenoon Joe Kirkwood and Macdonald Smith returned cards of 69, and, watching the Australian reel off a string of threes, one could not but question Troon's right to be classed as a real championship course. It all looks so absurdly easy. Last year also at Gleneagles we had Rowland Jones—a grandfather, mark you, not one of the fiery younger school—coming in with a record of 68. It's all rather remarkable. And does it not point to the attainment of a better golfing standard among the top notchers than to any increase in the virtues of the mechanical aids to the game? For do not we, the great majority, with all those wonderful new balls and clubs to our hands, go plodding on, seeking to break our depressing 90's with, in many cases, as much hope of ever doing so as Joe Kirkwood has of finishing last of eight competitors in any modern contest? Therein lies the answer to the question with which this article opened. Golf, as the majority know and play it, is not becoming too easy.

Foreign Missions Day

The most popular day in the May meetings of the General Assemblies in Edinburgh is always that devoted to foreign missions, and the one last week was no exception to the rule. In the Auld Kirk, Dr. J. N. Ogilvie, Convener of the Foreign Missions Committee, is always the statesman as well as the Churchman, and he gave a detached and illuminating account of the political as well as the religious situation in India, China and Africa. From China, he said, not India, would the light of Christianity be ultimately shed on the continent of Asia. India seethed with politics, and was obsessed with the idea of Home Rule. The future of the Church there would lie in the gradual and judicious substitution of the native element in the Indian Church for the European. He contrasted the Indian and African psychology thus —India was now saying to the European, "Let me walk by myself;" Africa was saying, "Come and help us to walk, come walk by our side."

Perhaps the most touching spectacle of the Assembly is the parade of missionaries round the Assembly's table. There were some 20 of them on this occasion, two of them —Scott of Sialkot and Scott of Kalimpong—were father and son, the father has 33 years service, and the son is just leaving to take up the good work. Among the other missionaries presented was Miss Moore, Ichang, with 28 years service.

At the United Free Church missionary evening Dr. W. N. Nairn, Manchuria, was one of the speakers.

Burns and Mauchline

A good work has been done of late years by the Glasgow Burns Club in celebrating the connexion of Burns with Mauchline, and last week an addition was made to the memorials which they have taken under their charge. Nance Tinnock's house—one of the "howffs" of the poet, was opened as a home for aged poor. The late Mr. Charles R. Cowie, Glasgow, besides being responsible for the acquisition of other houses identified with Burns, made provision for the purchase and restoration of Nance Tinnock's house. At the unveiling of a tablet to the memory of the generous donor, it was stated that many knew him as a successful business man; there were many men so described of whom nothing else could be said; but Mr. Cowie in addition was a man of artistic tastes, wide reading, and great culture. After spending many years in the Far East he returned to Glasgow, where he was prominent in the literary and philosophical, social, and religious life of the community. His connexion with the Burns cult was a close one, and he was specially interested in the preparation of Burns and other Scottish poets for the use shrine of Robert Burns. In Mauchline Burns turned out the Kilmarnock edition of his works, which made him Scotland's greatest poet: and here also he met, wooed and married Jean Armour, one of the faithfulest of womankind.

Heckling—A Lost Art

Scots electors are in danger of losing their reputation as political hecklers. There was a time when they did not have their equals in intelligence, persistency and wit. To-day, however, heckling is almost a lost art.

Question time once was really entertaining with its inelligent debates and battles of wit; now it is all too often a display of hooliganism, as at the Kelvinside election. Intolerance has taken the place of fair play. "Free speech is only for those who agree with our views. The candidate who attacks our ideals must be shouted down. There is only one side to a question, only one remedy for the evils which exist to-day, only one political gospel—and it is ours," says the Clydeside Communists. Of such stuff hooligans, not hecklers, are made. In other days the heckler might remain unconvinced, but we could agree to differ and remain friendly. To-day he shouts "Liar!" if he does not get the answer he wants. If the candidate turns the laugh against him—the temptation when it appears is always irresistible—he revenges himself by breaking up the meeting. The political "rough" attends the opposition meetings only to annoy the candidate. If he goes to hear his own champion speak—this he seldom does, for he is out for "fun" —he and his kind make it their business to suppress legitimate heckling. Heckling is political education, and it has never been objected to. What passes for heckling to-day is sheer hooliganism, and we are all the poorer for the change.

Sir A. Geikie's Autobiography

The book of the hour is "A Long Life's Work," the autobiography of Sir Archibald Geikie, O.M., K.C.B. It is a remarkable volume to be published at the age of 89, and is a most interesting record of geological work in Scotland. Some of his discoveries were of great economic value. To take only one example, in his first field, the Lothians, he traced, in mapping the western part of Midlothian, and the eastern part of West Lothian, "certain black shale, which appeared to occur in definite horizons in the lower division of the carboniferous series," and had never been worked. "Mr. James Young, afterwards known as 'Paraffin Young,' consulted me as to the extent of these shales, and accompanied me on the ground. I was able to show him many localities where their outcrop could be seen, and to indicate to him roughly the area under which they extended. In a short while, having secured the right to work these and other shales over a considerable tract of ground, he began active operations for the extraction of mineral on from them. He thus founded the oil-shale industry of Scotland, from which so much wealth has since been obtained."

"Safety First" and Poetry

Lord Doune, the Scottish nobleman whose approaching marriage to an American lady is announced, was interested some years ago in the "Safety First" campaign, and I remember he wrote the following "Ruthless Rhyme" for the Publicity Committee:—

"Oh, mummy, dear, what is that stuff that's so like strawberry jam?"
"It is, my dear, your careless pa, run over by a tram."

On Dit

This is the latest problem propounded by an English newspaper; "Why are there so many poets in Scotland?" Answer: "Because poetry is a gift"

The opinion has been expressed that the best-dressed man at the first Royal Court was Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, Chorus of Clydeside Socialists: "Traitor!"

"I'm determined to get on," the young business man told his friend, "so I'm taking a course at a school of languages." "And what language are you learning?"—"Scotch."

I like the tribute which Dr. M'Hardy, of Banchory, paid the other day to his neighbour, Mr. Joseph Farquharson, R.A. "Mr. Farquharson," he said, "is a grand painter of sheep and a model landlord." Excellent qualities, assuredly, though they do not usually go hand in hand!

VANISHED ISLAND

Major Blake Assured that it was "The Will of Allah"

Major Blake, the "Daily News" Aviation Correspondent, who has just returned from an adventurous journey through the desert, came across an island which the superstitious natives suggest actually hid itself below the surface of the lake because of Major Blake's intention to search it for the treasure of Mahomet.

It is rue that Major Blake saw the island last year and that this year it had vanished.

"There were seven in our party," said Major Blake yesterday, "and we made the journey to the Senussi country around Siwa, on the borders of Egypt and Tripoli, in four Ford cars. One woman, Mrs. Stubbs, was in the party, and the journey was made by way of Mersa, Matruh and Sollum. Among our objects was a search for the treasures of Mahomet, which, with his sword and seal, were supposed to be hidden in Siwa.

"Last year when in Siwa, I identified a spot where I thought the treasures might be. It was on a small island in a salt lake. When we arrived at the lake I saw that the island had vanished.

"I questioned the Senussi, and they told me that the island had disappeared one night during last winter, sinking below the water. They regard the island with great superstitious awe, and when I told them that a had intended to look for Mahomet's treasure they solemnly assured me that Allah had known of my quest and had concealed the island so that impious hands should not interfere."

The island was about 150 yards long and 100 yards wide and was low-lying and sandy.

ENGLISH EDUCATION FOR INDIANS

The Tragedy of the Zenana

The education of young Indians abroad is the subject of an article in the "Fortnightly" by Cornelia Sorabji. "Boys are sent to England, and when they return to India to the brides acquired in infancy, or marked down for them by family arrangement in the homes of the orthodox, they find themselves ill-matched. They no longer want only 'the successful mother of sons' in their wives; they want companions. Yet the only condition often, upon which the mother-grandmothers have allowed the boys to be sent to England, is that they shall marry Hindu girls before they leave home, or betroth themselves as boy and girl, and that the girl shall be brought up in the strictest orthodoxy to atone for the laxity allowed the boy in sending him overseas.

"The tragedy of their married life on the boy's return needs no description.

"I know of a case where the old father thought to provide against a dénouement of this sort by educating both the boy and girl in Europe. He chose a bride for his son from the right shelf of orthodoxy, and having betrothed, or 'firstly' married these children, he sent the boy to England, the girl to Paris.

"When they were about 18 they were fetched back to India, and there was a great 'second marriage,' the marriage proper, in which they walked the seven steps round the sacred fire, and began their life as man and wife.

"The girl had come back a translation into French. She spoke nothing but French; she dressed French, even to hat and shoes. She found herself an inmate of a zenana with women of all generations, from great-grandmother downwards, with none of whom had she a word or thought or ambition in common. The women in their turn were horrified at her. She had none of the attributes of a Hindu bride proper. True, they could re-translate her into the vernacular. They could make her put away her French fripperies and dress in sarees and wear bare feet, which they delighted to dye with henna; they could put the black absit omen ointment under her eyes, and oil her hair till it clung in close, sticky strands to her forehead. To all these things she submitted like one from whose body the soul has fled; but they could not make her speak their language in a day, nor in a day could they teach her the worship of her husband—how to cook his food and wait upon him, or the wifely etiquette, how to hide her face in his presence. . . .

"I suspect that her tragic little wan face and her silence, and the impression she gave as of a light put out by some rough, careless hand were her best advocates with the women of that zenana. At last the oldest of the women spoke. 'Tell us what we can do,' she said, 'to make you less unhappy.'

"And she, poor child ever solitary while ever companioned, pining for privacy and for the sound of the language of happier days, for the touch of familiar things, begged: 'Let me have one hour a week to myself to do as I will. I will break no rules."

"And when this wish was granted, she dressed herself in her French clothes, hat and all, and walked up and down the room talking French aloud to herself!"

HELICOPTER FLIGHT RECORD

M. Oehmichen Accomplishes One Circular Kilometre

Paris, May 6.

The French engineer and inventor M. Oehmichen on Sunday evening, for the first time on record, successfully accomplished a flight of one circular kilometre on his helicopter aeroplane. The flight was made in the Arbouan district, on the outskirts of Valentigney, near the French eastern frontier, and it was officially recorded by a representative of the National Aeronautical Department. The flight occupied seven minutes 40 seconds. During the flight M. Oehmichen maintained his helicopter at an average height of one metre, but on curves he rose to between eight and ten feet from the ground. On returning to its starting point the helicopter landed without the slightest difficulty. The machine was one on which Oehmichen made the first helicopter flight on record of five minutes in a straight line. The machine, which was driven by a 180 h.p. engine, carried a gyroscope of 1 metre 80 in diameter.

French experts regard M. Oehmichen's latest flight as equal in importance, in the history of the development of the helicopter, to Henry Farman's historic first aeroplane flight of a circular kilometre at Issy-les-Moulineaux in the early part of 1908. The flight is the outcome of a long series of experiments which M. Oehmichen has been carrying on for many months past in association with the Peugeot firm of motor-car and cycle constructors. He proposes in the near future to transfer his operations to Issy-les-Moulineaux, on the outskirts of Paris, which was the scene of the earliest triumphs of Farman, Blériot, and other famous pioneers of human fight.—"Morning Post.

MODERN LITERATURE

Some Criticisms by Sir Gilbert Parker

Sir Gilbert Parker, who was admitted a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature last month, lectured before the Society on "Books and the Man" at 2, Bloomsbury Square.

He began with a reference to the modern railway bookstall, with "its classics for threepence and its society revelations at two guineas," and declared that nothing was more suggestive of the rush of life to-day than one of these stalls, with its shower of books like confetti at a wedding. There was something improper in it, and he could imagine that if one of the ancients, such as the writer of Ecclesiastes, were to see it he would exclaim, "Take me back to my comfortable tomb." (Laughter.)

Lord Rosebery, continued Sir Gilbert Parker, had said that most of the books on our shelves should be burned. When he (the speaker) mentioned the remark to his publisher, the reply came, "It is the authors who should be burned,' and he had answered, "Judging by your share of the profits your authors are too green to burn." (Laughter.)

The Test for a Novel.

A novel should tell a story. It might be a story of a soul, and not only of flood and field. There was only one test for a novel, first and before all a well-constructed story, dealing sincerely with human life and character. Further, it should reveal insight and should be sane and healthy. He would resent sweeping strictures on the reading of fiction. The best stimulated the imagination and the finest instincts of humanity.

Modern literature often reflected agitated experiences after the bizarre. Something—moral enthusiasm—had gone from us. Three principal things in the Twentieth Century were—cheap newspapers, cheap magazines, and cheap reprints of novels. These kept the mind of democracy on the boil. These opportunities were inclined to make the public think they were educated because they read. But he would say that to-day was the greatest day the world had ever seen, and to-morrow would be greater.

THE LIGHT SIDE OF LIFE

Coming Back with Something

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, June 5.

Clearly, everyone who goes to the Wembley Exhibition intends to come back with something. I suppose it is the correct thing. I do not refer to mud, because you come back with lots of that whether you want it or not; I do not refer to money, because however much you take you leave it there; indeed, the House of Commons this week rocked with indignation at the idea—at least some members did—of the following prices:—tea, 7/6d., dinner 25/-, cocktail 2/6d., all of which charges are levied in the Lucullus Restaurant, though I believe that the Hongkong Restaurant, when it comes to tea, also takes all you have without a blush. Personally, I can never understand how anyone can eat or drink 7/6d. worth of tea, but then this particular restaurant would not exist unless people wanted to go there, and so I suppose some people bring away memories of how they did themselves well and nobly when the Common Herd were struggling for a cup of tea and bun for 3d.

The Collector of Literature.

I am not referring to any of these aspects of the Exhibition in dealing with the things that people bring away. There is one type of person who collects every piece of literature which anybody exposes for any sort of purpose. If only they read them, a correct and authentic knowledge of the empire would be diffused over the whole of England, but I imagine either the greatest use is for distribution when the possessor returns to Wigan or Ashby de la Zouche and can loftily remark "We got this at Wembley last week." Of course, if you are to go round distributing leaflets on a large scale to your friends, you need a huge supply. Personally, I think not enough attention has been paid to the tastes of the small boy. He much prefers leaflets with pictures on them that he can cut out and stick all over the walls of his house, much to the annoyance of his parents. In this respect I am afraid that the Overseas parts of the Empire are not very thoughtful of the youthful taste, or sympathetic to his inclinations as a budding collector.

A Man of Some Taste.

This is a harmless form of collecting, but there are others. I notice this week that some visitor, he must have been a connoisseur, annexed another little figure displayed in the Tanganyika section. The other day the theft was of an ivory elephant. On this occasion I think it was a silver rhinoceros with ruby eyes, worth about £35, from which I gather that it is quite possible—arguing on Sherlock Holmes lines—that it must have been a Scotchman who took it, out of a wish to get his Exhibition expenses back. There is one other such figure, I believe, in this section, so they promptly put it in a case and chained it up. I would be quite prepared to hear that small thefts of this nature were innumerable. You cannot imagine a person going there and trying to walk off with a piece of furniture or a chunk of crude rubber, or even a handful of maize, which has won the first prize at some East African Exhibition, but there are plenty of tiny objects of skilful manufacture which can be dexterously acquired when no one is looking. And in many sections it seems to me that no one ever is looking. In one section I saw the other day there was not one single solitary attendant.

Certainly Not Brummagen.

Most people do not know that Birmingham is making a great effort at this Exhibition. Personally I should never have thought it was Overseas, but then, of course, you never can tell. The Exhibition grounds are littered with kiosks and similar erections which dispose of little manufactured articles mostly made of cheap metal, some of which they give away and some of which they sell. I think they must give them away, because I cannot imagine a person in his right mind coming home laden with them, as some people do. I am quite sure they never would have bought them, even though in these days human intelligence is at a low ebb. Fortunately, they do not for the most part have printed on them the obnoxious motto which characterizes seaside souvenirs, in the shape of: "A present from . . ." and other allusions meant to be a perpetual reminder of an otherwise forgotten holiday. Little bottles of scent and kindred manufactures are equally given away under guise of "samples," but few of them have anything to do with trade outside this country.

And there is finally one thing with which everybody returns who has followed the instincts of the crowd—indigestion. All the big Dominions arrange to dispose of, either by sale or gift, their very varied products, and when you have had lunch off lobster mayonaise and Pêche Melba, you find it does not mix well with Australian chocolates and wine, coconuts, New Zealand bananas, East African spices and China tea. For this reason most people think that one visit a week is sufficient—that is, if you are over forty. The small boy can go round every day and never suffer.

OLD SHANGHAI MAN'S STORY OF EMPIRE

Special Story for Broadcasting on Empire Day Written by Maj. Corbett-Smith

Messages from Empire statesmen were read at intervals during the broadcasting from all stations of the B.B.C. of the "Seaview in Seven Episodes," a "Commonwealth of Nations," written and invented by Major A. Corbett-Smith. The message from Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was in the following terms:—

"We have listened to the greetings of the Commonwealth Primiers with great pleasure and keen interest, and we send them in return our thanks and greetings from the Homeland The parent tree is still green and the sap of high endeavour still swells in its branches. In the generations that have gone we have launched our exploring ships on many a venturesome voyage, and to-day our people, our institutions, our traditions, and our methods are to be found all over the earth. Our days of voyaging are not over. The world of mind and idea lies around us in unexplored tracts more vasty far than this earth was to our seamen, and the Commonwealth of Nations centreing in this Motherland still hears the call to go out in an Elizabethan spirit of gallantry and doughtiness in search of liberty, justice, and peace."

Lord Reading, Viceroy of India, in his message said: "It is the pride of India to have fought for the Empire, and in protection of the might of the Empire India looks to shelter and to progress in peace. To-day, in India, men's minds will dwell on the strength of those common ideas which bind all parts together as a single whole."

The Earl of Athlone, Governor-General of South Africa, declared: "The interests of South Africa and of the whole Empire require that every step should to taken to improve intercourse between its people, and I am much impressed by the possibilities of broadcasting for achieving this end.

Lord Byng of Vimy, Governor-General of Canada: "As we come to realize more fully the diversity of peoples gathered under one flag—themselves free from wars and rumours of wars—we have a clear vision of what a happy world this would be if all the nations of the earth were living in a great confederation patterned after ours. Then, indeed, the universal brotherhood of man would be in sight."

Mr. W. F. Massey, Prime Minister of New Zealand: "Another Empire Day finds still unsolved many of the problems arising from the upheaval caused by the Great War. Only by steadfast adherence to those principles of truth, justice and righteousness, which are mainsprings of British life, will these problems and difficulties be most effectually grappled with."

WORK OF CONSULAR SERVICE

Recognition by Chambers of Commerce: A Scholarships Fund

At the meeting of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce last month a scheme was submitted by the President, Sir Arthur Balfour, for the founding by the Association of a British Consular-Service Scholarships Fund.

It was stated that the fund, for which at least £10,000 was sought, was not to be confined to Chambers of Commerce, but would be open to additional subscriptions from the general public. The scholarships, each of the value of £80 per annum or thereabouts, would be open to the sons of British members of the British Commercial, Diplomatic, and Consular Services, and tenable for four years, at any British public school included in the list of public schools belonging to the Head Masters' Association.

Sir Arthur Balfour said that the fund would be a means both of bringing commercial and industrial interests in this country into closer contact with the Consular and Diplomatic Services abroad, and of showing practical appreciation of the work of Brittish Consularr officers, who were under-paid rather than over-paid, and had great difficulty in the matter of sending their children home for education under British traditions.

Mr. Dunlop, Inspector-General of the British Consular Service, expressing thanks for what he described as "a noble and generous proposal," said that this touched the most difficult problem with which the British Consul abroad was confronted, namely, the education of his children as British subjects.

The scheme was cordially approved by the Association.

A number of resolutions were passed. One moved by Colonel Hubbard, on behalf of the Isle of Wight branch, urged the necessity of international action to prevent the discharge into the sea of refuse from oil-burning vessels, so as to pollute the waters at bathing places. the waters at bathing places.

A joint resolution by Sheffield, Oldham, and Newark was adopted, registering strong objections to the Hours of Employment, (No. 2) Bill, on the ground that it would most seriously handicip the trade of this country as compared with other countries. The Bill, the resolution stated, was intended to carry out the terms of the Washington Convention, but to adopt that convention before it was ratified by all other competing countries, including the United States, would be an act fatal to the trade recovery of this country.

By a large majority the conference passed a resolution moved by Mr. Frank Moore, of Leicester, viewing with consternation the Government's decision not to renew the operation of Part II. of the Safeguarding of Industries Act. The withdrawal of the protection hitherto granted under the Act, it was urged, would have a most disastrous effect upon the industries concerned, and must materially increase unemployment.

The Huddersfield Chamber presented a resolution in favour of urging upon the Government the desirability of considering whether conditions could be imposed whereby import restrictions and tariffs against British goods be modified and reduced when loans are raised in Great Britain by foreign countries, either on the free money market or by direct application to the British Government.

Sir Felix Schuster urged that it was undesirable that the Government should be mixed up in foreign loans at all, and said there must be complete freedom for the London market.

The resolution was referred to the Executive Committee for consideration and report.

Following the bad precedent of Fengtien, which repudiates all legal and political mandates from Peking, the Chen Chiung-ming party has established its own provincial court of justice in Swatow for the trial of cases independently of Canton. The Chinese litigants are experiencing great inconvenience as all sentences and verdicts passed by the provincial court in Canton are not recognized by the Swatow court and vice versa.

MASTER OF THE KING'S MUSIK

The King has appointed Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., Master of the Musick.

The office has an interesting history. In a letter published in "The Times" recently a correspondent wrote:—

"The first Master of the Musick was appointed in 1660, but from very early times the Kings of England have included in their households a band of musicians. Of Edward IV's 13 minstrels 'some be trompets, some with shalmes and small pypes.' Henry VIII rang the changes on 'fifteen trumpets, three lutes, three rebecks, three taborets, a harp, two viols, ten sackbuts, a fife, and four drumslades,' and 'sixteen trumpets, four lutes, three rebecks, three taborets, a harp, two viols, nine sackbuts, two drumslades, three minstrels, and a player on the virginals.'

"In 1548 Edward VI had eight minstrels, a player on the virginals, two lutes, a harper, a bagpiper, a drumslade, a rebeck, seven viols, four sackbuts, a Welsh minstrel, and a flute-player. Elizabeth enlarged and possibly improved this troupe. Hautboys made their appearance under Charles I, with 'recorders,' violins, and fifteen 'musicians for the lute and voice.' Nicholas Laniere was then master of the band, and he introduced 'wind instruments' and 'twenty-five musicians for the waytes,' besides a serjeant trumpeter and eighteen trumpeters. At the Restoration came a band of twenty-four performers on violins, tenors, and basses, commonly known as the 'Four-and-twenty Fiddlers.' They played during dinner, and even breakfast (!), while in the Royal Chapel anthems were especially composed with symphonies and ritornels between the vocal movements.

"Formerly, besides its ordinary duties, the King's Band of Music was used, with the Gentlemen and Children of the Chapel Royal, in performance of the odes annually composed for the King's Birthday and New Year's Day. The most famous holders of the Mastership were, perhaps, Thomas Purcell (1672) and Dr. William Boyce (1755)."

OLD LONDON

Stained Glass Window to the Memory of Daniel Defoe

It is good news that the Butchers' Company has decided to place in its Hall a stained-glass window to the memory of Daniel Defoe. The explanation, if any were needed, is that Defoe's father carried on the trade of a butcher in the City.

Let us have the memorial by all means, for London has not done too much honour to Defoe. There is a street named after him at Stoke Newington, and in Bunhill Fields may be found his grave, over which stands a grnaite obelisk reared in 1870 by the subscriptions of 1,700 English boys and girls. But for a public statue of the great man, the author of 190 books, one looks in vain.

The Butchers' Company, which has decided to honour his memory, existed as a fraternity of "bochers" so long ago as 1180, with a market on the site of the present Mansion House, another in Eastcheap, and a third in Newgate-street. Then, as now, it was an offence to offer bad meat for sale. In 1399 the sworn wardens of flesh meat brought to the shambles, called "Les Stokkes," seized two beef carcasses, putrid and poisonous, taken from William Sperlyng, of West Hamme, he intending to sell the same at the same shambles. The Mayor and Alderman ordered the said Sperlying to be put in the pillory.

The authorities not only kept an eye on the quality of the people's food, but also on the price. A proclamation in the reign of Edward III. sets out that the best goose be sold for 6d.; best sucking-pig, 8d.; best capon, 6d.; hen, 4d.; rabbit, 4d.; woodcock, 3d.; perdriche, 5d.; fesaunt, 2d.; spaude or shoulder of roast mutton, 2½d.; carcass of mutton, 2s.; loigne of pork, 3d.; loigne of beef, 5d.; pestelle (leg) of beef, 3d.

The Company's minutes record the admission of Daniel Defoe. He was the son of a butcher, James Foe, or Ffoe, residing in Fore-street, and became a member of the Company on January 12, 1687, by virtue of his father's freedom.

THE TITLE OF ULSTER

Its Royal Connexion: Ancestor of English Sovereigns

The suggestion in the columns of the "Morning Post" of a Dukedom of Ulster for a Royal Prince recalls the present dynasty's descent from the ancient Earls of Ulster and also the fact that Earldoms of Ulster have frequently been conferred upon members of the Royal Family in recent centuries (writes a correspondent).

In 1181 Henry II. conferred an Earldom of Ulster upon John de Courcy, Viceroy of Ireland. He is believed to have died without issue. In 1205 King John created Sir Hugh de Lacy Earl of Ulster, and from him all the holders of the subsequent creations descend. His daughter and heir married Walter de Burgh. Their son, Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster, was a great soldier and statesman, and the most powerful nobleman in Ireland in his day. One of his daughters was the second wife of King Robert Bruce, the mother of David II. of Scotland, and an ancestress of the Duke of Sutherland. William de Burgh, third Earl of Ulster, had an only child, Lady Elizabeth de Burgh. She married Lionel Duke of Clarence (third son of Edward III.), fourth Earl of Ulster in right of his wife. Their daughter and heir, Philippa, married Edmond Mortimer Earl of March, jure uxoris fifth Earl of Ulster. The grand-daughter, Lady Anne Mortimer, of this marriage was the grandmother of Edward IV., ancestor of all subsequent English Sovereigns.

In 1716 George I. conferred an Earldom of Ulster upon his brother, Prince Ernest Augustus, Duke of York, etc., whose titles became extinct in 1728. In 1760 George III.'s brother, also a Duke of York, was created Earl of Ulster, the title again becoming extinct in 1767. In 1784 George III. conferred an Earldom of Ulster on his soldier son, the Duke of York, on whose death in 1822 this title again expired. All these creations were in the Irish Peerage.

The Duke of Edinburgh.

A British Earldom of Ulster was created for the first time in 1866 by Queen Victoria in favour of her second son, the Duke of Edinburgh, afterwards Duke of Saxe-Coburg. At his death in 1900, predeceased by his only son, all his British honours, including that of Ulster, became extinct. Her Majesty the Queen of Rumania is the senior representative of this last Earl of Ulster. She is his eldest daughter.

WHAT SUPER-TAX YIELDS IN BRITAIN

Remarkable Figures of Big Incomes: Ireland's Modern Prosperity

The following details have been supplied by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury to the latest issue of the Official Reports of Parliamentary Debates with regard to the number of individuals and total incomes assessed for Super-Tax in Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the year of assessment, 1922-23:

2,000	2,500	19,758	44,729,621
2,500	3,000	13,917	38,444,951
3,000	4,000	16,477	57,324,596
4,000	5,000	9,236	41,569,892
5,000	6,000	5,910	32,558,487
6,000	7,000	4,009	26,203,465
7,000	8,000	2,783	20,980,719
8,000	10,000	3,658	32,887,279
10,000	15,000	4,246	51,801,250
15,000	20,000	1,768	30,374,593
20,000	25,000	913	20,374,230
25,000	30,000	514	13,987,583
30,000	40,000	567	19,217,058
40,000	50,000	291	12,974,863
50,000	75,000	278	16,865,005
75,000	100,000	127	10,776,263
100,000		137	26,671,371
Total		84,589	497,741,215

Similar information for 1923-24, it is stated, is not available, but it is not anticipated that the distribution for that year will differ materially from that for 1922-23.

The totals for 1921-22 were 89,662 individuals and £559,565,417, but then the whole of Ireland was included.

A COUNTRY-MAN'S DIARY FOR MAY IN ENGLAND

Curiosities of Recent Racing: A Steeplechaser at 72: Prince of Wales at Polo: What is a Professional Golfer?

BY BRIG.-GENERAL C. D. BRUCE, C.B.E.

Essex, May 25.

Now that the Two Thousand Guineas and the One Thousand have been run we are supposed to know all about the winner of the Derby.

A curious incident connected with the Two Thousand was the fact that Fred Bullock, the rider of Bright Knight, was convinced that he had won. As a matter of history Bright Knight appeared to be staying in while Diophon was certainly stopping, but only the man in the box can tell. Nor, as the writer knows to his cost, does even he find it always easy to decide when four horses flash past the post locked together.

In the One Thousand Guineas the main interest lay in whether Mumtaz Mahal who, it is well known, cannot really stay more than 5 furlongs could by reason of her colossal speed just get a mile in such company. It was conclusively proved that she could not. The race was run to suit her, but Plack, Lord Rosebery's mare, outstayed and easily beat the flying filly.

Herbert Jones Again.

A pleasing feature of last week's racing (May 12) was the return to the sport, though it is to be feared not to the saddle, of Herbert Jones the King's jockey, after a long and severe illness. As a first-class horseman on horses which other jockeys could not get the best out of, Jones stood out as a striking example. He had won the Derby, the Two Thousand, St. Leger, and Oaks besides many other big races; a record any jockey may well be proud of.

With a most cheery, genial personality Herbert Jones has many friends. One of the writer's early memories of him is connected with a luncheon party at Willie Waugh's house before the War, on the Berkshire downs. Mr. Waugh then trained privately for the Duke of Portland and the Duke of Westminster. We had gone over to look at the horses and sat down to a sumptuous and very well-served luncheon. For the best of everything was good enough for that most genial trainer. Miss Waugh, an exceedingly attractive personality, was we soon saw one reason which had brought Herbert Jones to Mr. Waugh's. He was also to ride some of the horses next morning.

It was a hot summer day and nobody wanted to do much except go round the stables. The writer remembers enjoying fully one of his host's excellent cigars. Whether Herbert Jones was disappointed in his efforts to secure Miss Waugh's company to himself I do not know: but anyhow the little man tried hard to induce the writer to go ratting with terriers in the home stack yards before afternoon stables. May he long retain his energy and cheery ways.

Punchestown.

Punchestown is not so much heard of as it used to be. The world in general can hardly be blamed if it gives Irish news the go-bye. But Punchestown is not exactly Ireland, for to its emerald green fields go thousands from all parts of the sporting world. Where except in Ireland, that land of anomalies, would you find a man of 72 riding over as severe a country as any one would wish to attempt? Yet Mr. Beasley, all honour to a name sacred in the annals of Irish Sport, not only rode but took a severe toss, luckily without any serious harm. He was up on his own horse Pride of Arras and "bought it" at the old double.

A horse it may pay to follow steeplechasinig is Bally-stockhart, the winner of the Maiden Plate. Four severe miles at Punchestown is no mean test, and a horse who can both jump and stay over that distance is quite capable later on of winning a Grand National.

At Chester, that most curious of English courses, the Cup (2¼ mi.) was won by Rugeley, a 10 to 1 chance, carrying 6 st. 4. The win of any horse at such a weight may be advantageous to a betting owner, but it does not in any way benefit racing.

A Table of Winners.

The following table of winning owners, Sires, Trainers, and Jockeys up to date (May 15) may be of interest. It may also tend to swell the takings of the Champions' Sweepstakes at the Shanghai and Kiangwan autumn meetings. After glancing at the losses made upon most of the fashionable jockeys' mounts at home if persistently backed, who would not jump at the chance of one ticket or 10 tickets in the Shanghai Championships?

Polo.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York were at Rugby for practice last week. Busy as the former at any rate will be this summer he wisely insists upon having exercise in the saddle. Those busybodies who cry out against H.R.H. taking part in point-to-points or even hunting, might do well to ponder upon some of the amusements of past Kings of England. Polo and point-to-point racing may be "nasty dangerous games" but most Englishmen prefer to see their future King so employed in his leisure hours rather than lolling around pulling the ears of King Charles' spaniels. Or, having his own royal ears pulled by the pampered parasites in petticoats with whom some of our past kings occupied their Royal leisure.

Prices of polo ponies have only occasionally risen beyond the usual this season. Three hundred and 50 guineas is a good price, but money well spent by those who can afford it for the finished article. The best player in the world is only second rate unless mounted up to his own form. At Tattersall's last week 880 guineas were given by Lord Cholmondeley for the very highly finished article. This was Bubbles, one of Walter Buckmaster's stud, and the pony is sure to figure in the International matches. As a matter of comparison, small things with great, the best polo pony owned by the writer when in Shanghai cost originally 80 taels. He later won a paper hunt, and a race in the expert hands of that fine horseman Mr. John Johnstone, late of Ewo.

Walter Buckmaster, who for the last 20 years has been one of the finest polo players in the world, has at last decided to give up the game. Not that he is not still good enough to play for England against America, but the claims of hunting have outweighed those of polo. He now becomes jointmaster of the Warwickshire where he has for many years been in the first flight. No finer horseman either at polo or across country has been seen during the last generation.

After leaving Cambridge Walter Buckmaster settled down to hunt in Essex and played polo in London by way of filling in far from idle hours on the Stock Exchange. Many a good gallop has the writer enjoyed in his company. After marrying, the new joint-master moved into Warwickshire.

Five International trial matches are to be played this month, the first at Ranelagh on Saturday next. The teams are as follows:—

England.—Major T. W. Kirkwood, No. 1; Major F. B. Hurndall, No. 2; Lord Wodehouse, No. 3; and L. Lacey, back.

The Rest.—Wing-Commander P. K. Wise, No. 1; Major F. W. Barrett, No. 2; E. W. Hopping, No. 3; and J. A. E. Traill, back.

Billiards.

The Shanghai Championship treated lovers of amateur billiards to no mean display. Both Captain E. I. M. Barret and Mr. Gordon Morris are players few would wish to knock up against when seeking an opponent for a quiet match at the County Club. But what is one to think of the cunning of the best professionals? In a match still going on when Newman and Reece were opponents the former made a best break of 1021. One can only say, Colossal! Newman showed the wonderful judgment, accuracy of touch, and care which stamp the high-class professional, and only broke down at a losing hazard off the red.

Golf.

The result of the £1,000 "Daily Mail" tournament at Deal has introduced to the man in the street a possible Championship winner of very high class. C. A. Whitcombe and his brothers are not new to first-class golf, but the performance of "C.A." at Deal marks him as a golfer who may go right to the head of his profession.

Four rounds at Deal with a score of one over an average of four speaks for itself. This score included one round of 69. Think of it ye worshippers of Colonel Bogie.

The draw for the Amateur Championship which will be played at the end of this month is out, and likely winners are already figuring in the many "books" both professional and amateur now made on first-class golf competitions.

The question of what is an "amateur" is once more brought into prominence owing to the action of some of the newlyformed Executive County Golf-Committees.

If the following letter sent to the "Times" by the Hon. Secretary of a very well known golf club may be taken as "the best thing" in definitions, one shudders to think of the difficulty some men may have in deciding which they are.

"A professional golfer is one who is, or has been, an ordinary member of any professional golfers' association, or who holds or has applied for or accepted any temporary or permanent position as paid professional or professional and green-keeper, or paid instructor or demonstrator to a golf club, or golf school, or golf society, or to a school or college, or institution, or to a private employer, or to a business firm, or, further, who is or has been engaged by a professional golfer as assistant professional and clubmaker, or who is or has been apprenticed to a professional golfer, or who is or has been a part-time-caddie-part-time-professional, such as are found, for instance, at North Berwick, or who, after the age of 21, has accepted money payment for playing in a match, or played for a money prize (as distinct from sweepstake money).

"Note.—A green-keeper is not necessarily a golf professional, nor is a groundsman, nor a caddie, nor a clubmaker in a golf club factory, who may be merely a worker in wood or iron and not a golf player, nor a shaft maker or head maker."

"The proprietor of or salesman for, or other employee of a sports firm making or dealing in golf clubs, and balls, etc., is not, as such, a professional. He may not have (usually has not) any skill at playing the game.

"Given the acceptance of the above definition of a professional, then an amateur golfer is simply one who does not come under its terms."

Surely something a little simpler in the way of a definition is possible? It might be easier to lay down that the converse of the old definition of a professional as "one who plays golf for a livelihood," is a sufficient description of an amateur. At any rate each individual would know where he stood without having to tear his hair trying to remember whether he "had ever been a part-time-caddie-part-time - professional such as one found for instance at North Berwick!"

Shooting Prospects and Fishing.

A friend who knows what he is talking about wrote yesterday (May 16) from the Helmsdale in Sutherlandshire N.B. where he is fishing

"To-day the river is quite impossible It rained all yesterday and all night. The river is up two or three feet and is like pea soup. Even to-morrow may be spoilt. But next day—of course a Sunday—is sure to be perfect. We have had dry winds most of the time and a very low river. Since I came up I have killed 16 fish, an average of just one fish a day, which is very poor for this river in May. X., who I am fishing with, who came up on March 2, has only about 80 fish. As a rule in the same time he would have 170 or 180 average."

"The outlook for grouse is perfectly awful. Bad disease and bad February storms killed them by thousands, and one sees dead birds all along the river side and small burns. Personally I have not seen a single nest and very few pairs. There have been fresh falls of snow most nights on the hill tops, and the grass and everything is very backward."

It is to be hoped that disease is local, and that more favoured localities are not so badly situated.

On the west coast, stags in one of the best Scottish forests known to the writer have so far not wintered badly. A continuously wet stormy spring may, however, have been all against heavy weights later in the season.

The following is fact not fiction; the only excuse for inflicting it upon readers of the diary.

"Paddy, a country-bred child, looking for pheasants' nests in the home wood with his father and surprised at the number of eggs in some nests:

"Do cocks lay eggs, Daddy?"

"No, old man, cocks don't."

"How lazy men are, Daddy."

This change of weather if it continues may make the partridge nesting and hatching the prelude to a successful season at home.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LETTER

Ideal Candidates for the General Election: How Shall Voters Choose? Quaint Customs that Bind Babies Born at Sea in British Ships

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Vancouver, June 19.

After a short and swift campaign the electors of British Columbia will to-morrow go to the polls in a general election. The last contest was four years ago when the Liberals, headed by Hon. the John Oliver, rugged farmer and typical western Canadian, were returned over the Conservatives, headed by Mr. W. J. Bowser K.C. Added interest and quite a few complications at this time follow the advent of a third party, named the Provincial Party, an offshoot of the Conservatives, who are dissatisfied with their present Tory chieftain. The Provincials are led by a retired millionaire lumberman, Mr. A. D. McRae who has given of his means generously for the nurturing of the new party. The latter is out for a general cleaning up of B. C. politics, the relegation of the professional lawyer-politician to the background, the abolition of patronage, and for business government by business men. Equalization of freight rates east and west, reduction of taxation and other domestic issues have been talked to death and Mr. Voter has his turn to-morrow.

Prize Pigs All.

It is conceded by all parties that never has there been a more promising class of citizens out as candidates, and as the majority of the electors are considered certain to vote for men as men rather than as attaches of certain parties, something in the form of coalition government is likely to follow the closing of the polls. It is not improbable, say political observers, that the Liberals will be returned to power, with the Conservatives coming second, and the new Provincial Party third, the latter holding the balance of power, and with a few Independents in support, being the real rulers. To-day sentiment perhaps favours the return of the Liberals, but the Conservatives are certain to poll a substantial vote even if they do not win. The Tories invaded the ranks of the church and the feminines and got many all-round popular men and women of standing to run on their tickets instead of hide-bound professional office-seekers. The experiment and its results are worth watching. It is also of interest to remark upon the fact that in Vancouver, which contributes six members to the British Columbia Legislature, a woman candidate is on each of the three tickets, Labour also putting up a member of the fair sex, although Labour has never yet been able to return more than two or three successful candidates.

Trans-Pacific Arrivals.

Among recent trans-Pacific passengers passing through Vancouver and Victoria were the Hon. A. G. Stephen, manager of the Hong-kong & Shanghai Banking Corporation, Mr. R. Steele, traffic manager of the Chinese Government railway, the Peking-Mukden Railway; Billy Hill, the jockey, who was on his way to England having retired from the turf; Captain J. S. Clark and 16 officers of the steamer South American which was sold in Japan, the officers returning to England; and many well known residents of China and Japan on their way to the British Empire Exhibition. Dr. C. Jones, who is 75 years of age, came in by the R.M.S. Empress of Asia on his return to his home at St. Paris. Dr. Jones was a passenger on the round-the-world cruise of the str. Laconia and was forced to leave the ship in the Orient on account of illness. He was accompanied by his daughter, who has returned from here to Canton. Dr. Jones is widely known on this continent for his treatment of drug and alcohol addicts.

Babies Born at Sea.

There arrived here aboard the Empress of Russia a passenger who did not appear on the manifest. He is the infant son of Yoshi Maksu Furutsu, and was born at sea 24 hours out of Japanese territorial waters.

It is the custom the world over for the captain of a ship to name the baby after the ship if born at sea. In this case, however, it was impossible to give the baby the name of the Empress of Russia, considering its sex. The honour fell on Dr. Anson Donaldson, D.S.O., M.D., ship's surgeon, for the child was named Anson. It is also the custom that all children born at sea in British ships are registered in Stepney parish London. Another interesting birth was reported on the arrival of the Blue Funnel liner Tyndareus from the Orient. In this case it was a Chinese maiden. Mrs. Chin Choy, a second-class passenger, refused to call her little daughter born on board the ship after the name of the vessel, as is customary, claiming that with such a name the infant would not live. The little one was christened by the ship's doctor as Leda, for the wife of Tyndareus, and Victoria for the first port touched after the birth. Leda Victoria Chin thus has Chinese nationality and a name which is a combination of Greek, British and Chinese.

Sir Henry Pollock of Hongkong, while on board the Empress of Russia on his way to British Columbia, accompanied by Lady Pollock, received a wireless message informing him that he had been included in the King's birthday honours. With their bodyguard, Dachsund, Snookie, as companions, Sir Henry and Lady Pollock are enjoying a three months' holiday in the Rocky Mountains.

Hongkong Coal Survey.

Dr. S. J. Schofield, professor of geology in the University of British Columbia, has just returned from China after spending eight months conducting a geological survey of the island of Hongkong to determine whether or not coal exists there. Although it is too early to reach any definite conclusion, Dr. Schofield is enthusiastic as to its possibility. The survey will occupy another four years. It is expected that Dr. Williams, professor of palaeontology, will go from here to Hongkong in the early autumn to undertake the study of fossils on the island.

"THE SPIRITUAL ISSUE OF THE GREAT PEACE"

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. A. N. Rowland on June 29, 1924 in Union Church, Shanghai.

"I am proud of the Gospel: it is God's saving power for everyone who has faith, for the Jew first and for the Greek as well. God's righteousness is revealed in it by faith and for faith."—(Romans 1: 16f. Moffat's Translation).

Paul was writing to the Jewish Christian Church at Rome. Its members lived in a distant city, in surroundings that were religiously repugnant. We are in a similar situation here and can so far be good commentators on the epistle. We can guess these people would be keen on their home connexions, conservative of their old traditions. We can also see they would be slow to realise the bearing of their faith on the people among whom they lived, for missionary enterprise is best focussed from a distance. Now the apostle did not fail to observe all this and what he saw made him say that he longed to come to impart a spiritual gift (verse 11). What was that gift? Not faith in Christ, as the Messiah who was already come, as the King who was still to come. The Church at Rome was already strong in that faith. Their Christian loyalty was already widely known (verse 8).

The spiritual gift Paul wanted to bring was evidently a new largeness of vision a sense of the full international bearings of the Gospel. God's salvation for Rome was not confined to the Jewish ghetto and its concerns. It was a power that could be harnessed to the problems of the Empire. We must remember that "salvation" in the Bible is a big inclusive word, as we can soon find from a study of the prophets and the psalmists. And it was when he thought of its wide social sweep and universal possibilities that Paul wrote "I am proud of the Gospel,—I am eager to expound it, especially at Rome, because Rome is the hub of the world, the seat of those forces that affect its destiny for good or evil. I am proud of it because it puts within reach of mankind the saving power of God".

Virtue and Law.

Paul was out then with a definite challenge to the existing philosophies of life, which turned on virtue for the individual and law for society Not that virtue and law were anything but good in themselves, but they were not equal to the social and international demands of the age. And they failed because of two deficiencies, the lack of comprehensive reach and of compelling power. Just as China in the 20th century has developed needs that cannot be met out of the code of Confucius with all its stress on duty and virtue, so in the Roman Empire which had recently emerged from the chaos of the Roman Republic the problems both of government and of conscience had vastly increased and demanded a new intellectual standing ground. It was because Paul was convinced that the secret lay in the Gospel that we see him standing as it were on tiptoe in eagerness as he looks across the sea to Rome.

"I am proud of the Gospel" he says, "because for the first time it binds in stable union the best in man with the best in God, man's faith getting a grip on God's righteousness. For the first time it gives man a power of leverage outside himself, whether he longs to be lifted above moral impotence, or as a citizen desires to be raised above social anarchy.

Nationalism Too Narrow.

"The Jew has the first claim to anything I can bring" says the Apostle. The Jewish scheme as we all know turned on the word Law. The word is scattered over the Scriptures like stars in the firmament, shining brightly as a constellation in such passages as the 119th. Psalm.

Yet as we learn from the Gospels it might so be worked to blind men even to their own insincerity.

In comparison with pagan looseness it was no doubt a fine conception, but for all that it had permitted men to crucify the Prince of Glory It meant in short an effort to accumulate virtue until it could weigh even against God's own righteousness. But Paul who had once been its champion, now had a gospel that declined to pit men's righteousness against God's, but rather put it wholly in the hands of God, making so much more of God's righteousness that human righteousness was simply reduced to faith.

So far it was shallow, but above all it was not equal to the broad international conditions of the contemporary world. It was identified with a racial consciousness and culture, and had no room for the Gentile. For these two reasons Paul was able to exult in the new conception of the righteousness of God which had come to view in his experience through Jesus Christ.

Cosmopolitanism Too Shallow.

But the Gentile view was equally inadequate although the meanings of virtue and of law had been thoroughly explored by Greek and Roman thinkers, notably by the Stoics. The trouble chiefly was the divorce between philosophy and religion, religion and conduct. One did not lead to the other at all, whereas they should melt into each other. Sir Henry Jones made this remark on the poetry of Robert Browning that "he was driven by ethics into philosophy, by morality into religion." You cannot separate the problems of conduct from the principles of thought and faith. The moral standard rises and falls according as thought and faith are sure of themselves or not.

Now there was no inward assurance in the Gentile world that could maintain a man's courage and hope in view of the temptations and trials of life. And further the conception of virtue and law fell far short of the needs of the uneducated and unemancipated. They had no place in the pagan scheme of life, and never could have until a new conception of goodness had been revealed in the character and life of Jesus Christ.

So you see Paul had good reason to be proud of his Gospel. It revealed first to the Jew and then to the Gentile a salvation-power which came through Christ and his marvellous translation of divine righteousness into love, with all its power of forgiveness and friendship that could be grasped by the hand of faith.

II

Now we need to remind ourselves again and again of this salvation-power which was once revealed and has never even looked like being superseded. Various crises of history have brought out various aspects of it. And before I finish I want to remind you on this morrow of the Anniversary of what is called The Great Peace, that there was a spiritual issue too easily overlooked. We have grown somewhat cynical of the Peace so far as it was expressed in the diplomatic, military, and financial terms of Versailles.

The Hall of Mirrors.

But I want to remind you that the Peace for which men fought and died included an issue that was not focussed by the diplomatists and could hardly breathe in the Hall of Mirrors. The place of meeting was well called the Hall of Mirrors, for all the politicians saw their own interests doubled and multiplied. It was windows they wanted not mirrors for such an hour, when they needed to take fullest account of interests outside and beyond. However it must not be forgotten that the Kultur of Germany which threatened to dominate the world 10 years ago was based upon a repudiation of the salvation-power which Paul speaks of here. I know that France had also repudiated Catholicism, and that if the signature of official France is finally stamped on this Peace we shall be no better off. But as it is the power that was defeated had a self-conscious culture that was based on physiological research rather than upon religious revelation. There is no need to decry the virtues and laws that flourished in the German fatherland—the industrial thrift and thoroughness that worked in close partnership with political astuteness and docility, resulting in an amazing efficiency from an economic and military point of view.

Naumann on Sedan.

But in all this scheme of life God was simply called in to ratify the righteousness of man, to provide victory as a corner-stone for the German edifice of law and virtue. I have a small book of sermons by Dr. Friedrich Naumann who wrote the famous book on "Middle Europe."

He was a pastor before he became a Nationalist leader, and this is what he says in a sermon preached on the anniversary of Sedan. "In the hand of God the battle is of service to progress—out of the battles of men is built up the history of the world of which God is the master." The idea throughout the sermon seems to be that God comes in to crown the righteousness of man instead of man having to seek the righteousness of God. And it is not surprising that the same defects were found in this Kultur as in the schemes of life critized by Paul so long ago.

(1) There was an extraodinary lack of inwardness, an apparent absence of conscience and compassion and the finer feelings by which humanity should be distiinguished.

(2) There was an utter lack of breadth; the spectacle was given of a harsh nationalism advancing by means of contempt and oppression.

It is fair to say, I think, that the inspiring motive of the Central League, as it was then called, was to set up a scheme of Kultur, analogous to that of the Jew and the Roman, sustained by its own sense of privilege and virtue and opposed to an obedience of faith to the righteousness of God.

A Gospel to Be Proud of.

And because the leaven of the Pharisee is contagious it is well for the Christian Church to strengthen itself continually in the conviction here declared by the Apostle Paul, that salvation-power begins and resides in God, but that we can make it our own—so long as we remember that it is His. Our righteousness whether personal or social is never to be built up over against God, never can be. And why should it be when His righteousness has crossed over to our side, covered our sins, and made our cause His own.

That is a gospel to be proud of because it does a work that is impossible to any other philosophy of life A nationalist religion is too narrow, a universal scheme of ethics is too shallow. But the turning of the divine righteousness from a judicial standard over against us into a saving power on our side, which was the work of Christ, is the secret of spiritual growth at its deepest and of moral achievement in its widest scope. It brings us both the spirit of Sonship that draws us to do what the Father wills, and the spirit of Brotherhood that inclines us to do to others what we would that they should do to us.

POLITICS AT BED TIME

Once upon a time, my children, there lived in a little island close to Europe a man and his wife. They did not live happily, for the wife, whose name was Parlee Ment, did many things to irritate her husband, a simple man John. But John was a patient old fellow and sat down under his wife's tyranny with a becoming meekness, as, you must know, all husbands should. But the sad story I have to relate to you concerns their little son Jonathan, named, as the brightest of you will observe, after his father.

Now Parlee Ment was not a good mother, and all you little girls who read this must take warning by her awful example, for when you grow up one day you will have little boys, though I am sure you will be good to them. And Parlee Ment was unkind to little Jonathan, taking all his sweeties away from him and making him run about all covered in rags; never comforting him when he cried or listening when he complained. Of course old John saw all this, but as we have said he was a mild man, and moreover he was very worried with his business at office at the time of which I am writing, which is a hundred and forty years ago. So the old man said nothing, though there were times when he became uneasy, such as one day when little Jonathan poured his tea into the old man's bath because Parlee Ment had taken away the sugar.

And the day came, my children, when little Jonathan, in a very naughty mood indeed, decided to run away from old John and his mother Parlee Ment, and gathering up his poor belongings made good his escape from the old home.

Of course Parlee Ment was very angry, and in spite of old John's protestations sent out word that when she caught little Jonathan, why little Jonathan would just wish he had never been born. And she soundly rated poor old John about it, too, though in truth it was no fault of the old man's, excepting that he should have watched Parlee Ment, his wife, more closely in her treatment of the child and stopped her cruelties. But as I have said, he was a mild man, and when his wife told him she had sent out her brother the soldier, who, by the way, was a man largely of foreign blood, to catch the little fellow, old John just threw up his hands and looked worried, for this soldier fellow, was a cruel man, though not renowned for courage. But little Jonathan was a good son of his father and when the soldier man came he just picked up a club and gave him a sound drubbing. Now this angered his mother Parlee Ment all the more, for she had to pay her good-for-nothing brother for his work, and after much thought she did a very wicked thing my children,—a thing which causes me to blush, for you must know I am related to the old woman myself, and that is how I come to know so much of this story. She went to a very savage man who stuck feathers into his hair and painted his face red, and who, moreover, hated little Jonathan because the child had gone to live on land which really belonged to the red man. And when this red man caught little Jonathan he was very cruel to him indeed, and pinched him all over till he was black and blue. But the child was a son of his father, as we have said and one day he got away and secured his club, and after finding the red man again gave him a good drubbing too.

But old John began to hear of these things, and in spite of his mildness, he was very fond of the child and brought pressure to bear on the old lady, so that she had to leave the boy alone.

But now, sad to relate, the child was not so grateful to his old Dad as he should have been, for he was only a little boy, and like all little boys, given to great naughtiness at times. Also, he did not quite realize what old John had done for him, and he was wont to go telling the old man's neighbours how he had beaten his father, which was very wrong of him as you must all agree, for even if it were true, which it was not, strictly speaking, small boys should never boast of having beaten their parents, but should, rather, be ashamed of it.

And the lad continued in this way for many many years, saddening the life of his father, who was growing old. But he was not really a bad, boy, and one day, not so many years ago, when the old man had to contend with a monstrous enemy and his friends, known as Ger Manie, the youngster repented. He saw his dad receiving many blows, and could not but admire the gallant way in which the old man fought. But he watched the fight for some time before shame smote him, and then he joined in and dealt a few lusty blows on his own because by now he was grown to a powerful young man, and the monster Ger Manie, having grown tired also, saw that it was hopeless to continue against such odds and so ran away helter skelter for safety.

And then, my children, the old man and his son embraced each other and were reconciled, and even old Parlee Ment joined in and was sorry for all she had done. So the old man wept because his son had come back, and the old lady wept at the thought of her past misdeeds, and young Jonathan wept at the thought of his own vain boastings as a child, so they all wept together. And then they all cheered up and lived happy ever after.

The untimely death of Pte. Melvin E. Freeman, United States Marine Corps, took place on board the U.S.S. Huron last Saturday as a result of burns suffered on June 21 while stationed at Camp Schurman, Peitaiho Beach. The accident was due to an explosion of a kerosene lamp while Freeman accompanied by several others was boiling water for camp use. He was transferred to the sick bay on board the U. S. S. Huron for treatment, but there was no hope of saving his life. His family live at Mataline Falls, Washington.

FANNING THE FLAMES OF HATRED

(Contributed).

On August 4, 1914, commenced and on November 11 terminated, the greatest catastrophe in history—the world war. That war, and all it entailed, can never be effaced from history and never removed from living memory; and while its effects will be felt, by victor and vanquished alike for many generations to come, it still remains, to those who were concerned or interested in it directly or indirectly, as a ghastly nightmare constantly obtruding itself, and a glaring reflexion of man's crowning triumph and glory in futility since the world began. We all of us, in our hearts, want to forget that war, but cannot; for on all men and women of the present generation, in all stations of life and of all nationalities, the war constantly has its (generally baneful) influence—economically, sentimentally, physically and morally. This influence, this reminder of those four terrible years when half of the world's modern civilization paid tribute to the idol of slaughter—the modern Moloch—who ever was Satiety Unsatisfied, may in many cases be indefinite and indefinable, but always it is there. We cannot forget the war, however much we would like to, but we can hope and expect that we shall not unnecessarily be reminded of it and of what it meant and means. And yet such unnecessary reminders are constantly occurring though the medium of the one agency which really could be interesting and instructive, and even uplifting—the cinema.

Why, nearly six years after the termination of the war, do our local cinema exhibitors persist in showing pictures of or concerning the war? Possibly the exhibitors in Shanghai are to blame in showing war pictures years old and which have been forgotten in other parts of the world; if not, it can only be assumed that the producers, faced with a famine in suitable subjects, still continue to appeal to the public by fanning those international flames of hatred which, owing to five and a half years of political and diplomatic blundering and national unreasonableness, greed and conceit, are still smouldering in the hearts of those who won and those who lost. The deeds of our late enemies, the sacrifices and the memories of our own peoples, can never be effaced, and, so long as there is a thinking humanity on earth a hundred thousand years will not, cannot, remove the records of the baser details of the war or humanity's true conception of them. We in Shanghai, like thousands of other places, have our war memorial as a solemn reminder of what the war meant, and it is not only unnecessary, but positively harmful, to remind us and our former enemies of those four years of Armageddon at a time when the chief essential to a rehabilitation of the world's normalcy is a prolonged era of peace, with inter-racial hatred at a premium instead of at a discount. This appears generally to be realized by all except the cinema people, and unless and until they also see, appreciate and act upon the fact that humanity has enough of war and hatred, they will continue in their present pastime of re-poisoning the minds of mankind.

A military officer is quoted by the "Asahi" as stating that the authorities are desirous of a speedy evacuation of Northern Saghalien, if possible, as the maintenance of troops there interferes with military education. The evacuation will, however, be impossible unless the Russian authorities give a clear pledge that the safety of the Japanese residents in that territory will be guaranteed after the withdrawal of the Japanese troops. Arrangements must also be previously made with the Russian authorities as to the disposition of the light railways, wireless installations and other equipment provided by the Japanese troops of occupation. Even if the evacuation policy were decided upon to-morrow, it would be impossible, says the officer, to withdraw all the troops within a fortnight, as is demanded by Russia. The sea on the eastern coast of Saghalien is shallow, and consequently the troops stationed there will have to march to the western coast to embark for home, this process occupying two months.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONTROVERSY

Texas Conference's Decision Merely Increases the General Confusion

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Missionary circles in the Yangtze Valley will be interested in the outcome of the controversy between the two missions of the Southern Presbyterian Church which was referred home for settlement. This question arose from one of the Southern Presbyterian missions attacking the teaching of another denomination in the Nanking Seminary, but the sharp divergence in opinion between the two missions overshadowed the original controversy.

In brief the two missions, unable to agree on a common ground, made separate representations to the Assembly which met in San Antonio, Texas, in May. The Mid-China Mission declared the Seminary worthy of its continued support and asked the Assembly to authorize them to remain in connexion with it. The North Kiangsu Mission at a specially called meeting voted to withdraw and asked the Assembly to ratify their action. Numerous representatives on both sides were at the Assembly and both cabled out the result as viewed by the respective sides.

Each Side Its Own Claim.

It was apparent that both sides claimed a victory and a careful perusal of the formal action of the Assembly as reported in the church organs which have lately come to hand indicates that the matter has only been partially settled, though the Mid-China Mission has scored heavily.

The Assembly granted the request of the Mid-China Mission to remain in the Seminary, which was in fact all that this Mission really asked. For them then the question is settled until opened on entirely new ground and they should rejoice over the prospect of peace.

The North Kiangsu Mission was advised to hold another meeting at an early date and sonsider whether or not they might not see the way clear to remain in the union and continue the effort for orthodox teaching. The courteously worded deliverance of the Assembly might have been construed as a complete defeat for the North Kiangsu Mission except for the last clause, which is capable of two interpretations. This last clause empowers this Mission after reconsideration to put into effect whatever policy it deems wise and best. This is seized on by those who took the most extreme attitude as authorizing them to continue their policy of withdrawal if they still think best. It is interpreted by those who favour remaining in the union as meaning that they can follow their own line of action in what they do after getting back in. Unless the Executive Committee controlling the two missions defines the meaning of this last clause very clearly, the whole matter rests just where it was before. Another full meeting is being called for October 10 and no one risks an opinion as to what it will bring forth.

It is probable that the majority will take the ground that they are fully authorized to withdraw, but they may think twice before they act upon it, for the minority, which is of no mean strength, can say at once that if the mission is able to do what it deems best they can also demand a division of the mission along the lines of those who favour or disfavour the union. Whether the minority will press this point remains to be seen but if they do they will be on strong ground, as they will be in line with the instructions of the Assembly to remain in the union.

No Concession to Modernists.

Another action of this Assembly will be of far more general interest than the above. This was the positive and overwhelming refusal of the Assembly to redefine any of its doctrinal statements to fit the present day controversy of the Modernists and the Fundamentalists. An organized effort was made to get a deliverance on these matters under discussion but the Assembly would have none of it. Dr. Lyon, a former moderate of the Assembly declared that the Southern Presbyterian Church is sound to the core and that nothing but harm could result from injecting these questions, which tended to strife and confusion. Another speaker protested that he was a whole-souled Presbyterian but the proposed changes were intended to make of him "a Presbyterian and a half!" The Assembly showed its complete faith in the soundness of the whole denomination by casting out all proposals to define old and well established doctrines.

This action is a rebuke to those who believe that all sound teaching is in danger and who think largely in controversial terms. It is also a gentle announcement to the Modernists that their heresies are not worthy of notice, and that the church will continue as of old.

U. S. DEMOCRATS' CHOICE

BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

The nomination of John W. Davis of West Virginia for the Presidency of the United States by the Democratic Party ended one of the most historic political battles which ever took place at a nominating convention in the United States. Mr. McAdoo throughout had a clear plurality allthough he could not muster the two-thirds vote necessary for a nomination. Governor Smith of New York State kept a close second to the very end of the struggle. Mr. Davis and Senator Ralston of Indiana divided between them the third and fourth places.

The selection of John W. Davis places the Democratic Party in an unusually strong position. Mr. McAdoo suffered from the Wilsonian heritage. He is a son-in-law of the late President and his political heir. He was Wilson's Secretary of Treasury. In a measure he is responsible for Wilson's Presidency. Being so closely associated with Wilson, all the opponents of the late President, all those who were unsympathetic with his programme and methods naturally witheld their support from his heir. Wilsonism is stronger to-day in the United States than it was when Harding was elected President, but it is not sufficiently strong to make McAdoo President.

A Son of the Masses.

Governor Smith presents quite a different situation. He is a son of the masses. A product of the East Side of New York, of the Ghetto and the "shanty" Irish quarter, a fishermonger at one time and later interested in an express company, he presents to the American mind that remarkable product, a self-made man. And Governor Smith is undoubtedlly a remarkable man. In spite of his association with Tammany Hall and the less refined elements of the Democratic Party, he has made one of the best and most progressive governors that New York State has ever had. Even radical publications such as the "New Republic" and the "Nation" have sung his praises. He has been straight-forward, alert and a keen executive. He has been a pleasant surprise even to his friends. Yet, he could not be elected President and was therefore not nominated. Two objections held against him. He is a Catholic and an anti-prohibitionist.

The amazing feature of the convention was the large vote Governor Smith received. A Catholic usually has no chance for the American Presidency because the country is essentially Protestant. The Ku Klux Klan and other anti-Catholic movements naturally opposed the consideration of his name in spite of his exceptional qualities because of his religion. In the Middle West, where the strong, independent vote has to be cast, the vote that elects, he would have stood little chance. Yet, his name loomed large. His stand on prohibition undoubtedly offended the women voters and a large number of men who want no change. Had he been nominated it would have meant—that the campaign would have been fought on the prohibition issue. It is unlikely that either party would care to make that the principal issue of a canvass at this time.

Mr. Davis's High Repute.

The nomination of John W. Davis helps the Democratic Party at this time. There is not a thing in the whole world against him, except his wealth. And that was come by not in business but in the practice of law. Some of his clients are the most important financial interests in the country. Before he went to the convention his managers sensed public opinion on the question of his affiliations. He issued a statement that he would not repudiate his clients for the nomination and his statement went to the country without much excitement. Perhaps no one expected that he would be nominated. But it is not likely that at this time the American people will condemn a man because of his wealth. What has been known as the "shirt-sleeve" phase of American politics is over. Men stand on their merit rather than on the smallness of their bank accounts.

Mr. Davis has been Solicitor-General of the United States and Ambassador to the Court of St. James. He is an honorary bencher of the Middle Temple. In both the United States and Great Britain he is regarded as one of the important lawyers of English-speaking countries. As Ambassador he made an enviable record for himself. He has had no connexion with the American oil scandal nor has he been involved in any of the difficulties of his own party, for his politics have been academic rather than practical. The campaign against him will have to be on general principles rather than on personalities. He is a ready speaker, a pleasing personality, with the manners of a gentleman. Against him will be pitted the New England sharpness of President Coolige and the aggressive robustness of General Dawes. His party will be united, for McAdoo will support Davis as he could not support Smith while with Governor Smith party loyalty is part of his religion. The Republicans on the other hand are divided, the radical northwest under the guidance of Senator La Follette having revolted and gone on their own.

GANDHI'S NEW MANIFESTO

Fresh Call for Non-co-operation: "Split" on Policy

Soon after "Mahatma" Gandhi, the Indian Non-co-operation leader, was released from gaol, he promised to make a pronouncement of his political faith (writes an "Observer" correspondent). His followers a few days ago received his eagerly-awaited manifesto, and the main points, as revealed in private cablegrams which reached London suggest important political developments in India.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect of the situation is the revelation that Messrs. Motilal Nehru and C. R. Das, who, in the enforced absence of the arch-apostle of Swarajism, have led the party, have failed to agree with Mr. Gandhi on the vital question of entering the Legislative Assembly and Provincial Councils. Messrs. Nehru and Das have seen fit to publish an addendum to Mr. Gandhi's declaration of the policy he advises, and therein is afforded clear evidence of something approaching a "split" on the question as to whether Swarajists who are elected by the voters should take their seats as Council members. Any immediate outcome of this disagreement in policy is difficult to forecast. If Gandhi's advice regathers its old sway, a fresh boycott of the institutions set up for government is extremely probable. On the other hand, if the policy of Messrs. Nehru and Das prevails, Mr. Gandhi will probably finally retire into political obscurity. It is significant, however, that the creed of Civil Disobedience (passive resistance to the laws and tax-gatherers), as a definite alternative to the present situation in India, receives ominous prominence in both Mr. Gandhi's and Messrs. Nehru and Das's latest pronouncements.

Gandhi's Statement.

Gandhi commences his long-awaited statement by announcing that he is unable to see eye-to-eye with the Swarajists in regard to the question of entering the Councils, and that the difference of opinion is fundamental. Council-entry, he maintains, is inconsistent with non-co-operation. To be out of the legislative bodies is, in his opinion, far more advantageous than to be in them. He concedes that resolutions passed by the Congress at Delhi and Cocanada permitted "those who have no conscientious scruples to enter the Councils and Assembly if inclined"; and, therefore, he allows that "if the work of the Swarajists progresses and the councils benefit, each ocular demonstration cannot but convince honest sceptics like me of error." He proceeds: "I will, therefore, be no party to putting obstacles in the way of the Swarajists' entry into the Legislature, though I cannot actively help them in a project in which I do not believe.

"With regard to the methods of work in the Councils, without following a general policy of obstruction, resolutions should be moved requiring the Central and Provincial Governments—

(1) to make all cloth purchases of hand-spun and hand-wove khaddar;
(2) to impose a prohibitive duty on foreign cloth;
(3) to abolish the drink and drug revenue;
(4) and correspondingly reduce army expenditure.

"If the Government refuse to enforce such resolutions when they are carried in the Legislature, the Swarajists should invite them to dissolve and take the vote of the electorate on specific points. If the Government should refuse to dissolve, the Swarajists should resign their seats and prepare the country for Civil Disobedience."

"When this point is reached," Gandhi pointedly remarks, "the Swarajists will find me ready to work with and under them."

The Swarajist Programme.

Messrs. Das and Nehru have issued a joint statement regretting their inability to convince Gandhi of the soundness of the Swarajists' position with regard to Council-entry; indeed, these two leaders say they quite fail to understand how entry into the Councils can be regarded as inconsistent with the doctrine of non-co-operation. They then proceed to outline the future policy of the Swaraj Party as follows:—

(1) Throw out any Budget unless and until the system of government is altered in recognition of their rights.
(2) Throw out all proposals for legislative enactments by which the bureaucracy proposes to consolidate its powers.
(3) Introduce all resolutions and Bills necessary to the growth of India's national life and the displacement of the bureaucracy.
(4) Follow a definite economic policy which will prevent draining the public wealth from India by checking all activities leading to exploitation.

Regarding Civil Disobedience, Messrs. Das and Nehru say they can assure Gandhi that the moment they find it impossible to meet "an obstinate bureaucracy" without resorting to Civil Disobedience the Swarajists will retire from the Councils and prepare the country for Civil Disobedience working through the Congress organizations under his (Gandhi's) banner "in order that we may unitedly work our systematic programme of Civil Disobedience." They conclude: "We feel certain, notwithstanding some differences of opinion, that there is fundamental unity among the parties of the Indian National Congress. Our joint efforts will furnish a fitting answer to a bureaucracy unwilling to recognize the rights and liberties of the Indian people; and we emphatically assert that in our determination to work for the same object and in the same or different spheres is expressed the determination of the Indian nation to bring the struggle for Swaraj to a successful issue."

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

"The Yellow Dragon," by Arthur Mills, (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.) is a kaleidoscopic view of life in Hongkong and on the China coast. The characters are numerous, including subalterns, Chinese, ladies of the upper and the under world, and an Irish adventurer with an Italian title, and the incidents are full of life and excitement. A capital yarn, written with great verve and considerable inventive force.

"Dog Training by Amateurs," by R. Sharpe (Country Life, 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W. C. 2, price 7s. 6d. net), has the great point in its favour that it insists on kindness, with firmness, in all the trainer's dealings with his pupils. The author takes his reader through the whole process of training a puppy, in easy stages, which, if followed by a person of average intelligence, and with the necessary patience, will result in turning out what every sportsman craves on his shooting expeditions—a highly-trained dog. The book is well illustrated by numerous photographs of the young dogs while under tuition, and should be a great help and incentive to owners of young spaniels, retrievers, and, in fact, any dog used for following the gun, to undertake their own training, thus saving unnecessary expense. The apparatus needful is so simple that the training may be carried on while out for a country ramble.

Miss Diana Patrick, one of the "Young Hopefuls" among our women novelists, has a new story coming along with the title "Dreaming Spires." She has written it at her pleasant home on the Thames, but by birth she belongs to Keighley, in Yorkshire. So does her life-long friend, Mr. Harry Wall, the famous-in-a-night author of "Havoc," the war play which has drawn everybody to the Haymarket Theatre. Another distinguished native of Keighley is Mr. Gordon Bottomley, the poet, whom we know best as the writer of that fine drama in verse, "Gruach."

Swift's remark that "A Newgate Pastoral might make an odd, pretty sort of thing" was the origin of Gay's "Beggars' Opera." Similarly a hint from Pope produced his "Shepherd's Week," of which Mr. Blackwell, of Oxford, is publishing an exact reprint, with facsimiles of the illustrations. The book consists of a most amusing series of mock pastorals, one for each day of the working week. In these Gay obtains ridiculous effects by describing the actual life of the English rustic in the time of Queen Anne. He does so with all the circumstance of the conventional pastoral poem, as it has been, from Virgil to Ambrose Philips.

The biography of the late Ambassador Page was one of the most successful books of the sort that we have had for a long time. In England it has sold nearly 50,000 copies, and in America the sale has been even greater. Mr. Burton Hendrick, Page's biographer, is now engaged on another book dealing with him as a journalist, an editor, a publisher, and an educator. He will also describe Page's remarkable influence as a reconciler of the North and the South, following the breach caused by the Civil War. The book will be published by Heinemann.

In the year 1821 a missionary went to South Africa. He was a visionary who thought to prove the equality of all men before God. Therefore he married an aboriginal woman. Sarah Gertrude Millin calls their half-caste descendants "God's Step-Children" (Constable, 7s. 6d.). She traces the results of this mixed marriage through four generations. This is a thoughtful, straightforward story of considerable human and historic interest. Through this tragic problem of mixed blood the author spreads before you the panorama of South Africa and peoples it with vividly-realized characters.

Mr. W. L. George, who is now a director of the old publishing house of Chapman and Hall, has just finished another novel. It is called "The Triumph of Gallio," and it will be published early in September. By-and-by we shall get a different book from Mr. George, namely, a popular history of woman's struggle and progress all down the ages. It is appearing serially in the "Fortnighty Review," so that it is possible for readers gradually to accustom themselves to Mr. George as a historical student.

Gleams of light on history come out in the most unexpected ways. Often by the casual discovery of some old bundle of letters. That explains the appearance of a book entitled, 'The Secret of the Coup d'Etat.' which the Constables announce. It is a hitherto unpublished correspondence that took place in the years 1848-1852 between Prince Louis Napoleon, Comte de Morny, Comte de Flahault and others. It has been edited by the Earl of Kerry, who is a good student of French history and literature. Mr. Philip Guedalla, whose own book of essays is just out, contributes one to this volume.

GOLF SIMPLIFIED?

Golf Simplified. By Cecil Leitch. Thornton Butterworth, 3/6 net.

As the books on golf grow in number it becomes increasingly difficult to invent a title. The one used for this book is hardly a happy one. It is beyond the power of Cecil Leitch or anyone else to simplify golf, thank Heaven. There is nothing in this book to indicate any attempt to do so or justify the title. One cannot but feel that a better name would have been "Cecil Leitch's Second Book of Golf." (But that is probably not true. Was there not a small handbook by her called "Golf for Women" or some such title published in the Spalding series of games handbook? In which case this is her third). A book about golf reflects the personality of the author in a very special way, so that even people who never remember the authors of the novels they read would never say: "Have you read "Golf Simplified" just published?" but rather "have you read Cecil Leitch's latest golf book?" And, lest the foregoing seem carping, let it be said at once that they would certainly add: "If not, you ought to. It is splendid:" It has always seemed to the present reviewer that the best golf book title was "Taylor on Golf." But then Taylor's was not a very good book and, since this one is excellent, we very willingly forego a good title.

It is true that in this little book the author has endeavoured to suppress her personality—quite vainly of course. She has confined herself to the task of instruction and has compiled an excellent teaching manual, full of sound knowledge set forth in a direct and simple manner. She touches upon all the important points of golf and has valuable information to impart about each. These include not only the playing of the different shots in all conditions, but also such matters as the selection and care of clubs, the cut and material of costume, the choice of stockings and shoes. And throughout we feel the conscious endeav ur to keep herself in the background. Such self-abnegation is never appreciated, and in this case it is the cause of the only quarrel we have with the book. We want more of her own golfing experience, some of the countless stories she must have to tell of closely contested finals, heroic chances taken at decisive issues, cases of luck good and bad that decided games. She must have a great store of such tales, not only about her own game but also of other great golfers, for there is no more assiduous follower of the games of others than Cecil Leitch. Perhaps she is saving all these things for another book. Let us hope so, and that it will be published soon. No doubt she will need some persuasion to write the book, for she is, like most people who are pre-eminent in any special things, very modest. In this little book, in one of her rare touches upon her own game, she refers to herself as a bad putter, and points out what she has to say about putting by an admiring description of the method of Joyce Wethered whom she calls the best woman putter she has known. Now Cecil Leitch is by no means a bad putter. She has played through many a big meeting without exceeding the par excellence of 36 putts in any round of it. Of course she has her bad patches as do all the great golfers; but no more frequently. Compared to Harry Vardon, for instance, she is excellent in this department. And Harry Vardon has been supreme in golf longer than any man.

Joyce Wethered is a very great golfer, and nobody avows it more wholeheartedly than Cecil Leitch. It is probably a little early to refer to the younger woman (as she was called in this morning's N. C. D. N.) as "the greatest woman golfer of all time." Cecil Leitch has not finished winning open championships, and no other woman yet has attained her sure, convincing, professional-like punch at the ball. She has also a pre-eminent knowledge of the game which she imparts very clearly in this excellent little book.

Pegeen Lofting

A PEKING POET

"Velleties" By Carroll Lunt Published by La Librairie Française, Peking. —Price $2.

The learned Dr. Johnson, the Heroic Couplet ever echoing in his ears, is reputed to have condemned blank verse on the ground that it too closely resembled prose, a criticism of little weight no doubt; but a form of poetry which pays little or no heed to any shape or rhythmical pattern is liable to be brought to censure by a more humble critics than the worthy writer of dictionaries.

Mr. Lunt's "Velleities," a booklet of poems, if we may so extend the term, marks a new departure in poetic diction which is rather to be feared than welcomed. The "Velleities" are not lacking in either originality or in imaginative conception. Mr. Lunt has indeed ideas which, if expressed in more truly poetical language and form, would be worthy of merit. As matters stand, he at his best reaches a certain happiness of expression, and at his worst sinks to a kind of doggerel void of rhyme, rhythm or reason.

"O Happy Child," a short fragment, has a rather pleasing opening in the naive and expressive lines.—

"By my side he stood
And in his hand a drawing held
Crude lines, two circles and a square,
'A Bus' he whispered
Child eyes in wonder shining."

The metrical effect now becomes lost in a burst of prose which follows:

"And in his dear little vision
Was a street and all the moving gladness of life."

"Love As of Old," the principal poem, is in ballad form and is the only work of any length in this series. In theme it is a sufficiently commonplace tragedy, though not uninteresting in itself. The metre is perhaps rather of the nature of a Quixotic canter, though it is fairly reliable. We reluctantly accept such rhymes as "noise" and "rejoice," but feel completely bowled over at the lines.

"What does he slinking out the door?
She heard her father yell
Bring him in here to say his say, or else go straight to Hell."

"The City Wall," though written with a steady metre, has a vagueness of thought which defies all comprehension. Like the music of Cyril Scott and some modern composers, one is left in doubt as to whether it is the expression of a deep thought or any thought at all.

"On A Visit to the Peking Union Medical College" is a "Chamber of Horrors" with more or less the air of a prospectus. The poet's humour flits from many human miseries to the subject of electric dynamoes and steam boilers in the most alarming manner.

"The Eden at Carlisle" and the "Fortune Teller" are perhaps the best. The former has some rather pleasing pastoral lines though the metre is a little uncertain. There is a degree of charm and idealism in lines.

"And swallow flits o'er buttercup in fields
Where sheep graze, and the shepherd gently yields
To slumber, lulled by gurgle of the stream,
Caressing wind, bright sunshine, his to dream."

"The Fortune Teller" is brief and slighty mystical, but to the point.

THE LAND OF THE SIMPLE LIFE

"Persia." By H. F. Haig (Peeps at Many lands series).—A. and C. Black, Ld., London.

Most of the readers of the Book Page in this journal probably know of the attractive series issued by Messrs. A. and C. Black under the title: Peeps at Many Lands. The volume on Persia which we have before us has eight full-page illustrations in colour and 10 well-written chapters on the history, climate, religion and life of Persia, a country larger than France, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland and Italy together, but of which the ordinary reader knows practically nothing. So much of the country is desert that its population is not much more than twice that of London.

The English name of the country is taken from one of its provinces, which the Greeks called Persis, and the modern Persians call Pars or Fars, but the Persians themselves call the land Iran—the country of the Aryan, or noble race.

Chapter Five gives an interesting account of Rustam, son of Zal, whom most readers of adolescent and adult age will recognize as one of the heroes immortalized in Matthew Arnold's "Sohrab and Rustum." Mr. Haig spells the names of these mighty fighters thus: Rustam and Suhrab, but they are unmistakably the same.

The book gives a vivid description of the life of the Persian peasants. They apear to have few luxuries; they live chiefly upon brown bread, to which they add cheese, curds, fruit, eggs or vegetables, and are consequently probably far less liable to fits of the blues than those of us who over-indulge in heavy meals, alcoholic drinks and tobacco. Perhaps a trip too Persia and six months of the simple life there would put many a dyspeptic right.

THE BIBLE FOR CHILDREN

"The Children's Bible." Cambridge University Press. Price 2/6.

In the spring of 1923 the Cambridgeshire Education Committee appointed an advisory committee to draw up a syllabus for religious teaching in the county. The task of preparing the syllabus fell amongst others to Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, King Edward Professor of English in the University of Cambridge. The advisory committee considered that for schools using the syllabus a Bible containing the passages of Scripture mentioned in it would be of value. The Children's Bible is accordingly based on that portion of the syllabus which is prescribed for children of from seven to 11 years of age. The text used is in general that of the Authoritized Version, which here and there the change of a word or the adaptation of an old spelling to that more commonly used in school.

The Children's Bible, it should be explained, is in no sense intended to be a substitute for the whole Bible. On the contrary, the editors hope that the possession, in a covenient form, of those parts of Scripture most attractive to children may lead many to a lifelong love of the Christian story and the Word of God.

The editors associated with Professor Quiller-Couch in the preparation of this little book are Alexander Nairne and T. R. Glover.

We are sure that all teachers and parents will be pleased with this book which supplies a want that surely ought to have been filled before. We commend the book to Sunday School teachers and especially to societies such as the Christian Literature Society in the hope that a translation of the book may be made for the Chinese, for we often wonder what the average Chinese—adult of child—must feel at having the whole Bible from Genesis to the Apocalypse suddenly thrust into his hands.

The Syndics of the Cambridge University Press also publish "The Little Children's Bible," a smaller book based on that part of the advisory committee's syllabus which is prepared for children of from five to seven years of age. Both of these wonderfully attractive books may be had locally at the Mission Book Company, North Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

CHINESE PROSPERITY UNDER BRITISH RULE

One Hundred Years' History of the Chinese in Singapore. By Song Ong Siang, M.A. (Cambridge), Barrister-at-Law, Middle Temple; Advocate and Solicitor, Supreme Court, Singapore. John Murray. 1923. 26/-net.

Few people, after reading "One Hundred Years of Singapore," by Walter Makepeace and others, John Murray, 1921 (of which this book may be considered a complementary volume) would realize how greatly the prosperity of Singapore is due to the amazing industry, self-sacrifice and business enterprise of the Chinese. From the Fifth Century onwards, the Malay Archipelago and Peninsula had attracted large numbers of Chinese traders. They came and went with the Monsoons, but wherever they found settled conditions and prospects of permanent trade they took native wives, whom they left in charge of their establishments when they returned to their native places with the produce they had collected. As the children of these mixed marriages grew up, the boys went to China for their education; the girls remained, but were never permitted to intermarry with the natives. Hence, wherever these traders settled, they formed very distinctive and growing communities, strongly Chinese in sentiment, religion and culture.

Sir Stamford Raffles recognized, both in Java and Bencoolen, the value of the Chinese, and foresaw that they would always form the largest portion of the community in the Emporium which he founded in 1819. He knew that they must be governed largely through their own chiefs and was content to trust to time to educate the native-born and permanent settlers to understand the value of British Law and Justice and the true meaning of freedom and self-restraint.

Mr. Ong Siang has given us a deeply interesting book, obviously a labour of love and involving a vast amount of patient research. We can trace the results of the founder's enlightened policy in the steady growth of the binding force of citizenship, of public spirit and benevolence among this important section of our fellow-subjects. The strict adherence to decades, which was probably necessary in dealing with the detailed accounts of the origin and history of the many prominent Chinese families, is, however, a very grave disadvantage in other respects. Topics of great interest, such as Secret Societies and Native Riots; Farming the Taxes; Gambling; the Opium Question: the Development of Tin Mining and of Rubber Plantations would have gained enormously by being treated separately. It is inevitable that the English reader should be a little irritated at having constantly to refer to the excellent Index before he can arrive at a connected idea of the Chinese view of these and many other recurrent questions.—B. B. D. in the "Cambridge Review."

THE MISFORTUNE OF BEING FAT

"The Sorrows of a Fat Man." By Henri Béraud. A. M. Philpot, Ltd. 6s. net.

"Le Martyr de l'Obèse," of which this is a translation, was awarded the Goncourt Prize—offered annually for the best imaginative prose—and may well be the text-book of those corpulent citizens who recently formed themselves, in Paris, into a rotund club for social and defensive purposes, for with all that gusto and merriment which traditionally, and no doubt naturally, go with gigantic girth, it is lined with a certain sadness and humanity. The elephantine hero, whose tragedy it is never to be taken seriously by man or damsel, finds himself in a ridiculously quixotic position as protector of the runaway wife of his best friend, and accepted as such, by both.

The scenes flicker merrily, film-like from Cairo to London and back again, by boat and train, with an extravagant absurdity that recalls, but does not equal, the adventures of Tartarin de Tarascon. M. Béraud cleverly saves his story, on the one hand, from farce, and, on the other, from sentimentality. As the mighty chest of a modern Falstaff may well hide the heart of a youthful Romeo, we must not, in future, laugh too unkindly at anyone over 18 stone.

EMANCIPATION

Why Should Women Be "Slaves" to Fashion?

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Our readers will remember, or so we hope, our report of a clear-thinking friend's analysis of woman's slavery to her clothes, or rather to the fashion of them. She hinted that the manufacturers, hard-headed men of business, and not the roving, fickle fancies of the modern woman, were really responsible for the sudden changes in style, and that women need not exhaust themself and their husbands' pocket-books each season in order to be artistically and appropriately dressed.

She says—she is something of an optimist this friend—that women have plenty of sense, only none of them like to be conspicuously sensible. Sense may be one of the most sterling of virtues, but the wise woman uses it with discretion. She may be convinced in her mind as to the wisdom of a course of action but she will not be its only advocate. And that is not necessarily sheepishness, or servile truckling to the crowd, no, it is another manifestation of her good sense, doubtless the instinct of self-preservation.

But let any woman with the wisdom of the serpent and the gentleness of the dove start out to free herself from the bondage of clothes, and she will realize at once that she cannot free herself alone. The solidarity of the human race demands an advance together. No lady who is not a martyr first and a feminine being second (or man either, the cases are parallel) wants to be too far ahead in the march of progress. That would make her only a freak.

The Modus Operandi.

The really efficient emancipator will find out others who think in like manner and will arrange a campaign which may be started quietly, but builded on such lines as to permit of its indefinite expansion. She will demonstrate, with the co-operation of her trusted allies, that a lady may consult her individuality in her dressing, and not be stampeded by mob psychology which says, long skirts or short, full skirts or hobble, for all alike.

And of course this super-woman will not offend the manufacturers. Why should she quarrel with some of her best friends? Nor will she be saying "Down with the couturiers!" They will not need to go out of business just because she may choose to wear the same suit two seasons, or even three. Adjustments there may need to be, as her movement grows. The undoubted ability of some designers may be set free to originate more beautiful things for our homes, instead of for our persons.

Perhaps it might even be that the amount of energy saved by leaders of fashion from thinking about so many different sets of clothes for each season might be turned into some profitable occupation so that some of the people in the world who do not have nearly enough clothes, who not only do not have new clothes but who have to wear their winter clothes in summer, or their summer clothes in winter because they have nothing else could manage to have appropriate outfits. Wouldn't that be rather pleasing?

What do you think about it? Is there not in Shanghai some woman ready to start a movement which will encircle the world?

AMERICAN CLUB WOMEN CONFERRING

17th Biennial Convention in Los Angeles

By Elizabeth Pepys.

At a gigantic convention in Los Angeles from June 3 to June 14 where the officers and representatives of the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America, an organization of 13,000 clubs, with 2,900,000 members, the American Women's Club of Shanghai was represented by Miss A. Viola Smith, Chairman of the Civic Department of this club, and Assistant U. S. Trade Commissioner, and by Mrs. F. J. Raven, one of the former Presidents of the club. Mrs. C. S. Lobingier and Mrs. Van der Bergen were also appointed as delegates, but reports written during the opening days of the convention state they had not yet arrived.

It is difficult to picture the extent of this mass meeting or the influence it undoubtedly exerted. From the full and varied programme outlined it is plain that the most vigorous and enthusiastic club women must have led an unco strenous life if they attempted to follow all the business, cultural, and social sessions. "Spiritual Forces" is the motto of the Federation and a glimpse at its committee illustrates their inspiring and constructive ideals.

The "California Day" luncheon enabled the chairmen of the different departments to meet one another and in four-minute speeches outline their purposes. Mrs. T. G. Winter, national president, spoke on American ideals, the problems of immigration and the need to have American women apply themselves to the working out of international relations at home and so develop the best in all people, not by trying to make them similar to Americans, but by understanding them and bringing out the best in them.

Varied Activities

The Literature division asserted that club women are swinging away from the study of literature which once formed their main object, but that greater discrimination in literary matters and a wider knowledge of contemporary authors were still goals to be aimed at. The Civil Service Division pleaded for the Federation's support in obtaining greater efficiency in this branch of government work. Musical education for the masses, welfare measures including reform schools for women criminals as well as for juvenile offenders and better fire protection; progress in home economics; wise legislation; enlightened and idealistic press service; healthier environments through home extension work; applied education as applied to conservancy methods; Americanization of foreign mothers, citizenship training; and wise consorship of moving pictures for children were all warmly advocated by their respective divisions.

Miss Viola Smith, who has a double interest in the Convention, not only as Foreign Delegate, but also as a California club woman, writes us that the California delegates as hostesses of the Biennial, delivered as their welcome to their visitors the "Spirit of Youth," and instead of greeting them with the usual city officials showed a pageant of Youth, typifying the coming generation of clubwomen. This spirit of youth or the virility of the of the coming generation was the key note of the whole convention, admirably expressed by Mrs. Winter in her address on "Spiritual Forces of a Great Nation."

On State Presidents' Night, each president presented a young girl dressed to represent the respective State flower, and then summed up briefly the greatest club asset that state possessed and what they were bequeathing to Youth. The Foreign delegates were heard from on June 9 and 13, reports of these meeting, however, not having been received as yet.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

"Books, we know Are a substantial World, Both Pure and Good," Wordsworth

In packing for the summer's holiday no mother will forget to include complete wardrobes for her children. Few children will forget their favourite toys, and yet too often both mothers and children forget books for the nursery and the first rainy day is made miserable in consequence. To lessen such painful contretemps the Chinese American Publishing Co. calls our attention to a special sale of children's books which affords a delightful opportunity of stocking up juvenile bookshelves. During the middle of the day too lively exercise in the hot sun is inadvisable and the unusual summer leisure gives a chance for many a boy and girl to become familiar with the classics—a chance which will not occur too often in the crowded days to come. The wise parent will leave the best literature in his children's way. It is not necessary to ram it down their throats: let them have the fun of discovery. But make it accessible.

Another helpful hint for a happy summer is "The Book of Knowledge," which as its publishers say:

> brings all the important knowledge of the world easily within the grasp of the child, so that it becomes living and unforgetable.
>
> In it Mother will find a whole world of delight, into which her children may enter and find noble companionship.
> The little tot, too young to read, will lose itself among the old familiar nursery rhymes told in a profusion of coloured pictures.
> For the boy and girl at school it teems with precious things,—stories and pictures of lovely flowers, birds, and fishes; pictures of the starry universe, the sun and his family that goes spinning around in the sky forever; wonderful stories of men and women who have lived brave and splendid lives, and whose fame will be handed down the ages.
> Here will be found all the games and pastimes, all the fireside enjoyment the children love, the mechanical interests of boys, the domestic interests of girls, and home-made toys for both of them.

This may also be obtained from the Chinese American Publishing Co.

The advent of Edna St. Vincent Millay has sent us skurrying to our book-shelves, and next, finding them empty, for somehow Miss Millay's poems are always the ones that our friends are sure to borrow—and keep—to the bookstores. The Chinese-American has the slim volume of "Figs from Thistles" and a number of her other poems included in anthologies, among which "Modern American Poetry," edited by Louis Untermeyer, is specially valuable as its six poems include "Renascence." "American Poetry: A Miscellany" contains eight of her sonnets and Theodore Maynard in "Our Best Poets" discusses her work and quotes extensively therefrom in the chapter on "America's Lyric Writers."

"The Lamp and the Bell," a play in blank verse, written on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Vassar College, and dedicated to "1917," Miss Millay's class, is also to be found in "A Treasury of Plays for Women," available at the same shop.

WHEN TO WEAR WHAT

The Printed Crepe Afternoon Dress

The printed crepe frock, which may not match the lining of a coat, is often softened with fulness arranged so as not to disguise the straight lines of the figure. It is usually almost sleeveless—with a scarf—or has long, tight sleeves coming well over the hand. Flowery patterns are most used in printed crepes and georgettes.

The hat is a large, flat capeline trimmed with flowers or encircled with flowers and leaves.

Shoes are of beige kid, lizard, or black patent leather trimmed with coloured lizard; the coloured heel as part of the trimming of the shoe is a strong note.

Gloves suitable for this costume include short gloves with little frills—worn even with sleeveless frocks—or long gloves of light coloured suede, not white.

Other accesories comprise pearls or Chanel steel beads or crystal beads with a mushroom cut. Such a costume is designed for the afternoon, for luncheons, or for restaurant wear. It would be quite wrong for shopping, travelling, or morning wear.

The Formal Evening Gown.

Several types of frocks are seen, and among them those of chiffon are prominent. They are untrimmed except for panels or sash ends and are generally accompanied by a scarf In fact, a scarf or shawl is imperative with an evening gown unless it has an ostrich feather boa to match. These boas of tinted feathers, curled or uncurled, constitute one of the main characteristics of the spring evening gowns. Also definitely of this season are frock that have long wings hanging from the shoulders, both the gown and wings encrusted with chiffon in another colour, giving the effect of a butterfly. Simple, straight dance frocks with hems of ostrich are great favourites this season. The lace evening gown is in black, black and white, or cream, while white and all shades of rose and red are the best colours for the kowns of the sheath type consisting of a straight slip made of a rich fabric or of satin, sometimes beaded in unusual patterns. None of these dresses has sleeves, but there is no exaggerated decolletage; the back is often decollete with a high front neckline or the reverse.

The Cloche Adapts Itself to Tennis and a Loose Coat to Slip over the Blouse and Pleated Skirt is Needed.

Shoes are slipperrs or sandals of brocade with small buckles or are of coloured satin with embroidered toes and, occasionally, a gem-encrusted heel. When colour is introduced into the dress, satin shoes are often dyed to carry out the same note. Stockings are nude or apricot.

The Informal Evening Gown.

Lace, Chiffon, or Crepe is good for this type of frock, which is similar in line to the formal evening gown, except that it is not really dicollete at either back or front and has, in some instances, long tight or loose sleeves. Most models have scarves to complete them.

ITALY'S FEMINE "BLACK-SHIRTS"

A Patriotic Campaign by Women

Alice S. Rossi in "Il Carroccio" for May writes of the Fasciste, the feminine counterpart of the Fascisti, saying that strong patriotic feeling on the part of Italian women brought feminine Black-shirts into existence, signora Amalia Besso being their main organizer, and they have existed alongside of Fascism since its birth in 1919. Women of all classes have joined in the movement, the shop-girl and the lady of leisure side by side, the Roman district alone numbering 400. These feminine cohorts are non-political and their aim is not political drilling, but to represent a national spiritual influence, reinforcing Fascism and contributing to the moral uplift of the nation.

The women of this movement during the recent elections went about the country explaining Fascism as a spiritual force standing for energetic though not despotic action, brotherhood in labour, and uplifting God, family and country to higher ideals. No special accomplishments or training are required for membership but upon payment of an entrance fee and of a yearly membership rate any woman from 18 years of age can enlist and wear uniform and badge. The junior section, known as Balilla, includes the eight-to-eighteen-year-old.

Funds for philanthropic purposes, Christmas trees for poor children, help for the unemployed, for war-widows, the suffering and helpless are provided by these women and lectures and practical courses in specialized training are also part of their programme, so that their members may become efficient and render more valuable aid to their country. Their pin represents the fasces or bundle of elm or birch rods, surrounding an axe and bound together by a strap, such as the Roman lictors carried before the consuls and Emperors and its wearers are "steadfastly striving to purify the country from all disintegrating forces, that united in spirit as well as geographically, Italy may stand out in the light of the world as a nation that has triumphed over its worst self, a nation restored to security and stability."

HOME-GROWN TOMATOES

Besides supplying us with beautiful blossoms for every season the British Flower Shop is matching its horticultural excellencies with vegetable delicacies so as to make a reputation gastronomincally as well as esthetically. Just at present tomatoes hold the centre of the stage, and such a comfort as it is to know where one may buy wholesome fresh vegetables, grown under careful foreign supervision, germ-free and luscious. In a week or two lettuce from the British Flower Shop nurseries will be here again for sale at the down town shop in Nanking Road, and that will be another boon to the housekeeper who finds it difficult to vary the salads which the summer menu demands.

CHINA'S AND GERMANY'S MUTUAL CLAIMS NOW FINALLY SETTLED

Deutsch-Asiatische Bank Re-established and Buildings Restored: Recognition by China of German Loans: Germany Paying China $34,000,000

Peking, July 12.

The Waichiaopu this afternoon gave out the texts of the two Sino-German Agreements relating to the re-establishment of the German Bank and to the settlement of bonds and financial questions.

In the former Agreement, (1) China undertakes to return to the Bank as soon as possible all books taken from the Bank, including those kept during liquidation.

(2) China will return immovable property, together with the buildings thereon in Peking and Hankow, free from cumbrance: as regards immovable property in other parts of China which has been liquidated and for which the Bank asks compensation, China agree to pay the Bank $1,950,000 in Tientsin-Pukou and Hukuang Railway bonds.

(3) After that has been done, all claims by the Bank against the Chinese Government and by the Chinese Government against the Bank will be considered paid, with the exception of the advance, including interest, given by the Bank to the Chinese Government on the security of the unissued portion of the Tientsin-Pukou supplementary loan of 1910. In order to settle this matter the Chinese Government undertakes to take the steps necessary to make the hypothecated bonds negotiable and, in special, to take up the respective loan services with due regard to the interest accrued on the advance on the day when service on all Chinese Government loans issued in Germany is resumed. If desired, the Bank will advance to the Chinese Government the funds necessary for the service of these bonds for one (? year) commencing from the date of exchange of these Notes, the interest on this additional advance to be paid half-yearly at the rate of 7 per cent. by the Government to the Bank. Repayment of these advances by means of these bonds or otherwise will be arranged by special negotiations between the Bank and the Government, which will begin forthwith, the Bank undertaking not to issue the bonds to the public until the negotiations are concluded but for no longer than a year after the exchange of these Notes unless otherwise agreed upon.

Bank Fully Reinstated.

(4) The Chinese Government is prepared to reinstate the German Bank on its pre-war footing, including its functions as an issuing bank under loan agreements, and also to take steps to that effect, with the exception, however, of its functions under the Hukuang Railway loan agreement, which will for the present remain in abeyance.

(5) On the exchange of these Notes, the regulations relating to the liquidation of the Bank will be withdrawn. The order not to pay creditors of the Bank will be withdrawn on October 31, 1924.

The Note is signed by Dr. Wellington Koo.

According to the second Note, the Chinese Government agrees to the following in further execution of the second paragraph of the Note of May 20, 1921, annexed to the Sino-German Agreement of the same date:

(1) The Chinese Government will release the whole of the outstanding balance of German private property still withheld by China, the two Governments agreeing that the total value of the property so released, together with the property released since 1921, is between $69,000,000 and $70,000,000.

Payments to China.

(2) The German Government will pay to China in advance a portion of the indemnity equivalent to half the value of the released property as under Article (1), this payment to be made in the following way:

Cash paid in 1921 .....$4,000,000
$15,000,000 worth of railway bonds, namely, bonds of the 1908 Tsin-pu Loan, £1,400,000 nominal at 68, equalling £952,000 at exchange 8.42, equalling $8,016,792
Bonds of the 1910 Tsin-Pu loan, worth £950,000 nominal at 66, equalling £627,000 or $5,279,967
Bonds of the 1911 Hukuang loan, worth £381,640 at 53, equalling $1,703,308
Drawn bonds and coupons due June 15, 1924, equalling ..$15,839,909
These payments amount to $34,839,977.

(3) As final compensation for the balance of all the Government's claims arising from the war, the German Government undertakes to settle all outstanding claims of German private individuals against China except claims in connexion with the service of Chinese bonds.

(4) The Chinese Government will issue a mandate whereby the former declaration of suspension of service of the three railway loans mentioned in Article (2) and the Reorganization Loan is definitely cancelled and their full service resumed. Reorganization coupons already due will be paid a month after the exchange of these Notes except an amount in sterling of £1,087,768 or $9,160,094 which the German Government will deliver to China for cancellation. Coupons and drawn bonds of the three railway loans due before October, 1924, being secured in accordance with agreements relating to loans, will be repaid at the rate of two coupons and one drawing annually on the dates provided, commencing from October 1. The coupons and drawn bonds, due after October, will be paid on the due dates.

The Agreement Final.

(5) Execution of obligations under Articles (1), (2) and (4) will take place simultaneously, not later than eight days after the exchange of these Notes. The coupons and drawn bonds, mentioned above, as well as the railway bonds, will be handed over to the Chinese Legation in London by the German Embassy in exchange against an official notification addressed by the Legation to the Hongkong Bank, communicating to the Bank on behalf of the Chinese Government the presidental mandate provided for in Article (4).

(6) This agreement will be considered a final settlement of all outstanding claims by the Chinese Government against the German Government and German nationals and vice versa, provided always that they orginated prior to July 1, 1921.

This Note is also signed by Dr. Koo.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A RUSSIAN EMBASSY IN PEKING

China Willing to Exchange Diplomatic Representatives: Consulate in Shanghai

M. KARAKHAN FIRST AMBASSADOR

London, July 11.

The Diplomatic Correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" says that Britain and America are exchanging views relative to Moscow's declared intention to give its representative at Peking full ambassadorial rank in order that he may take precedence of the other diplomatic representatives. Britain and America and, it is believed, France are inclined to ignore the Bolshevik challenge, but it remains to be seen whether, if Japan appoints an Ambassador, this will modify the dispositions of London and Washington, although the case for modification is far from strong on its merits.—Reuter.

Peking, July 11.

Present indications point to the Chinese Government complying shortly with the request of the Soviet to exchange Ambassadors. M. Karakhan made the request shortly after the Sino-Russian Agreement was concluded. The Waichiaopu replied that this was a new question, not covered by the agreement, and would require time to settle. Since then the matter has been deliberated on and the Cabinet may decide to-morrow.

There is a temporary lull in the negotiations between China and the Soviet, as Moscow has not yet ratified the agreement.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, July 15.

M. Karakhan presented his credentials to President Tsao Kun, this afternoon, as the first Russian Ambassador to China.—Eastern News Agency.

Peking, July 16.

The Waichiaopu in a note to M. Karakhan on July 14 said that exchange of diplomatic representatives of Ambassadorial rank would be acceptable to China.

The Russian Consulate at Shanghai will be handed over to the Soviet on July 24. The Consulate at Chefoo has already been handed over.

The "Ching Pao" forecasts the appointment of Mr. Liu Chenghsiang, who was Minister in Petrograd in 1911 and is now Minister in Berne, as Ambassador to Russia.

The Chinese Government expects that M. Karakhan will be appointed Soviet Ambassador to China.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DISPUTE OVER PEKING RUSSIAN LEGATION

Diplomatic Body Unable to Hand It Over Until They Know with Whom They Are Dealing: Emphatic Answer to Waichiaopu

Peking, July 12.

M. Oudendijk, the Netherlands Minister and Doyen of the Diplomatic Corps, on behalf of the signatories to the Protocol this afternoon, replying to the Note of the Waichiaopu of June 27 regarding the Russian Legation, says that the representatives of the signatory Powers wish to give expression to their firm desire not to interfere with the relations between the Chinese and Russian Governments, but they also wish to state clearly that the agreements reached between these two Governments, as far as their respective Governments are concerned, are "res inter alios acta" (matters arranged between third parties) and could in no way weaken or infringe the engagements already undertaken by the Chinese Government vis-à-vis some of them or all collectively.

"Now the Diplomatic Quarter and the buildings within its conventional limits are subject to the particular régime which had been determined by all the signatories to the Protocol of 1901 on one hand and the Chinese Government on the other by correspondence and agreements in 1900 and 1901. From that time onward the properties within the limits of the Quarter have been subjected to international servitudes which bind the Chinese Government and the Governments signatory to the Protocol. The Chinese Government can only exercise or dispose the rights or properties of the Quarter within the limits fixed by these international servitudes, the nature and extent of which are known to your Excellency.

Who Are We Dealing With?

"The foreign Governments who signed or benefit from the agreements of 1901 can themselves only use their premises within the Quarter or dispose of them within the limits fixed by these servitudes as well as vis-à-vis of the Chinese Government as vis-à-vis of the Powers who were their co-signatories in 1901. Indeed between these co-signatories a number of detailed arrangements have been concluded during the past 24 years with a view to making it possible for each of them to benefit by the advantages granted them collectively.

"This complicated situation, which in 1920 compelled the signatories to the Protocol to assume responsibility and care for the premises of the Russian Legation, obliges them at present to hand over these premises only to the representative of the Russian Government with whom they will first assure themselves of maintenance of the arrangements which constitute the conventional status of the Diplomatic Quarter. Precedents show that this object is easily attained and the signatories to the Protocol think that their relations with their new colleague will be rendered easier if they are inaugurated by an understanding about the conditions of their good neighbourship.

"These discussions are therefore not within the competency of the Chinese Government but the signatories to the Protocol recognize that in order to start them they must apply for the kind intermediation of Your Excellency.

Soviet Recognized by Two Only

"Of the eight Governments they represent only two have recognized the Soviet and the others can only be officially informed by the Chinese Government of the re-establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Russia. By your Note of June 27 Your Excellency has already acquitted yourself of this task and by this communication you could have considered your obligations as entirely fulfilled. It seems, however, that Your Excellency is disposed to continue your good offices and the signatories to the Protocol should feel grateful if you would act as their intermediary for it is from Your Excellency that they expect the notification of the name of the diplomatic representative accredited to the Chinese Government by the Soviet and to Your Excellency they address a request to ask him to enter into direct relations with their Dean in order to discuss and arrange the little affair which is the subject of this Note."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

To Exchange Ambassadors.

Peking, July 13.

It has now been virtually decided that China will comply with the Soviet request to exchange Ambassadors.

The Government is considering the question of White Russians in China and while there is no likelihood of China denying the right of an asylum to political refugees, there seems to be a probability that a number of Russians who came to China merely in order to gain a livelihood and, failing, now find themselves stranded, will be deported.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE GERMAN BANK IN PEKING

French Objection to Opening as Mortgaged to Banque Industrielle

Peking, July 11.

The French Minister yesterday filed his third protest with the Waichiaopu with regard to the re-opening of the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank, to the effect that inasmuch as the building of the bank in question was mortgaged to the Banque Industrielle de Chine by the Chinese Government, it behoved the Chinese Government to prohibit the use by the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank of the mortgaged property pending the repayment of the loan.—Eastern News Agency.

Three Notes of Protest.

Peking, July 11.

The French Legation has sent three Notes to the Waichiaopu concerning the Sino-German agreement.

The first deals with general principles of the agreement, the second refers to the payment of German funds to China, and the third deals with the handing over of the Deutsch-Asiatische Bank in view of the fact that a French bank in Peking holds a mortgage over the German bank buildings.—Reuter.

U. S. CLAIM ON CHINESE EASTERN RAILWAY

Peking, July 15.

The American Legation yesterday sent a further note to the Waichiaopu briefly reiterating the position adopted by the Note of May 3 with regard to the foreign stock-holders, bond-holders and creditors of the Chinese Eastern Railway.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CHINA CONSORTIUM AGREEMENT

Special Meeting Called in London: China's Efforts to Raise Loans

London, July 12.

A special session of the council of the China Banking Consortium has been summoned to meet in London on Monday. It is stated that importance is attached to the expected attendance of Mr. Thomas Lamont, a partner in Messrs. Morgan's. The business includes consideration of recent attempts by the Chinese Government to secure loans from other sources.—Reuter.

Council's Recommendation of Renewal on Its Expiry Next Year

London, July 16.

At a meeting of the Council of the China Consortium held at the office of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation to-day, the representatives of groups present comprised Sir Charles Addis (British), who presided, M. Thion de la Chaume (French), Mr. Thomas Lamont (American) and Mr. K. Yano (Japanese). The Council adopted a resolution recommending renewal of the Consortium agreement upon its nominal expiry in October, 1923, so that it would remain in force subject only to the privilege of withdrawal by members upon 12 months' notice.—Reuter.

CONSPIRATORS IN CANTON

Agitators Plotting Against Foreign Governments and Their Representatives

Peking, July 10.

The Note from the Consular Body at Canton to the Canton Administration concerning plots against foreigners in Canton, which was briefly mentioned yesterday, was as follows:—

Your Excellency,

Canton, June 26.

I have the honour on behalf of my colleagues and myself to bring to your notice the fact that information which reaches us from various sources indicates that agitators plotting against foreign Governments, who are prepared to adopt forcible methods against the representatives of such foreign Governments in order to attain their objects, appear to be using Canton as a meeting place and a point from which to carry on their activities. While we feel assured that the Canton Authorities are endeavouring to suppress such activities and to prevent the carrying out of such inimical intentions, the impression prevails that those authorities are not taking sufficiently vigorous steps in that respect.

I, therefore, have the honour to request on behalf of my colleagues and myself assurances from Your Excellency that the Canton Authorities will not fail to take prompt measures to suppress such plots or movements if found to be within their jurisdiction, or alternatively to communicate with the local representative of the Power concerned to enable him to take such steps as the occasion may require.

(Signed) Eiji Amau, Consul-General for Japan and Senior Consul.

His Ex.
M. Liao Chung-kai
Civil Governor of Kuangtung,
Canton.

Authorities' Reply to Consular Note

Peking, July 12.

The Canton Administration has replied to the communication sent to them on June 26 by the Consular Body at Canton drawing the attention of the Administration to reports of plots against foreigners in Canton and requesting that the necessary steps be taken for the protection of foreigners there.

The reply states that the Canton Government wishes to point out Government has in the past been quite friendly to the foreign Powers and their representatives in Canton and, although the names and characters of the persons referred to in connexion with the reported plots were not mentioned by the Consular Body, the police have been ordered to take measures for the arrest of all suspects.

In this connexion the Canton Government wishes to point out that many conspirators against it are being harboured in districts controlled by Governments which the Consuls in Canton represent. The Canton Goverment will be very greatly obliged if steps will be taken to control these elements inimical to it.

It is reported that the Canton police have succeeded in locating a place where the manufacture of bombs was being carried on and in arresting five men.

Sir J. Jamieson's Free Speech.

Various public bodies in Canton are reported to be demanding an apology from the British Consul-General (Sir James Jamieson), on account of his recent speech in London, and agitating for a boycott of British bank notes issued in Hongkong.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

In reply to an inquiry from the Waichiaopu, the Nungshanpu writes that, although it is clearly stipulated in the treaties that matters relating to trademarks shall be decided by Chinese officials according to Chinese regulations, the Ministry is willing to meet the wishes of the Diplomatic Corps. They are also sympathetically disposed to listen to the Chairman of the International Trademark Association who has been asked through the Chinese Ministers in Belgium and Switzerland to recommend an expert in trademark laws to serve as adviser to the Chinese Government.

THE RENDITION OF WEIHAIWEI

Really Expected This Autumn: A Case of Take It or Leave It

From a Correspondent.

Weihaiwei, July 5.

Negotiations for the restoration of Weihaiwei to China were resumed at Peking a few days ago and the opinion is freely expressed that a final stage has been reached and that the British flag will be hauled down at an early date—possibly on September 30 next. It would seem that the prolonged and—to people who have made their homes here—the harassing uncertainty of the past three years is really about to end, though, of course, as has happened several times already, another hitch may occur at the 11th hour. It is said that the British Government is now taking a firmer line—the "take it, or leave it," attitude.

PARLIAMENT AND THE PREMIERSHIP

Meetings in Peking in Support of the Nomination of Dr. W. W. Yen

Peking, July 13.

Dr. W. W. Yen's friends and opponents are at work trying to influence Members of the House of Representatives in anticipation of the forthcoming vote on Dr. Yen's nomination. Mr. Cheng Koh, Minister of the Interior, gave a reception yesterday to some 200 members at the Chuen Hsin Tien. Mr. Cheng is a supporter of Dr. Yen. On the other hand, Mr. Moh Lin, leader of the Minchihshih, gave a reception yesterday to other Members at Taipinghu Club. Owing to the unfavourable weather both receptions were poorly attended.

According to the Chinese press, Dr. Wellington Koo gave a reception to Members of Parliament last evening at his residence with the object of aiding the cause of Dr. Yen.

Mr. Chang Yao-kuei, Director of the National Conservancy Bureau at Nanking, reports that Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan is in favour of the appointment of Dr. Yen as Premier.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF FUKIEN

Request for Retention of Admiral Sah Chen-ping as Civil Governor

Peking, July 13.

Admiral Tu Hsi-kuei and other prominent naval officers have telegraphed to Peking urging that Admiral Sah Chen-ping be retained as Civil Governor of Fukien, according to Chinese unofficial reports. There are indications, however, that Admiral Sah's resignation will be accepted and it is believed that the Government will appoint Gen. Sun Chuan-fang, who is now Tupan of Frontier Defence between Fukien and Kuangtung, as Civil Governor concurrently. This appointment would check the power of Gen. Chow Yin-jen.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Civil Governor of Chihli has issued a circular order to all the district magistrates stating that the Ministry of Interior has authorized him to encourage subscribers to the famine relief fund. Those who give from $10,000 to $5,000 who are officials of the second and third grades, are to be recommended to await appointment by the President.

Mr. Liu Shih-yu, Resident Agent in Shanghai of the Military Secretariat in the Presidential Palace, has submitted a list of names in the police forces of the two settlements for the bestowal of decorations in recognition of their services. President Tsao is said to have "circled out" over 30 of these and referred them to the Ministry of War.

THE BRITISH BOXER INDEMNITY

Money Definitely Applied to Educational Purposes

London, July 11.

The standing committee on the China Indemnity Bill has inserted Amendments which provide that the money shall be applied to such educational and other purposes as may be determined by the Foreign Secretary. The original draft did not specify education.

The Foreign Secretary has also now to act only after consultation with an advisory committee, consisting of 10 persons appointed by the Secretary of State, of whom at least one shall be a woman and at least one a Chinese.—Reuter.

Wu Pei-fu's Suggestion that Money Be Used for Railways Approved in Peking

From Our Own Correspondent.

Peking, July 12.

It has just transpired that at the first Cabinet meeting held under the Officiating Premiership of Dr. Wellington Koo, General Wu Pei-fu's suggestion that British Boxer Indemnity moneys should be used for railway and road construction was unanimously approved.

That this resolution has been taken before the return of the funds has been finally sanctioned by the British Parliament may possibly mean that representations will be made in London to this effect.

Government Taking Note Suggestion

London, July 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Ponsonby, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, replying to Sir Walter de Frece (Conservative), said that the project of building a railway for commercial development with the balance of the Boxer Indemnity had been brought to the notice of the British Government, but not from any official source. It would be submitted to the committee advising on utilization of the funds, by whose opinion the British Government would be guided.—Reuter.

According to the Chinese press, Gen. Shen Hung-ying and Marshal Lu Yung-ting have now signed an agreement of peace at Kueilin.

Peking, July 13.—The Government has telegraphed to Gen. Ma Lien-cha, Tuli of Anhui, telling him to take immediate steps to suppress the bandit uprising in that province. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, July 11.—President Tsao Kun gave a banquet yesterday to M. de Fleuriau, the French Minister. A large number of high officials and prominent personages were present. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Gen. Hsiung Pin-chi, Civil Governor of Shantung, reports the restoration of the old Russian Consulate and post office buildings at Chefoo to the Soviets, and that the whole business has now been amicably settled.

A Mukden telegram to the Chinese press states that Mr. Wang Yung-kiang, Civil Governor of Fengtien, tendered his resignation on July 11 and returned to Chinchou, his native town, pleading the illness of his wife as an excuse. The real reason is believed to be his disagreement with Marshal Chang Tso-lin regarding the prohibition of speculation in currency coins. Chang has sent an officer to persuade Wang to return to his post.

Telegrams to the Chinese press report that the announcement by the Chinese Legation in London that all the German Issue Bonds will be received as valid, has been received with great satisfaction. The "Morning Post" devotes a special article to the subject, assuring holders of these bonds that they may anticipate a handsome profit. Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chinese Chargé d'Affaires, reports that the Hukuang Bonds are to be redeemed through the London, City & Midland Bank. He has requested that the Bank of China be instructed to confirm this arrangement as soon as possible.

THE FOURTEENTH OF JULY

July 14.

THE British community in Shanghai will join heartily with their French friends to-day in celebrating the Fourteenth, democracy's day and anniversary of an event which helped to change the face of Europe. For long years now, the communion of the French and British peoples in Shanghai has been of the most cordial and helpful character, and both have had the good sense not to allow unhappy pre-war differences among diplomats to endanger a firmly established friendship. Unfortunately, as the latest developments show, the task of adjusting French and British policies in relation to Germany continues to present grave difficulties, and it is to be feared that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, dominated by the desire to secure a settlement which shall satisfy the just claims of France and, so far as may be, remove cause of future strife, yet finds himself in no less difficult a position than that of his predecessors. He has been prepared to make concessions, but there are points beyond which even a Labour Government, with its traditional dislike of the old diplomacy, cannot go. France has a just debt and peremptorily demands payment. Britain agrees, but, always concerned with the maintenance of her great foreign markets, cannot afford to see one of them economically crushed. Frankly, it is a matter of self-interest on both sides, and concessions will have to be made. Once a final amicable settlement is arrived at, Europe will have a chance of settling down and the resumption of normal conditions will be of the utmost benefit to all. Without such settlement, political and economic conditions must continue in their present uncertain and disorganized state, actually harmful and potentially disastrous. There must be generous compromise if peace is to become an established reality, and we trust that the British and French leaders will find a speedy path to this very desirable goal.

PROSPICE RESPICE

July 14.

"WHEN thinking over the manner in which we might celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of the "North-China Daily News," it occurred to us that, besides the usual retrospect, we might try to look forward into the future. "Of making many books" about the history of foreigners in the Far East, there is no end, and the flesh knows no weariness in reading of the quaint doings and surroundings of our predecessors in Cathay. But in dwelling on the romance of the past there is a danger that we overlook the no less vivid romance of the present and that thereby our daily judgment of men and things may become warped and liable to mislead us. For indeed in this latter-day romance there lies the kernel of great and practical changes.

So for the supplement which we issue to-day, in addition to stories of sixty years ago and of the intervening years, we have asked some of the leaders of Young China to write of what they are doing and hope to do. It is indeed a case in China to-day that we do not see the wood for the trees. Political disorganization, intrigue and lawlessness appear to block every outlook. And yet, to a far greater extent than is commonly supposed, these unhappy symptoms are superficial. We have only to read Mr. Wen Shih-tsen's charming article in the supplement, "Back to the Interior," to realize how vast a population there is whose steady character and ancient philosophy remain as they were centuries ago. But more than this discovery, the moral of which may not be altogether palatable to the progressive, there are going on behind the screen of political tribulation enormous changes and a great mass of work is being done which calls urgently for attention. Some time ago a Shaohsing merchant drew the writer's attention to what is being done in education. "When I was young," he said, "nobody thought that girls wanted education. Now it is absolutely demanded for them and the number of schools in my home country is astounding." What is even more amazing is the work that Madame Hsiung Hsi-ling describes in this number (the article came too late for the supplement) to bring learning within the reach of all by means of "the Thousand Characters." In ways such as this, in the cultivation of science and multiplication of hopitals, the influence of modern thought is not confined to coteries of individuals but is spreading to every part of China.

What will be the outcome of it all, we can but speculate. To many thinkers it appears impossible that republicanism, the merits of which are doubtful even in the West, can ever take firm root in so alien a soil as that of the Orient, steeped in traditions of paternal government, alike in state, village and family, through thousands of years. But while we strive to look into the future, at least taking note of the things about us from which the future may be builded, we may bethink ourselves of the past. In the long, long history of China thirteen or fourteen years are a very little space of time, even in comparison with other similar periods dividing one form of government or dynasty from another. Brigandage, too, and difficulties over the treaty rights have occurred again and again even in the comparatively brief time of foreign residence in China, just as virulently as we find them to-day. Whatever China may yet become, we make too much of the tribulations that attend her attainment. In one respect at least she and Great Britain are strikingly alike. Always, so far as memory can reach, has England been going to the dogs. Yet somehow she survives and even exhibits remarkable signs of vitality. So is it with the Sons of Han. "Alas poor China, how has thy gleamy become gloomy!"—carolled the Japanese poet; and anyone who has been in China for three weeks could quote yards of evidence in support. But longer experience revives the spirit of hopefulness; and in the brave optimism and undismayed work of the men and women who have so kindly helped to celebrate our jubilee, we find much to assure us of a future for China greater than the best she has ever known.

IT is estimated in the Chinese press that 40,000 new troops have been recruited by the provincial armies of China during the past six months.

THE S. V. C.

July 14.

THE publication of the "Annual Return of Efficients" in the Volunteer Corps Routine Orders is a matter of interest to the community as a criterion of how individual members of the Corps are carrying out their agreements with the Council to make themselves efficient each year of their service. The conditions for which, as laid down in the Corps regulations, are

For 1st Class Efficient.—He has attended the requisite number of parades and has qualified in musketry.

For 2nd Class Efficient.—(a) Whilst otherwise qualified as a 1st Class efficient has failed to attain the requisite standard in musketry; (b) Through sickness or unavoidable absence from Shanghai has been unable to attend the requisite number of parades or to complete the course of musketry. A member who has failed in both these respects cannot be classified as efficient.

Comparing this year's results with those of 1922-23, a marked advance has been made, nine Units having increased their percentage of 1st class efficients, the most noticeable being the Maritime, Chinese, Japanese, Shanghai-Scottish and Portuguese Companies. The Machine Gun Company was unfortunate in firing its musketry classification practices on a stormy day, with the result that the number of its third class shots is out of all proportion to its standard of shooting. Next year will undoubtedly see them where they should be, namely, in the first three in order of merit. Seventy men failed to become efficient this year as against 135 last year; in these numbers are included the Italian Company of which 96 per cent. were inefficient. During the year 1923, 500 new members joined the Corps and it speaks well for the spirit pervading the Units that the non-efficients, other than in the Italian Company, are only 4 per cent. of the whole, as against 10 per cent. last year. This year, in musketry the marksmen and first class shots are 211 and 222 respectively, as against 149 and 185 last year—a very decided advance.

It is a pity that service in the Corps does not appear to appeal to the great majority of the fit amongst the foreign community. Each Unit gives many happy hours to its members apart from the friendships that are engendered by fellow service. Efficiency without numbers is not far removed, in intrinsic value, from numbers without efficiency and it seems strange that so many fit men in Shanghai are content to put personal pleasure before the obvious and pleasant duty of joining the Volunteers. Slackers are not wanted, in fact they are soon put out again. If trouble comes the Volunteer is ready to meet it; what does the non-Volunteer intend to do then?

THE SMOKE EVIL

July 15.

WE published recently the report of an interview, secured by a correspondent of a home paper, with Sir H. Dennis Readett-Bayley, K.B.E., etc., who promises to rid the city of Nottingham of its smoke nuisance. This opens up an alluring prospect of thought. No one who has given any attention to the subject can have the slightest doubt of the terrible nature of the plague of smoke with which the old country is afflicted. There is, first of all, the inexcusable waste of it. The fact that Britain must pay more than £50,000,000 annually for oil supplies, which could, if the coal were turned into gas instead of being converted in crude furnaces into smoke, he saved to the nation, must surely appeal to every business man. We are paying away millions of money to liquidate our war debt to the United States and our own debtors are paying us nothing. That £50,000,000, if kept in the country, would lighten perceptibly the load of taxation which must be carried if we are to meet our foreign commitments.

Smoke is good carbon mixed with certain gases. These are deleterious to those who are unfortunate enough to have to breathe them but are capable of being converted into valuable products of which oil is the best known. Everyone will remember that during the war we were dependent on the by-products of the distillation of coal into gas for our most powerful explosives. Mr. Lloyd-George enunciated at that time a scheme whereby all the coal mined in Great Britain was to be converted into gas at the pithead. The gas, after giving up certain valuable constituents, was to be used for the production of electric power and this, in turn, to drive the wheels in our factories and for all industrial purposes. The idea seems, like some other big projects, such as the widening and deepening of the Clyde and Forth canal, to have been abandoned. The stimulation of the war provoked big thinking, but with the advent of peace we have fallen back into our old narrow groove and once more think parochially. Particularly in regard to the smoke nuisance we continue to permit the chimneys of our manufacturing centres to pour poisonous chemicals into the air which, if treated scientifically, would be a source of wealth to us instead of a cause of disease, a blight on the countryside and a ceaseless reproach for our indifference and lack of enterprise.

It is, or, perhaps, we should say, was, the custom of certain writers to pour contempt on the Chinese for their apathy in neglecting to develop the resources of their country lest, in so doing, they should injure the mysterious "feng-shui" which is essential to the well-being of the nation. These writers pointed out that this purblind conservatism condemned the masses to poverty and ignorance with all their attendant evils. But whatever reproach may, in this connexion, be levelled at the Chinese can, with ten-fold effect, be applied to ourselves. The mineral wealth which they allow to lie hidden in the bowels of the earth is, at least, harmless there. But we, by an ingenious use of giant chimneys, diffuse our potential wealth, in the form of gaseous chemicals, far and wide over the land and, in so doing, make the healthful breezes scatter grime and dirt, sickness and death wherever they blow. We therefore hail the coming of a man who is going to do what lies within the power of an individual to cleanse one city from the death-dealing smoke evil. Sir H. Dennis Readett-Bayley is a wealthy colliery owner. If he can prove that there is money in the process of turning smoke into petrol, he will doubtless have imitators, though Ruskin wore his heart out in vain efforts to persuade the people of England to save the children from death and the fair fields of their land from pollution. Even his matchless prose was powerless to evoke more than a sneer from those whose duty it was to care for these things. It is like a fairy tale; gold for grime. So many hundreds of pounds sterling for so many tons of smoke! Yes, but fairy tales have a habit of coming true. Everyone remembers the great heaps of unsightly slag that disfigured the dreary landscape of the black country in the midlands. Many of those slag heaps are now disappearing. It has been discovered that cement can be made from slag and the thing that was not only worthless, but worse than worthless, as money had to be paid for a place to dump it in, has now become a valuable property.

When it has been demonstrated that there is money in smoke perhaps we shall even see the day when the dirty little launches that belch forth volumes of poisonous, black fumes on the river front will mend their ways. Visitors, tell us what a magnificent boulevard the Bund seems to be when looked at from the river. If we can banish the smoke fiend there is hope both for the Bund and the garden. They will be worthy of the encomiums lavished on them by those who have never inhaled a whiff from the funnels of the noisy craft that pollute the waters of the Whangpoo.

RISKS OF RIOTING

July 16.

IN the recent libel action which Sir Michael O'Dwyer, formerly Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, brought against Sir Sankaran Nair, formerly a high Indian official, and which resulted in the plaintiff being awarded £500 damages and the costs of the action, the investigation ranged over a wide field. One important question considered in the judge's charge to the jury was the justification, or otherwise, of the stern measures used by the military authority when called upon by the civil authorities to suppress a riotous meeting in northern India which, if not suppressed, might have had the most disastrous and widespread consequences. The suppression of rioting, especially when the rioters are ignorant and follow blindly the guidance of unscrupulous leaders, is a most difficult and distressing duty to all in authority. Some years ago, when Lord Haldane was Secretary of State for War, the writer heard a very interesting debate on this subject in the House of Commons. All the speakers, whether civil or military, who had taken part in the suppression of riots, expressed their extreme dislike of being obliged to act in such emergencies. Nevertheless, public order had to be maintained.

The duty is still more difficult in countries, such as India, where the rioters belong to one race and those in authority to another. It is all very well for persons living in countries where law and order are well established to criticize official proceedings taken in a moment of extreme danger with no other motive than to save the lives of thousands of men, women, and children; were they actually present at the scene and aware of all the circumstances and the intensity of the passions of Orientals, they would think differently. In China, fortunately, the people on the whole are less easily stirred to rioting than in other parts of the Orient. Still, even here riots have often occurred, lives have been lost, property destroyed, and the present discontent and lawlessness are so widespread that no one can tell what may happen at any time and place. It is well, therefore, that political agitators and other persons, whether Chinese or foreign, inclined to foment public disturbances, should at least know the risks they run where English law prevails. In the trial to which we have referred the following obiter dicta formed part of the charge to the jury by the very able judge who presided. (1) Persons taking a prominent part at a riotous meeting are to be judged by the general effect of the speeches and resolutions made rather than by the actual words used. We are all familiar with the oratorical device of inciting to a turbulent course of action under cover of seemingly protesting against it. In what he believed was a good cause Mark Antony used the device when he instigated the Roman mob to riot over the death of Julius Caesar, and it was very effective.

> O masters! if I were disposed to stir
> Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
> I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
> Who, you all know, are honourable men.
> I will not do them wrong; I rather choose
> To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,
> Citizens. We'll mutiny.
> First Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

This point is emphasized because many Orientals are born orators, well acquainted with subterfuges which may enable them to evade the responsibility of their utterances. As the judge said at the trial: "The resolutions put to the meeting might be innocent, but that was a device well known in the history of seditious crime." (2) The presence of women, children, and casual spectators at a riotous meeting cannot be allowed to paralyse the decisions of the authorities in their attempts to quell the riot. The defendant in the trial contended that it would be wrong to save the lives of 1,000 innocent persons by dropping a bomb which might kill one innocent person, and that if any man who was going to a murderous meeting chose to take a child with him the whole mob should be immune. The judge did not agree. To drop bombs and use machine-guns on persons working peaceably in the fields clearly would be wrong; but he said it would be a wholly different thing to use bombs or machine-guns against a crowd which was about to attack buildings or to murder. (3) An officer in authority who, in the performance of a painful duty, gives orders to use the extreme measure of firing on a riotous mob, when he acts with absolute honesty of purpose and in accord with his best judgment, is not to be punished as if he had committed a criminal act, even if it should be proved later, on a calm consideration of all the facts, that in grave and exceptional circumstances he may not have acted with perfect judgment. This is reasonable and fair. No human being is omniscient or gifted with unerring judgment. Besides, if an officer makes a serious mistake in a professional emergency he usually suffers loss by not being entrusted with similar responsibilities again. The judge expressed the view that the military authority whose conduct had been questioned, in the grave and exceptional circumstances acted rightly in the method he adopted for quelling a very dangerous riot.

It is most unfortunate that the present discontent and political unrest in many lands can be traced to the propaganda, in the name of democracy, of the doctrine that all nations and peoples, presumably even the head hunters or Dyaks of Borneo, no matter how backward they may be morally and politically, have the liberty to do as they please without regard to their own welfare or the rights and welfare of other peoples. There is no guarantee of permanent human progress and such a doctrine may lead us all back to barbarism. There has been a great deal of sentimental talk of making the world safe for democracy. When we consider the frightful revolution in Russia and the present state of China and certain other countries, the question whether democracy can be made safe for the world is of far greater importance.

RESTRICTION OF RACIAL MIGRATION

July 17.

When the great earthquake occurred in Japan a few months ago and the United States promptly and generously sent aid to the stricken people, many Americans were convinced that the two countries were now united by bonds of friendship which nothing could ever weaken. To these amiable enthusiasts the United States immigration law, with its provision for Japanese exclusion, and the recent Japanese outbreak of passionate resentment over it, must have caused painful surprise. Yet history gives continual evidence of the precarious nature of national friendships. Nations may be drawn together by a common danger or by some other exigency, but when the danger or exigency is over it takes very little to arouse reciprocal antagonism. This antagonism rests on primitive instincts and is therefore often stronger than the inclination to friendship. The excitement in Japan is subsiding, but the resentment cannot altogether disappear while the discrimination remains unmodified.

Peace has its problems no less than those of war. If a league of nations were formed sufficiently strong to prevent all war, and if all countries adopted free trade and removed all restrictions to immigration and emigration, there can be no question that some races or peoples would find it very hard, if not impossible, to compete successfully with others. In Manchuria it has been proved that the Japanese cannot hold their own against the Chinese, so the Japanese do not welcome Chinese labourers to Japan. The working classes of the white races cannot compete with the labourers of Asiatic races who can live and thrive under conditions which would mean death to the whites. Consequently, in obedience to the instinct of self-preservation, individual and national, not only the United States, but also British Columbia, Australia, and South Africa are endeavouring to exclude Asiatic labour. The United States has gone further, and limits the number of foreigners of all nationalities, Europeans included, which it will receive in any one year. This policy of self-defence has nothing to do with passing currents of political feeling. As President Coolidge says:—

"The enactment of this provision does not imply any change in our sentiment of admiration and cordial friendship for the Japanese people, a sentiment which has had and will continue to have abundant manifestation.

"The bill rather expresses the determination of the Congress to exercise its prerogative in defining by legislation the control of immigration, instead of leaving it to international arrangements. It should be noted that the bill exempts from the exclusion provision Government officials, those coming to this country as tourists, or temporarily for business or pleasure, those in transit, seamen, those already resident here, and returning from temporary absences, professors, ministers of religion, students, and those who enter solely to carry on trade in pursuance of existing treaty provisions.

Unfortunately, the restriction of Japanese emigration to the United States, which might have been left to the voluntary action of Japan in accordance with a previous agreement, was enacted by statute. It is only the method over which there is disagreement; upon the main point, the exclusion of Japanese labour, there is general agreement in the United States, especially in the West, and it is in accord with Japan's own policy towards the Chinese.

The heated discussion of the subject by members of the Christian churches of Japan and their present unfriendliness to Americans is most regrettable; perhaps there is much misunderstanding. At the very time when one mission alone is appealing to the home church in the United States for over two million gold dollars to rebuild its school-buildings and hospital in Tokyo destroyed by the earthquake, the appeal being supported by leading Japanese, to talk of shaking off the monetary yoke with which the parent missions of America have saddled the Japanese Christians is hard to understand. The parent missions have no desire to fasten a financial yoke on the Japanese, or to hinder the movement towards the complete independence of the Japanese churches, for this is really the goal of missionary work. But they hope and expect that all will be accomplished in a spirit of good-will. Much of the language used at these meetings in Japan we may be sure Americans will soon forget. But they must also fairly recognize that a proud people such as the Japanese cannot easily accept a law of which the sentimental effect to their self-love is quite as keenly felt as its material disadvantage. The whole episode shows that we are still far from the millennium. Commercial and other purely mundane interests, or the fear of a common danger, will never bind the nations together in peace and good-will. There must be a supra-national bond, such as the belief in the brotherhood of man and that the brotherhood rests on a spiritual basis. With this belief sincerely held it will be possible to find the solution of the grave economic problems which are now confronting all nations.

THE CONSORTIUM ONCE MORE

July 18.

Although the mere notion of lending money to the Chinese Government as it is to-day is laughable, the meeting of the China Consortium in London is of more than passing interest. Belgium, we note, whose membership, when convenient to her, was provided for in the original agreement, was not represented and presumably has not yet come in. It is important to notice that Mr. Thomas Lamont was present on America's behalf. The policy of the United States Government in the field of Chinese finance has been vacillating in the past. Under President Taft, the right of American banks to partake in the financing of the Szechuan railways—out of which the first Consortium or Six-Power Group grew—was successfully asserted. But President Wilson disliked Mr. Taft's policy and the American members retired from the Group, which thus became a Five-Power organization. Yet it was under President Wilson that the Consortium once more came into shape after the war; and it was Mr. Lamont who succeeded in persuading the Japanese Government to waive certain reservations which would have wrecked the whole project, and thus made the Consortium possible. Mr. Lamont's presence in London and the agreement concluded to continue the Consortium for practically an indefinite period is satisfactory evidence that the policy which Washington has been pursuing of abstention from international engagements is not to apply to financial questions in China. Mr. Lamont could not well be spared from the Consortium's councils. He represents the great house of Morgan, and both by personal experience of the Orient and by his own reputation in banking circles, his continued membership of the group is in every way to be desired.

One of the reasons, we are told, for the Consortium's meeting at the present time was "recent attempts by the Chinese Government to secure loans from other sources." If the Chinese Government can find anyone foolish enough to lend it any money, the Consortium cannot, of course, prevent it. In this respect, therefore, its meeting is probably meant to remind possible lenders that it is still in existence; to set them thinking again of the reasons for which it was formed; and to warn them of the suicidal policy of lending money to Peking when the Consortium has no intention of doing so. It may be recalled that the scheme for the formation of the consortium was announced in May, 1919, although the idea of it had been elaborated two months earlier by Sir Charles Addis in a London financial paper. It owed its inception to the orgy of Peking's borrowings in Japan during the year 1918—which the Japanese Government for mally abjured shortly after the close of the war. It implied no desire to kill healthy competition for industrial purposes; but it did aim to put an end to mere gambling in money-lending to Peking, Canton or other party; and it distinctly stated that the Consortium would not lend money to China for political purposes. To avoid any appearance of trying to establish a monopoly of China loans, a long list was published of outside banks, which would participate in any loan that might be floated. Naturally the Chinese officials of Peking disliked the Consortium from the first, and lost no time in spreading reports that it was designed to force loans upon China, deprive her of freedom of access to the money market, etc., etc.; in all of which they were materially assisted by well meant but excessive speech-making by one agent of the Consortium, whose asseverations that it would never lend money in China for aught but productive purposes naturally excited suspicion in the oriental mind that the speaker meant the exact opposite of what he said. Time, however, has vindicated the Consortium: if it has not lent money for industrial purposes, neither has it for any other; and although its existence has in no way debarred organizations from selling things to Peking which it does not need, for prices which they now find difficulty in realizing, the fact that the Consortium, with its intimate first-hand knowledge of China, has been unable to do any business with her has undoubtedly helped to keep off adventurers from risking their money. When an organization like the Consortium won't lend, there is obviously something wrong with the would-be borrower. From the foreigner's point of view anybody who lends money to-day to any political party in China is a foe to all Westerners in common. There is no party which deserves to be supported by money from abroad nor to which such support could be given without at once exciting the active antagonism of all other parties.

For this reason we should welcome a new declaration of policy by the Consortium. The purely negative announcement which was sufficient for the situation in 1919 is not enough for to-day. At that time we were still near enough to the time when there had been a Government in Peking to make it just possible that the plain hint implied by the statement of the Consortium's policy would bring the mandarins of modern China to their senses and induce them to think a little less of themselves, a little more of their responsibilities. Since then, however, the Washington Conference has disclosed a new situation. The failure of the policy then mapped out may ultimately prove of the utmost advantage. Washington assumed that China was one and united and it framed certain concessions on that assumption. The only result was to reveal to the world that she was disjointed and anarchic. That is what has now to be officially recognized, as an indispensable preliminary to better things. So long as the Powers continue to tolerate the deception that the Washington policy is even thinkable in present circumstances, China will not come together. A firm declaration from the Consortium that there should be no question of increasing the Customs duties until treaties are respected and foreign lives and property secured, would have an excellent effect. We are not afraid that anyone will lend any considerable sum to Peking. We are afraid of that Customs surtax, the results of which would be inimical to Chinese and foreign interests as the proceeds would inevitably be squandered. We want to see the Washington policy definitely abjured until China can show that she has a real Government. Then at last she might begin to set her house in order and to live on her own resources as she so easily could.

MAN AND HIS GLANDS

July 19.

If any of our grandfathers, hobnobbing on the banks of the Huangpu a hundred years or so ago, had suggested that iron ships would float up the river during the lifetime of his sons, we can all imagine how he would have been scoffed at. Iron had not then been known to float. It was the "impossible." Nowadays, it is no longer the impossible. Everybody knows that iron floats. Similarly, at one time wireless was "impossible," so was the telephone, so were motor-cars and aeroplanes and the radio, and a dozen other features of scientific progress that have become commonplaces in our daily life. When we read, therefore, as reprinted in these columns not long ago the assertion of Dr. W. J. A. Bailey (of the American Endocrine Laboratories of New York) that our knowledge of human glands will literally transform our living, we naturally doubt the statement. This is usually the mental attitude of mankind towards faint glimmerings of the discovery of some new aspect of truth. Man has ceased to be able to use any powers of perception other than through the senses. Indeed, most men are entirely unconscious that they can know or perceive anything other than through the senses, and are equally unaware that the senses betray them every moment that they live.

We have too long regarded insanity, declared Dr. Bailey, as purely a brain condition, but its seat "is unquestionably in the endocrine glands, which absolutely control every brain function." This is an important statement. For a long time many patient and sincere investigators in this branch of science have had their researches condemned because of the charlatans who have made the claim, among other things, that the rejuvenation of the body can, be accomplished by "quack" means. But Dr. Bailey confidently asserts that "science has cornered aberration, disease, old age, and in fact life and death themselves in the endocrines."

Few of us really know much about the world we live in, and science is unfolding knowledge so rapidly that we cannot keep pace with it. If it can be said, however, that science has been engaged in the discovery of the powers about us during the last half-century (and it surely can be said), then one may be led to believe that scientific effort during the next half-century will be focussed upon the discovery of powers within us. Man admits that he has lost many powers that lie inherent in his very substance. There are few men to-day, for example, who can bring into action all or most of the muscles of their bodies. Few of us can move the ears at will, but we should be able to do so, just as animals can. And there are many other powers that we have lost. The ancients claimed to be able to keep themselves alive for as long as they found life desirable. We know that with increasing speed, man's life has been lessened in length, although during the last five or six decades improved conditions of living have raised the average length of life in Occidental countries from, say, 25 to 49. Why, then, cannot it be lengthened during the next fifty years to say double the length, to 89. And if 89, why not 90—why a limit? Thus do the scientists argue. It is claimed that the endocrines contain the basic mastery of all human functions and energies, and the control of the endocrines is the highest aim of the science of physiology. Many scientific men, and Dr. Bailey among them, say that "in endocrinology we have approached so closely to these great truths that we shudder at the realization of their magnitude." The average student of biology will know that most of the cells of the human body are not subject as cells to death: they can be destroyed by injury, but as cells they cannot die until after a man dies.

The mere knowledge of this fact gives rise, surely, to the dream that man has always entertained regarding the possibility of living indefinitely—when he knows how. What the endocrinologists may claim to-day may seem to those of us unversed in these scientific matters as ridiculous as the belief a hundred years ago that iron would float. In another quarter of a century those of us who have contrived to live so long to learn the tale, may, however, be perfectly aware that conscious control of the endocrines means rejuvenation and conceivably immensely lengthened span of life. All we can say is that we do not know. But every man who thinks must assuredly be impressed with the rapidity with which scientific discoveries are applied to-day to the lives and well-being of erring mankind. Whether it would be for their well-being that they should live four or five times as long as they do at present is another matter altogether.

Mr. Fu Siao-en, a director of the China Merchants' S.N. Co., has presented Mr. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, with the massive wooden eagle which adorned what was formerly the foremast of the old wooden paddle-steamer Kiangfoo. She is now being dismantled after more than half a century of service in American and Chinese waters. The gift is a particularly welcome souvenir to Americans, for the Kiangfoo is probably the oldest relic of American shipping now in Shanghai and a relic of the days when paddle steamers crossed the Pacific. It has not yet been decided where the emblem will be fixed at the Consulate.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Hawley Murder

We direct attention to the account of the circumstances preceding the murder of Mr. Hawley at Wanhsien. From investigations made on the spot it appears that Mr. Hawley was not merely acting within his rights according to the general agreement under which steamers carry wood oil in the high water season. He had, we are told, received the most definite assurances from the leaders of the Junk Guild and from the Chinese local civil and military authorities that no trouble would be created. The military authorities had, in fact, guaranteed this and had promised to supply a guard of soldiers to superintend the loading and effectually preclude the possibility of trouble with members of the Junk Guild. How these promises came to be broken is sufficiently explained in the article elsewhere. These facts were all well known to Commander Whitehorn, and though there was no doubt before as to the justification of his action, he is now doubly shown to have acted well in making the officials publicly admit their responsibility.

Psychology and Business.

With the ever-present quest for efficiency always in the foreground, many large industrial firms in the United Kingdom are experimenting, under the aegis of the National Institute of Industrial Psychology, with new psychological methods of selecting and training workers, and are said to be finding it very much to their advantage; so much so that one firm estimates that the introduction of vocational tests into its factory is saving at least £5,000 a year. It comes as somewhat of a shock at first to learn—and we have the authority of the Director of the above-named Institute on the matter—that too high a degree of intelligence in a given occupation often leads to as much inefficiency as too low a degree, owing to the mental tedium and unrest experienced by the individual. In an article which he wrote recently, Mr. J. S. Rowntree, "Progress Manager" of the famous chocolate and cocoa firm, whose efforts on behalf of the welfare of their workers are world-renowned, stated that in the process of obtaining a thoroughly efficient staff of workers, the part played by training is only second in importance to the original selection. Psychological tests seem to have played an important part in the selection and training of his firm's employees of recent years, and while it is claimed that the measurement of purely mental qualities offers no insuperable difficulty to the psychologist, he has hitherto been baffled to a large extent by the difficulty of estimating moral qualities, factors which count largely in any struggle for industrial survival. It certainly would seem that the psychologist is going to play a very important part in industry of the future. In some factories at Home the industrial psychologist already is an accepted part of the establishment; on him the whole responsibility of training "beginners" is placed, and he is allowed to select his own teachers from among the existing staff of workers or overseers. Now that the psychological initial selection of workers is also coming to pass, the time may not be far distant when no important industrial concern will be considered as completely equipped for efficiency and competition unless it has its own psychological department.

China's Workhouse

A report refers to the Model Factory of Kiangwan as something new in employment methods. General Ho Feng-ling, Defence Commissioner of Shanghai, and Mr. Hsu Chien-ling, a local merchant, were the main organizers of the institution, which has been in operation but a short time. Most of the money needed in promotion was supplied by Mr. Hsu, and it is said that most of the money required for the ground and buildings was obtained from the proceeds of a number of lotteries. The factory was conceived and started as a means of teaching and giving employment to beggars and others out of employment. Since the factory was built and operations begun, however, there have been changes in the original programme so that now, besides teaching and employing these delinquents, regular apprentices from good families are taken in. To teach these, skilled workmen have been employed, taken from various trades, as iron-casting, wood working, metal sheet forming and making rubber goods, toys, spectacle lenses, tooth brushes, rope and cordage, and carpets. After reading as much as this it will be admitted that the institution in every way is "something new." Lotteries are supposed to be illegal and General Ho has done perhaps more than any other Chinese to suppress them, yet they were sanctioned to get funds for this modern and model workhouse. Then there is a distinct originality in the idea of beggars and the sons of good families serving their apprenticeship side by side. It is only in China that such things could happen, but there will be nothing either to grumble at or to laugh at if the scheme succeeds—especially in taking beggars off the streets.

Muzzling the Press

Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, U.S.A., is evidently one of those who agree with a certain British politician's description of an optimist as "a person who believes everything that appears in the daily papers," and he evidently considers that newspapers, like convicts and ticket-of-leave men, should be under the closest supervision. He proposes to bring before the Senate a bill containing some extraordinary proposals for the regulation of the press, which obviously, in his opinion, is nothing but an aggregation of chicanery, iniquity and unreliability, with the only objects in view those of furthering its own ends and deceiving an innocent, unsuspecting public. If Senator Owen has his way, every newspaper will be required to publish on the first page of each issue a clear financial statement of the obligations of its proprietors, particulars of all directors, managers or others having authority in determining the policy of the paper, and a list of the "citizenship" of all persons engaged in writing for it. All editorials shall be signed and, in the case of those who prefer to put only their initials, a key to those initials shall be provided. The worthy Senator further proposes that every paper shall be required by law to provide on its front page full space for the publication of replies made to it by persons whom it has attacked by name for any reason whatever, or upon whose action or views unfavourable comment may have appeared in either its news or editorial columns. He argues that this clause would seem particularly to be adapted to the U. S., "where indiscriminate abuse is heaped upon public men with relative impunity." There are other proposals in the Senator's bill, but sufficient have been quoted to show its general tenour. It is an axiom as old as newspapers themselves that any person unjustly attacked in the columns of a journal can always invoke the law, and the number of times in which the law has successfully been so invoked in recent years, especially so far as British journals are concerned, would indicate, if such indication were needed, that newspapers, for their own good, have to be careful. In view of the revolutionary nature of Senator Owen's proposals, it is not beyond the bounds of possibility that he himself has been pilloried in a newspaper by a writer he was unable to identify, and that his proposed bill is something in the nature of a "come-back."

The "Cat"

As an example of the use of the "cat" in civilized communities for specially detested crimes — with moreover the strong approval of a community by no means undemocratic—we commend the following from the "Glasgow Herald" of June 13 to Chinese readers:

To make the punishment fit the crime is a problem which often exercises those whose duty it is to impose penalties. But sometimes the Legislature comes to their aid, and has done so in the case of a second offence under the Immoral Traffic and Criminal Law Amendment statutes of 1902 and 1912, the latter of which empowers the Judge, in addition to imposing a term of imprisonment, to order an offender to feel the weight of the law upon his bare back. Yesterday, in Glasgow Criminal Court—for the first time, we understand—a man, or rather, perhaps, for the honour of mankind we should call him what the statute terms him, a "male person," was sentenced to be flogged, in addition to a year's hard labour, for what the presiding Judge called the meanest conceivable form of crime—living upon the immoral earnings of a woman. The bully who shadows the unfortunate of the street, and reaps often the lion's share of the reward of her shame, is difficult to detect, but in the case we report to-day the evidence was conclusive, and the jury unanimously and promptly returned a verdict of guilty. The sentence will meet with the approval of the community, and regret may be expressed that the Courts have not the power to order the "cat" upon other classes of offenders, such as that class of man who interferes with young children, or that ever-growing class of house-breakers who do not even wait for darkness to cover their evil-doing, but are found climbing rhone-pipes and entering houses in broad daylight, a class of crime which the Chief Constable in his recent Annual Report referred-to as alarmingly on the increase. If statutory authority is necessary to authorize the use of the "cat" in such cases, the general opinion of law-abiding citizens will no doubt be that this is a direction in which our lawgivers might succeed in introducing Bills which Parliament could pass without inducing party opposition.

The Murder of the Tsar

Six years ago on Wednesday occurred, at Ekaterinburg in Siberia, the massacre by the Bolsheviks of the chief members of the deposed Russian Royal Family—the Tsar Nicholas, the Tsaritsa and their son the Tsarevitch. This murder always will be considered as one of the most poignant of the many bloody tragedies that marked—and possibly still mark—the autocratic domination of a mighty nation and a mighty country by those super-butchers Lenin and Trotsky and their followers. It is a tragedy that no circumstance can ever justify and none condone, and one on which posterity always will look with horror, whatever the ultimate destiny of Bolshevism may be. The murder took place at a period when the Russian territories, from Riga to Okhotsk, were one mighty field of massacre and butchery, oppression and destruction when the aristos completely and the bourgeoisie largely, old and young, women and children, were the hapless, helpless victims of the mad dogs of the world; a whispered word could constitute a death sentence; and when the life of none was safe who showed no keen inclination to join whole-heartedly in the orgy of butchery, destruction and oppression. Although the lives of the Tsar and his family had continually been threatened and they had been hurried and harried from one place to another, few persons thought that Lenin's butchers would actually murder them, and the news that they had met their end, and the brutal, inhuman manner in which it came about, caused a feeling of horror throughout the civilized world, and a wider realization that the Bolsheviks were lacking in every essential attribute that makes reasonable beings. Truly, mad dogs of the world. Now that early Bolshevism can more clearly be envisaged, it appears that those in authority were moved by one main thought—to kill; and they used their influence, their eloquence and their power to such purpose that their lust to kill was transferred to the peasant classes, whose lesser intelligence, frayed and barbed by the hungry years of war and sacrifice, took up the call and answered to the bidding of their ruling "comrades" (never was a word more travestied) in authority, whose power, whose hatred, whose cunning, whose utter ruthlessness were more absolute that those of Robespierre in the heyday of his dictatorship.

China's Exhibition

The "Chinese Economic Bulletin," which is a Government publication and therefore must be accepted as writing with full authority, contains the following:—

International Exhibition in Peking.—By a Presidential Mandate issued in March last year, Senator Lee Chin-ho was appointed Director-General of the Chinese Republic Anniversary International Exhibition. The office is at present at Nan Ping Ma Ssu, north of Morrison Street, Peking. In preparation for this huge project the work has been divided into four divisions, the general department, the editing department, the exhibit department, and the foundation fund department. People working for the exhibition are mostly members of the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce. The date set for the opening of the exhibition is 1926, but it is not yet certain whether it will be carried out in time. The Temple of Heaven, the Temple of Agriculture and the Winter Palace have all been mentioned as possible locations for the exhibition. Instructions have been sent to the Industrial Commissioners in the provinces asking them to collect articles and products to be sent to Peking. When all the articles and products from the provinces have arrived at Peking, it is planned to hold a preliminary exhibition. To defray the expenses, money was to be raised through the issue of Exhibition Foundation Fund Bonds. These bonds were secured on the property of and receipts from the Exhibition. Up to the present $300,000 has been received from the sale of bonds, but owing to the lavish nature of the premium feature of the issue, a loss has been incurred, and Lee Chin-ho has recently instructed the Exhibition Foundation Bond Bureau to be closed up.

And that is a very good start! But after all it is no more than every responsible person knew would happen, for how could a Government unable to pay its official representatives abroad, its police, soldiers, teachers, sailors, departmental clerks, and even its door-keepers, possibly raise several millions of dollars with which to finance an exhibition? A group of energetic foreigners, with the co-operation of eminent and thoroughly reliable Chinese merchants, were willing to take all the risks of finance and management, but Peking effectually upset the arrangement, declaring that it could and would do the thing itself. The sum total of Peking's efforts in five months appears to have been the creation of a high-sounding title for a Senator, the opening of offices for which in all probability someone still is hoping to get the rent, the appointment of lesser groups of officials, and the raising of $300,000 (not sufficient to pay the ticket collectors for six months), in doing which they incurred a loss. As the bonds were secured on the property that was to be put into the exhibition and the gate receipts, and the business is bankrupt before it has started, one may be pardoned for doubting whether the interest in Langkats will be supplanted by deals in these bonds.

Trademark Propaganda

The arrival of an agent of the Trademark Bureau in Shanghai was the occasion for statements by the Chinese Press, translated into our columns this week, which it is important to point out were from the Chinese Press, as they are in some respects misleading and suggest deliberate propaganda for the Bureau. Mr. Hsia, the agent in question, is said to have been sent to Shanghai "solely to take over the archives of the trademark registers from the Customs." This is misleading. Mr. Hsia is to be given copies of trademarks registered with the Customs, but this is not at all the same thing as taking over the archives; nor does it at all imply that the owners of trademarks, who have from time to time asked the Customs to file them, against the day of a proper registration bureau, put themselves under the Bureau. Further on we read:—

It was after repeatedly giving those explanations that foreigners gradually became convinced of the necessity of registering their trademarks. Foreign merchants applying for registration of trademarks at the Bureau had lately been increasing in number, said Mr. Hsia, the Japanese being the most eager, the Germans next, and Britons and Americans last.

The British authorities were now allowing British merchants full discretion whether to register or not. Therefore, no more difficulties were expected in the enforcement of this law in the future.

The last sentence is not true. The only positive quotable advice given by British authorities to their nationals in China is against registration. The inference to be drawn from Mr. Hsia's statement, namely, that the British authorities formerly told their nationals not to register, but now have told them that they may, is entirely inaccurate. The whole interview with Mr. Hsia appears designed to convey the idea that the Diplomatic Body have accepted the Trademark Law. They have not done so; and inasmuch as it is a violation of treaty and a dangerous attack on extraterritorial rights, it is to be hoped they never will.

LHASSA, the sacred city of Tibet, is to have a Mint. Power-driven machinery, of equal power to that in use in the London Mint, is being supplied by Messrs. Taylor and Challen, Ld., engineers, of Birmingham. A press for stamping was landed near Calcutta, and at a point where the hill country became difficult was unbolted into sections and is being carried through the Himalayan passes partly on mules and partly on poles borne on coolies' shoulders.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

HOW MOSCOW HAS BAMBOOZLED THE CHINESE DIPLOMATS

Having Got the Desired Recognition and Promise of Former Imperial Property Russia Can Now Postpone Conference Binding Herself to Do Anything as Long as She Pleases

FROM RODNEY GILBERT.

Peking, July 9.

Several weeks have now passed since the Chinese high officials who were so vociferously enthusiastic about the Koo-Karakhan preliminary agreement, the definition of "general principles," began to understand and to admit to their friends that things might not go as smoothly to China's advantage as they had at first thought. Chang Tso-lin's stand was a fly in the ointment. Karakhan's refusal to commence formal negotiations on the date appointed also made them suspicious, and now Rosta circulates a statement to the effect that Moscow is coming to the conclusion that the Chinese Government may not be capable of discharging the obligations incurred under the preliminary agreement.

It would appear that China had been caught in rather a clever Soviet trap. The returned student element in the Peking Government has long realized in what desperately bad shape China is and how low her financial and moral credit stands abroad. They can see far enough into the future to know that their country is going to get into such a worse state and that successive Chinese Governments are getting so progressively powerless to check her in her course to ruin, that she will sooner or later put herself in the position of an international outlaw, as Russia did, but without Russia's power to withstand intervention and correction. Since the time was coming when there could be no pretence of living up to treaty or financial obligations the only alternative seemed to be complete repudiation. This China could not undertake without encouragement and support.

Then came M. Karakhan to applaud the idea and to pat every treaty-breaker on the back and give him fresh courage. He ranted against the imperialistic Occidental in the Far East, he and his master Trotsky applauded lawlessness wherein foreigners were the victims, he cursed the treaties, preached the good Communistic doctrine that those who have sacrificed their rights and have proved themselves morally unfit have the highest rights of all; and he then cooed blandishments and promises into China's ear and said he would show how a really benevolent Government of the unfit and for the unfit could deal with a brother Government of the same character.

The Chinese were so pathetically eager to realize upon these promises and to get this support against their outraged creditors, that they never stopped to wonder what Russia's motives might be nor how Mr. Karakhan was going to back them up when the alliance was formed and they had taken courage and spat upon the imperialistic Powers.

Gets All, Gives Nought.

The situation now is this. Russia is recognized by China on the basis of an agreement which yields nothing whatever to China until all outstanding questions have been settled and embodied in formal treaties. The only clause in the definition of general principles which becomes effective before the formal conference is that in which China is pledged to turn over the Legation and the Russian consulates to the Soviet representatives. In short, prior to a conference which Russia can postpone indefinitely on one pretext or another, the Soviet Government is fully recognized as the de jure successor and heir to the Imperial Government of Russia, therefore enjoying all the rights in China which the Imperial Government enjoyed until such time as the Soviet Government sees fit to relinquish these rights by formal treaty. Russia has all that she could possibly want at this juncture and China has nothing. Russia can exploit her recognition by China at home and abroad and make splendid propaganda of it; China has won nothing from this recognition of the Soviet but the suspicion of a number of Powers who were consistently sympathetic and willing to be helpful. Russia must have known that China would have difficulty in fulfilling her pledge to return the Legation, the consular properties, religious property and ships to the Soviet and must have felt that it would furnish her with a standing excuse to postpone the formal conference indefinitely if convenient and at the same time reassume such former rights as she pleased. How the Chinese could have failed to see this is beyond understanding.

M. Karakhan in his preliminary agreement in no way pledged himself to help China recover the various properties which are to be returned. The whole obligation falls upon China, so that unless or until she resorts to force and actually goes to war with the imperialistic world at large, which would delight the Soviet folk, her failure to fulfil her obligation can always be used on the one hand to browbeat the Chinese Government and on the other hand to make propaganda. M. Karakhan is already having a wonderful time telling the Chinese at large that the jealous, greedy and cruel imperialists of the West are keeping China from coming into possession of all those golden advantages which the benevolent Soviet Government is so ready to bestow. It is a huge joke, but no Chinese can see a joke against himself, so he must take the situation seriously and take Russia seriously. And if he takes Russia seriously he must hate the cursed imperialistic Powers with an all-consuming hatred, which is precisely the Russian objective.

Russia's Embroiling Policy.

The rulers of China in their mingled despair and conceit have failed utterly to understand the Soviet's policy in Asia. In his May Day speech in Moscow Trotsky whipped his audience into a fury of enthusiasm by announcing that the workers and peasants were now going to turn their attention to the liberation of the oppressed peoples of Asia. This is no new policy. It was adopted about three years ago when an Oriental Bureau was established in Irkutsk by a Mr. Popoff and liberally endowed with gold for the avowed purpose of spreading Communist propaganda and the spirit of rebellion against one thing or another among the Mongols, Chinese, Koreans and Japanese. This step was followed up by similar enterprises in Turkey, Asia Minor, Persia, Afghanistan, India and elsewhere. No one has noticed any inclination on the part of Moscow, however, to send out great liberating armies. The only "help" extended is given through such agents as Karakhan who devote themselves to preaching hatred against the Occident.

Obviously the whole policy is to embroil the East with the West, to put an end to all friendly intercourse between the East and the West, both commercial and diplomatic, so that on the one hand Asia will be at the mercy of Soviet Imperialism, while, on the other hand, the Occidental Powers which have hitherto stubbornly rejected the Bolshevik brand of "liberty" may be crippled through the loss of all Eastern connexions. It is very simple when you come to think of it, but it is something which Chinese conceit will not permit the average Chinese to grasp. They say to one another: "By all means use Russia to repudiate our obligations and our treaties and put the foreigner in his place and then, when we are rid of this ancient incubus, we can easily turn round and get rid of the Russians."

PLOT TO GET RID OF TSAO KUN

Rumours of Intrigue on Lines of Expulsion of Gen. Li Yuan-hung

FROM RODNEY GILBERT.

Peking, July 9.

For some months it has been persistently rumoured that a big coalition is being formed by the various enemies of the Chihli party to unseat President Tsao Kun, as Li Yuan-hung was unseated, and to isolate Wu Pei-fu geographically as well as politically. The story emanates from a number of independent sources in almost identically the same form and is therefore worth retailing, but it must be treated as rumour until there is some real evidence that the plot is materializing.

It is said that Chang Tso-lin, Lu Yung-hsiang, Tuan Chi-jui and Dr. Sun Yat-sen have agreed to act in concert and have secured as their active agent in Peking the Christian General, Feng Yü-hsiang, who commands 30,000 men and is in a position to execute a coup of formidable proportions. It is said that united action was to have commenced immediately after the Dragon Boat Festival but that for some unknown reason it has now been postponed until September.

Feng Yü-hsiang's participation in this plot is explained as follows: His revenues in Peking are decidedly limited and he cannot pay his following in full. He wants a bailiwick of his own from which to support his army. The present Government has found him nothing but a nominal appointment to a nominal post in Mongolia. This he cannot assume without resistance from Chang Tso-lin as well as from the Mongols and the Reds. To have any chance to become ruler over Mongolia he must have Chang Tso-lin's concurrence if not his actual support. He cannot hope to receive the Manchurian dictator's blessing while he adheres to Tsao Kun and is an active member of the Chihli party. Therefore he is prepared to act for the new coalition. All of which must be taken with a generous grain of salt.

Typical Chinese Cabal.

The conspirators, according to this tale, believe that with Tsao Kun once out of the way many militarists who are loyal to him but hostile to Wu Pei-fu would find their party headless and disintegrated and would reassert their allegiance to Tuan Chi-jui and combine to cut railway communication and box the Loyang leader up in Honan, whereupon the Szechuan leaders and his agents in Kiangsi, Fukien and Kuangsi would desert him and join the new group. This is a typical Chinese cabal and, like most of them looks well on paper.

It is said further that the Tuchun of Kiangsu, Chi Hsieh-yuan, has not been consulted about his prospective position because he is not wanted and because it would give some of the parties to the coalition more satisfaction to eliminate him than to secure his support against Wu Pei-fu.

The only comment that can be made upon this is that it does not matter much whether it is fact or fiction and that speculation upon such rumours is a waste of good grey matter. The country has reached such a state, and all the military and political leaders in the land are in such a state of mind, that a complete change of Government cannot mean much more to foreigners in China or to the outside world than a change of personnel in the Peking Cabinet. Such events have to be recorded, of course, and such rumours put on file for the benefit of the future historian who wants to tell the complete story of China's disintegration and collapse.

FATAL FIRE IN HONGKONG

Foreigner Badly Injured and Six Chinese Killed

Hongkong, July 12.

DIRECT OFFICIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR MURDER OF MR. HAWLEY

Evidence that Wanhsien Officials Made Profit out of Shifting Wood Oil and were Fully Aware of the Danger Mr. Hawley Ran

The following striking testimony to the fact that the officials at Wanhsien were fully aware beforehand of the probable danger to Mr. Hawley of shifting his wood oil by steamer and that they were indeed themselves responsible for the circumstances which caused that danger has been obtained by us from an unimpeachable source. Thus, it will be seen, was Commander Whitehorn, of H. M. S. Cockchafer, doubly justified.

In foreign circles of this port (Wanhsien) the belief is prevalent that the immediate cause of Mr. Hawley's death is to be found in the opposition of the junk people to the transportation of wood oil by steamers during the summer months i.e. the high water season. This belief is, however, only partly correct. There is strong reason to believe that the immediate cause of Mr. Hawley's death is to be looked for in the attitude of the local officials, both civil and military, who could have prevented the murder, or any serious happenings, had they intended to do so. Certainly the agitators behind the scenes would never have dared to go as far as they did, if they had been given to understand by the authorities in time that sharp punishment would be inflicted on any culprit.

Authorities Not Ignorant.

The authorities cannot take refuge behind the excuse that they did not know what was going on, for everybody in town knew of the agitation. Everybody knew that certain people in the town were trying to form a Junk Transportation Company, a company that would take under its wings all the junk masters and junk owners on the river, hire the junks out at fixed rates and demand an extra premium of 4 per cent. of the amount of freights for guaranteeing the honesty etc., of the junk people. It would certainly have been a money-making concern for the originators, money-making at the expense of shippers and, probably, also of junk masters. The better class of junk masters were aware of this, they were, consequently, against the scheme and kept away from the demonstration.

In a place like Wanhsien there are, however, always a lot of junkless junk masters and workless junk coolies who prefer making their living by stealing and working together with soldiers and other robbers and pirates. These elements the promoters of the above-mentioned scheme got together, they told them that their livelihood would be endangered if cargoes like wood oil were allowed to be shipped by steamers. Nothing is easier than with a few cents and more promises to tempt this type of people to rash acts, and the agitators did it. Their intention was now to frighten foreign shippers of wood oil away from steamers, and, thus, force them to keep their oil over until after the high water season, when it would have to be shipped by junk.

The local Chinese authorities knew of all this agitation, they knew exactly what was going on, they knew quite well that cargo, and perhaps also anyone concerned in moving it, would receive a rough handling on the way to the steamers, although perhaps, they did not expect the matter would cost the life of a foreigner. There seems to have been some kind of secret understanding between the authorities and the agitators that soldiers would not interfere in any demonstration, for the agitators and rowdies felt themselves quite safe from the soldiers.

The Usual Squeeze.

The cause of the hostile attitude of the authorities towards transportation of wood oil by steamers can be found in the exertions of foreign shippers to free themselves from the heavy illegal military taxation imposed on wood oil if forwarded by junks. Since foreign shippers of wood oil have lately managed practically to free themselves from illegal military taxation if they ship by steamers, the authorities naturally do not look at steamer shipments with friendly eyes; they, too, prefer the oil to be shipped by junk, in which case they can always get a higher taxation of the oil, no matter what arrangement foreigners, or their consuls, have been making at Chungking. If, at times when the river seems free of pirates, the foreigner imagines that the payment of escort fees (Fu-Shang tax) is superfluous, it is an easy thing for the military commanders to send a guard of, say, 50 soldiers down river with arms and ammunition to play the part of pirates; this has been done more than once.

The above goes to show the attitude of the local authorities, they knew exactly what was going on but, for reasons of their own, preferred to play the part of the ignorant, trusting very likely that Mr. Hawley, as foreigners when dealing with Chinese often do, would put himself somehow in the wrong, so that, if anything of a more serious nature should happen, they would be able to settle the affair ultimately in a draw.

The Powers First to Blame.

The above is the immediate cause of Mr. Hawley's death. In the indirect way it must be attributed to the policy of the Powers towards China. Very illuminating is the fact that the whole thing could happen under the very noss of the British man-of-war.

STRENGTH OF DR. SUN'S ARMY

The Mercenary Troops and the Public Revenues

The strength of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's army in Canton is, after all, not so great as the waste of Cantonese wealth in the last two years has led many to believe, writes the Chinese correspondent of the "Hongkong Daily Press". Dr. Sun Yat-sen's army in Canton has only 132,000 men, according to reports recently submitted to the Secretary of War. The figures for the several commands are given as follows:—

Yunnanese Army	26,000
Cantonese Army	35,000
West Road Department	11,500
Honanese	2,500
Hunanese	45,000
Kiangsi-ites	2,100
Shan-Shensi-ites	2,400
Central Crops No. 1	2,700
Central Corps No. 3	2,200
Central Corps No. 7	3,500

Dr. Sun's Secretary of War now considers the figures are larger than the actual strength and is instructing the several commanders concerned to revise their reports.

Dr. Sun's investigations into the strength of the numerous units of his army appears to be prompted by a desire to reclaim some of the revenue offices in Canton and vicinity now held by the mercenary troops. The Yunnanese alone are controlling many revenue sources. Aside from the Canton-Samshui Railroad and the gambling traffic income of Canton, the Yunnanese are controlling the Shipping License Bureaux of Canton, Samshui, Fatshan, and Chanchuen; the Wine and Tobacco Monopoly Tax Bureaux of Canton and Tsingyuan; the House Rent and Police Taxes of Fatshan, Yimpo, and other large towns along the Canton-Samshui Railroad; the Namkwan Theatre rent and war tax collections on the East Bund; the Brothels License of Canton and Fatshan; and the land deeds examination fees at Fatshan.

BETTER HARMONY IN FUKIEN

Peking, July 8.

Gen. Li Chu-jen, the President's delegate, has arrived at Foochow, and it is reported that his mission to bring about an understanding between Generals Chow Yin-jen and Sun Chuan-fang has already met with success. Consequently Gen. Sun will shortly take up his post of Tupan of Frontier Defence at Changchow.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRIBULATIONS OF A PREMIER

Sun Pao-chi's Rich Experience and Poor Reward: He Wins by Resignation

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Peking, July 12.

Sun Pao-chi has served his country for the past 40 years, but his tenure of the premiership during the last six months has probably been at once the richest and the poorest venture in that lifetime of service, the richest in point of experience and the poorest in point of reward. He has had more than his share of the responsibilities of office, without the usual emoluments associated with it in this country.

It will be recalled that his appointment came as a compromise between the claims of Wu Ching-lien, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, and those of Kao Liang-wei. Sun Pao-chi was then Director-General of Customs, an appointment sufficiently snug to excite the envy of even the highest politician in Peking. When it became evident that neither Wu nor Kao could hope to get the Premiership, Sun Pao-chi was rudely disturbed out of his post to make room for Kao, for whom nothing short of the Shiuiwuchu would serve as a solatium. Sun was precipitated into the political whirlpool, and scarcely before he could find his bearings (if one can find bearings in a whirlpool) was nominated to the Premiership in a way that brooked of no refusal and approved in that position by Parliament.

Ministers Pushed on Him.

His troubles began immediately. According to the Constitution, the Premier appoints his own Cabinet, as in the case of most European countries, but the adoption of such a course by Sun was not in the programme of the Presidential clique headed by Wang Yu-chih. This clique intended to establish itself in the Cabinet as well as in the Palace, and was therefore ready with its list of Ministers as soon as the Prime Minister. The upshot was that very few concessions were made to Sun Pao-chi, and when the Cabinet was announced it was apparent that the Premier had had most of his Ministers foisted on him. Such a situation of course could not last long; the reason that it lasted as long as six months was because it did not suit the Presidential party to dispense with Sun's services until they were absolutely exhausted.

The Duel Over Finance.

Sun Pao-chi accepted the situation with a good deal of resentment. About one appointment he was particularly annoyed. That was the Ministry of Finance, and if such an event can be dismissed in a sentence, the history of Sun Pao-chi's Premiership might be termed a duel between himself and his own Minister of Finance. They were antipathetic before they were united in the business of government. They had opposing political affiliations, which could not be reconciled in the Cabinet, and their alliance became more and more unnatural with continued association. Each nursed a grudge against the other which he nourished in word and deed. Wang Koh-ming as Minister of Finance was in a peculiarly happy position to vent his spleen on the Prime Minister. He held the purse-strings and that gave him a considerable advantage over his adversary. Not only did he block the channel between the Treasury and the Cabinet office, leaving the Premier without the usual funds associated with his office, but he was instrumental in holding up Sun's salary, which is even now in arrear. Moreover, Wang is in the inner counsels of the President, whereas Sun Pao-chi has always been on the other side of the fence.

Sun Pao-chi tried to force the issue on more than one occasion. He intimated that Wang must go, the intimation always being in the form of his own resignation. But resignations must wait on Presidential acceptance, the withholding of which reduced Sun to impotence. And so the battle continued, with Sun always on the losing side.

A Card up his Sleeve.

But Sun Pao-chi had a card up his sleeve which eventually made the President and his advisers face the issue. That was the Gold Franc case, the public cause of the disagreement between the Premier and Minister of Finance. It is the lot of Prime Ministers the world over to assume responsibilities for the entire administration, and it was hoped that Sun Pao-chi would taken upon himself the abuse which awaits the Prime Minister of the Cabinet that settles the Gold Franc question in terms of gold. The immediate object of the Presidential party, with Wang Koh-ming as the leading spirit, is to acknowledge China's liability to pay French indemnity moneys on a gold basis. They are interested in the resuscitation of the Banque Industrielle, in which Wang Koh-ming was formerly Chinese director in Peking. But public opinion, expressed by Parliament, Press, and students, had already made up its mind that China should pay according to the paper rate, and Sun Pao-chi did not intend to run counter to that feeling, especially on behalf of people with whom he had no dealings.

The President's Dilemma.

Hoping to make Sun a present of the limelight of a Gold Franc settlement, the Presidential party maintained him in office until it was obvious that the Wang-Sun issue would have to be faced. After the Cabinet had announced itself ready to join the Premier in resigning their portfolios, the President himself came into the open to try to avert a rupture. But events had gone too far, and eventually Tsao Kun accepted the resignation of the Premier, without allowing the other Ministers to leave their posts. So we had the spectacle of a Premier falling without his Cabinet—an irregular proceeding in the eyes of many people. In any case, it proved that the President considered it was expedient to settle the tussle between Sun and Wang in Wang's favour, although he would rather have postponed the issue until a more convenient season. Now he is trying to smooth over the affairs with Loyang, which, while not the bulwark of Sun Pao-chi, had supported him in office. He is also endeavouring to prevent any open espousal by Wu Pei-fu of the proponents of a paper settlement of the Gold Franc case, and to argue the case for a settlement according to the French demand—a settlement which is the only logical means of ending this protracted dispute.

THE BLACKMAIL AT PEITAIHO

Flagrant Case Referred to the Consular Body at Tientsin

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

The man who is levying blackmail, at the instance of a man in Peking who is also a member of the Kung I-hui, has not attempted to inclose his land on four sides but only on the side against the foreigners. He has shown no titles to the land he claims: he does not attempt to cultivate it since it is beach land and will grow nothing and he cannot build upon it and is not allowed to do so by the Kung I-hui regulations if he would. The blackmail is most flagrant.

It is interesting to note the Kung I-hui have a notice in Chinese on the land saving that if anyone hauls sand they must first get permission from the Kung I-hui and pay them for it.

The Temple Bay Association have referred the whole matter to the Tientsin Consular Body with the request that the local authorities shall be approached and a definite pronouncement made clear so as to protect the right of the public.

The time has come when the rules guiding life here must be made clear according to law and order. At present one of the many Associations covering the Peitaiho area, namely the Kung I-hui, is acting as if it were the lawful municipal authority. It permits no sand to be taken from the beach without its consent and charges the local builders at rates it arbitrarily demands, at present $10 per room.

The Hui has also seized, so my informant says, personally owned land, cuts down the trees and generally does as it likes: this amounts to confiscation pure and simple and without compensation. It makes regulations to suit itself and collects taxes. I have never seen any public accounting of receipts or expenditures. All these acts are right and proper if done under properly constituted authority and every cent is properly vouched and accounted for, and the taxpayers are properly represented and sanction what is done by majority vote.

TIBETAN BORDER DESERTED

Commissioner Slips Secretly Away to Lay His Case Before Wu Pei-fu

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tachienlu, June 23.

Chen Hsia-lin, the Border Commissioner, left Tachienlu yesterday about noon. Shen Yang-tsai, one of Chen's Hunan officers, is acting as Commissioner pending the arrival of Sen Chao-lan, the Szechuan nominee, or any other appointment that the Central Government may make. Kang Dao-yin left the frontier one week ago, travelling by the big East road as far as Lengchi. There he was held up or delayed by trouble among the border troops. We hear he is still there and now hopes to join Chen Hsia-lin at a point below Lengchi on the river. Tung Chen has gone by the south road to Yunnan, crossing the Ya Ja Gen, (12,000 ft.) and hoping to join the Tung somewhere below Moshimien.

Kang Dao-yin's departure from the frontier has apparently been the signal among border troops that Chen's administration has collapsed. We hear that mutiny is breaking out among the soldiers along Chen's line of defence. Several hundred soldiers at Hualienping have mutinied and gone over to the Third Army under General Lan. Unless Sun Yang-tsai can quickly and firmly take hold of the present situation nothing will prevent the border from going to absolute chaos. There is now every prospect of the entire border army capitulating and this is about the only hope we have of a speedy and peaceful settlement of what at the present moment looks a very serious and menacing situation.

The Hunan Soldiers Peril.

As far as we can gather Tachienlu is threatened from the following directions: Chen's own Hunan soldiers to the number of three or four thousand are scattered at different points along the frontier. Some of these soldiers maintain that Chen by his departure has deserted them and left them on the border under false pretences. Before leaving, Chen informed his officers that he was simply taking four months leave and proceeding to Loyang to lay the border situation before Wu Pei-fu. Kang Dao-yin, it was said, was also going with him. This statement of affairs Chen's Hunan friends are not prepared to accept and now they threaten to help themselves and find the easiest road home.

These Hunan men have not found the Tibetan frontier the Eldorado it was stated to be. Gold was the great incentive that brought them from their distant province and no doubt a considerable quantity has left the frontier in that direction, but what the Hunan soldiers are at present distressed about is its unequal distribution. Only one thing deters the Hunan troops, and that is, by what route shall they make their escape.

Border Warriors Forlorn.

The next direction from which danger comes is Chen's distracted old Szechuan border warriors. Without even a gentle farewell Chen gives these fine old frontier troops the slip—they don't even know about his prospective return in four months' time. These hardy old tsamba-butter-tea fighters demand and deserve our admiration and sympathy. If medals were given for every campaign, these ragged old ruffians would probably have enough glory to retire on. Hundreds, if not thousands, of them were in Lhasa when China collapsed in 1911 and they returned home viâ India, Burma and Yunnan. And here they are back on the border again prepared to fight anything and anybody provided there is very little firing of guns and they are allowed to retain, not maintain, their Thibetan wives. If these old border warriors come back on this wealthy city of Tachienlu there will be no doubt about their object and visit. But for the suffering to women, girls, and merchants, we would like to see those old soldiers get something of their own back again.

The Moment for a Raid.

There is some talk of the Hsiang Cheng Wa coming out from the interior with no other intention or ambition other than carrying back a little extra baggage. Psychologically, now would be the moment to honour Tachienlu with a visit. No Border Commissioner, no Taoyin, no army, and everything proceeding in the direction of complete and absolute chaos. The Hsiang Cheng Wa have threatened to come upon us so frequently that the threat has now lost something of its fear.

The last direction from which we expect danger is Kanze. The movements of the Lhasa Government troops have of late been somewhat mysterious. Steadily and slowly they have been encroaching on a border that was roughly defined some years ago. Tachienlu I think has very little to fear from the Lhasa soldiers as sooner or later, China will claim back again what she loses during any time of trouble or distress. All we now need to give Tachienlu an important place in Asiatic history is a Lolo invasion. All eyes are turned towards the Third Army from which the people expect help and deliverance. General Lan has already established a claim to notoriety; his ability to extort money is well known and much feared.

MISSIONARIES TAKEN IN ANHUI

Three Foreign Captures of Bandits in Attack on Liuanchow

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Anking, An., July 8.

An accurate account of the successful bandit attack on the city of Liuanchow last week is not yet available. Liuan is 270 li north west of Anking and recent heavy rains have made communications difficult. It seems that the "Big Sword Society" a strong local organization under the brigand leader Hsieh with over a thousand followers prepared to make an attack on the city. The local magistrate named Ting being informed of the plan went out with his local guard and gave battle to the bandits, with what success it is not quite clear. Two days later the bandits returned and forcing the city gates not only plundered the big shops but carried off hostages. It is not known what became of the magistrate but the only person to be found in his yamen after the raid was Mr. Ting's old mother who is over 70 years of ago.

July 9.

The Chinese papers here report that three foreigners, one man and two women missionaries were carried off by the bandits from Liuan. As the China Inland Mission is the only Mission there except the Roman Catholic is feared that the two women are Miss Lindsay and Miss Smith.

Foreign Missionaries Held as Hostages

Peking, July 16.

Tufei are reported to be steadily increasing in numbers and also in activity in Anhui. They now number 4,000 to 5,000. As a countermeasure to reinforcement of the Government troops, the tufei have taken prisoners several foreign missionaries, hoping that they will furnish insurance against bombardment. The Bank of China has been looted and wealthy townspeople have been robbed.

The tufei apparently consist of dismissed soldiers and irresponsibles.—Reuter.

CONTROL OF MALARIA IN THE PHILIPPINES

Manila, June 30.

The Rockefeller Foundation has agreed to continue to supply one half of the expenditure incurred in the campaign for the control of malaria in the Philippine Islands, undertaken jointly about two years ago by it and the Philippine Health Department, according to an announcement by Eugene A. Gilmore, vice-governor, under whose jurisdiction the Health Department operates.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BANDIT RAIDERS IN ANHUI

Women Kidnapped Every Night; Villagers Sleeping in Fields for Fear of Raiders

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Pochow, An., July 10.

We are well launched into full summer weather and have had fine rains here in time to start the autumn crops off splendidly, though only 100 li to the north of Kweitehfu they are very dry and even worse, I hear, at Tsaohsien in Shantung. The kaoliang, the boon of the tufei, as well as the hope of the poor people for their autumn grain, is rapidly getting tall enough to hide people and so the bandits are becoming proportionately active. We were out last week at one of our country stations and on each of two nights just before the trip five women and girls had been carried away from one village and a small girl from another one, and we saw a band of "White Speared" men on our return trip who had come from some 10 or 12 li from north our main line of travel and had picked up a child in arms that had been taken a few days before, and dropped right by a village in which we have a school.

Near another of our stations are several villages that the citizens speak definitely of as having nests of these demons, local men who seem in co-operation with the main bands of robbers from further north in the hills. These people have collected money from the citizens under threat of being molested, if they do not pay it with which to buy guns.

This smuggling in of arms from other countries for profit will increase so long as those who are caught in the act are let off with such ridiculously light punishment as was reported by one of the foreign consuls recently. This consul's own citizens in the interior might be killed with some of these same guns, had they passed, and yet the punishment was such as to be no deterrent to one who is mean enough to do such dirty work. For my part I could wish that any ship on which are found smuggled arms and amunition might by an international law be subject to confiscation and her officers to severe punishment, unless it could be clearly proven that they were ignorant of such cargo. Such punishment for a few would have, I think, a very wholesome influence. The poor country people are in great terror and they tell me that many of them will not attempt to sleep in homes much more till the Kaoliang is cut, but in rain and shine will have to sleep in their fields, men, women and children! This in a so-called civilzed country!

Opium Sold Freely.

In my last I reported that Ma Tu-li had been here and that all the opium was reported as destroyed just when they were beginning to gather, but now as I see considerable quantities on the streets for sale I learn that it was understood that from one to three-tenths of the whole was left, whether with or without his knowledge I do not know. Opium is as openly sold as last year, though not nearly so much of it.

Our local Baptist Association of Chinese and foreigners from Kaifengfu, Chengchow, Kueitehfu and Pochow, met 10 days ago at Kueitehfu for three days and had an encouraging session. The writer visited Kueitehfu for the first time in 1901 when we had only 16 members at Kueitehfu who had been got by visits from Tsiningchow in Shantung and none in any of these other three stations and our nearest missionary was at Tsiningchow. Then there was no mission work in all this part of Honan and Anhui, except that done by the C.I.M. at several different stations, Chowkiakow, Chinchow, Taikong, Fukow and Sihwa. Now our Baptist Mission has about 50 missionaries located in these four places and the 16 Chinese members have grown to about 2,000 with some 50 or 60 Chinese co-workers and this association has bought property and opened a station of their own at the great centre of Hsuchowfu.

A silver penny of the days of Edward I. (1272-1307) was found on the top of Largo Law by Mr. Clayton, of Lundin Links, recently. It is about the size of a six-pence. How the coin came to be in this place is a mystery.

THE TRADE MARK LAW

Our Peking correspondent sends us below, the English authorized translation of the Chinese Trademark Law promulgated on May 3, 1923.

Article 1. Any person who desires to use exclusively any trade mark for the purpose of distinguishing any goods as being produced, manufactured, improved, selected, sold or dealt with by him in his business, must apply to have such trade mark registered in accordance with this Law.

A trade mark must consist of special and distinctive characters, devices, marks, or a combination thereof.

The colour to be applied to a trade mark must be designated.

Article 2. None of the following may be registered as a trade mark:

(1) Devices which are identical with or similar to the national flag, the national—emblem, the state seal, the military or naval flag, any official seal or any Decoration for Merit of the Chinese Republic.

(2) Devices which are identical with or similar to the badge of the Red Cross, or the national, military, or naval flag of any foreign state.

(3) Devices which are calculated to be prejudicial to public order or morals or to be deceptive to the public.

(4) Devices which are identical with or similar to marks customarily used for the same goods.

(5) Devices which are identical with or similar to a mark belonging to another person and generally known to the public as being used for the same goods.

(6) Devices which are identical with or similar to any medal given by the Government, or any medal or diploma awarded at an exhibition or any industrial exhibition; provided that this shall not apply where the recipient of such medal or diploma desires to use it as part of his trade mark.

(7) Devices employing the likeness, name, or trade name of another person or the denomination of a juridical person or of any association other than a juridical person, unless the assent thereto of such person or association has been obtained.

(8) Devices which are identical with or similar to a registered trade mark of another person, in respect of which one year has not yet elapsed since its invalidation; provided that this shall not apply to a trade mark which, before its registration became invalid, had not been used for a year or more.

The Right of Priority.

Article 3. Where two or more persons apply separately for registration of an identical or similar trade mark for the same goods, registration shall be granted to the person who had first user of such trade mark, but where none of the applicants had before application actual user of such trade mark, or where it cannot be established as to who had first user, registration may be granted to the person who shall first make application. If the applications are of the same date, no registration shall be granted to any one of the applicants until they have by mutual arrangement assigned the trade mark exclusively to one of them.

Article 4. If a trade mark has been used in good faith uninterruptedly for five years or more before this Law comes into force, and the owner thereof applies for registration within six months thereafter, registration may be allowed free from the restrictions provided in section 5 of Article 2, and in Article 3; provided that, if the Bureau of Trade Marks deems it necessary, it may require the form, or the place of user, of the trade mark to be modified or restricted.

Article 5. If a person uses for the same goods several trade marks similar to one another, application may be made by him for their registration as associated trade marks.

Article 6. Any foreigner who, availing himself of the provisions of any treaty for the mutual protection of trade marks, desires to have exclusive user of his trade mark, may apply for registration in accordance with this Law.

Article 7. The right arising from the registration of a trade mark may be transferred together with the business concerned.

The transferree of such a right as mentioned in the preceding paragraph cannot set up his right against third parties, unless application made by him for the change of the name of the original applicant has been granted.

Limitation on Applicants.

Article 8. A person who has no residence or office within the Republic of China may not apply for the registration of a trade mark, or take any other process relating thereto, or exercise the right of exclusive user thereof, or enjoy any other privileges pertaining thereto, unless he appoints as his agent a person having his residence or office within the Republic of China.

The agent mentioned in the preceding paragraph shall, unless otherwise authorized, represent his principal in any process or proceedings relating to trade mark that may be taken in accordance with the provisions of this or any other law or ordinance.

Article 9. The appointment or change of such agent as mentioned in paragraph 2 of the last preceding Article, or the change or withdrawal of his authority, unless it has been approved and registered by the Bureau of Trade Marks, may not be set up against third parties.

Article 10. Whenever the agent concerned in any trade mark is considered by the Bureau of Trade Marks as improper, the Bureau may order him to be changed.

When an order has been given for the change of an agent concerned in any trade mark, the acts done by him relating to such trade mark may be declared invalid by the Bureau of Trade Marks.

Applications from Abroad.

Article 11. In favour of a person residing in a foreign country or at a distant place or at a place where communications are inconvenient, the Bureau of Trade Marks may, motu proprio or on application, extend the legal period within which any process relating to the Bureau of Trade Marks should be taken.

Article 12. If in regard to a trade mark, any application is made, or any other process taken, not within the legal or prescribed period, the application or other process may be declared invalid; provided that this shall not apply where it is considered that proper cause of delay has been shown.

Article 13. If, in respect of any trade mark a person applies with good reasons for any testimony or a reproduction of any drawing, or for permission to inspect or to make copies of any document, the Bureau of Trade Marks shall not refuse the request, unless it considers that the matter should be kept confidential.

Article 14. The right of exclusive user of a trade mark is acquired by the application from the day of registration.

The right of exclusive user of the trade mark is confined only to such goods as are designated in the application for registration.

Article 15. The right of exclusive user of a trade mark acquired by a person does not prevent another from indicating his goods in the ordinary way by means of his own name or trade name or the name, the place of production, the quality, the form or the utility of the goods; provided that this shall not apply where, after a trade mark has been registered by another, a name or trade name indentical with the one registered is used in bad faith.

Article 16. The period of exclusive user of a trade mark shall be 20 years commencing from the day of registration.

In case of trade marks already registered in a foreign country and registered in this country in accordance with the provisions of Article 6, the period of duration shall be the same as that originally fixed in such foreign country, provided that in no case may the period of duration exceed 20 years.

Application may be made for the extension of the periods of exclusive user mentioned in the preceding two paragraphs; provided that such extension shall nevertheless be limited to 20 years.

Transfer of Right.

Article 17. The right of exclusive user of a trade mark may be transferred to another person together with the business concerned, or separately with the goods for which the trade mark is registered, but the rights of associated trade marks cannot be transferred separately.

Article 18. The transfer of the right of exclusive user of a trade mark cannot be set up against third parties, unless such transfer has been approved and registered by the Bureau of Trade Marks. This shall be the same in the case of a mortgage of such right.

Article 19. The right of exclusive user of a registered trade mark, apart from the fact that it may be cancelled at any time upon the application of the registered owner, may, in any of the following cases after registration, be cancelled by the Bureau of Trade Marks motu proprio or on the application of a person interested:

(1) If the owner of a registered trade mark without permission makes any alteration in or addition to such trade mark with intent to pass it off as some other trade mark.

(2) If, without good cause, the owner of the trade mark has not used it for a year after its registration or has discontinued its use for two years.

(3) If, in case the right of a trade mark has been transferred, no application for registration of such transfer has been made within a year, except where the transfer has been caused by devolution on inheritance.

The provisions of section (2) of this Article do not apply, if, in the case of associated trade marks, one of them is still used, or, in the case of a trade mark registered in a foreign country as well as in this country, it has been used or has not ceased to be used in the foreign country.

When the right of exclusive user of a trade mark is to be cancelled under paragraph 1 of this Article, the Bureau of Trade Marks shall give 60 day's notice to the owner thereof or his agent.

A person who is dissatisfied with an order made against him under paragraph 1 of this Article, may, within 60 days, appeal, in conformity with law, to the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce.

Question of Extension.

Article 20. If, during the period of exclusive user of a trade mark the person having such right of exclusive user discontinues his business concerned, his right is thereby extinguisher.

Article 21. The registration of a trade mark or of the extension of the period of exclusive user thereof, if it is contrary to the provisions of Articles 1 to 5, shall, after a hearing by the Bureau of Trade Marks, be declared invalid.

Article 22. The Bureau of Trade Marks shall keep at its office a Trade Mark Register in which shall be entered all rights of exclusive user of trade mark rights as may be prescribed by any law or ordinance.

All trade marks that have been approved for registration shall be entered in the Trade Mark Register, and certificates of registration shall be issued.

Article 23. The Bureau of Trade Marks shall establish a Trade Mark Gazette in which shall be published all registered trade marks and all necessary matters relating to trade marks.

Article 24. When application is made for the registration of a trade mark or of an extension of the period of exclusive user, the applicant shall at the time of application pay the prescribed fees for registration; provided that the fees shall be refunded in the event that such application is rejected by the Bureau of Trade Marks.

Article 25. When a person applies for the registration of a trade mark, he shall according to the classfication of goods designate the goods for which the trade mark is to be used.

The classification of goods as mentioned in the preceding paragraph shall be determined by the Detailed Regulations.

Article 26. Whenever there is an application to the Bureau of Trade Marks for the registration of the exclusive user of a trade mark, or for the extension of the period of exclusive user, the matter shall be examined by an examiner of the Bureau.

The Bureau of Trade Marks, when satisfied that the application is in order, shall, apart from informing the applicant of the result of the examination, publish the trade mark in the Trade Mark Gazette, and shall not approve of the application until six months have elapsed without any objection being made by any person interested or until satisfactory replies to such objection, if any, have been given.

Article 27. Where an applicant is dissatisfied with a decision dismissing his application, he may within 30 days from the date of service of a copy of such decision, lodge a protest in writing, stating his reasons and ask for a re-examination.

Should the applicant be dissatisfied with the second decision, he may, in conformity with law, appeal to the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce.

Condition of Hearing.

Article 28. Any person interested may request a hearing in any of the following cases:

(1) Where the registration should be invalidated according to the provisions of Article 21.

(2) Where the extent of the right of exclusive user of a trade mark should be determined.

An examiner may ask for a hearing where the registration of a trade mark should be invalidated for contravention of the provisions of Article 1 or sections 1 to 6 of Article 2.

No request may be made for a hearing concerning a registered trade mark on the ground of contravention of the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of Article 2, or Articles 3 to 5, if three years have elapsed since the day of its publication in the Trade Mark Gazette.

Article 29. Any request for a hearing shall be made to the Bureau of Trade Marks in writing which shall make copies of all documents concerning the hearing submitted by the parties and cause them to be served on the opponents with order that they shall within the period allowed submit rejoinders, and may also direct questions in writing to be answered by them.

Article 30. A hearing is conducted before three trade mark judges sitting together, who shall decide by a vote of majority.

The trade mark judges shall, for each case, be designated by the Director of the Bureau of Trade Marks.

A trade mark judge shall withdraw from a hearing, if he is personally interested in the matter or has previously taken any part in it.

Article 31. The decision in a hearing may be rendered merely upon the documents of the case; but, if it is deemed necessary, a date shall fixed and the parties summoned to argue orally.

If any party to a hearing fails to observe the legal or prescribed period, the hearing is not thereby suspended.

Article 32. Any person who is interested in the matter forming the subject of a hearing may, before such hearing comes to an end, apply for permission to intervene. Whether or not such intervention shall be allowed, shall be decided by the trade mark judges sitting together after the parties concerned have been consulted.

Any act done by the person intervening in relation to the hearing is of no effect, if it is in conflict with the act of the party he professes to assist.

Rehearing and Appeal

Article 33. A person who is dissatisfied with the decision in a hearing may, within 30 days from the date of service of a copy of such decision, petition for a re-hearing of the matter. The provisions governing a hearing shall apply to a re-hearing.

Article 34. A person who is dissatisfied with the decision in a re-hearing may, within 60 days, appeal in conformity with law to the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce.

A person who is dissatisfied with the decision in the appeal mentioned in the preceding paragraph may, so far as such decision is contrary to any law or ordinance, bring an action, in conformity with law, before the administrative court.

Article 35. When the decision in a hearing concerning matters of a trade mark has become final, no person whosoever may ask for a second hearing on the same facts and the same evidence.

Article 36. No civil or criminal proceeding concerning the right of exclusive user of a trade mark shall be instituted until the decision in the hearing has become final.

Article 37. Any person who desires to have the exclusive use of a mark for goods used in a business, the object of which is not for profit, must apply to have such mark registered in accordance with this Law.

The provisions relating to trade marks shall apply mutatis mutandis to such marks as referred to in the preceding paragraph.

Article 38. The amount of fees for the registration of a trade mark and other charges connected therewith shall be fixed in the Detailed Regulations Relating to Enforcement.

Penalties.

Article 39 Whoever commits any of the following offences shall be punished with penal servitude for a term not exceeding one year, or with fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, together with forfeiture of the articles concerned:

(1) Using, for the same goods, the registered trade mark of another person or any receptacle, package, wrapper etc., bearing such trade mark, or delivering or selling such goods

(2) Delivering or selling the registered trade mark of another person or any receptacle, package or wrapper, etc., bearing such trade mark, with the intention of causing it to be used by others for the same goods.

(3) Counterfeiting or imitating the registered trade mark of another person with the intention of using it or causing it to be used by others for the same goods.

(4) Using a counterfeit or imitation registered trade mark for the same goods, or delivering or selling such trade mark with the intention of causing it to be used by others for the same goods.

(5) Delivering or selling the same goods bearing a counterfeit or imitation trade mark.

(6) Delivering or selling goods bearing a trade mark identical with or similar to a registered trade mark of another person or, with intent to deliver or sell such goods, importing them from foreign countries.

(7) Using, in relation to the same goods, a trade mark identical with or similar to a registered trade mark of another person in any business advertisement, signboard, note, bill, or other such document.

The offence of delivering or selling such goods as provided in sections 1, 2, 5, and 6 of paragraph 1 of this Article is committed, where a person, with intent to deliver or sell them, has such goods in his possession.

The offences mentioned in paragraph 1 of this Article are prosecuted only on complaint of the injured party.

Article 40. Whoever commits any of the following offences shall be punished with penal servitude for a term not exceeding six months or with fine not exceeding two hundred dollars:

(1) Obtaining the right of exclusive user of a trade mark by false pretenses.

(2) Using a non-registered trade mark for any goods with representation that such trade mark has been registered, or delivering or selling such goods, or, with the intention of delivering or selling them, having them in possession.

(3) Using a non-registered trade mark in any business advertisement, signboard, note, bill or other such document with representation that such trade mark has been registered.

Subject to Forfeiture.

Article 41. The articles that are subject to forfeiture under Article 39, may, if application has been made by the injured party before judgment is given, be delivered over to him after a fair estimate of their value has been made.

If the loss suffered by the injured party exceeds the estimated value of the articles delivered under the preceding paragraph, he may still claim compensation for the difference.

Article 42. Any witness, expert, or interpreter who, in any matter affecting trade marks, makes a false statement before the Bureau of Trade Marks, or before any administrative or judicial authorities requested to act by the Bureau, shall be punished with penal servitude for a term not exceeding six months or with fine not exceeding two hundred dollars.

If a person who has committed the offence mentioned in the preceeding paragraph confesses before a decision by an examiner or a decision in a hearing has been given in the matter, his penalty may be reduced or remitted.

Article 43. In regard to the penalty and damages connected with trade marks as provided in Articles 39 to 42, the trial and execution, when they concern foreigners, shall be conducted in accordance with treaty stipulations, if any.

Article 44. This Law shall come into force from the day of promulgation.

THE WEATHERBE APPEAL

To Be Heard in British Supreme Court

Peking, July 12.

The Chinese papers recently reported that Mr. Weatherbe had decided to demand a "retrial" of his case and that it would be heard by the Mixed Court in Shanghai. It was pointed out at the British Legation to-day that this is incorrect, as Mr. Weatherbe's appeal (not re-trial) is to be heard not by the Mixed Court but by the British Supreme Court in Shanghai. As the question to be decided is one of law, the attendance of neither the witnesses nor the parties themselves is likely to be necessary, though the latter have the right to appear in person or to be represented by counsel if they wish.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE number of helpless Russian children in the North in needy circumstances is increasing daily, and in order to extend aid to them, the Commissioners interested have applied to the Government authorities for necessary funds. According to an official investigation, the number of these children up to the middle of May totalled 680,120. Of these 149,000 were sent to various orphanages for protection, and 490 given food and shelter by public subscription. Others are in miserable condition.

ILLICIT TAXATION IN CHINA

Increasing Notice Taken in London of Violation of Treaties

British houses trading with the East are seriously concerned at the manner in which the Provinces of China have lately been imposing taxation of their own upon certain foreign imports in defiance of all Treaty obligations, says the "Times" City Editor. For more than a generation past trade between China and the other Powers has been governed by Treaties under which importers were entitled, upon payment of a commutation transit tax at the port of loading, to send goods into the interior free of all further charges. The condition was clearly laid down in the Treaty of Tientsin, made in 1858 between Great Britain and China, and a similar one appears in the Treaties with the other Powers. It was reaffirmed as recently as 1896 in the Japan-China Treaty, the transit duty defined in which applies (of course) to all other nations under the most-favoured nation clause. The reason for the disturbance of an arrangement that for so long has worked to the advantage of international trading interests, including those of China herself, lies in the breakdown that has occurred in the central government of the Celestial Empire.

Need for Remedial Action.

Increased acts of lawlessness on the part of the provinces have developed to an extent amounting to the virtual ignoring of central authority. The province of Chekiang, in her disregard of foreign treaties, has been one of the worst offenders. Attention was drawn in Parliament a year ago to the action of this province in imposing a 20 per cent. tax on cigarettes—an example which was also adopted by Fukien—but to-day, apparently, matters are much worse, for we are told that transit passes are practically ignored in Chekiang and all classes of goods are subjected to heavy and irregular duties. The evil is one that calls for redress. One suggestion, and it comes from China, is that the Legations should assist the Peking Government to maintain the treaties—for which she still professes a respect—by recognizing Chekiang's declaration of independence as the justification for indulging in fiscal retaliation against her. It is urged that Chekiang produce (with certain exceptions) leaving the province for other provinces or for Shanghai should be treated as coming from a foreign country and taxed accordingly, and that simultaneously a blockade on all telegrams into and out of Chekiang might be imposed. Action of this sort proved effectual a few years ago in Canton when that province attempted to flout the authority of the central Government. Whatever course is adopted, the need for prompt and effective action will not be gainsaid. There are more than enough artificial barriers to trade already.

LEASES OF PROPERTY IN THE OUTPORTS

British Firms Granted Renewals on 99 Years' Tenure

London, July 16.

In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. F. W. Jowett, the Commissioner of Works, replying to Mr. W. Foot Mitchell, Conservative, said that the scheme for the renewal of the subleases, granted to firms on 99 years' tenure in Tientsin, Hankow, Chinkiang, Canton, Amoy and Kiukiang, were approved by the Government, who were satisfied that the terms offered were fair and reasonable. The Government, in arriving at this decision, had carefully weighed points such as competition of foreign firms.

Replying to Mr. A. M. Samuel, Conservative, Mr. Jowett said that the holders of 64 per cent. of the lots had indicated their acceptance of the terms. Only 6½ per cent. were opposed to the scheme and the remaining 29½ per cent. said nothing. What the 6½ per cent. asked for was a free gift of £40,000 a year. These lot-holders had bought leases for 99 years and wished now to convert them into perpetuity (Ministerial cheers). He was prepared to receive a deputation, but there was no prospect of altering the decision.—Reuter.

REVIEW OF EVENTS IN KUANGTUNG

Depredations of Unpaid Mercenary Troops: Difficulty of Effecting Unification of Finance: Cantonese Army Recognized by Gen. Hsu: Volunteer Movement

Canton, July 10.

By declaring that he will no longer be responsible for the regular maintenance of his mercenary troops from July 7 and advising them to raise funds within the territory to which they have been assigned for purposes of defence, Dr. Sun Yat-sen is virtually abandoning his hired henchmen. They have proved a curse to Kuangtung, while pretending to help their master to overcome Gen. Chen Chiung-ming. A sharp turn in the situation, both military and political, in Canton may be expected at any moment, and a review of the action taken by the various parties concerned in Kuangtung affairs may be of interest to those studying Chinese events.

For months Dr. Sun has been trying to effect unification of finance under his jurisdiction, but the commanders of the various mercenaries, controlling channels of revenue, have never once actually obeyed his order to submit their accounts to the Central Administration, much less that to remit money. Instead of co-operating with Dr. Sun in devising means for equal distribution of funds among the many military units, each commander has enriched himself personally, neglecting the interests of his men. The troops have thus been forced to commit crimes to obtain pocket-money and have brought about the present reign of terror in many of the cities of South China. Tired of his mercenary troops and in order to prevent further terrorism, Dr. Sun some time ago issued orders that no more arms and ammunition should be supplied to them by the Kuangtung Arsenal. He also ordered the removal of all troops from Canton City to the outskirts. The less powerful commanders complied with the order, but it was frowned on by the more influential ones. Dr. Sun is now trying to reorganize the Cantonese army without depending on outside support and troops to maintain his hold on Canton.

..Gen. Hsu Commander-in-Chief.

In order to some small extent to save Dr. Sun's face in these new arrangements and also to preserve the Kuomingtang party from shattering to pieces, Gen. Hsu Chung-chi assumed the Command-in-Chief of the Cantonese Army on May 20 and Mr. Hu Han-min, a senior member of the Kuomingtang and a former Civil Governor of Kuangtung, became Chief Counsellor of the General Headquarters. These appointments practically relegate the former Southern chief, Dr. Sun, to the background. Following these changes, Mr. Yang Shu-chan, a Szechuanese, supported by the Yunnanese, Hunanese, Kuangsi and other mercenary commanders, had to resign the Civil Governorship and was replaced by Mr. Liao Chung-hoi, who has once before occupied the post.

The first step taken by the Cantonese army since its reorganization under Gen. Hsu, has been to map out definitely its sphere of influence, which comprises the West River districts. Gen. Hsu has instructed all district magistrates within his sphere of influence henceforth to remit funds nowhere but to his headquarters. He has also announced that no other commands may station troops within his territory.

Dr. Sun's Changed Attitude.

The changed attitude of Dr. Sun and his party has not escaped unnoticed by the commanders of the mercenaries. They have been, and still are causing trouble, going so far as to attack innocent villages and to use Government gunboats to commit piracy. They demand that the cities within their command area shall accept their paper money in exchange for specie, and are apparently seizing every opportunity to "make good" before their final withdrawal from this devastated and many times looted province.

Merchants' Volunteer Corps.

The Cantonese people, enslaved, robbed and persecuted for the last 10 years or more, are beginning to wake up. May 27 saw the federation of all the Merchants' Volunteer Corps in Kuantung under the leadership of the Canton Corps. It may be recalled that as early as 1912 some merchants in Canton had organizations for local defence under arms with the sanction of the Government. The present Kuangtung Corps has established a central command at the headquarters of the Canton contingent. Its influence was shown early this month when Kaukong, a West River port, was able to oust the Yunnanese troops there with the assistance of volunteers from the 14 neighbouring towns. Late in last month too, the citizens of Canton succeeded in getting Dr. Sun to repeal the tax on medicine and the order for the standardization of the price of all land bordering on modern roads. It was obvious that the people would not have have taken such strong action if they had not been able to depend on the backing of the volunteers. At the present time the militarists find that they cannot levy taxes at will as formerly, except in places where volunteers cannot be called in action. The main difficulty checking the progress of the volunteer movement is that of getting arms lawfully.

Incompetence of Kuomingtang.

The powerlessness of Dr. Sun is felt by the senior members of the Kuomingtang, who have placed Mr. Hu Han-min in power at the General Headquarters, while the incompetence of the Kuomingtang to improve the situation in Canton is seen by the Cantonese, who are denying it further support by refusing payment of taxes. That a sharp turn in the situation is imminent, no one who is following affairs at present will deny. It is still too early to forecast, however, whether it will be for the better or for the worse.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GERMAN SENTENCED AT MUKDEN

Charge of Causing Death of a Chinese Boy: Further Details of Trial

We published a few days ago an account of a German having been sentenced to seven years hard labour for allegedly killing a Chinese child at Mukden. The following message dated Peking, July 14, and attributed to Reuter gives further details of the affair.

Great interest attached locally to the trial of a German citizen named E. Scherer in Mukden on a charge of manslaughter near the end of last month. The German Consul-Gerenal and Vice-Consul, the American and Japanese Vice-Consuls and a British interpreter attended the hearing of the case, which began on June 20. The defendant was an employee of the Mukden arsenal. He has been in China of 20 years, most of that time in the employ of the Chinese Government, though he was at one time connected with a German Engineering firm in Shanghai. Mr. Scherer speaks Chinese fluently and conducted his own case.

The evidence for the prosecution was that the defendant had struck a Chinese school boy on the head with a cane, inflicting injuries which caused the lad's death.

$600 Paid to Family.

The defendant gave evidence that the lad in question for a long time had been in the habit of calling him "foreign devil," and other objectionable names as the defendant was going to his work. On May 19 the lad again shouted at him in this way. Defendant became angry, got out of his ricsha and chased the lad, who tripped and fell into a ditch, striking his head and causing the injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the defendant.

The lad died on May 28, nine days after the alleged assault. Defendant soon after the incident paid to the family of the deceased $600, and he contended that if a portion of this sum had been used to provide proper medical treatment the boy would have lived. He asserted that the wound had been washed with ordinary water and that it had been kept bound up with a dirty rag, the result being that the wound became septic, and that neglect of the wound had caused the death, not the wound itself.

Who Was the Coroner?

The Court laid great stress on the Coroner's report. The main question for decision was whether the fall or a blow caused the lad's death. The evidence of the Coroner told against the accused in this respect, and the accused's contention that neglect was responsible for the death was not upheld by the Court.

On June 30 the judgment of the Court was announced, the accused being sentenced to seven years imprisonment. The accused immediately appealed and the case in due course will go to a higher Court. The appeal was based on the ground that he did not inflict the injury that caused the death of the lad.

Foreigners who were present at the hearing speak highly of the way in which the trial was conducted, and the accused is apparently being well treated. This is the first case of any consequence in which a German has appeared in a Chinese Court for trial, and the interest shown in the trial in June will follow the case into its final stages.

Management of Trial.

As readers may remember we commented on the severity of the sentence and uncertainty of the evidence. Apparently in answer thereto, the following appeared in the "North China Star," dated from Peking, July 8. The origin of the statement is not further defined.

The Ministry of Justice, which is very much interested in the judicial proceedings in the courts in the Three Eastern Provinces, owing to the reported attempt on the part of Marshal Chang Tso-lin to establish a Manchurian Supreme Court totally independent of the Supreme Court in Peking, has received the report that the foreigners in Manchuria seem to be well satisfied on the whole with the working of the Manchurian courts.

In a recent case in which a German engineer employed in the Mukden Arsenal was charged with beating and severely wounding a Chinese boy with his stick, who died as a result of the beating a few days later, the District Court at Mukden conducted the entire trial in the open and to the obvious satisfaction of all the foreign residents in the city, who were interested to see how a foreign national, deprived of the consular jurisdiction, would be treated in a Chinese court. Although the verdict has been regarded as too severe, which calls for seven years hard labour, all those who attended the hearing of the case have admitted that the proceedings were quite satisfactory.

Ordinarily, the report of such a case would add to the pride of the Ministry of Justice. Realizing that satisfaction on the part of the foreigners with the Manchurian courts may lend courage to the attempt by the Mukden authorities for judicial independence, the above report which the Ministry has received is not considered in the usual light.

MONGOLIA IN NEW LIGHT

Progressive Notions Side by Side with Old-World Beliefs: The Expulsion of Missionaries

A correspondent at Urga sends us, under date June 27, the following extracts from the Mongol newspapers. They have an interest of an indirect nature in themselves apart from that of the statements made.

The Ministry of Finance, has defined in 18 points, the situation of Mongolian agriculture. There is a lack of provision for the future in ranching, the frequent destruction of cattle, causing famine, and in consequence the Mongols have no reserve left with which to purchase the first necessities for agriculture. The idea of the new Government project is not to make radical changes in the calling followed by Mongols for many centuries. but to teach them agriculture at the same time as working their ranches, so that, in the event of their cattle dying off they will have something to fall back on, and in this relation they will have a very important means of meeting their obligations.

After the Death of the Living Buddha.

From various sources it is reported that the population have become reconciled to the death of Djebtsun Damba Hutukhtu. The question of his Resurrection is now being discussed by the Conference of Aimaks, this body will also decide the place of search, either Thibet or Mongolia.

For the time being the highest authority in the Spiritual Hierarchy is the Khambo-Nomun-Khan.

The Executors have with decision protested against Bogdo's property going to the Exchequer. It is decided to sell it by Auction, the proceeds to go to the Lama & Monastery Department. One of handed over to the Ministry of Endightenment of the People which will give this Department a pied-à-terre in the centre of the town. (This is the Ministry which issued the ordinace about Services for Rain).

The Protestant missionaries have lodged a complaint with the Swedish Consul in Peking.

Before the Consul takes up the matter with the Mongolian Government, we recommend for his information, the following points:—

1. The Swedish missionaries came to Mongolia without first obtaining permission from the Government.

2. Without this permission, they proceeded to build a School for Propagating the Gospel; distributed tracts amongst the Mongol soldiers and civilian population, persistently gave out that the Mongolian Government was Godless etc., etc.

3. The Swedish missionaries were in touch with the American Y.M.C.A., in China and the American Consul in Kalgan, Mr. Sokobin, well-known for his share in trying to foment a counter-revolution against the present Government.

4. Working in Urga the missionaries were under the patronage of Mr. F. A. Larson, who is known to have been an Advisor to the Chinese Government in the Department for Mongol & Thibetan Affairs.

5. The missionaries, built for themselves, presumably for the purposes of agriculture, bases, which put them in an ideal position for military espionage. Taking into consideration the rumours of Feng Yu Hsiang's (also a Protestant) preparations for the invasion of Outer Mongolia, it is impossible not to be suspicious of the Missionaries.

Presupposing that the Mongol people, least of all, were in need of preaching and psalm-siging missionaries, the Government politely ordered them to leave Mongolia.

HEAVY RAINS IN KIRIN

Crops Benefiting: Severe Drought in Russia

Harbin, July 15.

There have been heavy rains from Tientsin to Harbin. The crops are looking much better than last year.

Reliable reports from Russia indicate that there is a likelihood of a famine next year surpassing all previous ones, owing to the destruction of the crops by drought, locusts and vermin.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE COCKCHAFER AFFAIR

Lansbury's Persistent Effort to Ruin His Countrymen

London, July 14.

In the House of Commons to-day, replying to Mr. G. Lansbury (Labour), the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, said that the Chinese Government had protested against the action and threats of the commander of the Cockchafer at Wanhsien. The question of the publication of the Chinese despatch in this connexion would be considered when the full report of the Commander-in-Chief on the affair was received.—Reuter.

JAPAN'S NEW LUXURY TARIFF

Foreign Community Alarmed at Extra Cost of Living and Bad at That

Tokio, July 11.

The Tariff Bill on Luxuries has been passed by the Lower House.

July 12.

The Tariff Bill, which passed the Lower House late last night, in spite of strenuous protests and opposition, carries a Seiyukai recommendation that domestically produced luxuries should be similarly taxed and that the present proposed tariff should be revised as occasion warrants.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, July 15.

A meeting of the foreign community of Kobe to-day passed a resolution of protest against the Luxuries Tariff Bill, which it views with alarm and anxiety.

The opinion was expressed that such a measure would render maintenance of the European standard of living in Japan impossible, would increase the cost of living on every side by increasing the cost of imports as well as of domestic manufactures and would seriously damage Japan's trade.—Reuter's Pacific service.

Tokio, July 17.

The Upper House has passed the supplementary estimates of the Luxuries Tariff.

It is understood that the Tariff will be effective from the date of promulgation which has not been fixed at present pending understandings with those countries enjoying conventional tariff rates.

It is understood that the question of goods in transit has been taken up in the interests of importers.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE American Legation, says the Chung Mei Service, has been advised by Mr. Chamberlain, U. S. Vice-Consul, who is now on the island of Hainan, that he is proceeding with his work of investigating the death of the American missionary, the Rev. George Douglas Byers at Katchek. Mr. Chamberlain, who is attached to the U.S. Consulate-General in Canton, went to Hainan on board the U. S. S. Sacremento from Hongkong.

CHURCH MISSIONS IN CHINA

Bishops' Request for Further Assistance

London, July 16.

At a meeting of the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly it was reported that the Bishops in China were anxious that Mission help should be sent out to the Far East. The meeting decided that the Council should take steps to confer with the Bishops of Hongkong and North China in connexion with the matter.—Reuter.

PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE IN SESSION

Manila, July 17.

The Legislature has opened for a 90-day session. Governor-General Wood in a brief message urged the passage of numerous measures, thrown out at the last session, to better economic conditions.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FURTHER HONOUR FOR CAPT. ROBINSON

A Presentation in Hongkong

Hongkong, July 16.

In the presence of a distinguished gathering, the Governor of Hongkong this morning presented the life-saving medal of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem to Captain Robinson in recognition of his services in connexion with the Japanese earthquake whilst in command of the Empress of Australia.

After the ceremony the guests were entertained to luncheon on board the Empress of Canada.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF VISCT. KURODA

Tokyo, July 15.

The death is announced of Viscount Kuroda at the age of 58.

Viscount Kuroda was a political leader in the House of Peers and was well known in French art circles.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE GREAT FLOODS IN HUNAN

Much Damage and Loss of Life at Siangtan: Where Flogging Still is Practised

From Our Own Correspondent.

Siangtan, Hu., July 5.

Siangtan has been flooded with one of the worst floods in years for nearly a week. The water reached nearly to the 60-foot mark and that means that most of the city has been under water. Houses are falling and the loss of life is appallingly great. It is a common thing to hear, every night, the crash of houses and cries for help.

There has been some relief work started and the gentry and officials and other organizations have subscribed to feed those who have been driven from their homes or are marooned in the upper stories without food.

Some of the small boat men have been trying to make money out of the unfortunate situation but five of them were taken to the official residence and given 500 blows each, so that the small boats are much more reasonable in their demands now.

The temples and high lands are full of people and the Presbyterian Church threw open its building to the refugees. Boats of all descriptions have stopped running. The launches have been scared out of going up and down the river by the narrow escape that a small launch with 200 passengers on board had of turning over at Ichiawan, where, in a very sharp curve, in the river it met a big floating house.

Yesterday the water fell about a foot, but it has rained hard for two nights following and there is not much hope of the water subsiding quickly with the continual rains. Meanwhile rice and vegetables are scarce and going up in price. The Presbyterian Mission met in Siangtan two days last week. There were representatives from all the Stations, Chengchow, Hongchow Changsha, Chengteh and Tao Yuen. Mr. Bullock, Professor in the Wuchang Normal School, was elected chairman of the meeting and it was largely by his very skilful management that the meeting was finished in two days instead of taking a week as usually. The reports for the year show good progress in spite, in most places, of disturbed conditions due to war and rumours and the presence of bandits everywhere especially in the southern part of the province.

There has been a movement of troops to the south for some time past and it is said they are going to the help of Ma Chi against the Southerner Shen Heng-yen at Kuei Lin and the South.

Changsha Under Water: And Still More Rain

From Our Own Correspondent.

Changsha, Hu., July 8.

The flood which reached its highest point in the night of Thursday last, has proved the "record" flood. The previous highest was in 1906 when the water reached 36ft. 10ins. This year it has gone to 38ft. 4ins. Quite a number of foreign-built houses on the Island, which took the 1906 record as the "never-to-be-beaten" have suffered in consequence. I have just been told that the British Consulate and three other houses have been the only ones sufficiently high to escape the flood water.

Not only has it been a record in height, it is a record in the slowness of the fall. Indeed on Sunday morning the water was a couple of inches higher than on Saturday night. There may have been a half-hour of sunshine during the week of exceedingly high water, but there have been a good many hours of rain, some of it very heavy. It seems more probable that the water will rise again as the water which fell on Thursday and Saturday nights last comes down to us. We had the sort of tropical downpour which invariably causes the river to rise a week or so later unless the shower proves merely local. On most days there has been actual rainfall. After two spells of five days each a third spell of three days fall. After two spells of three days is "proclaimed" during which there is to be no slaughter of animals.

The military and civil officials have given up more or less of the month's stipend for the sake of the distressed. Officials receiving up to $300 a month have adopted a rising scale of tax. Over $300, all have given up the entire month's stipend

Distressing accounts from the whole of the south of the Siang Valley are coming in, all of them announcing how much worse this flood has been than any previous one in the valley for a century or more.

Relief Committee's Good Work.

The Hunan Chinese-Foreign Famine Relief Committee has taken this opportunity of re-organizing its work and becoming the provincial branch of the China International Famine Relief Commission. The former committee was formed at a meeting of representatives of the government and mercantile classes. Yesterday the associations who formed the Committee were called together and received from the retiring committee an account of the work and a general financial statement of the funds received and expended.

Some $700,000 were received apart from the special gift from the American Funds of $500,000 for road building. It is interesting to note that the office expenses in handling this $1,200,000 during three years amounted to only $10,000. The Hunan Government agreed to contribute the cost of the upkeep of the road for the first 10 years at the estimated rate of $8,000 dollars a-year. The $80,000 has been paid over and used, but the Committee has a credit with the American Fund of nine years upkeep allowances.

The meeting agreed to the request of the committee to discharge it and to form a Hunan branch of the national Association. In personnel, the new committee is practically the old one under a new name. But the new name not only introduce certain advantages in the constitution, avoiding some mistakes and oversight made when the old committee was first formed; the linking on to a national movement is all to the good.

The new committee is plunged at once into fresh work in dealing with this unprecedented flood. It is hoped that its main work will tend rather to the avoidance of future damage from flood or drought than the mere charitable attention to the immediate sufferers.

Timely Example from Hupeh.

The Governor invited the new Committee to dinner this afternoon and thanked the members very warmly for the work they have done. The President in reply was able to acknowledge the unfailing support of the provincial government throughout the work which had been done during the past three years. He also pointed to the example that has been set in Hupeh where Governor Hsiao Yao-nan has managed to entrust over 1,000,000 dollars of government money to the parallel committee for dyke repairs. Undoubtedly, a considerable amount will be called for the repair damages of this flood which are not realized until the waters have run off.

BIG SWORD TUFEI IN ANHUI

Rising Against Official Depredations and Oppression of People

Peking, July 10.

The latest foreign reports from Anhui state that Big Sword Tufei are still active. The Government troops are on their way to Luanchow and are expected to reach there within a couple of days. The Chamber of Commerce at Luanchow offered the gang $20,000 to leave, but the tufei ridiculed the idea of being bought with that small sum.

Up to the present the gang have not interfered with private residences, but are confining their activities to yamêns and other official quarters. They secured a large supply of arms and ammunition and military stores at Luanchow. The leaders announce that they rose against the oppression of officials and the generally unsatisfactory conditions imposed upon the people by the local government. Their object is to fight the despotism of the militarists.

Representatives of the Russian Church and the "Chinese Mission" have wired to the Russian mission at Wuhu requesting that measures be taken for their protection against these tufei.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WINTRY WEATHER IN THE FAR WEST

Charm of Life on Tibetan Border: And Now a Golf Course Even Here

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., June 13.

Yesterday the temperature of Tachienlu was 47 Fahrenheit. The snow came down the mountains to a height of 1,000 feet above the city The day was very wet, the weather very stormy, and the people very cold. Discarded furs, heavy woollen garments, and winter bedding were again called for. Colds were prevalent and the common people experienced no little discomfort. Some of the foreign residents in town found it necessary to resuscitate the fire to keep the house warm and others went back to the winter use of the indispensable hot water bottle. These cold spells are not infrequent in Tachienlu. Last May the city was covered by snow for several days and sometimes during July and August the weather has been so cold that nothing short of five or six blankets and a hot water bottle has kept the sleeper warm. When the wind blows from the Ya-Ja-Gena high snow range, southeast of Tachienlu, 21 to 25000 feet high-the inhabitants immediately take to fires, furs, and quilts. We read the other day in our N. C. H. about the Shanghai people suffering no small inconvenience from that damp, clammy, enervating atmosphere and we looked at our thermometer so kindly hanging around 49 Fahr.

Strawberries and Golf.

It has rained more or less every day during the past week. The farmers were somewhat anxious over the continued dry weather but now that rain has come there is some assurance of a good crop of wheat and barley. With the rain have also come the strawberries and the poorer people are now beginning to pick them for the Chinese and foreign market. (Ten cents per catty; they are 48s per pound at home) Strawberries, rain, cold, and golf, remind us very much of the barren uplands of Scotland. We had some golf the other day, on what might become a very good course, ten miles from Tachienlu and a few miles from the snow line.

The British Consul drove the first ball over what we hope will become the Tibetan Frontier Golf Course. We bemoan the fact that Tachienlu, with its freedom from insects, its wonderful scenery, its high snow mountains, its exhilarating air, its cold mountain water, its health-giving sulphur springs, its prospective golf course, not to mention game hunting, mountain climbing and natural history collecting, is so far from the hot steamy plains of west China. If the journey could only be brought to within five or six days, dwellers on the plain would no doubt take advantage of this high mountain health resort. If some of the money, at present misdirected, were put into the construction of roads and bridges, Tachienlu could quite easily be brought to within three or four days of the plains of West China.

Distraction Propaganda.

The British Consul is now in residence and the British flag flies from the consulate. The usual distraction propaganda is now in full swing: the British have occupied Lhasa; British troops are in Chamdo; the British language is now taking the place of the Chinese on the Tibetan frontier; what the wily British have up their sleeve is being quietly, fully, and freely discussed in the local Chinese tea drinking saloons. Fortunately and discreetly, officialdom wisely refrains from believing the rumours it has put in circulation. The Chinese border is quite a rendezvous for this distraction propaganda and if it does nothing else it certainly makes life both interesting and worth living. Perhaps the rush of visitors to the Darjeeling hills may have been mistaken for a British invasion of Tibet. However, we have been through this distraction propaganda before and now know something of its significance and value.

Wanted a Road to Tibet.

Quite recently the Chinese merchants on the border petitioned the military authorities to open up the road between China and Tibet. Tibetan merchants, it was explained were making long journeys from the distant interior to purchase Chinese tea. These Tibetan merchants bring with them large quantities of valuable musk; this they exchange for tea. Tachienlu for once in its long history has no tea, so these Tibetan merchants have to stay on indefinitely in this city till the military leaders have settled their personal quarrels. The whole province is simply seething with trouble—north, south, east and west, the different military leaders are simply dividing this wealthy province into little kingdoms. Perhaps when this has been accomplished they may be satisfied or they may begin to fight each other.

MONGOLIA SMITTEN WITH DROUGHT

Lamas Powerful in Rain-making But Whom Public Irreligiousness Forgets

From Our Own Correspondent.

Urga, June 27.

For the information and instruction of Meteorologists in Europe and America. Ordinance issued by the Mongolian Education Committee & The Ministry for Enlightenment of the People.

At the 16th session of the Mongolian Government the subject of drought was brought up for consideration. During the last 10 years the climate of Mongolia has undergone very serious changes and many places have suffered from drought, which has caused the deaths of innumerable cattle and improverished the people. The whole capital of the Mongol is tied up in his herds of cattle.

Whilst, amongst the Mongols, there are Lamas who have the ability to intercede for rain, unfortunately there is a lack of belief in their methods. The local authorities pay little attention to this matter. This lack of action on their part and the irreligious leanings of the younger generation are accountable for the drought; they sit with folded hands and wait for the drought to pass. The only person who took any serious interest in this matter was the late Bogdo Geghen who worked incessantly in the interests of his people, he organized services of prayers for rain; if unable to take part himself he instructed the Chief Lamas of the Urga Monastery to hold the services, Khambo Lama and Tzordci.

In the year before last and last year, when there was a lack of rain the Government on various occasions provided the materials for sacrifice and services were held by Khambo Lama and Tzordchi. In the current year, although we are already at the end of the first moon of summer, yet in Urga and in many other Aimaks and Hoshuns there has not been any rain, and, unless special measures are taken to intercede for rain, it is anticipated that there will be extreme poverty. This is due to the neglectfulness of the Directors of Religion and the State Authorities.

At the present time it is necessary to ask the Ministry of Finance to provide, as in previous years, the necessary funds for the sacrifices and request Khambo Lama to hold a service of prayer for rain. Also in addition, request the Ministry for Interior to order all Aimaks, Hoshuns and Monasteries to arrange similar services, those authorities who do not comply to be severely dealt with.

It must be Government influence which caused the Urga Self-Governing body to send round a subscription list to collect, monies for the Service. We do not know the final result for the whole town, but in two districts, the visit to 20 houses resulted in a collection of $2.78. In the face of such lack of faith it is not surprising that Heaven refuses to send rain.

Dr. Wu Lien-teh, director and C. M. O. of the North Manchurian Plague Prevention Bureau, was entertained on Monday by the Y's Men's Club of Shanghai prior to his departure for the United States. Dr. Wu sailed on Tuesday for San Francisco and will be absent for about 12 months.

BURIAL PLACE OF ANCIENT KINGS

Extraordinary Find in Old Mongolia by Russian Explorer; Silk Carpets and Tapestry

From Our Own Correspondent.

Urga, June 27.

P. K. Kosloff, the well-known Russian traveller and explorer, has discovered three groups of ancient tombs in the picturesque vicinity of Noin Ula (Sudzuktu). They are presumably the mausolea of some oriental potentate, probably some Chinese Prince or even Emperor.

The tomb is a two-storied affair, about 50 feet deep, the walls and ceilings are of timber, covered with silk tapestery and artistic drawings, partly obliterated. In the centre of a large room the coffin was standing, placed north and south; under the coffin were well-woven carpets with figures of mythical animals worked thereon, part of a carpet which draped a wall showed a hunting scene with mounted men. The walls are covered with paintings of men, horses, birds and a lot of mythical animals. The find in the rooms and in the coffins consisted of large quantities of human hair, in queues, some were bound with silk and bore talismans, false beards made of horsehair, similar to those in use on the Chinese stage to-day, silk draperies, carpets, horsehair fly-whisks, slabs of jade and other peculiar stones, ornaments of various descriptions, amongst them a sort of deer, the body of wood with metal horns. Parts of bronze and porcelain utensils were found, and at one time there must have been a large quantity of sable and other furs, which had perished, the hair being as light as down. This was promptly used by members of the expeditions for pillows. The silk and carpets bear many artistic designs, the most prominent, which appears repeatedly on a part of a carpet, represents a battle between a large-horned beast and a huge bird; the beast may be an ancient moose or possibly an auroch; what the bird is, is unknown.

Several local people with a knowledge of antiquities have seen the parts of the discovery which were brought into Urga by Mr. Kosloff, but nobody, as yet, has been able authoritatively to state to what epoch the find belongs.

Whoever built the mausoleum had a good eye for beauty and chose a very picturesque spot.

Between the greater mausolea was a smaller one, presumably of a child or people of lesser rank.

The excavation is being continued.

The carpets and silk drapings, of which I have had a private view, were, considering their immense antiquity, in very fair condition. No books, writing or smoking materials, have been found up to date.

Mr. Kosloff thinks that the find will prove an invaluable aid for those who are endeavouring to work out the ancient history of this part of the world.

HANGCHOW LETTER

Provincial Legislators Who Accomplish Nothing

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, July 15.

The Assembly, in spite of being unable to do any business, has been prorogued for the summer. It will meet again in September.

A former Premier, Mr. Yung Hsi, is here on a visit, conferring with various bodies with regard to popular education for the common people—a work he is very much interested in.

Fires are very common these days. The hot weather is given as the cause, but incendiarism, I think, is the more correct explanation. Economic pressure does not justify the use of cotton wool soaked in kerosene oil.

The Typhoon passed us by on the other side and did not even favour us with a shower or a cool night. We have had no rain for a fortnight and the average noon temperature has been 96. in the shade.

As Mr. Coates is now silent, I suppose it is quite in order to wish you many happy returns on the occasion of your Diamond Jubilee.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

Octroi Activities Over the Week end Wash: M.P.'s Pinched in a Gamble in Bonds

Peking, July 10.

As a result of the recent controversy on the subject, the Peking Octroi Administration is evidently trying to systematize its methods of collection. Week-enders from Peitaiho are now confronted by a posse of Octroi police, all smartly uniformed, and of course more than sufficient for the purpose, whose job it is to shepherd the detraining passengers to the Octroi examiners. These officials, also smartly uniformed, require all passengers to display the contents of their bags on a newly-erected counter. Last week-end the display seemed to be the usual array of night attire and changes of clothing that one would expect to find after a trip to Peitaiho, and the officials gained nothing from their examination except the chaff of the examiners. The chalk was much in evidence, and its expeditious use reduced the delay to a matter of a few minutes. When the travelling bag assumed the appearance of a laundry bag on being opened up, the Octroi men chalked it without further ado. It was a relief to be introduced to some kind of system by the Octroi, and to make the acquaintance of officials who were so well plastered with their responsibility.

The M.P.'s in our midst are called anything but responsible members of Parliament. The following story entitles some of them to the description of naughty children who don't know how to take care of their pocket money. In common with other public servants, they were granted part of their arrears of salary at the time of the last festival settlement. They received on the average about $800 each. Instead, however, of putting it in the stocking to eke out an arid future, a hundred or so of the more adventurous spirits determined to try their luck with 96 Million. Dabbling with bonds in $10,000 denomination, they were quickly caught in an oscillating market, and now they are mourning the loss of their salaries. Better far to have given the money to the police.

Other Parliamentarians are playing fast and loose with their salaries, too. They are too serious-minded to bother about the money market and its fluctuations, preferring to devote their time to the concoction of telegrams to European governments and personages. Of late they have developed quite a passion for this medium of expression, the indulgence of which, judging from recent examples, entails the expenditure of much money as well as thought. Lengthy cables have been sent to the British and French Governments demanding the recall of their respective Ministers to Peking, while Mr. George Lansbury has been hailed as a collaborator in the stamping out of "the demon of imperialism" for asking a question in the House of Commons on the Cockchafer incident. Mr. Lansbury can be almost as verbose as a Chinese M.P., but it is hardly to be expected that he will reply to this message in the same strain. He was a business man before he was a Labour M.P., and the cost of a disquisition similar to that from Peking would undoubtedly appal his thrifty soul.

The police authorities have decided to take the bull by the horns and levy the police tax. It was approved by the Cabinet sometime ago, but the Peking people have signified on more than one occasion that they would have none of it. Regulations have now been drawn up, and distributed in various sections of the city. According to these regulations, foreigners as well as Chinese are to be mulcted in certain sums according either to the grade of the house or the grade of the manner of living of the householder. A most peculiar system. No clearly-defined method of collection seems to have been devised, and one gathers that the tenant is at the mercy of the collector, who has the inquisitorial job of assessing one's standard of living and possibly of fixing the tax accordingly. Foreign protests have now been added to those of the Chinese residents, not particularly because foreigners object to helping the policeman, who is ten months behind in his pay, but because of the official arrogation of a right of taxation that has yet to be admitted. It seems likely that the levy will go to swell the number of questions at issue between the Legations and the Government; but the outcome may possibly lead to recognition of rights of residence where none exist to-day.

MACLAREN'S FLIGHT

Overdue at Paramushiru: Believed to Have Landed En Route

Tokyo, July 12.

Squadron-Leader MacLaren left Kasumigaura for Minato at 2.18 this afternoon.

FARMERS HAPPY AND FIGHTING OVER IN SZECHUAN

Wave of High Prices

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tzeliutsing, Sze., July 2.

Recent rains have cheered up everyone and late rice has been transplanted while, in some cases sun-baked rice fields have been ploughed and planted with corn or vegetables. There is no tendency however for the ten per cent. rise in foodstuffs to recede.

The silver dollar has reached 3,200 cash. Any coin less than 50 cash is difficult to find and small change is out of the question. This condition is rapidly raising the money standard, a blessing to some, a hardship to others.

The seven stone arches of the new bridge are completed and none too soon as the river is rising and the lower bridges will soon be submerged. The workmen have been greatly decreased as funds are short.

Mr. Ellsworth, the Salt Inspector of Uhtongchiao, has been here on a short visit. He is on his way to Peking, having been promoted. The Salt Office is hoping that some of the Salt Tax will be transferred from the Military to the Chêngtu-Chungking Railway project.

There are no active military movements in this neighbourhood, but everyone is a victim now to oppressive taxation. Nevertheless a company is being organized to put in some electric lighting plant—in spite the constant levies on capital.

SZECHUAN ENJOYS BETTER DAYS

Except for a Plague of Bad Money and Prevalence of Opium Smoking

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Luchow, Sze., June 28.

At last peace and something like normal conditions have returned to our city. Most of the soldiers have finally been sent off hither and thither and the impression of coolies, which has been continuous since winter has practically ceased. The river was very late in rising this year but is now quite nigh and is still rising fast. As a consequence steamers are running more or less regularly, depending upon how successful they are in evading the determined efforts of the military in Chungking and Suifu to take toll of them. It is said that those in power in Suifu propose to make a park—a very laudable project but in order to do so they have put an illegal tax of $100 on every steamer calling at their city. Naturally the steamers refused to go up to Suifu. They are going again now so presumably the dispute was settled in some way or another.

Bad Dollars.

The dollar has been falling rapidly of late. It has dropped from 3200 to 2800 and has apparently not reached the bottom yet. This depreciation of silver is a result of the increasingly large number of bad half-dollars being dumped on us from Chungking and Suifu. Other places have been more careful of the quality of silver coins which are passable, Luchow has previously accepted most anything. Now the reaction has come and it has caused a fall in the price of silver. All half-dollars are being carefully scrutinized these days and bad ones rejected. Some Russian cloth merchants who have come up from Shanghai to seek their fortunes in Szechuan were badly loaded up with these "steel plates" as the Chinese call them. The stranger within the gates is always legal prey for the wily Szechuanese.

Opium Everywhere.

Opium smoking is increasing all the time and being openly winked at by any authorities that there are. It is no longer thought worth while to try to conceal it and the dens are now wide open to the street for all to see. No one is ashamed or afraid any more. Practically every chair and load carrier now uses it and does not mind saying so. A few years ago many used it but were ashamed or afraid to admit it and so denied it. Now they freely admit it and in reckoning the wages they will need to carry a certain stage, they will reckon how many times they need to smoke opium on the way. This is at least honest but it shows that all pretence of prohibition of opium smoking is at an end. Thus the country is being ruined and there is no one to stop it. There is no public opinion strong enough to effect anything. But then how could anything be done anyway if individual liberty is to be preserved, and is not that what the republic stands for?

NO OIL IN PHILIPPINES

Standard Oil's Failure to Find It After Five Years Search and Big Outlay

New York, July 12.

A Standard Oil Co.'s bulletin describes complete failure of five years' efforts to find oil in the Philippines.

It says that $1,250,000 have been spent in the endeavour to locate an American supply of oil in the Far East.—Reuter's American Service.

ACCORDING to the Chinese press, Peking's estimate of the value of foreign arms and other munitions of war imported into China during the first six month of this year, is $15,000,000—a fanciful figure which will doubtlessly be believed by readers of the local vernacular papers. No one wishes to blink at the facts—large quantities of arms have, and continue to be, smuggled into the country, but their value cannot amount to anywhere near this figure during the period mentioned.

FLOODS IN KIANGSI

LIBEL OF SHAOHSING MISSIONARIES

Sinister Revival of Old, Ugly Rumours Only Killed by Official's Denial

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Shaohsing, Chê., July 11.

The quiet currents of Shaohsing life have been unusually stirred during the last few days because of the wild rumours which have been circulated regarding the missionaries living on the South Street. Not since the year of the revolution have I known such ugly and persistent stories. The mischief makers did their work with consumate skill. On June 14, an article appeared in the Shanghai "Ming Kuo Zih Pao" charging the missionaries with unspeakable crimes. On July a similar article was published in the Shanghai "Z Pao." These articles reached Shaohsing and the story was industriously circulated in the tea shops and on the streets.

The "Zuih Tseo Kwong Pao" of Shaohsing took notice of these rumours in its issue of July 8, publishing the stories from the Shanghai papers, giving date and page of citation, and calling on the foreigners living in the city to give the real facts in the case. I made a prompt denial and refutation of the whole vile story, which was printed in the morning papers of July 9. On July 10, the Military Official of the district, Gen. Dzeng Kae-di came out with a vigorous proclamation stating that he had fully investigated the matter, and that the whole thing was a vilification of the character of the missionaries, whom he personally knew, and in whose ministry he had the fullest confidence. He declared that the circulation of such stories was a menace to the peace of the community and that any person found spreading these rumours would be punished according to the laws governing such cases.

The prompt and decisive action of Gen. Dzeng Kae-di has put end to this canard. The question still remains as to what motive actuated the person or persons making this attack on the Shaohsing missionaries. As a group we are at a loss to know.

SMUGGLING OF CHINESE INTO PHILIPPINES

Profitable Traffic from Borneo: A Vigorous Customs Campaign

Manila, July 1.

The smuggling of Chinese from British North Borneo into the Philippine Islands has largely increased in recent months and has become a profitable traffic, according to officials of the Customs Service.

Within the last week nearly 50 Chinese have been arrested in Zamboanga on charges of being in the country unlawfully and will be deported either to Borneo or Hongkong. They are brought from the coast of Borneo in Moro vintas and are landed on the various islands of the Sulu group only a few miles from the British possession.

After reaching Philippine territory they easily work their way into the more populous sections and many of them are never apprehended.

The Customs authorities have ordered all available patrol boats to southern waters for the purpose of beginning a vigorous campaign against this traffic in Chinese, as well as against the opium traffic.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE annual meeting of Landrenters of Kuling will be held on August 8.

BOATING ACCIDENT AT WUCHANG

Foreign Ladies Flung Into Turbid River But Luckily Rescued Unhurt

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wuchang, Hup., July 10.

What might have been a most disastrous boating accident occurred off the Bund in Hankow last Monday. A party of missionaries, who had newly arrived down the Han from Hsiangyang, had hired a sampan to take them and their luggage to the river steamer. The water is very high at present, and the current was strong. The boatmen, of whom there were two, apparently took their sampan too close under the bow of the steamer. They were caught in the swirl and capsized. The party consisted of six foreigners, and one Chinese lady. Of the foreigners, one was a man and the rest ladies.

The husband of one of the ladies, who had come round by the shore to do some business, reached the waterside just at the moment of the accident, and had the horror of seeing his wife and all his companions suddenly flung into the eddying water. This gentleman immediately sprang into a sampan and called others to the rescue. He himself succeeded in rescuing the Chinese lady, who was clinging to the overturned boat. But during this operation he was not able to observe what was happening to the rest. It was difficult to manage a sampan in the current which was flowing, and by the time he was able to look round there was nothing to be seen of any of the others! After a fruitless search he was obliged to proceed to the C. I. M. oppressed with the terrible conviction that his wife and companions had all perished. On reaching the C. I. M., however, what was his joy to find that the rest of the party had every one of them been saved, and had preceded him there.

Two of the ladies were in such a condition that they had to be taken to hospital. They had both swallowed a great deal of water, and in the case of one of them it was feared that pneumonia would develop. But the following day one was glad to learn that both are rapidly recovering, and are quite likely soon to be all right again.

As for the boatmen it was reported that they were both drowned. But your correspondent has learned from a reliable source that they are both quite alive. They were the first to escape to shore, and alarmed at the consequences of their carelessness they made haste to flee and hide themselves in the native city.

Some of the baggage was saved, but a good deal of it went down to join that vast collection which must exist somewhere at the bottom of the Yangtze between Hankow and Wuchang. The loss of a little baggage is a light affair in comparison with what might have been.

MUTINY OF SCOUTS IN MANILA

More Serious Than First Supposed: Special Camps to Hold the Mutineers

Manila, July 12.

A hastily constructed stockade at Fort McKinley holds 206 mutinous scouts who were guarded last night by the Post Fire Department, which was ready to turn on the hose, in addition to armed sentries.

An official Army statement says that the attitude of the strikers is more defiant than was at first believed. It has been decided to court-martial practically all instead of merely discharging them without honour. Other posts and the Cavite Navy Yard continue quiet though there are rumours of some trouble among the crew of an Army vessel between Manila and Corregidor.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TOKYO, July 12.—The state funeral of Prince Matsukata took place to-day. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICAN AVIATOR IN HONGKONG: HIS DARING, ILL LUCK AND FINAL TRIUMPH

Abbott Aviator from Babyhood: Service in the War and Aeroplane Builder to Dr. Sun: The Curtiss He Forced to Fly when Everyone Shook their Heads

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Hongkong, July 6.

If daring, the love of adventure and sheer pluck are the essential attributes of a modern aviator, then Mr. Harry W. Abbott, a young American now in Hongkong, has earned the title with distinction. The story of his attempt to thrill a jaded public with sensational feats in an aeroplane which he transformed from almost a total wreck to a machine which proved air-worthy and which shattered all the doubts of the melancholy pessimists, is one combining pertinacity and dogged perseverance with a heroism worthier of a nobler object. Abbott's record of bad luck which persistently frustrated his every turn, but which did not daunt him, finally triumphed and ended in the complete wrecking of the plane on the same day that the Portuguese aviators crashed in a Chinese cemetery 20 miles away. Abbott escaped with his life at the expense of a few bruises. Now he is marking time. He has other schemes in mind which will prove of more benefit to the Colony than the mere thrill-provoking stunts he has attempted.

An Air Acrobat.

Abbott is not yet 30 years of age He is a professional aviator, an air acrobat, a skylark with a career literally meteoric. His 24 years of life are crammed with excitement and thrill. At the age of three, he took his first ride in among the clouds. It was an early rise to fame. His father, Professor Wayne Abbott, was in the same business, a specialist in aviation then in its early stages. Young Abott was placed asleep by his mother in a captive balloon which Professor Abbott, a veteran of the Spanish-American war had charge of. Unkowingly, Mr. Abbott ordered the balloon to be released and not until he had reached the clouds and was preparing to descend did he notice his young son and heir peacefully sleeping near by, huddled up inside a blanket, which the mother had unwittingly placed over him.

Breaks World Record.

When America declared war on Germany, Abbott joined the U. S. navy and served with the submarines and rose to the rank of petty officer. On the first anniversary of Armistice Day in 1919, he jumped into world fame. Ascending for the first time in his life in an aeroplane over Long Beach, California, he dropped from a height of 8,300 feet in a parachute and broke the world's record. Strange to say, the world's record of 7,800 was then held by Abbott's father. Young Abbott's remarkable feat was accomplished three days after he had got married, almost before the echo of the wedding bells had died away. He nearly lost his life on this occasion. He released the parachute 15 feet above Long Beach harbour and dropped into the water.

Seeing that his future lay among the clouds, Abbott joined his father and two other dare-devil aeronauts in an organization called the Long Beach Amusement Association. They toured the country giving their sensational stunts for eight or nine months. Abbott junior tells me that from the day he took up the business, he has executed over 200 parachute jumps, performed all kinds of hair-raising tricks on the wings of an aeroplane and neither his father nor himself have had an accident. He has acted as a movie-star for Harold Lloyd and Larry Semon, doing stunts, he modestly confessess, which an unsuspecting cinema public have believed to be performed by the picture comedians themselves.

Builds Machine for Dr. Sun

It was during his last exhibition at San Fransisco that Abbott was interviewed by a representative of Dr. Sun Yat-sen who urged him to go to Canton for the purpose of instructing the Chinese in the art of flying and in the building and reconstructing of aeroplanes. Abbott agreed and before coming to Shanghai in 1922 completed some outstanding work for Dr. Sun in America. He worked in an administrative capacity for a time in Foochow and then went to Canton.

At Canton, Abbott became associated with Mr. Colwell one of the cleverest of American aviators, who was stricken with typhoid fever not long after his arrival and died in Hongkong. Fitting to the memory of such a distinguished flying man and soldier, the ashes of the late Mr. Colwell were transported to America and according to his own request made just before he died, scattered over the city of San Fransisco by one of the biggest fleets of aeroplanes.

Colwell and his young associate worked hard in the service of Dr. Sun. They designed and built one of the latest types of aeroplanes, known as the Rosemond and which had the distinction of being absolutely wireless. The machines was fitted with a 100 h.p. motor, developed 110 miles an hour and was capable of climbing 1000 feet in the space of a minute. It was essentially a military model with a three-ply wood fusilage specially adapted to cut down weight and provide a maximum speed. Three of these machines had almost been completed when Mr. Colwell died in Hongkong.

Abbott tells me that he ranked as a lieutenant-colonel in Dr. Sun's service. Of his colleagues in Canton he has nothing but the highest praise. Three of them, he said, would rank favourably with any three of any other country in the world.

His History in Hongkong.

When Abbott's work in Canton was finished he transferred his attention to Hongkong, arriving here in April this year. The sad story of his valiant attempt to provide something unusual for a novelty-seeking public began the moment he learnt of the existence of an aeroplane, or rather part of one, which was lying idle and in a deplorable state of rust in a godown.

This machine, imported into the Colony from Canada was a small 90 h.p. Curtiss biplane. Three years ago, Mr. Lim On, a Canada-Chinese, almost met his death when attempting to perform stunts in it over Happy Valley. Mr. Lim, who was the pilot, ran into an air pocket and came crashing to the ground. Fortunately, he had the presence of mind to steer it into a tree on the outskirts of the racecourse. Mr. Lim was injured, not seriously, but the machine was wrecked and damaged almost beyond recognition. It was a miraculous escape for the airman.

From that fateful day to April this year, the forlorn looking plane, almost a shell of its former self lay rusting in a godown. When Mr. Abbott bought the ruins for $2000 cash from its owner, Mr. Roe, Manager of the Hongkong and Kowloon Taxi-Cab Company, all but Abbott and a few of his faithful supporters declared in effect that Abbott had been sold a pup and that nothing short of a miracle could make the machine fly again.

Transformed in Three Weeks.

Abbott set to work. The engine was the only part of the machine that had not suffered in the crash three years ago. Within three weeks, the 'plane had undergone a complete transformation. Nobody who had seen the crumpled and rotten mass of wires and wood in the godown could have indentified it as the new machine which glistened in the sun and looked like new. With the fusilage and engine repaired, Abbott moved the machine from the old Kowloon Theatre where it had been stored to a more spacious godown at the Kowloon Railway Station which provided ample room for the new wings to be fixed. Later, Abbott again moved the machine to the railway timber yard, erected a small bell tent and worked night and day on its completion.

Abbott had by this time announced in all the newspapers here that he would give an exhibition of aerial aerobatics, which included wing-walking, looping-the-loop parachute drop, etc., on Sunday May 3. Disaster, however, was fated to overtake him on the morning of the promised exhibition. During trials in taxi-ing conducted by Mr. J. R. Hindmarsh, an ex-British flying officer, the machine suddenly ran into the seawall, swerving from a direct course at right-angles. The propeller and undercarriage were smashed and the machine hung dangerously over the wall and jutted out over the harbour. The exhibition was inevitably postponed.

Crashes Again.

Undaunted, Abbott and his assistants, who included an indefatigible youth, de la Sala, son of a well-known China Coast sea captain, set to work to repair the damage and three days later, a new propellor had been fixed and the machine was ready for trial. Mr. Lim On, the Canadian Chinese pilot previously mentioned, was an interested spectator and though naturally reluctant to act as pilot in the machine in which he had nearly lost his life, was eventually persuaded to give the reconstructed 'plane a test. Abbott took the passenger's seat and carried a thousand hand-bills in Chinese to drop over Hongkong. But again, the young avaitor was to receive another set-back. After a period of taxi-ing, the pilot started the machine at full speed. It ran for a hundred yards along the ground, failed to rise and stopped after running into a ditch. The tail of the plane went up and the nose down and Abbott crawled out uninjured. The pilot also escaped with a few scratches. This meant the postponement of the exhibition again.

Abbott did not give up hope. He expressed his determination to fly the machine or die in the attempt. A third new propellor was fixed, the undercarriage repaired and before making another attempt, Abbott decided to move the machine to a more suitable landing ground. He taxied the repaired machine without the wings along Kowloon roads for a distance of two miles to a reclamation area which provided an adequate space for his purpose. This waste land is at Kowloon City on the outskirts of the Chinese poorer class residential district. Here, was a stretch of land at least 500 yards facing the harbour whereas in the timber yard, Abbott was restricted to an area of two to three hundred yards.

In the Air at Last.

On this new scene of activities, Abbott thoroughly overhauled the machine, altered the stagger of the wings and tightened up the wires etc. Confident that nothing more could be done, the young flying man decided to try the machine himself. To the surprise of the residents in the Colony, Abbott flew the machine. It rose with the grace of a seagull, it neither rocked unsteadily nor shook with the wind. Abbott remained in the air for over 20 minutes. He had accomplished what he had said he would do. He had thoroughly squashed the confirmed declaration of the pessimists, that the machine could not fly. He ascended and landed four times that day safely, taking up passengers on the third and fourth occasions. His landings were as perfect as his take-offs.

Yet the ill-luck which seemed to have accompanied the machine throughout its career had not left it. The next morning, following the previous day's successful flights, Mr. Lim Wu, brother of Mr. Lim On, an accredited pilot attached to Dr. Sun Yat-sen's air force, consented to take up the machine with Abbott as a passenger. The plane was started off, at its usual speed, but instead of rising, it turned and dived into a deep ditch running alongside the seawall. Abbott and the pilot again emerged uninjured, but the machine sustained its worst accident since it was first reconstructed. Another propeller was smashed, the third, the landing gear splintered to fragments kings post damaged and several other parts affected.

King's Birthday Exhibition.

Once again, Abbott re-started his unenviable task of repairing his machine as he had definitely announced after several postponements that he would give his exhibition on the afternoon of the King's Birthday anniversary—June 3. He worked night and day and to his credit, despite the many critics who still considered his efforts futile, he had the ill-fated Curtiss ready on the morning of the holiday. Acting as his own pilot, the machine flew successfully early in the morning. Passengers were taken up on three occasions before tiffin. Once Abbott startled pedestrians in the commercial centre of Hongkong. Flying over the city, the machine suddenly nose-dived. People who saw it uttered cries of alarm. The 'plane seemed to be out of control, and appeared as if it would crash over the business houses. But suddenly the rapidly diving plane took an upward shoot and at 60 miles an hour virtually shaved the top of the flagpost on the Hongkong Hotel. It was a thrill which momentarily diverted the attention of the huge crowd that was watching the impressive military ceremony on the Cricket Club's ground. Abbott explained to me afterwards that he certainly did not mean to allow his machine to descend so dangerously low, though it was inevitable for he "bumped into an air pocket" and had to perform three consecutive tail spins to get out of the difficulty.

The daring young airman took his wife as passenger on his next trip which followed his sensational stunt. Mrs. Abbott took with her a wreath of beautiful flowers which she scattered over Hongkong in memory of the late Mr. Colwell.

Engine Goes Wrong in Mid-Air.

Now Abbott had proved that his machine could fly, people who had previously bought tickets for his exhibition were looking forward to an afternoon of thrills, though some, it must be said, were naturally dubious that the exhibition would ever take place. When the time came, the small but enthusiastic crowd in the grand stand at the Racecourse and the mass of Chinese round the boundaries saw the aeroplane appear over Happy Valley at the appointed time. Abbott successfully performed his wing-walking act, but it was only perceptible to those with binoculars as the 'plane seemed but a mere speck in the sky and was at least 1500 feet high. With this part of the programme finished, albeit the most precarious part, Abbott returned it appeared in the direction of the flying field to get his parachutes with which he had promised to do a double jump from the skies. The crowd waited patiently for half an hour, an hour, but no sign of the 'plane was seen. Grave fears began to be entertained by the waiting specators. They had no idea as to what had happened for the last they had seen of the machine was when it disappeared over the surrounding hills heading in the direction of Kowloon. Eventually the mystery was explained. Abbott and his pilot, Lim On came dashing up on terra firma in a taxi-cab. Another accident had happened.

How the Accident Happened.

In apologetic words, Abbott explained that on the way back to Kowloon the right section of the motor (four cylinders) had stopped, leaving the 'plane with only half power and not sufficient to propel it in the air. He climbed on to the bonnet and by feeling inside the engine found that the jet in the right section carburetter had ceased working. Dirt had got into the gasolene tank and had plugged the jet. To plane down to the landing station from a distance of three miles away was perhaps a remarkable feat of airmanship. Fortunately, the height at which the aeroplane was (1200 feet) when the engine went wrong allowed the pilot sufficient scope for clever gliding. The field was reached, but on landing, the machine dropped like a pancake when it was only six feet from the ground. It turned a complete somesault and Abbott and his pilot were pinned underneath. Neither was injured, but again the much maligned Curtiss was smashed, all four wings the four king posts and various other parts were damaged. The fifth propellor also went phut.

This new disaster put an end to Abbott's hopes of giving an exhibition with this aeroplane. The wreckage looked impossible of renovation and probably with any other man than Abbott it would have been sold as junk. Yet even again, Abbott renewed his energies-perhaps a waste of time, in the general opinion-in transforming his wrecked plane into a machine capable of flying. It took him nine days to do it. And a week before the Portuguese avaitors were due to arrive, he was ready to go out and guide them in.

The End of the Machine.

On the day the Portuguese flying men were reported to be nearing Hongkong, Abbott received a request from the Portuguese Consul-General to go out and meet them. This attempt wrote finis to the eventful career of the Curtiss biplane. For a week, Hongkong had experienced heavy rains. The sandy soil on which Abbott's plane was housed appeared to be too swampy to allow of rubber tyred wheels to traverse over at any speed. The wind was also very strong. Abbott made a valiant effort as soon as he had got the news regarding the Portuguese flyers. He managed to get the machine into the air in face of a terrific wind. He circled about for a quarter of an hour without sighting the Portuguese and decided to return. Contrary to his general practice, he started off in the opposite direction—away from the harbour—and with the strong wind behind him had to land facing the hills, Nearing the ground he prepared to land, but a sudden gust wind blew the fragile plane 200 yards out of its course Directly in front of Abbott was a matshed in which a 100 coolies were sheltering from the storm. To have landed just then would have meant crashing into the shed and causing the deaths of several of the coolies. Abbott siezed the perilous situation and attempted to rise. Forty feet above the ground, the wheels of the 'plane caught some telegraph wires. The nose of the machine was forced down and the machine crashed to the ground, but landed flat. Abbott was literally dug out of the ruins bruised all over yet miraculously escaping serious injury. His machine was doomed, and irreparable and now lies a miserable mass of bent metal and splinters in a godown, confined to the scrap heap and looking like a bird of the air with broken wings, never to fly again.

A Glorious Failure.

And such is the history of a young American whose efforts to give sleepy Hongkong a novelty nearly ended in the forfeiting of his life and the leaving of his pretty wife, a widow and their three children fatherless. But the critics ask for what purpose did Abbott do this thing. He has startled Hongkong, scared them and thrilled them, but apparently they do not want to startled, thrilled or scared. His has been a glorious failure. Yet he has confounded the critics, and proved that even the most impossible looking difficulties can be overcome and that a mere scrap heap can be transformed into something useful—at least in the sphere of aviation. He had been dubbed a reckless young man, an unnecessary dare-devil. Abbott has throughout his career never been more cautious. His first thought has always been his wife and three children. This last accident was the first he has had in the whole of his career.

Abbott has a scheme in mind now which at present is not ripe for publication. If his plans mature, still yet vague, but feasible, it will mean the establishment of an aerial mail service between South China ports and in the event of success with connexions even as far as Shanghai. But he needs financial backing. His living is in the air and he is a comparatively poor man.

THE ANKING MINT CLOSED

Boasting 50 Per Cent. Profit on Its Debased Coins Now Forced to Desist

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Anking, An. July 8.

Thanks to the protestations of the Shanghai bankers the Anking mint which had been busily engaged putting out light weight twenty cent pieces and Eighth year of the Republic dollars of a similar brassy flavour, is closed. The official head of the mint, Mr. Chou, a younger brother of Chou Tea-ch'i and a member of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York, is not here at present but his subordinate, Mr. T'ang, who is in charge, boasts that they could clear over $50,000 a day the capacity of the mint being $100,000. But someone is always taking the joy out of life and now they must wait till the present suspicion of Anking coins is allayed before they can begin again to stamp Yuan Shih-Kai's face on shining bright brass discs.

A few days ago report was received here that Mr. Wei Feng-chang, a prominent citizen and head of several commercial organizations here in Anking, had committed suicide in Shanghai by throwing himself into the Huangpu River. Now his family has sent a representative to Shanghai to make inquiry whether Mr. Wei is really dead or just jumping his debts.

Mr. Wei was a very strict Buddhist, never eating meat in public and wore his clothes with a slight priestly cut and kept his head shaved. Last year he organized a cooperative store which failed recently with a loss of $5000,—to the share holders. He was treasurer of the Provincial Educational Association and now that organization is looking into its accounts and it is reported that a deficit is feared. Mr. Wei recently paid $1000. for a concubine whom he secured from among the local prostitutes. She now becomes the property of the real wife and either may be sold back into her former slavery, to another man as a concubine, or she may be kept as a servant of her mistress or even given her freedom.

Mr. Wei was also head of the Ch'uan Yieh Ch'ang Shang Pin Chen Lieh Sea and the Likin sstation.

SILK INDUSTRY IN ANHUI

Trade That Would Pay for More Care: Natural History in the Schools

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Yingchowfu, An., July 10.

The silk industry in this district lends itself to development, and recently a factory has been erected for the collecting of the cocoons and shipping them down to the coast. When the silk worm has spun all its silk it remains within the cocoon, and unless action is taken it emerges therefrom in a few days' time by making a hole through the end. This spoils the silk and to avoid this two methods are employed. The more cumbersome method is to take a large empty water vat, place a layer of salt on the top of the cocoons at the bottom and all the way up having a layer of cocoons and one of salt until the recepticle is full and then it is sealed up until use, when the cocoons are taken out and put in a shallow vat where water is kept at a certain heat while the silk is drawn off. The other method is an apparatus for stifling the chrysalides in the cocoons, and this is effected by heat. The cocoons can then be handled without fear of damaging the silk. It is estimated that the yearly value of cocoons amounts in this district alone at the present time to at least $200,000.

The local three main schools have been continuing their work without anything interfering with studies for some time. The numbers have not been, perhaps, up to former years, and the accommodation in the new buildings has not been seriously taxed since their erection several years ago. The Principal of none of the schools is very desirous of collecting specimens of insects and plant life, having them classified and exchange made with what schools in other parts have. In this way they would have an educational interchange of ideas through their own efforts, thus enabling the students to enter more into the oft neglected practical side of many studies, and at the same time effect economies, owing to the high cost of specimens obtained from commercial houses and especially from Japan.

Some weeks ago a date was recognized among the local schools as a Day of National Humiliation and Shame, and in this way recalling to the mind of the student class the significance of the "Twenty-One demands." If patriotism in Home politics was being infused somewhat with this aspect of moral indignation at the other internal wrongs that exist, the country would be well on its way to falling in line with a general international ethical standard.

FLOODS IN YANGTZE PROVINCES

Hunan Hupeh and Kiangsi All Badly Affected: Railway Stopped: Nauchang Under Water

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Wochang, July 12.

The opening week of July has brought some record rains in central China. During one night, 5½ inches of rain fell on Hangkow, and the total fall during the week was more than ten inches. Needless to say there are a great many floods in the central provinces. River embankments are broken in a great many places, and there must be a great deal of distress among the country people. Hsiao Yao-nan, the Tuchun of Hupeh, has given a subscription of $3,000 towards flood-relief in each of the provinces of Hunan and Fukien.

Visitors to Kuling may now have the novel experience of "walking the plank" along the whole of the Kiukiang Bund, which is under water, the depth varying from about six inches to ever two feet. Even then, if is impossible to enter the Rest-House gate without calling a sampan to take one over the last 20 yards or so of deeper water. The journey from the Rest-House to the motor-garage is broken by the wooden bridge, which now lifts itself only just above the water level, and makes it necessary to change boats. On the other hand, one floats gaily ever the main-road close by where the garage is, and, continuing in the same boat, crosses the take to where a temporary garage has been erected further along the road.

The railway-line to Nanchang was closed for three days last week. At present, the permanent way is just a foot or two above the water level, and trains are still running daily. Many submerged farms can be seen from the railway-line, and several big towns are partially flooded, including Nanchang itself. The water is subsiding now in all these places, but it is likely to rise again before the end of the summer. A large part of Kiangsi is flooded every summer, and this is expected. But such an early rise of the water is exceptional. The local sages say that there has been nothing like it for 15 years.

SERIOUS FLOODS IN NORTH CHINA

Railways Damaged and Trains Stopped: Tientsin's Danger: 13 Days Steady Rain

Tientsin, July 11.

An electric storm temporarily flooded the concessions last night. The electric power is cut off.

Six Chinese living on the river-side were drowned.—Reuter's Pacific service.

Tientsin, July 14.

Tientsin is threatened by disastrous floods, according to the "Peking & Tientsin Times."

—Chinese and foreign officials held a conference this morning and agreed to repair the outer and inner dykes around the city.

The Haiho Conservancy Commission's engineer, M. Pincione, recommends cutting the dyke of the Peiyunho, thus allowing the flood-waters to flow to the sea north and south of Tientsin. This would flood many villages, but the paper asserts that it is the only way of saving Tientsin. It advocates immediate cutting of the dyke and the placing of armed guards to prevent attacks by the frightened villagers, who can be removed to the city for safety.

The floods have been caused by heavy rains in the hinterland. It is estimated that the Hsinho is discharging 1,200 cubic metres a second or 12 times the river's capacity.

Experts state that it is beyond the power of human agency to prevent a vast area flooding. Only drastic action, in their opinion, can save Tientsin.

The German Bund was to-day cleared absolutely in order to build a dyke if necessary. Many firms have already moved their cargo to upper storeys.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tientsin, July 15.

The Chinese authorities have agreed to make preparations in readiness for cutting the Peiyunho dyke.

The British Municipal Council sent out coolie corps, who worked right through the night strengthening the local dykes.

There has been no more rain. The situation is unchanged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Local Dykes Strengthened

Tientsin, July 16.

All the local dykes have now been strengthened. With prospects of better weather, it is hoped that the water will not rise further. It is emphasized that Tientsin is not affected as yet, only the outer districts being flooded, though the opinion is expressed that the danger to Tientsin is not yet over.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tientsin, July 17.

The flood level 14 miles west of Tientsin is 14 feet which has not changed during the past 24 hours. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking District Also in Danger.

Peking, July 14.

Owing to heavy rain lasting for several days in the districts near Peking, the rivers have overflowed especially near the Lukaochiao, while the railway track is under water and it is feared the embankment of the Yungting River will be broken through. The Ministers of Home Affairs and Communications as well as the Governor of the City of Peking went to the spot last night and inspected the actual state of the flood. There is only about 15 inches (Chinese) between the embankment and the face of the water and if the rain continues the water in the river will certainly break the embankment and inundate the Nanyen.

The Peking-Hankow Railway is selling tickets only as far as Kaocheng. The Peking-Suiyuan Line had its bank near Nankow destroyed and traffic to the north of Nankow is interrupted.—Eastern News Agency.

Peking, July 15.

Almost continuous rain for 13 days is causing dangerous floods in North China. The Yungting River is threatening to overflow which would flood Nanyuan and the districts west of Peking.

Traffic on the Peking-Hankow Railway has been suspended owing to washaways. Traffic on the Peking-Suaiyuan Railway has also been stopped.

Telegrams from Kalgan state that the whole city south of the river is severely damaged. The railway line is covered with debris to a depth of three feet. The floors of the houses still standing are covered with four feet of mud. The loss of life is, however, not great. The foreigners are safe. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

The dykes in the vicinity of Tientsin appear to be in danger of being carried away which would result in flooding the British, French, Japanese and former German concessions.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hankow, July 14.

Communications on the Peking-Hankow Railway have been interrupted south of the Yellow River owing to floods.—Reuter.

SERVANTS ON STRIKE IN SHAMEEN

Protest Against Regulation: British Bluejackets Keeping Water Supply Going

Canton, July 15.

The Chinese cooks, boys and amahs who are employed by foreigners in Shameen, Canton, have decided to go on strike and to leave Shameen at 6 p.m. and about two-thirds of their number had left Shameen up to 2.30 p.m. to-day.

It was feared that the water supply would be stopped by the water works of Shameen, but through the landing of British bluejackets, the supply of water has been maintained.—Eastern News Agency.

Hongkong, July 16.

Yesterday evening all the Chinese employed in houses and offices in Shameen walked out as a protest against the regulation of the Shameen Municipal Council, requiring a permit from Chinese entering Shameen. The Dairy Farm Company is rushing supplies of foodstuffs to Shameen.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, July 17.

Owing to the continuance of the strike at Shameen, twenty British naval ratings and two officers left for Canton last night.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Canton, July 16.

The Chinese in Shameen had all left last night. There is no sign of them in the foreign settlement this morning. The volunteer corps, formed to meet the situation, are defending the settlement with the naval landing forces from the British, American and the French men-of-war in port.—Eastern News Agency.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen is championing the cause of the Chinese employees of foreigners at Shameen at present on strike over the new municipal regulation which requires every Chinese entering the concession to be provided with a permit. The local Chinese press says that Dr. Sun has sent Mr. Eugene Chen, his Foreign Secretary, to lodge a protest with the Consular Body. Through Mr. Chen Dr. Sun said the Chinese did not oppose any legitimate measures taken for the maintenance of peace and order in Shameen, but they most strongly resented any unfair and discriminating treatment meted out to Chinese alone. Regulations affecting all nationals would meet with no opposition.

THE GOVERNOR OF MACAO

Hongkong, July 16.

The Governor of Macao left for Lisbon to-day on board the President Cleveland.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

FOURTEEN pirates who went on board the str. Lukiang, which left Amoy for Chuanchow on July 10, as passengers, have been arrested, says the local Chinese press. The gang were handed over to the Chinese naval authorities, who sent them under escort to Amoy for trial.

THE Admiral Line str. in which Mr. M. S. Tuttle, formerly principal of the American School, Peking, sailed, has notified Mrs. Tuttle that her husband died on July 3, while en route to America. Mr. Tuttle had been ill for some time and it was hoped that his health would be materially benefited by a change of climate.

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF ANCIENT CHINA

Peking More Amenable to Copying of Monumental Work in Modern Style

The efforts to get the Government to change its mind and permit the Commercial Press to reprint the Chinese Encyclopedia or records compiled by Chien Lung, are reported to be progressing, says a Ching Min News Agency report in Peking. After the Ministries of Education and Interior had given permission to have the work taken to Shanghai, internal politics entered and a Mandate was issued for the police to prevent removal of the volumes from the Forbidden City. The Ministry of Communications likewise issued an order refusing transportation out of Peking, whereas they had formerly arranged a special car and guards for the precious documents.

In the latter part of the 18th century Chien Lung had his scholars collect all available records of Chinese history and write them into history. Known as the "Ssu Ku Chuan Shu" because four sets were deposited in the four Imperial Palaces for safety, this great work filled 168,000 volumes written by hand and bound in silk.

But One Set Intact.

Through the fates of wars, but one set remains intact, although seven copies were originally made. This one is in the "Wen Yuan Kao" of the Forbidden City and was to have been shipped to Shanghai for reprinting. Of the other sets, one was destroyed by the allied troops at the Old Summer Palace of Yuan Muan, a second and third went to the Palaces at Jehol and Mukden, where they have disappeared through some unknown source. Others went to Golden Island in Chekiang, one to Yenchow on the Grand Canal and the third to Hangchow. The two former were destroyed during the Taiping Rebellion while the latter was partially ruined.

The present desire to publish this invaluable work is not the first attempt since the introduction was reproduced during the administration of Hsu Shin-chang and copies presented to Tokio, the Congressional Library in Washington, the British Museum, and to several of the largest American universities. Once having started the task, it became obvious that if Chinese paper were to be used, the entire stock of paper mills in this country would be consumed for the coming 25 years. The project was allowed to lapse until the recent grant to the Commercial Press, which was subsequently rescinded.

To Use Foreign Paper.

This time the volumes will be reprinted on foreign paper and reproduced in quarter size at a total cost of a million and a half dollars, requiring five years' work. Five hundred sets were to be printed, of which 400 would sell at $3,000 each while 100 would form a special editien and bring $8,000 per set.

With the efforts being made to induce the Government to return to its original consent for publication, it is felt that the present delay is not insurmountable, and that in the near future the Commercial Press will be allowed to go on with plans and the volumes will travel to Shanghai.

A notice to mariners states that the Crossing Light-boat, Cooper Bank Crossing, Yangtze River, has been moved, and from the new position of the light-boat Kiushan Quoin Beacon bears S. 25½ E., magnetic, distant 3.67 miles. This light-boat, as heretofore, marks the southern side of the Cooper Bank Crossing.

THE death took place at Peking on July 7 of Richard Barnes Dallas, Jr., who passed away most suddenly at 12.30 p.m. after three day's illness. The eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barnes Dallas, he was 20 years of age and a most promising boy, greatly liked by all those who knew him. A keen sportsman, he was well known in sporting and racing circles in Shanghai and in Peking, where last spring he raced for the first time, winning several races.

THE DAY OF NATIONAL HUMILIATION IN JAPAN

Demonstration against the American Exclusion Act: On the Whole Very Orderly: The Insult to the U. S. Flag

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Tokyo, July 1.

To-day was "Anti-American Day" and "National Humiliation Day" throughout Japan, a day which, according to some of the Japanese papers, will leave a more painful impression on the minds of the Japanese than did even September 1, last year, when the earth slipped a cog and spread destruction and devastation over a large slice of territory in this part of the world. Impassioned oratory denouncing the new immigration bill was the order of the day. The proceedings, generally speaking, were very orderly. By a coincidence, the two Houses of the Diet also passed resolutions today, condemning the new immigration legislation of the United States as contrary to the spirit of justice and equality and endangering the long-standing Japanese-American friendship that has stood the test of three score years and ten.

Stars and Stripes Stolen.

Americans were conspicuous by their absence in the streets to-day, it being thought advisable for them not to seek trouble when such might very well be avoided. Leaders of the organizations that decided to have a whole day of stump orations took the opportunity, the previous day, of informing Americans in Tokyo, that everything would be done to see that they were not in any way tampered with or subjected to any humiliating scene, but, at the same time, suggested that it would be the part of wisdom if they refrained from strolling about, as "there might be one out of a thousand who might become unduly excited." The "part of wisdom" was generally adhered to, except for some few who were curiously inclined, including your correspondent.

A deplorable occurrence occurred shortly after noon, when an unknown ruffian, entering the grounds of Camp Cyrus E. Woods, which was the former American Embassy, hauled down the Stars and Stripes flying at the masthead of the half-burnt flagstaff, slashed the rope with a knife and made away with Old Glory. With the exception of Major W. H. Sullivan, who commanded the U. S. marines sent here from Manila soon after the earthquake to render every possible assistance in distributing relief supplies and in erecting tents for the refugees, and who is now attached to the Embassy as a language officer; Captain Hickey, formerly Chief of Police in Haiti, who is also a language officer; Sergeant Tripp, also attached to the Embassy and a couple of others, there was no one else in the Camp, if the servants and the Japanese staff of the Old Embassy, who have been camping on the site since last year's disaster, may be excepted. These American officers continue to live here because housing accommodation is so scarce in Tokio and because, as soldiers, the life in a hotel does not appeal to them.

The inmates of Camp Cyrus E. Woods were at lunch when the flag was stolen, so that the intruder must have been some one with a knowledge of the routine obtaining in the Camp. The marines who were here till the middle of last month are now in Manila. They left because, for one thing, the major portion of their duties were over; and next, because it was thought advisable not to have American soldiers on Japanese soil at this time. Those Americans in the Camp to-day are directly affiliated with the Embassy and thus fall into a different category.

Petty Jealousy Seen.

One of the policemen on duty at the old Embassy espied a man sneaking away and, growing suspicious, called on him to halt. The man took to his heels and the policeman gave chase. In pursuing the fugitive through by-paths and alleys, the policeman stumbled into an open gutter and when he arose had lost track of the man.

The incident is not thought to be a very serious one. Formal apologies have been made to Mr. Jefferson Caffery, American charge d'affairs, and these apologies were instantly transmitted to Washington. The real American Embassy to-day is located in the Imperial Hotel and the insignia of sovereignty there remains inviolate. This regrettable incident is thus not thought to be of very great importance, but it is apprehended that some similarly-minded "patriotic" fanatic in, say, California, might devise means of insulting the Rising Sun banner, especially as the condensed cable reports might lack sufficient explanation, leading to really "grave consequences" if retaliation takes the form of insulting the flag.

The radical organizations in Tokyo have expressed regrets at what had transpired at Camp Woods and the culprit has been dubbed a "traitor." Newspaper men called at the American Embassy and made apologies on behalf of the press, while the Police, for the first time since the immigration imbroglio, censored what was published in connexion with the affair, to prevent exaggeration or misrepresentation.

It is believed that this affront to Old Glory was prompted not by any desire to insult America, but sprang out of sordid petty jealousy. The Taikosha, the radical organization that invaded the Imperial RIKEI OKADA WHO TORE DOWN THE AMERICAN FLAG AT THE OLD U. S. EMBASSY IN TOKYO.

Hotel early in June and broke up a Saturday night dance-and-dinner party, has come into the limelight of notoriety very much. Before they staged the Imperial Hotel stunt, members of this organization stole the ashes of the Socialist Ohsugi, who, with his wife and nephew, were murdered by a captain of gendarmerie in the confusion that formed a part of the earthquake's aftermath, and had thereby already gained a measure of "fame." This has been galling to some of the other radical organizations. That all the "honor" for the "daring feats" should go to the Taikosha alone was too much for them. Hence the malicious deed at Camp Woods, to take away some of the wind of notoriety filling the sails of the Taikosha.

Banging the War Drum.

War talk was indulged in by only one meeting of several held in Tokio. This was at the demonstration sponsored by the Kokuryukai (Black Dragon Society). Nearly every speaker at this meeting asked for war with the United States "in order to ensure a world of fairness and peace." At every mention of war, banzais burst from hundreds of throats. America was alleged by one of the speakers to have pressed Japan to the point where the United States even dictated what Japan's national defences should be—a hit at the Washington Conference. He followed this up by asking whether the nation would put up with such humiliation.

"No," replied a voice from the audience, "the entire nation should at once be mobilized." I craned my neck to catch a glimpes of the man. He was wearing a military cap and was displaying a couple of medals on his left breast. An ex-soldier undoubtedly. A period of several years' stay in this country has shown me time and again that ex-soldiers form the bulk of the audience that flocks to hear and enjoy the verbal pyrotechnics that are a never-failing draw of any Kokuryukai meeting, whether this be to denounce America, Russia, China or the Ministry in power. To the outer world alleged "leaders" of this organization or that, demanding war at a public meeting, might sound ominous, but those who have a nodding acquaintance with these names know before the speech-making starts just what line of talk the Kokuryukai orators will take.

School boys also indulged in a day of anti-American speech-making. These were from the Meiji, Hosei and Chuo universities. institutions that have time and again given the educational authorities trouble because of their persistent indiscipline. The best universities, with a combined attendance of from 50,000 to 60,000, are the Imperial University and Keio and Waseda Universities. It is significant that these institutions did not care to have representatives shout their feelings from hill-tops and soap-boxes like hawkers peddling their wares.

No Inferiority Issue.

The speeches made without exception, branded the United States as an enemy of peace and of the brotherhood of man, and insisted that the new immigration legislation placed the stigma of inferiority on the Japanese and other Asian peoples. Just about the time these "patriots" were shouting themselves hoarse on this topic, Baron Shidehara, the Foreign Minister, was calmly, yet impressively, telling the elected representatives of the nation in the Lower House of the Diet, that no question of inferiority was involved at all.

"No intimation has been made," he said, "even by the exclusionists, of any inferiority of the Japanese race. Their contention is, in effect, that the Japanese are to the Americans as oil is to water. Neither oil nor water can be said to be superior or inferior to the other, but the fact is that in no case can they merge."

So there was the Foreign Minister telling the real representatives of the people that inferiority was not involved in the question. The brazen-throated haranguers are hardly the representatives of the people Baron Shidehara added that what the Americans meant was that the Japanese were not assimilable, but contended that this point could not be conceded by the Japanese Government.

Handbills: Sensible and Otherwise.

Distribution of handbills by the thousands throughout the city was another feature of the day. Some of these were couched in language that was sheer irresponsibility, while others were more sensibly worded. I picked up three at random, translations of which are here appended:

One, with nothing to indicate from whom or where it emanates, says: "National danger has come at last. Violence against, and persecution of, Japanese in America have been reported. Three American airplanes have passed over Japan. Wake up citizens and march to the firing line. Rescue our brethren in America. Stand up with the Sword of Righteousness firm in your hand."

The second, issued by the Taikosha, the organization that has bred feelings of jealousy in the hearts of other radical organizations and which was responsible for a dramatic raid of the Imperial Hotel during a Saturday dance, says:

"The Japanese-American problem has reached its culminating crisis. Wake up Japanese, but do not lose your heads. Our nation has been insulted in the sight of all the world. Who can endure such injustice and tyranny?"

The third issued by a Students' Federation denounces the immigration legislation severely and then pleads for noblesse oblige towards American residents in Japan.

"Do not lose sight of the fact," it says inter alia, "that Americans in Japan should be fairly and kindly treated. Persecution of Americans living in our midst, under the protection of our laws, would be contrary to our conceptions of chivalry and would stain the name of the nation. The Japanese people must suppress their burning indignation with iron-like patience."

WHO SAID PIRATES AT WEIHAIWEI?

Dovecotes of Half-Moon Bay Much Fluttered and the Navy Still More So

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

Weihaiwei, July 5.

It seems to have begun in the idle chatter of servants employed in a foreign household and it ended in a quite respectable display of the armed forces of the Crown. Half-Moon Bay is a pretty spot some three miles from Port Edward, and here are half a dozen bungalows occupied by summer visitors. One of the latter was informed by her servants that local pirates—who, as a matter of fact, are conspicuous by their absence—proposed making a night attack on the houses occupied by her and other visitors! There is a telephone at Half Moon Bay and the obvious and correct thing to do in such circumstances is to communicate with the Police Station at Port Edward, which, of course, can be done at any hour of the day, or night.

Instead, the visitor in question mentioned her fear of a piratical attack in a telephone message to a friend on H.M.S. Despatch. Unfortunately, this particular ship happened to be outside the harbour engaged in night-practice, and the message was passed on to the flagship. With characteristic promptitude the naval authorities took action: the despatch landed an armed party and turned her searchlights on the scene: the Admiral communicated with Mr. Russell Brown, Officer Administering the Government, and, with equal promptness, police and soldiers were hurried to Half Moon Bay. It is probable that the inhabitants of this delectable spot were as much astonished at this peaceful invasion of their compound by land and sea, as they would have been had pirates in reality been so foolish as to make an attack on British subjects in British territory.

The Sequel.

This incident has been followed by an official notification that anyone found disseminating false reports of an alarmist nature is likely to incur certain penalties and deportation. As an object-lesson to foreigners and natives alike, it should also serve a useful purpose. Visitors may rest assured that as long as the Bay is a naval anchorage and British warships are in evidence, pirates will continue to regard Weihaiwei as a decidedly unhealthy place.

Ships in Port.

Ships of the China Squadron in port include H.M.S.S. Hawkins, Flagship, Carlisle, Despatch, Diomede, Durban, Bluebell, Marazion, Petersfield and Titania with five submarines.

NORTH KIANGSU DRY AND PARCHED

Crops Dying: Wheat Already at Famine Prices: Bandits on the Warpath

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Suchien, Ku,, July 3.

Suchien only had one thunder shower since the beginning of June. Everything is dry and parched. The maize and soy beans, the only things planted, are dying, the sweet potatoes, sesame and other beans they have not been able to plant. The price of wheat is 1,400 per "teo" higher than even famine days.

The other night just about dark Suchien was startled with the report that there were tufei with 20 quick-firing guns inside the mud walls ready to loot the East Street. Our soldiers, ever on the alert, closed the gates to the streets; and their plans were frustrated. Fighting is still going on in the north country. Quite lately eight of our soldiers were killed and nine wounded.

LOOTING OUTBREAK IN KUEILIN

Followed by Kidnapping: Siege Continued Vainly as Ever: City Hemmed in Spikes

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

Kueilin, Si., June 19.

This morning a detachment of soldiers who were evidently being transferred to the northern Hunan front, looted the shops and homes on the street outside of the north gate and kidnapped men and women.

On Sunday evening June 15 several stores were looted, but the looting did not become general, the men confining their operations to a few houses. This morning, however, the soldiers were bent on thorough work. Looting began before daylight. By the aid of lamps and torches the houses were entered and everything of value taken. Men were stripped of their clothing and women of their jewellery. Rice bowls and cooking utensils were also taken.

The Baptist chapel which was in the charge of a Chinese worker was looted five times. The preacher was stripped of everything save a pair of short sleeping trousers. The slightest remonstrance was met by oaths and curses and savage threats to kill. Finally kidnapping began. Merchants were tied up and led away; women were reluctantly made to follow, and will doubtless be held for ransom

For 71 days General Shen's army has been battering away at the city walls in a vain attempt to gain an entrance. All attempts to capture the city have thus far failed, and the soldiers are apparently becoming discouraged and would now prefer the free life among the hills to the discipline and danger of military life.

At the present time there are comparatively few soldiers surrounding the city. Most of the besieging troops have been re-called and despatched along various roads to meet the relieving army that is reported to be coming from the north and west. The troops that now surround the city are stationed on the hills near by and living in trenches that are dug across the plain. The paths leading from the city gates out into the country have been spiked with bamboo spikes to prevent the city soldiers making a sudden rush out upon them. These spikes are driven in the ground so closely together that it would be almost impossible to especially in the darkness, for the city soldiers to make a sortie without many of their number being maimed and disabled. The fighting has therefore, once more become a test of endurance, and if relieving forces are coming to the rescue their success or failure will doubtless decide the issue.

COLLISION IN KOBE HARBOUR

Norwegian Steamer Badly Damaged and Beached at Onohama

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Kobe, July 16.

The Norwegian str. Hallgrim (6,630 tons), from the Pacific coast, heavily laden with lumber, collided with the O.S.K.S. Harbin Maru (5,821 tons) on entering Kobe Harbour at 4.15 p.m. to-day. The Hallgrim was badly damaged amidships on the port side and was promptly beached off Onohama.

At the time of the collision the Harbin Maru, which was also damaged was entering Kobe from Osaka.

July 17.

The Hallgrim is still beached. Her deck cargo has now been practically discharged and the ship is on an even keel. Divers are patching the rent.

The O.S.K. to-day informed me that the colliding vessel was the Havre Maru from Hongkong, not the Harbin Maru.

Tokio, July 17.

A message from Kobe states that the O.S.K. steamer Havre Maru collided in the harbour with the Norwegian freighter Hallgrim, causing the latter to sink. There were no casualties. The Havre Maru was seriously damaged.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ARMED POLICE GUARD AT THE RUSSIAN CONSULATE

Precaution Against Possible Red v. White Encounter: Cossacks Persuaded to Leave Quietly

Scenes reminiscent of revolution days were witnessed on Monday in the neighbourhood of the former Russian Consulate building. About 9 a.m., a strong force of Municipal Police, including some 20 armed Sikhs, marched into Whangpoo Road and, under the direction of Captain E. I. M. Barrett, were posted round the building at various points while half a dozen began a day's duty on sentry-go in front of the Astor House. Detectives took up positions at the various doors, and one or two did duty in the main hall.

The arrival and disposition of this unwonted display of Municipal authority was witnessed by a large, nondescript crowd of Russians whose presence to some extent explained that of the police. There had been rumours of an intended oratorical demonstration by "Reds" and a counter-demonstration by "Whites," and, more seriously, that an attempt would be made forcibly to eject the little band of Cossacks—General Gleboff's men—who have made the Consulate their headquarters for some time past. The story circulated some few days ago was that those men were strongly armed and had a plentiful supply of bombs, and that they intended to offer the utmost resistance against occupation of the building by the Soviet. Agent. The authorities are not concerned with the conflict between "Red" and "White," nor with the extraordinary mesh of intrigue in which various Russian groups are now entangled, but it was absolutely necessary that steps should be taken to prevent an open rupture between the parties—at any rate, in the streets of Shanghai. The strong measure was accordingly taken of sending this armed force to guard the building, within and without.

Captain Barrett's Parley.

Within an hour of the appearance of the police, the crowd of Russian lookers-on, realizing that the proposed demonstration (in which possibly they were ready to participate) would certainly not be allowed, gradually disappeared, and for the rest of the day the police guard had the street to themselves except for ordinary traffic.

During the morning, Captain Barrett had a long interview with Mr. V. Grosse and Colonel Ivanoff, the officer in charge of the Cossacks—of whom there were about 30 in the building. Captain Barrett explained that the Municipal Council were in no way concerned with the political or other differences of Russians in Shanghai, but that they were bound to take precautions against a breach of the peace; and, since the presence of these soldiers within the building was likely to cause serious trouble, he requested them to leave. A lengthy discussion ensued, and finally Colonel Ivanoff, asking on what authority the demand was made, was informed that it was made by the Municipal Council, and would be supported by the Bureau of Foreign Affairs and the Consular Body. Upon this, Colonel Ivanoff agreed to evacuate the building providing he was given an order signed by the authorities named. He was asked if there were any arms in the building and, on his honour as an officer, replied that there were none.

Captain Barrett then left, but the guard remained and kept a strict watch, taking the precaution with regard to people calling at the Consulate to allow them in one at a time only. There was no demonstration of any kind, and the police had a monotonous day's duty. About 3.30 in the afternoon, Captain Barrett again visited the Consulate, this time bringing the letter of authority already referred to, and another long discussion, lasting about an hour, ensued. It culminated in Colonel Ivanoff agreeing to issue an order to his men to leave the building within half an hour. This promise was strictly kept, and within the next hour the Cossacks marched out. They went away in little groups, all of them spick and span and many wearing military decorations. The police guard remained.

PORTUGUESE FLIERS IN SHANGHAI

Quite Recovered from Trying Journey: To Stay Till Monday

The three Portuguese fliers, Major Sarmento Beires, Major Britto Paes, and Lieut. Manuel Gouveira, arrived in Shanghai on Wednesday by the President Madison after an adventurous flight from Portugal. They were met by the Portuguese Consul-General, representatives from the Consulate and several prominent members of the Portuguese community.

All three aviators looked the picture of health, in spite of a rather unlucky trip, the only desire which they expressed being the need of a rest after their journey. Before leaving the ship they were photographed with the party who had come to meet them, and then proceeded to the Astor House Hotel where they are to stay during their visit.

Their original intention was to fly to Macao from Lisbon, but they were unable to land there owing to bad weather. Their trip has been an unlucky one owing to two breakdowns. Leaving Lisbon, they flew viâ Tripoli, Cairo and Bagdad to Karachi. Here their machine gave way and they were delayed for some little time. However another machine was purchased from the British Government. They then proceeded on their journey by way of Lahore, Calcutta, Rangoon, Bangkok, and Hanoi, intending to land at Macao. At Macao they struck bad weather, heavy rain and a thick mist making it quite impossible to land. Retracing their steps to Canton a forced landing was made. The second machine had also become damaged, but they were able to reach Kowloon, completing the journey in four days, 18 hours and 20 minutes, including many stoppages. Here they were joined by Lieut. Manuel Gouveia, the mechanic, who had left them at Karachi after the first breakdown and had proceeded from there by steamer. In Hongkong a grand reception was held by the Portuguese community. The second machine has been left in Hongkong. The fliers have now completed their flight, and are to proceed home viâ America.

They are to be entertained by Mr. Chun Bing-him of the Nanyang Tobacco Co., at a Chinese banquet on Saturday, and a garden party is to be held in their honour at the Club Lusitano de Shanghai on Sunday afternoon. The fliers will leave on Monday completing their tour around the world.

The expedition was not organized by the Portuguese Government, but by public subscription. Major Beires has already made one successful flight to Brazil.

WHO ARE THE CHINESE?

Dr. Shirokogoroff's Researches in S. China: Interesting Feature of Cantonese

Dr. S. M. Shirokogoroff, the well-known Russian anthropologist, recently returned from a journey to south China which he made under the auspices of the China Society of Science and Art for the purpose of carrying out further investigation among the Chinese, with a view to ascertaining the inter-relationship of the various groups as well as the probable origin of the whole race. Dr. Shirokogoroff first stayed at Hongkong where, by permission of the Governor, he did some interesting work in the prison. Here he measured 292 Chinese. Proceeding to Canton, he stayed with Dr. W. W. Cadbury, of the Canton Christian College, and was given facilities for measuring patients in the hospital as well as numerous people in the surrounding villages, and he has expressed himself as being very satisfied with the results of his investigations.

One of his impressions is that there is a strong negroid element in the southern Chinese. It is not at present shown in the colour of the race but by the shape of the features, and especially the nose, and also the stature and bodily form. It is to be presumed that this negroid element is representative of that which forms the sub-stratum in India and which goes back to pre-Dravidian times. Dr. Shirokogoroff says that many of the Cantonese Chinese may be classed as absolute negrettos. This negroid element is very distinct from the Malay element, which is also prominent among the southern Chinese. The northern Chinese types are very poorly represented in the Canton provinces.

Dr. Shirokogoroff is anxious to continue his researches and he desires to make his next investigations in Fukien province where there are some very strange human elements. After that, he proposes to go up the Yangtze to Chungking. Funds are necessary, however, and the committee of the China Society of Science and Art hereby make a fresh appeal for financial support for Dr. Shirokogoroff's work which, it need scarcely be pointed out, is of very great scientific interest. Contributions may be sent either to the Editor of the "North-China Daily News," or to Mr. A. de C. Sowerby, at the "China Journal of Science and Art," the Ben Building (Room 102).

RUSSIAN RADISHES IN SHANGHAI

Red Outside but White Within: The Two Parties Begin to Come to Blows

The quarrel between the "Red" and "White" Russians over the question of repatriation is even more exciting than the battle for the Eldorado or the Russian Consulate. Now that China has recognized the Soviet and an amnesty has been given the former White soldiers, some of them have decided that the best thing to do is go home, where at any rate, they are not strangers in a strange land. About 200 such Russians will leave for Vladivostok this week.

Other Russians, mostly former officers, have decided that they would rather end their lives on the Yangkingpang or in the Huangpu than submit to the Bolshevik commissars. They protest against everything that is being done by the Soviets or the Chinese officials. But more effective is their attack on those former "Whites," who have now become "Radishes." A "Radish," one must explain, is a Russian whose exterior is a bright red but whose insides are lily white. There are many "Radishes" in Shanghai now that the Soviets and China have come to terms and the Waichiaopu is bending every effort to help them get hold of the Consular buildings and repatriate the Russians.

The story goes in Russian sources that "White" officers have been wandering about town paying visits to "Radishes," with a view to a preliminary understanding of what is in store for them should the "Whites" ever return to power. For instance, "Shanghai Life," the local "Red" newspaper has twice been visited and the editor somewhat manhandled, according to this story. Another Russian in Chapei was badly beaten up and is said to be in the General Hospital suffering from his wounds. These visiting parties always go in sextettes and claim that they are police officers to get the doors open. Once they get into a "Radishes" house, they give him a Fascisti treatment, which he is not likely over to forget.

Those interested in the Russian refugee situation are wondering what all this fuss will avail. Surely if Russians want to return to their own country, Shanghai would be delighted to see the last of many of them, who cannot possibly earn a living here and whose continued presence makes them a drag on the community. On the other hand, if they do not want to return, there is at present no method of forcing them out. But should there be disorders, no matter how one sympathizes with those who have bravely suffered every privation rather than submit to a government which has turned their country topsy-turvy, a way will be found to keep peace in Shanghai.

ROUNDING UP ROBBERS

Useful Mutual Assistance by International and French Police

A useful exchange of services was made by the Municipal and French police during the week end. Chief Detective Inspector Cruickshank went over to the French Concession and, with the assistance of French officers, arrested half a dozen men and one woman, members of a gang responsible for a number of armed robberies within the Settlement during the past two months. On this side the French police were given assistance in arresting two men and two women also belonging to an armed robber gang.

Armed Robbers Sent to Arsenal

The three Chinese charged with committing an armed robbery at a Chinese house in the country off Jessfield Road have been handed over to the Chinese authorities.

KARAKHAN CLAMOURING FOR THE MEN-OF-WAR

Peking, July 13.

M. Karakhan has received a reply from the Waichiaopu, dated the 9th instant, in which the Waichiaopu says that the Russian men-of-war in Shanghai will be watched by the Chinese navy in the interests of Russia.

M. Karakhan again wrote to the Waichiaopu on the 13th instant, urging that, if that was the case, the Russian men-of-war should be handed over to the authorities of Soviet Russia as soon as possible.—Eastern News Agency.

RUSSIANS' PLIGHT AT WOOSUNG

Deputation to Chinese Commissioner: Only Food Enough Now for a Few Days

The troubles of the 600 unfortunate Russians cooped up on board the three vessels at Woosung formed the subject of another article in the "Sinwanpao" last Friday. The paper stated that an interview with the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs was recently demanded, and eventually it was agreed to receive a deputation of eight, four representing the officers and four the men. The deputation urged that they should be given assistance and or authority to sell their vessels, it being pointed out that there is now on board only food enough to last for a few days. The deputation added that none of the men were prepared to return to Russia and would rather jump overboard than be repatriated, and they denied the right of the Soviet to take the ships over.

The Commissioner promised to communicate with Peking, but the deputation would not leave without receiving a more definite answer. They remained at the Bureau for several days, spending each night at Russian Consulate and thus, it is said, giving occasion to the rumour that armed resistance would be offered to Soviet representatives who might attempt to take possession of the building.

The report concludes with the statement that the Waichiaopu has telegraphed to Shanghai agreeing to help, but in what way assistance will be given is not stated.

THE Chinese man-of-war Yungchih was on Wednesday ordered by the Navy to watch the movements of the three Russian ships. Two torpedo boats are already detailed for this duty.

THE strike of women in the filatures has been settled, conditions agreed upon being that an increase of one cent a day be paid to the workers, and that they be allowed to organize a union, the offices of which shall be situated on the premises of the silk filature owner's guild, which organization will contribute $300 monthly to meet the expenses of the union. The inauguration of the union is to take place next month.

MR. Julean Arnold, U. S. Commercial Attaché, reached Shanghai from Peking last Friday morning. Mr. Arnold is arranging for the opening of an office for the Department of Commerce at Canton. Mr. Osborn Watson, Assistant Trade Commissioner at the Shanghai office of the Commercial Attaché, is to take charge of the Canton office. While in Shanghai Mr. Arnold will be the guest of Dr. J. B. Fearn.

VIVE LA FRANCE

July 14 Enthusiastically Observed by French Colony: The Illuminations

Monday was one of those rare occasions on which a French Minister to China has been present at a July the 14th celebration in the French Concession. M. Comte de Fleuriau, who is leaving shortly for France on furlough and arrived from the North on Sunday evening, received a great welcome at the Cercle Sportif Français reception at 12.30 where this year an even larger gathering of friends of France and citizens of "le Grand Nation" had assembled.

Beginning on Sunday night with a lantern procession, which was followed by proliminary rejoicings at the French Club and in the homes of many French residents, the anniversary on Monday was observed by a round of receptions and social functions, which lasted until the small hours this morning.

The ceremony of saluting the Tricolour took place at 8 a.m. in the Consulate compound, followed at 1[illegible] by the official consular reception, and similar functions at Le Terrot (where the volunteer firemen were inspected), the Cercle Français and Cercle Sportif Français.

The chief event during the first half of the day was, as usual, the French Club reception. Healths were enthusiastically drunk and when "La Marseillaise" had been vigorously rendered, the French Minister made a cordial speech.

French Minister's Speech.

His Excellency said it afforded him particular pleasure to be with the French citizens upon the celebration of the greatest day in the history of the nation. Extolling the virtues of the day, the Minister said he was of the opinion that the citizens of the Republic were carrying on a good work in the Far East. It was their duty to continue in the future as they had been doing in the past. He was certain that the new Government at Home would realize the value of harmonious intercourse with the nations of the Orient, and with such a valuation, there could be nothing but a bright future. The Legation in Peking would at all times continue to carry out the desires of the French in China under similar instructions from Paris. He would endeavour to carry to France, where he was going on furlough, such an opinion of the people here that would produce the best results with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and he was sure that the existing pleasant relations would continue.

The Consul-General, M. Wilden, the Minister and M. Meyrier, Consul, received guests at the Consular reception. Among those present were Mr. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, Mr. G. S. Moss, Mr. A. D. Blackburn, Comm. de' Rossi, Consul-General for Italy and Doyen of the Consular Body, Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, Mr. James P. Davis, U. S. Executive Consul, Mr. S. Yada, Consul-General for Japan, Mr. J. Van Haute, Consul-General for Belgium, H. N. Aall, Consul-General for Norway, Mr. J. O. Lidbrink, Consul-General for Sweden, Major J. L. Isler, Consul-General for Switzerland, Herr Thiele, Consul-General for Germany, Mr. T. Rasschou, Consul-General for Denmark, Mr. A. Casanova, Consul-General for Portugal, Messrs. Grosse, Metzler, and Ivanoff of the Bureau of Russian Affairs, Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs and Mr. S. K. Chen, Chief Secretary.

The French Navy was represented by Admiral Frochet, commanding the French Asiatic Fleet, and Comm. De Maubeuge, Executive Officer of the Jules Ferry while Capt. Devries, Senior U. S. Naval Officer in Shanghai paid his respects.

Prominent Shanghai residents offered their congratulations, including, Sir Skinner Turner, Messrs. A. Brooke Smith, E. F. Mackay, A. B. Lowson, S. Fessenden (Chairman of the Municipal Council) A. E. Baker, O. M. Green, R. W. Davis, Dr. W. T. Findley, Colonel W. F. L. Gordon, C.M.G., D.S.O., Captain E. I. M. Barrett and the Very Rev. C. J. F. Symons.

Representatives of the various Chinese organizations, military, social and commercial attended, including delegates from Gen. Ho Feng-ling and the Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary, and Mr. Chu Pao-san, Chinese president of the Union Club and Mr. V. G. Lyman, foreign president.

Volunteer Firemen Inspected.

Drawn up in line in Avenue Joffre, the Pompiers presented a smart appearance. An inspection by M. Le Bris, Chairman of the French Municipal Council, Mr. W. J. N. Dyer, Vice-Chairman, and Capt. Chapeaux, brought forth most favourable comments on the smartness of the two French Units.

Mrs. W. J. N. Dyer, wife of the Vice-Chairman, presented medals and cups for the unusually good work of the Brigade. Those to receive medals for long service included Messrs. A. Chapeaux, V. Tartois, Srelet, Charlot, Lavabre and Chevalier, The names of Messrs. Charlot (68) Gruyot (58), and Lavabre (57) are to be inscribed on the Attendance Cup. Mrs. Dyer was handed a magnficent basket of flowers as a token of appreciation, Mr. Pett, Chief Officer of the S. M. Brigade, Mr. Dyson, Deputy Chief Officer, and all the foreign staff that could be spared, appeared at the function and spoke highly of the esprit de corps of the French volunteers.

Commenting on the season's work, Capt. Chapeaux stated that it was due to the generosity of the Council that the Brigade had reached the present high state of efficiency. With the new motors, which he understood had been ordered from Europe, their fire fighting value would be increased to well nigh double the present efficiency.

Whole Concession en Fete.

The entire French Concession during the Sunday and Monday nights was brilliantly illuminated. The Consulate with its patriotic emblems, vied with the Messageries Maritimes, and the French banks brightened the usually dark Bund, while the magnificence of the lighting effects at Koukaza Park turned the green space into a fairy land. As a motorist turned into Route Voyron or Rue Massenet, he was greeted by a blaze of red, white and blue lights. The triumphal arch at the intersection of Route Voyron and Route Vallon, looked up in the dusk and the circular edifice in the park provided that background that rounded the whole.

Sports at Koukaza.

The afternoon saw a grand athletic carnival at Koukaza Gardens, which was attended by thousands of interested spectators and contestants. The assembly might have well been celebrating an Esperantist holiday instead of the French national day, for it is doubtful if ever such a conglomeration of races and nationalities ever before came on to the same field in Shanghai at the same time—Caucasians, Orientals, Malays and negroes, the only race missing was the red, the American Indian—all dialects were spoken. And children, there must have been thousands, all of whom had the time of their young lives, either running races, watching others disport themselves, or donning old clothes and getting into the big pool. The chutes, just newly constructed, provided a welcome relief for the mothers, who sat about as the youngsters formed long lines to await their turn.

The large committee, composed of representative French officials and business men, under the leadership of M. Wilden and M. Meyrier, are to be heartily congratulated on the success of the day.

Night Illuminations.

The big garden looked lovely in its illuminations at night, the colour scheme being mainly of red and yellow lanterns, thousands of them. Strung from every conceivable spot of vantage the lights issued a warm glow, cheery and bright. Hung, as they were, in long strings from specially erected poles, spreading in all directions and reflected in the waters of the lake, they presented a lovely sight. Band concerts and an open air cinema provided plenty of fun.

Members of the French Club acted as hosts to Shanghai and gave a monster ball, the dance floor being nothing else than the hard surface tennis courts. A plentiful supply of wax had been sprinkled over the dressing and when it had been danced into the material, constituted a smooth surface, much better than would have been expected. The party lasted into the early hours of the morning and all as they left declared it to have been a wonderful celebration.

TRIUMPHAL ENTRY TO FRENCH PARK, 14TH OF JULY

LOCAL TRADEMARK OFFICE

Arrival of Associate Director of Bureau to Take over Registers from Customs

"All misunderstanding and obstacles in the way of enforcing the Trademark Law have been removed and the objection of the Diplomatic Corps overcome by the Government giving explanations on all points raised." This was the opinion expressed by Mr. Hsia Hsun-kai, Associate Director of the Trademark Bureau, who has been sent to Shanghai by the Nangshanpu, in an interview. Mr. Hsia's mission to Shanghai is solely to take over the archives of the trademark registers from the Customs. But as the number of documents accumulated exceeds 25,000, the work will take some time to complete. If firms do not register the trademarks of their merchandise sold in China, said Mr. Hsia, the Government could not protect them against any imitation or infringement as adequately as if they did. After registration, their trademarks would be protected against infringement not only in open ports, but throughout the whole of China. Unregistered trademarks would receive no protection in the interior.

It was after repeatedly giving those explanations that foreigners gradually became convinced of the necessity of registering their trademarks. Foreign merchants applying for registration of trademarks at the Bureau had lately been increasing in number, said Mr. Hsia, the Japanese being the most eager, the Germans next, and Britons and Americans last.

The British authorities were now allowing British merchants full discretion whether to register or not. Therefore, no more difficulties were expected in the enforcement of this law in the future.

In connexion with the opening shortly of a branch Trademark Office here, forms of application in English will be available in a week or so, and foreign merchants who want such forms may apply for them to Mr. Hsia or his staff at the Yih Ping Shang Hotel.

OBITUARY

Mr. Alexander Wright

Many residents of Shanghai heard with regret on Monday of the death of Mr. Alexander Wright, which occurred in his 79th year at 16 Claverton street, London, S.W. The late Mr. Wright was one of the earliest foreign residents in the Far East, having arrived here in a sailing ship on the long route round the Cape. After being in business in Hongkong and Japan, he joined the firm of Messrs. Butterfield & Swire, for many years holding a senior position, and in 1900, on the retirement of Mr. J. C. Bois, he became manager of the Shanghai office, a position which he held until 1909, when he left for Home. Keenly interested in the business of his firm, Mr. Wright took little active part in the public affairs of the community, but his advice was frequently sought on important business matters, and he was Vice-Chairman of the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce in 1900-1 and 1904-5. He leaves two daughters resident in Shanghai—Mrs. Gilbert Davies and Mrs. R. J. Marshall—to whom the sincerest sympathy is extended in their bereavement.

As a mark of respect to the late Mr. Wright, the office flag of Messrs. Butterfield & Swire and the flags of the China Navigation S. S. Co.'s ships in harbour will be half-masted to-day.

Capt. Arthur T. Greenwood

We regret to announce the death which occurred on Sunday at the General Hospital, following an operation for appendicitis, of Capt Arthur T. Greenwood.

Capt. Greenwood, who was 52 years of age at the time of his death, was an architect of many years experience in London offices and had gone into business for himself previous to the war. On the outbreak of war he gave up his business and joined up, eventually rising to the rank of Captain. He came out to Shanghai in the spring of 1919 repatriating members of the Chinese Labour Corps and decided to remain out here. For four years he was in the office of Messrs. Lester, Johnson & Morriss and latterly with Messrs. Davis & Brooke. Capt. Greenwood married during the war and leaves a wife and little daughter in Shanghai.

The funeral took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon and was attended by many friends. Dean Symons conducted the service. Many beautiful wreaths were sent.

Capt. J. H. P. Parker, A.I.N.A.

We regret to announce the death of one of Shanghai's oldest residents—Capt. James Henry Partridge Parker—which occurred at Mokanshan early on Tuesday morning after a verry brief illness.

The late Capt. Parker, who was 82 years of age at the time of his death, arrived in Shanghai 64 years ago (1860) as an apprentice in a sailing ship and after returning Home for a trip eventually returned to Shanghai with a mate's "ticket." Since then he had made Shanghai his home. After serving as chief officer and captain of the China Navigation Co.'s coasting steamers—the Newchwang and the Amoy, we believe—Capt. Parker left the sea and adopted the profession of marine surveyor.

The first company was formed by Capt. Parker in conjunction with Mr. Robb and was known as Parker & Robb., Ld. Upon dissolution of partnership the firm of Messrs. Parker, Reilley, Ld., was established in 1880, and this has now become Messrs. Parker, Reilley, & Simmons, Ld. Notwithstanding his years, deceased took an active interest in the firm as senior partner until very recently. He also acted for many years during the latter portion of the 19th century as H. M. Marine Surveyor.

The late Capt. Parker lived in the Orient and Shanghai during those early thrilling days, arriving just after the Taiping Rebellion, and on his many voyages on the China coast and visits to Chinese ports, had seafaring adventures. As mate of a coast steamer he was one of the first to enter uncertain Korean ports shortly after their dubious opening to foreign trade.

Associated as he was with Mr. E. D. Sassoon, as master of the opium hulk Wellington he was responsible for large quantities of the drug which were ever a lure to the lawless.

Capt. Parker had a wonderful memory and could tell the more recently arrived residents of Shanghai just where this or that building had stood, who lived on such a cadastral lot and such details of early Shanghai that made him a favourite subject for writers of histories and essays on the port. It was only a few years ago that the deceased appeared in H. M. Supreme Court to give evidence in a case in which property rights were involved when he described exactly what buildings had been on the spot in question in early days.

He was a member of the Race Club and the Masonic Club and in his younger days an active Mason. He was an Associate of the Institute of Naval Architects, a Board of Trade Surveyor and a member of the Bureau Veritas.

It will be recalled by readers that Capt. Parker's son, Mr. B. W. Parker, was presented at Court at the time of his marriage in June 1922, to the niece of Sir Robert Morriss, BT., of Sketty Park, Glamorgan.

Captain Parker was in Shanghai several weeks ago and seemed to be in the best of health and spirits, returning to Mokanshan about 10 days ago. Letters received by friends and business associates gave no idea other than that he was feeling perfectly normal.

THE FIRST ATLANTIC FLIER IN SHANGHAI

Commander Read Now in Command of N.S. Asiatic Aircraft Squadron

The first flyer to cross the Atlantic, Commander A. C. Read, arrived in Shanghai on Sunday en route to Chefoo, to take command of the Aircraft Squadron of the U. S. Asiatic Fleet. His ship will be the U.S.S. Ajax.

Commander Read, on the NC-4, a U.S. Navy seaplane, with six on board, left Rockaway Beach, New York, on May 8, 1919, to cross the Atlantic. Altogether, three seaplanes left on this trip, but only that commanded by Commander Read arrived at the destination. After leaving Rockaway Beach, the planes went to Halifax, the route thence being to the Azores, Lisbon and Plymouth. One was sunk near the Azores and another went adrift on the sea during a storm, but worked its way to Ponta del Gada in the Azores on its own power.

Comparing his own experience with those of the present around-the-world fliers, Commander Read, in an interview for the "North-China Daily News," said:

"The engineering and structural features of the modern plane are vastly superior to those of the machines we used in 1919. The planes now are more reliable in every respect. The trip around the world is a remarkable performance. It takes lots of nerve for a man, day after day, to grope his way through territory altogether new to him. It is very difficult to fly in unknown places. The American fliers have a slightly easier time than Squadron-Leader MacLaren, for it is much easier to fly when others are with you. It takes lots of nerve and makes it very hard to do the trip alone. There is no explaining why it should be that way, but it is so. A man feels more comfortable in the air when others are up with him. The American fliers and MacLaren are going a big thing for the development of aviation. They are remarkable men."

Commander Read came to the Far East on the trip around the world of the American fleet in 1908, after which he remained in the Philippines for three years.

THE Misses Tanchito and Sarita Mejia, daughters of the ex-Minister of Finance of Salvador, arrived in Shanghai on the str. President Pierce and will make a month's tour of China.

MEMBERS of the Nanking Road Street Union have contributed $500 to the families of the two Chinese P.C.'s, one of whom was recently killed and his comrade wounded in an attempt to apprehend the gang who attacked the Chee Wan Seng grocer's shop in the Maloo. The Chinese press says that the money has been forwarded through the Commissioner of Police, who has undertaken to inform the street union as to the manner in which the amount has been distributed.

FIRE AT ROBERT DOLLAR GODOWN

One of the Most Difficult and Dangerous Tasks Brigade Has Had to Tackle

A fire that occurred at the Robert Dollar Wharf Pootung on Monday evening was of a very serious nature. Mr. F. R. Palmer, the wharf manager, discovered the outbreak, at about 9.30 p.m., to be in a section of the hazardous goods godown at the west side of the main wharf, dense clouds of fumes already coming out of the door. It was at once realized that matters were serious as this section of the godown contained a very large quantity of yellow and red phosphorus, whilst stored apart was a large quantity of acetic and sulphuric acids, and caustic soda and calcium carbide. Lines were run from the wharf instaluation, which has a pump of its own, and at the same time a call for assistance was sent to the Shanghai Fire Department. The wharf staff under Mr. Palmer and Mr. Groat, the Assistant wharfinger, led the attack, but they were naturally frustrated in their attempts to get into the godown as there was a stiff south-easterly breeze and the clouds of smoke were suffocating. Two or three holes were knocked in the back wall and jets directed from the back.

To make matters more dangerous the next section contained 5,300 casks (about 300 tons) of chlorate of potash, another extremely hazardous commodity as was illustrated at the match factory fire some time ago when the building in which the chlorate was stored there was blown sky-high. Although the wharf manager with his staff had done valiant work, there is no doubt that the section of the Shanghai Brigade who went to the scene on the Customs Float were heartily welcomed and arrived just at the critical period, they taking over the lines of those from the wharf people and paying first attention to stopping the fire from getting a hold on the section in which the chlorate was stored, there unfortunately being a ventilated opening between the two sections.

Working at close quarters both officers and men had a gruelling task and, though every measure was resorted to, very quickly four men had to be got away, each man dropping at the nozzle. Undoubtedly the Brigade has not had to tackle such a difficult and dangerous task for some considerable time.

The Chief Officer, Mr. Pett, realizing the danger more particularly from the chlorate of potash, concentrated all efforts in that direction. The Customs float Huning proved a powerful asset as regards water.

The men were working for hours in the phosphorus and acid fumes and it was only their training that stood them in good stead—the Chief Officer, like the other officers of the Brigade present, Assistant Station Officer Charters, and Sub-Officers Waterman and Wilson, although badly affected, kept up the hazardous task until 5 a.m. when reliefs came over.

The bottom of the section was flooded up to the sill level and as much phosphorus kept under water as possible. During the night a portion of the roof of the chlorate godown did actually get alight—men got up on to the roof for intervals, but were not able to stay there for long, whilst others, wearing smoke helmets etc., went through the phosphorus smoke and got up from the under side, and checked the fire there. In the meantime a large quantity of chlorate was got out as it was against the heated wall. In this the wharf coolies assisted well. Practically all the damage was confined to the phosphorus section.

SHANGHAI has its Woman's Suffrage Association, but at present it is a little difficult to see how they are going to get the vote and what advantage it will be when they get it. However, they seem to be very keen about it, and at a meeting of the Association held in the French Concession on Sunday, two Chinese girls' schools sent in application for membership en masse. The curious reply was made that the applications must be refused "owing to the busy state of the association's business."

MAKING JOSS PAPER

Curious Industry by Which Hundreds of Thousand of People Live

In a despatch addressed by the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce of Shanghai to the chambers of commerce at Hangchow, Ningpo and Shaoshing, forwarding a petition from Ho Chen-chang and several other merchants, the following proposal is made:—

The "hung" tin sold at Hangchow. Ningpo and Shaohsing is used in manufacturing the tin-foil paper (joss paper) which has established a sale throughout the country. Hundreds of thousands of people depend upon this industry as a living. This "hung" tin is composed of 93.5 per cent. pure tin and 6.5 per cent. lead, and is made into bars each weighing 96 pounds. But only at Hongkong are found melting shops for melting the "hung" tin. There is not a single such shop in the whole of this country. As the standard purity of tin has been falling, the manufacturers of tin-foil paper in Chêkiang have been suffering losses and the trade is adversely affected. As so many people depend upon this trade for a living, and as the petitioners, being agents and not melters, cannot meet the demand for an improvement in the standard of the tin supplied, the only course open to them is to establish a melting depôt at Shanghai and melt all tin required in that depôt and under their direction. The petitioners would ask that the Hangchow, Ningpo and Shaohsing chambers of commerce and the magistrates of these districts be requested to give them protection and issue proclamations for the information of the public.

As this General Chamber approves of this proposal, the petition and a sample piece of tin are hereby forwarded to you for your consideration.

FOUR VESSELS IN COLLISION

Accidents on the Huangpu

Two collisions occurred in the Huangpu on July 10. The first took place at about 6 o'clock in the morning when the N. Y. K. str. Fushimi Maru came into collision with the Jensien Transport Co.'s str. Yuen-tah. The accident is believed to have been caused by difficult tides. The Fushimi Maru escaped practically undamaged, but the Yuen-tah sustained severe damage on the port side. The Japanese ship was inward bound, but the Chinese vessel, which was then outward bound, had to put back to Shanghai to go into dock for repairs.

The other collision occurred later in the day between a Jardine vessel and the motor-vessel S. C. No. 1, flying a flag rarely seen in Shanghai—that of Nicaragua. The motor vessel is a ship rather more than 100 feet in length and arrived here from Manila. Her bows were damaged rather badly, while the Jardine steamer sustained some injuries to her boat davits.

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY HONOURS LIST

C.V.O. for Mr. H. R. Boyd, Former Resident of Shanghai

His many friends in Shanghai and the Far East will certainly receive with pleasure the news of the appointment of Mr. Harry Robert Boyd to the rank of C.V.O.

Mr. Boyd, who was born on February 13, 1876, was engaged in business in Shanghai from 1899 to 1911, receiving the China Medal for service with the S.V.C. during the Boxer Rebellion. He was attached to the Ministry of Finance, Peking, in 1914 and received the decoration of the Order of the Excellent Crop. On returning to England he was appointed Assistant Private Secretary to the Under Secretary of state of the Home office (1915-1917); was Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Ministry of National Service, 1917; Assistant Secretary, 1918 (C.B.E.); attached to the War Cabinet in 1919; and was assistant Private Secretary to the Rt. Hon. E. Shortt, K.C., M.P., Home Secretary, 1919-22. He is now Private Secretary to Mr. Arthur Henderson, Home Secretary of the present Labour Government.

CUSTOMS TRIBUTE TO CAPT. ELDRIDGE

Farewell Presents of Interest and Value to Retiring Coast Inspector

Members of the Marine Department of the Customs on Saturday paid their respects to Captain T. J. Eldridge, the Coast Inspector, who is retiring after 35 years' service and is shortly due to leave for Home. As many representatives as were able to attend assembled in the drawing office of the Coast Inspector's department to meet Captain Eldrige and express their esteem and best wishes, and to present him with several handsome gifts. These included a wonderful piece of Chinese embroidery, the work of many months, symbolically conveying the Chinese staff's good wishes for long life and happiness and, upon the reverse side, the names of the entire staff.

The gifts of the foreign staff consisted of a beautiful old blackwood screen, with porcelain landscape panels, and a piece of bronze of great interest—a statue of Leu Tung-ling (or Li Chun-yang) one of the eight immortals, a finely wrought figure with the traditional sword slung across his back. It is recorded of this ancient sage, who flourished about 755 A.D., that whilst magistrate of the district of Tehhwa he encountered Han Chung-li among the recesses of the Lu Shan, from whom he learned the mysteries of alchemy and the elixir of immortality. He was exposed to a series of temptations, ten in number, and having overcome them, was invested with a sword of supernatural power with which he traversed the empire, slaying dragons and ridding the earth of divers means of evil for upwards of 400 years.

These gifts were accompanied by a scroll bearing the names of the foreign staff.

Every Dept. Represented.

The presentation was made by Captain H. E. Hillman, Harbour Master who, speaking on behalf of the foreign staff, said the gifts were representative of every department from the revenue cruisers to the shore staff. They desired Captain Eldridge to accept them as tokens of the very high esteem in which he was held and in recognition of the kindness with which he had treated all during his career of 35 years in the service. From junior officer on a cruiser he worked his way up to a command, then to the position of assistant Harbour master at Shanghai, deputy Coast Inspector, and finally Coast Inspector. In all these offices he had fulfilled his duties with the highest ability, and a feature of his administration had been that without exception he treated the people under him with the utmost consideration and kindness. It was with very real regret on the part of the staff that they had now to bid him farewell, the time having come for Captain Eldridge to resign, and all joined in wishing him a happy time in his retirement and that he might long be spared to enjoy it.

The Chinese Presentation.

Mr. Z. Y. Chen, representing the Chinese staff, read a translation of the scroll presented to Mr. Eldridge, the which read: "The Chinese Staff of the Marine Department, Chinese Maritime Customs, presents the accompanying set of embroidered curtains to T. J. Eldridge, Esq., Order of Chia Ho, Wen-Hu, etc., Coast Inspector, on the occasion of his retirement from the Customs Service, after having served the Chinese Government for well over 30 years, as a token of their deep admiration of Mr. Eldridge's genial character and executive abilities.

"Mr. Eldridge has spent the best part of his life for China, and it is mainly due to his untiring efforts and enterprise that navigation along the China Coast and the leading rivers of the country has attained its present degree of safety, and in wishing him a long and peaceful rest in his home country, the entire Chinese Staff feels a sense of keen regret that he is leaving, indicative of the deep regard in which Mr. Eldridge has always been held."

Captain Eldridge, who was given a great reception, briefly and modestly replied, thanking all the members of the staff for the assistance they had always so cheerfully and willingly rendered him.

BUSY CROWD LAYING NEW TRAM LINES

Work Now Extended to Broadway and Most of the Workers Merely Frivolling

The Tramway Company now has extended its operations and at the moment the stretch of roadway from North Soochow Road down Broadway to Fuhteh Road—one of the busiest and most congested sections—is up for the eventual relaying of the track. The opportunity of making a careful check upon the gangs operating in Nanking Road has been missed, but this section affords quite as good an example. The men there were watched for 20 minutes from 3 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, and all that can be said is that the Tramway Company's biggest loss is not in depreciated coinage, unless it pays a lump sum to a contractor for this relaying work, irrespective of the time in which it is completed.

Altogether there were 50 labourers in the gang. At one end of the trench were three by themselves. Two had picks and presumably it was the job of the third to instruct them in the proper grip and stance, if at any time they should so far forget themselves as to do any work, for in 20 minutes not one of the three did anything but gaze into space. Halfway down the trench were a dozen more, three of whom were arrant blacklegs, for every three minutes, for a minute at a time, they dug a little. The others discussed with two uniformed employees of the company the prospects of the China International Exhibition, or maybe it was the possibility of the Company adding still further to its million dollar profit if the fares are again raised. Leaning against a shop front and completely hiding the goods exposed for sale were the rest of the gang, also their picks, shovels, a Chinese policeman, three women and another uniformed employee of the company. In all probability they were discussing an occasion when one of them saw a woman fall off an overcrowded car platform, for they were roaring with laughter. Far removed from all was a small boy, with his back to the traffic and his head covered with a red warning flag as a protection against the sun, industriously spitting into the trench.

Thus does the relaying of the tramway track progress. And let it be remembered that the narrow end of Nanking Road and the Chêkiang Road crossing are amongst the section that yet have to be tackled. The company's profits last year amounted to £101,771, an increase of £4,773 on the previous year, and there is no reason to expect there will not be as large an increase this year. Surely others besides the shareholders at Home are entitled to some consideration. For years people using the trams have suffered great discomfort through the cars being grossly overcrowded, and this state continues, though in a slightly less degree since gates have been fitted to some of the cars. Even yet, however, the Municipal Council's order that all cars are to be fitted with effective gates has not been complied with and passengers still are wedged in so long as it is just possible for the conductor to open and close the gates.

It has been pointed out to us that tram-line laying is skilled work for whom the unemployed, whom we suggested retaining last week to expedite the job, would be useless. But surely it would be possible to find some more skilled men, or at any rate more foreigners to see that those employed to work do work. It is not only the people who use the trams who are inconvenienced but the general public, nor are they to be persuaded that a good deal might not be done to lessen the inconvenience.

THE engagement is announced of Dr. Alfred C. H. Tyau to Miss Hsia Zoh-tsung, a popular teacher at McTyeire School. Miss Hsia takes a keen interest in "Y" work and social service, being very prominent in the Shanghai Glee Club and various Christian institutions. Dr. C. T. Wang is her uncle and the matchmaker. Dr. Alfred C. H. Tyau is well-known at St. John's University. He is a B. A. and M. D. cum laude from Pennsylvania Medical School. He is a cousin of Dr. E. S. Tyau, physician at St. Luke's Hospital.

TRAMPING IT OUT OF RUSSIA

American ex-Soldiers Lured by Soviet Falsehoods Now Back from Vladivostok

Two American ex-soldiers have just arrived in Shanghai after having travelled from Vladivostok in the regular American "hobo" style. They stated that they went to Russia a little more than a year ago from San Francisco after having been promised excellent positions in the mines at a high rate of wages. These promises were made by the Soviet agents in America. The ideal conditions of labour as promised were soon found to be only imaginary and after their money was gone, it became a question of obtaining work to get the bare neccessities of life.

Work there was and plenty, but the wages were absolutely insufficient and the conditions were such that no American could exist. Taxes were levied on all monies over the cost of living. Roubles were the base of pay and the most they ever received was at a rate that would equal about Mex. $5 per day, which barely covered the cost of living. Clothes were unattainable except by the very wealthy and the officers of the Army.

How to Go?

About two months ago they had managed to save up a few dollars and being thoroughly tired of life under the benign rule of the "Reds" they decided to start for Shanghai where they believed they could get the means to go home. Not having enough money to obtain passage on a steamer or on a train, they decided to travel by the American "hobo" plan, that is by freights and any means obtainable without payment.

Walking out to the first station on the Harbin route they waited for a train; in the afternoon a goods train came along and watching their chance they got into the first empty box car. Having purchased some cooked food and with a bottle of water, they slept, awakening in the morning to find themselves on a siding close to a small village and about 90 miles from Vladivostok. There they stayed until evening when a passenger train came along; they then climbed on the top of the cars and rode for three hours, getting off at a small station. They slept alongside the embankment until morning.

Picnic Fare

Having eaten up the food which they carried from Vladivostok they looked about to purchase more. None of the Chinese could understand what was wanted at first but finally they managed to buy some eggs and then came the question of cooking them. They managed to find some tin cans built a fire and boiled the eggs. It took them nine days to travel from Vladivostok to Harbin, travelling whenever they got a chance on the trains and walking during the cool of the evening, sleeping alongside the track under trees whenever they got tired. They could obtain chickens and eggs anywhere and there was no trouble about cooking as a few rocks piled up made a fire place and they had a tin can which boiled the water for coffee and tea, while a flat piece of tin or iron made a good skillet for frying eggs and chickens. They remained in Harbin for a week trying to find employment and then they started for Mukden and Tientsin.

At Tientsin they met some of the soldiers of the American forces and obtained each a pair of Army shoes and underwear, of which they were badly in need. The trip to Pukow took them one week and they came to Shanghai from Nanking by third class, arriving last Sunday night, tired, dusty, hungry and about broke.

Keep Clear of Russia

Asked about the condition in Russia at the present time the spokesman said:

"The conditions in Russia for a working man at the present time are awful and no American should go there, no matter what promises the Soviets make. There is plenty of work and food, but no money and when money is obtainable for work it is taxed by the officials so that none remains for the labourer. The wages are paid in roubles which are of no use anywhere except where the Soviets are in actual power. The next Soviet agent that tries to tell me how good the government is under their rule and the fine condition for the working man will certainly get a 'bat' in the eye. They told us some of the biggest lies we ever heard and all we want is to get back to the United States where at least we can make a decent living under decent conditions."

Asked about the trip they said. "We had no trouble with the Chinese at all, they used to come around us when we were cooking our food and sleeping and the soldiers would sometimes ask us questions which we could not understand, but they never troubled us. They thought that we were Russians I believe and not worth bothering about."

42 SHIPWRECKED MARINERS

Rescue off Saddles by Joint Efforts of Cable Ship and Tug and Lighter Co.

Two local vessels—the Great Northern telegraph Co.'s cable steamer Store Nordiske and the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Company's salvage tug Saucy—have been associated in a meritorious rescue of 42 shipwrecked mariners.

It appears that the Store Nordiske, outward bound from Shanghai on Tuesday in connexion with cable work, sighted a number of castaways on North Saddle Island. They proved to be 42 members of the crews of four Shantung junks which had been wrecked during the heavy weather of a few days ago, and were badly in need of assistance. The officers and other members of the crew of the Store Nordiske did what they could for the unfortunate men, but as it was essential that their vessel should continue on its journey, they were unable to bring them back to Shanghai.

They did the next best thing, and one which ensured rescue beyond doubt, by tapping the cable and sending a message to Mr. Anderson, the Chief Engineer of the G. N. Telegraph Co., in Shanghai, to the effect that the men were in need of rescue. Mr. Anderson communicated with the local Shantung Guild, whose officials promptly got in touch with Messrs. Wheelock & Co., the agents for the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Company, and on the Tuesday evening the Saucy left for the North Saddle and eventually rescued the 42 men without further untoward incident, landing them at Woosung on Wednesday evening.

Great credit is due for the rescue to the officers of the Store Nordiske and to the Shanghai Tug & Lighter Company, who, we understand, immediately offered to send the Saucy, a most valuable ship, and the biggest and finest salvage vessel in the whole of the East.

NEED OF GREATER SHANGHAI

From What She Has Grown and What Must be: Mr. Sokolsky at the Rotary Club

Speaking before the Shanghai Rotary Club, Mr. George E. Sokolsky, correspondent for the "Philadelphia Public Ledger" and the "Japan Advertiser," on Thursday made an appeal for a Greater Shanghai. He referred to the development of the city from the narrow confines of the first International Settlement, to the growth after the Taiping Rebellion, and finally to the Metropolis of Asia at the present time. But this development is now arrested because many barriers are erected which keep the city from become one of the greatest of the world. At present Shanghai consists of the International Settlement, French Concession, Nantao, Chapei, Paoshan, Pootung and Woosung. Each place has its own methods and its own political aspirations. To make Shanghai the great city it should be, all these sections must be amalgamated into one city, with one fire department, one police department, one health department, one government elected by the citizens of the city. Unless this is done for Shanghai, the city cannot grow.

In tracing the history of Shanghai, Mr. Sokolsky referred to the anniversary of the "North China Daily News." He recited anecdotes of Shanghai history taken from the files of the "North China Daily News" and "North China Herald," to which he has recently had access. He found it particularly interesting that so many things in those days are paralleled by current events, particularly making references to letters to the editor from irritated readers.

U. S. AND REMISSION OF BOXER FUNDS

Dr. W. W. Peter's Advocacy in Washington on Behalf of Famine Relief Measures

Dr. W. W. Peter returned to Shanghai on Saturday on the str. President McKinley after a busy three months spent largely in Washington, D. C., as the special representative of the Hwai Conservancy Board and the Chinese and Foreign Famine Relief Committee of Shanghai.

Dr. Peter told a representative of the "North-China Daily News" that he was primarily instructed to work under the direction of the Chinese Minister to Washington to secure the passage of the resolution of the House Joint Resolution providing for the remission of the balance of the annual instalments of the Boxer indemnity. It became early apparent to friends of China that the important thing was to secure the passage of the Bill and not to jeopardize its success by insistence upon a reclamation measure which, important as it might be, probably would arouse opposition on the ground that it involved a tremendously complicated engineering problem, the solution of which is not yet agreed upon and that it might be favauring special interests or that such reclamation projects should be solved by the Country concerned. The opposition to this further remission centred upon the difficulty of making it clear that it was based upon a different proposition from that of cancellation of international debts: and that since the claims for compensation to American citizens and the expense of military and naval operations had been fully met, the balance, G$6,137,552.90 should be remitted by the United States as an act of friendship.

What is the Chinese Govt.?

Another point which aroused much difference of opinion was the status of the Chinese Government and the uncertainty as to whether the balance actually would be used as the resolution states "to develop the educational and other cultural activities of China." This difficulty, however, was met by pointing out the fact that China never has defaulted in its payment of funds to be used for educational purpose according to the arrangements made when a special remission of the indemnity was made in 1908, and that there was every reason to think that this would be continued. Moreover, Mr. Alfred Sze, the Minister, has made suggestion that a special Board be created by the Chinese Government in consultation with the American Government, the majority of its members to be Chinese of prominence in the educational field, but the Board to have American representatives as well.

The preliminary hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the discussion in Congress on May 7, when the resolution was finally passed with a record of years 211, mays 114, not voting 107, were very spirited and must have been enlightening to the American public, clearing up much of the popular haziness with regard to the Indemnity Fund. Statements were made by Professor Lucius C. Porter, Dept. of Chinese, Columbia University, Dr. Warnshuis, Secretary of the International Missionary Council; Dr. Edward H. Hume, president of Yale College, Changsha, Dr. W. H. Foulkes, secretary of the General Council of the Presbyterian Church; Miss Mary E. Wood, Boone College librarian; Mr. Dwight W. Edwards of Peking; Mr. Ralph A. Ward, secretary of the Methodist Church, Hon. John Van A. MacMurray, Chief of Div. of Far Eastern Affairs, Dept. of State; Mr. Robert McElroy, Princeton University; Hon. Leonidas C. Dyer, Congressman from Missouri.

As Shanghai people well know Dr. Peter's enthusiasm for the health education movement which he has fathered in China, our representative could not refrain from asking him if he had an opportunity of presenting his own particular interest. "Not a word" came the reply.

ENGLISH lady wishes to travel to Shanghai and is prepared to undertake care of children or act as companion or secretary in return for passage. Highest references. Miss Scott, 91 Belgrave Road, London, S.W.1.

The London market has been quiet and steady all the week and fluctuations in the price have been very small. The price came yesterday 34 3/16d. ready and 34 1/16d. forward, ready being 1/16d. lower than last week, while forward is unchanged. There is no report of any Continental buying this week in London.

Bars in stock 2,833, including Silver Yen 10 lakhs. Stocks of Sycee and Dollars amount to Tls. 392 lakhs and $421 lakhs, against Tls. 386½ lakhs and $406 lakhs last week, and Tls. 224½ lakhs and $283½ lakhs on July 17, 1923.

Exchange.

Exchange left off last week with the official quotation for T.T. at 3/3⅛d. It was raised on Saturday to 3/3⅜d., where it has remained until yesterday morning, when it opened at T.T. 3/3⅛d. The market opened in the morning with sellers T.T. 3/3⅜d. July, 3/3⅝d. August, 3/3 11/16d. September and 3/3⅝d. October, but eased off somewhat during the forenoon and closed for the tiffin interval with sellers 1/16d. under these rates. In the afternoon the market was easier and T.T. 3/3 1/16d. July, 3/3⅜d. August were difficult to find.

THE SILVER MARKET

China's Reduced Stocks: Quotations Waiting on a Revival of the Eastern Demand

Reporting from London on June 4, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

Quotations have receded slightly from those fixed on May 31—35⅛d. for cash and 34.13/16d. for 2 months. The former was the highest since October 10, 1922, and the latter since October 11, 1922. The easier prices since last Saturday have been owing to lack of demand rather than pressure to sell. Silver quotations have continued to advance in the United States, and reached yesterday the comparatively high quotation of 67½ cents the fine ounce. The underlying strength of the market here lies at present in the prolonging or closing of bear sales coming due. Cash supplies have been forthcoming from the United States, and sales for forward delivery from India and China have been made. As there are a good deal more bear than bull positions open, and the stock in China is becoming reduced, the undertone keeps good. A revival of Eastern demand on any important scale would have an immediate effect upon quotations.

Reuter telegraphed from Washington on the 29th ultimo that the U. S. Senate had passed a Bill by which the Treasury would be directed to complete the purchase of stores of domestic silver covered by the Pittman Act. It is estimated that 14,589,730 ounces of silver must be bought at a dollar an ounce to comply with war-time legislation. We hear that the House of Representatives will in all probability endorse the action of the Senate.

An unusually large amount of silver came from America by the str. Leviathan on the 30th ultimo, and the total is stated to be a record consignment for a Transatlantic liner to bring to this country. The manifest gave a total of 1,578 bars (238 of which were apparently not declared): the approximate value of those declared was about $1,000,000.

The silver quotations to-day for cash and two months' delivery are respectively 1/16d. and 1/8d. above those fixed a week ago.

Reporting from London on June 11, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The silver market has been quiet, and business, owing partly to the intervening holiday, has been on a rather small scale. Purchases have been made on account of bear covering; the Continent has taken little interest. China has disposed of small parcels, and America has been inclined to keep in touch as a seller.

"The Times" announces to-day that the Pittman Bill, requiring the United States Government to purchase at a dollar an ounce 14,500,000 ounces of silver of domestic production, passed the Senate, but in the confusion at the adjournment of Congress was not voted upon by the House of Representatives.

A Reuter telegram from Simla says that an official memorandum issued there states that there will probably be some delay in establishing the extent of the Arabian Sea monsoon, particularly in Northwest India. In the rainfall of the Indian peninsula an excess is to be expected. The indications for Northwestern India are conflicting, but the rains are likely to be normal, or in excess.

The silver quotations to-day for cash and two months' delivery are respectively the same as and 1/8d. above those fixed a week ago.

MENTOUKOU CLOSED

The general agents of the Shanghai Exploration & Development Co., Ld., have received information from the Engineer-in-Chief of the Mentoukou coal mine that, owing to the breakdown of the electric power station, due to floods caused by the heavy rains, it has been found necessary temporarily to stop the working of coal and close the safety doors.

TRAMWAYS IN HANKOW

Chinese merchants in Hankow are promoting a tramway company with a preliminary capital of $2,000,000 to operate a service starting at a bridge behind the Peking-Hankow Railway to Liu Kia Miao, near the Han River, a distance of 50 li. Railless trams also will be introduced. A scheme has been drawn up and submitted to the Civil Governor for approval.

THE GOLD MARKET

Reporting from London on June 11, Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 4th inst, amounted to £126,357,625, as compared with £126,327,125 on the previous Wednesday. The Indian bazaars have taken only a small proportion of the moderate supplies of gold available this week.

The Transvaal gold output for May amounted to 809,003 fine ounces, as compared with 768,923 fine ounces for April, and 786,564 fine ounces for May, 1923.

Mr. Joseph Kitchin has recently compiled the following interesting table of the gold consumption balance available for money, and the world's stock of gold money, 1915-1922, a unit being one million pounds sterling at 85 shillings per fine oz:

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Still Another Quiet Week but a Much Better Tone at Piece Goods Auctions

July 19.

It has been another dull week, relieved only by a much firmer tone in the piece goods auction rooms (though the indent business still is very poor) and some renewal of the demand for produce. The Tientsin calamity is not expected to have any particular effect on the markets here, as this is the off-season so far as dealings with the north are concerned.

Piece Goods.

Private business has been so very quiet that there is scarcely anything to say about the market, the conditions being exactly the same as they have been for some weeks past.

Cotton, Yarn, etc.

China Cotton.—There has been no particular outstanding feature during the week, but the operations of speculators consequent on the rise in New York made local prices also somewhat higher. Yesterday morning's quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—July, 46; August, 46.20; September, 42.5; October, 39.10; November, 38.40; December, 38.30. In spot quotations Shensi was given as Tls. 44.45, but there were no other qualities in the market.

Yarn.—This market has continued quiet and stead, with an occasional tendency towards firmness. Yesterday's quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange were:—July, 173.40; August, 171; September, 166.80; October, 161.60; November, 169.70; December, 159.40.

Egyptian Cotton.—Sakellarides, July, 45; November delivery, 39.33.

Indian Cotton.—The market opened firm on higher New York advices and advanced further on buying by the leading speculators. It closed firm on Thursday at the following quotations:—Fully good Bengal, July, 533; fine Oomra, July, 560; fully good Broach, April/May, 517.

Sampin.—The latest quotations on the Osaka Exchange are:—

	Thursday Afternoon	Yesterday Afternoon
July	Y.310.80	Y.310.00
August	309.10	307.10
September	306.70	304.30
October	303.20	301.80
November	300.60	298.10
December	296.20	293.20
January	295.00	292.90

Produce.

There is a fair demand for all commodities generally marketed at this time of the year and prices have risen considerably, both locally and at Home, the main reason for this being the abnormal shortage of supplies. Business in new season cargo has recommenced, but such sales as are reported are obviously of a speculative nature. Crops generally are reported to be good and this particularly applies to sesamum seed. Prospects of business in the autumn appear to be fairly good.

IMPROVEMENT OF SILK AND TEA

A proposal recently was made by the Kiangsu Civil Governor to the Kiangsu Educational and Industrial Alliance for the improvement of Chinese silk and tea. A member of the staff of the Ministry of Agriculture and Commerce some time ago proposed the establishment of an office in Shanghai to take care of this improvement work. The objects of the office, so far as the silk industry is concerned, would be to disseminate knowledge of approved methods of mulberry leaf cultivation, and selection of eggs, to eliminate pebrine, and to make known proper methods of handing cocoons and working in filatures and weaving factories. Tea improvement work would include fostering scientifically approved schemes of bush cultivation, leaf picking and curing. It is suggested that the office should go into merchandizing, as well as investigating and disseminating knowledge concerning the best methods of packing, labelling, testing and standardizing. Establishment of banks in Shanghai by members of both the silk and tea trades is being talked about, as it is felt that there is need for them. It is also suggested that with the proper organization of an improvement and trade promotion office that direct business with dealers in foreign countries may be possible. The tea merchants' and silk dealers' guilds in Shanghai are each to appropriate $4,000 towards the maintenance of the office, and the Kiangsu Provincial Government is expected to provide additional funds. The establishment of this office is to be discussed at a conference to be held at an early date.

BRITISH NORTH BORNEO CO.'S DIVIDEND

London, July 16.

The British North Borneo Company's dividend for the past year was 2½ per cent.—Reuter.

SHANGHAI DOCK & ENGINEERING CO.

The Directors of the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., Ld., have issued their report with statement of accounts made up to April 30 last.

The net profit for the year ended April 30, 1924, including the amount brought forward from last year, amounts to Tls. 647,456.84, after paying all charges and allowing for all known liabilities.

This amount the Directors recommend be dealt with as follows:—

	Tls.
A dividend of Tls. 9 per Share (12 per cent.) absorbing	496,800.00
Add to Depreciation Account (bringing it up to Tls. 750,000)	52,000.00
And carry to New Account	98,656.84
Total	647,456.84

In accordance with Par. 98 of the Articles of Association two Directors, Mr. John Prentice and Mr. H. W. Lester retire, but, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

The accounts have been audited by Messrs. Lowe, Bingham and Matthews, who offer themselves for re-election.

INCREASED LIKIN

The Hunan authorities have decided to increase the likin collections of the province by $269,154 for the next fiscal year, during which time the likin duty will be raised by 10 per cent. of the present rate. The present amount of the yearly likin collections in Hunan is $2,691,540.

HANGCHOW EXHIBITION

A number of Shanghai merchants are arranging to secure a loan of $2,000,000 to be used for an exhibition of Chêkiang products at Hangchow. The bonds will be in denominations of $100, to be issued at 82.

SUNGKIANG TELEPHONE CO.

The Sungkiang Telephone Co. is inviting the public to subscribe for new shares to the amount of $20,000. The increased capital is to be used for the introduction of long-distance services between Sungkiang city and 24 rural districts.

COAL OUTPUT

The total output of the Kailan Mining Administration's mines for the week ending July 5 amounted to 89,517 tons and the sales during the same period to 95,084 tons.

The General Managers of the Fu Chung Corporation advise us that the sales of their coal (Honan Anthracite) for the month of June, 1924 amounted to 84,943 tons.

RUBBER OUTPUT

The rubber harvested on the Permata Estate for the month of June amounted to 7,523 lb.

COMPANY MEETINGS

THE PADANG RUBBER CO., LIMITED

Hopeful Outlook for Current Year: The Annual Meeting

The fourteenth annual general meeting of the Padang Rubber Co., Ld., was held last Friday at the offices of Messrs. A. R. Burkill. Mr. A. W. Burkill (Chairman) presided, and was supported by Messrs. E. T. Byrne and Chun Bing-him (directors). There were 6,135 shares represented.

The Chairman said:

At the last annual general meeting of the company you were informed that tapping, which had been suspended from June, 1922, was about to be resumed. A start was therefore made in June, 1923, but as all the old areas required cleaning up before tapping could be commenced, a daily tapping programme was adopted only on limited areas in order that the tapping force could be established and retained until the whole area was sufficiently cleaned up to allow all areas to be tapped on the alternate day. This naturally affected the output for the first few months and it was not until August that really full tapping was resumed. In consequence our crop for the year fell short of the export allowance of 176,061 lb. by 21,733 lb., but this, of course, will be carried forward to the current year's allowance. The shortage in crop, combined with the heavy expenditure in connexion with the cleaning up of the estate and the fact that our revenue account was burdened with the upkeep of 170 acres of non-producing rubber, has tended to raise our cost of production, which I regret to say works out at the high figure of 1s. 0¼. for the year. The estate has now reached a normal level of working and I think I can safely say that the current year will see a very substantial reduction in costs.

Due to the reasons which I have just explained, our crop was produced at a loss of ¼d. per lb., but in spite of this the year's working shows a small profit of Tls 1,986.55, this result being brought about by interest earned on the company's loans and surplus funds. A reference to the accounts will show you that the financial position of the company is in a very sound state, cash and liquid assets amounting to approximately Tls. 60,000. With the amount of Tls. 15,409.71 brought forward from last year's accounts, the amount standing at credit of profit and loss account is Tls. 17,396.26. With rubber at its present price, the Directors regret they are unable to recommend the payment of a dividend and it is therefore proposed to write a small amount off our assets and carry forward the balance of Tls. 17,037.54 to next year's accounts.

During the year, the estate was visited by Mr. J. W. Kennedy and Mr. Norman Davie, whose reports indicate a very great improvement in the condition of the estate generally, more particularly with regard to bark conditions and standard of tapping. I am glad to report that Mr. Ractliffe, our manager, is having a considerable amount of success in maintaining his Tamil force and it is to be hoped in time to work the whole estate by Tamil labour alone, thus dispensing with the more expensive Chinese labour. It is interesting to report that since the Tamil labour has been put on the tapping work, tapping costs are practically half what they were two years ago.

The following resolutions were passed:—

That the report and accounts for the year ended April 30, 1924, together with the recommendation as to appropriation of balance at credit of profit and loss account, as presented, be accepted.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Chun Bing-him.

That Mr. Chun Bing-him be re-elected a director of the company.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. E. T. Byrne.

That Messrs. Thomson & Co. be re-elected auditors to the company.—Proposed by Mr. W. A. Ogden, seconded by Mr. Chun Ton Yen-tong.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

KARAN RUBBER ESTATE CO.

Estate in Excellent Condition: Effects of Restriction

The annual general meeting of the Karan Rubber Estate Co., Ld., was held at the offices of the company last Friday. Mr. A. W. Burkill presided, supported by Messrs. E. E. Parsons and Chun Bing-him, (directors). There were 3,220 shares represented.

The Chairman said:—

Although not up to last year's standard, the result of the year's working may not be regarded as unsatisfactory. Due to restriction, the output for the year was some 25,000 lb. less than last year's crop and although the average price realized was 2d. per lb. better, our gross sales fell short of last year's figure by Tls. 2,982.89. The profit on the year's working amounted to Tls. 4,756.96, making with the balance of Tls. 3,007.84 brought forward from last year a total of Tls. 7,764.80 standing at credit of profit and loss account. The financial position, as you will note from the accounts, is in a very healthy condition, but owing to the continued depressed state of the market, your Directors do not feel justified at this juncture in recommending the payment of a dividend and therefore recommend carrying forward the balance at credit of profit and loss account to next year's accounts.

Under the reassessment the standard production of the estate has been fixed at 133,080 lb., making the exportable allowance on the 60 per cent. basis 79,818 lb., a reduction of 488 lb. on the original allowances.

Generally speaking, the Estate is in excellent order and there is very little for me to comment upon. Costs are fairly high, but if consideration is given to the very limited area with its attendant comparatively high charge and also to the fact that 32 acres have up till now been non-producing, the cost of production is not really unsatisfactory in these times of restriction of crops.

The estate has been remarkably free from disease and only a few trees were treated for either pink disease or white ants. Thinning out on a moderate scale was carried out during the year, 1,789 trees being removed, bringing the average stand per acre to 72; consequently there will be very little work required in this connexion during the current year. Labour has all times been sufficient and the health of the force on the whole has been very satisfactory.

Mr. J. A. Castle has continued his excellent work as manager and the Directors take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation of his services and of those of Mr. J. W. Kennedy, the visiting agent.

The following resolutions were passed:—

That the report and accounts for the year ended March 31, 1924, together with the recommendation as to appropriation of balance at credit of profit and loss account as presented be accepted.—Proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Mr. E. E. Parsons.

That Mr. E. E. Parsons be re-elected a director of the company.—Proposed by Mr. Chung Bing-him, seconded by the Chairman.

That Messrs. Thomson & Co. be re-elected auditors to the company.—Proposed by Mr. W. A. Ogden, seconded by Mr. Chun Bing-him.

This concluded the business of the meeting.

THE dispute arising from the election of a chairman of the Committee of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce is still continuing. The subject of the dispute is the qualification of Mr. Sung Han-chang, who at first resigned and then withdrew his resignation from the retiring Committee, and who is now recovering from an illness at Mokanshan.

CREDITORS of the Chinese Merchants' Bank at Canton are very much upset at hearing that an official of the bank's local branch had secretly promised to refund the whole amount of deposit to a certain depositor who is personally acquainted with him, says the "Canton Gazette." The Finance Department has appointed a Special Commission to wind up the local office of the bank.

CORRESPONDENCE

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—I beg to enclose copy of a letter of mine to the "North-China Daily News" which was published on June 10, 1911, and which speaks for itself.

I urged the importance of this matter 13 years ago and I urge it again to-day.

I was only supported by one writer —"A.W."—who wrote as follows:—

"We notice in the papers that even in "Christian England" the "cat" is still in use by order of the judges in cases of highway robbery with violence, so that it seems that the only deterrent punishment to be resorted to in desperate cases of a criminal of the worst class is the corporal one, and this applies surely in this case of our Settlement, as well as in every other port in China. Let the Mixed Court without further hesitation exercise its legal right to deal with this class of offenders and it will not incur any serious consequence or responsibility in doing so."

"The writer can remember when arriving in Shanghai in 1864, when the first Mixed Court was established by the Chinese authorities in the compound of the British Consulate, under the authorization of the Chief Judge, Sir Edmund Hornby, and the British Consul, Mr. Markham, the Chinese prisoners then before this Mixed Court with British, American and German Assessors conducted the hearing of offences committed daily and with Mr. Chou as the Magistrate of the Court for over twenty years, until his death, the regular routine went on day by day to the entire satisfaction of all the constituted authorities at that time. The bamboo was then a great factor in conducing to fear and order by the criminal classes in this Settlement. The punishment was then inflicted very often in serious cases in the presence of the full Court, with the Assessor on the bench in special cases, and why not now when crime has multiplied a hundred fold."

I should be glad if you could find space to publish that letter of mine of 13 years ago, because those who charge me with notoriety hunting, and those who cannot understand why I write on public matters in your columns will then have some definite proof that our interests are identical and that I have put into words what many of them will think in the future.

"Expulsion Orders and the Criminal Classes"

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—When in Singapore recently I was rather astonished to notice the sentences passed at the Assizes on those criminals who persist in returning to the Colony after banishment.

The sentence for doing so is invariably "a lifer."

I inquired from some legal friends of mine as to whether or no such a sentence was not rather stringent and met with the very sufficient reply that gentry who are banished are always bad and criminal characters, and that such severity is a necessity for ridding the Straits of their future attention.

And this seems sound.

Now in the Settlement here we have this same problem in an aggravated form, and whether owing to public sentiment or inadequate powers of the Magistrates and Assessors at the Mixed Court, it is to be noticed that expulsion orders from the Settlement are being constantly flouted and ignored by the criminals thus dealt with. In Thursday's paper you report the case of a Mr. Bai-foo who had been convicted on five previous occasions and expelled on four.

He has now received a year for larceny, with expulsion to follow.

It seems tolerably certain therefore that in A.D. 1912 (? Ed.) Mr. Bai-foo will follow time-honoured precedent and return amongst us with the idea of annexing any property that has not an owner closely attached to it. Cannot public sentiment, both Chinese and foreign, be aroused to deal with this sort of thing after the manner in vogue in the Straits?

In my opinion we owe it to ourselves and to our Police, who function so admirably in our interests, to take stringent measures to prevent the intention of these expulsion orders being thus flouted and the Police laughed at by the criminal classes.

I venture to advocate that the foreign and Chinese authorities might come to an understanding on this question and issue such instructions to the Mixed Court Magistrates and Assessors as will ensure Messrs. Bai-foo and Company being given full warning that should they be found within the International Settlement boundaries, after expulsion by the Court, they will get a sentence of twenty years to go on with. This may seem stringent to a superficial reader, but it may also be borne in mind that the Straits authorities temper justice with mercy, and in certain cases of good behaviour convicts undergoing sentence for this offence are released, after a few years' meditation has thoroughly convinced them that the Court, when banishing them, did not intend its order to be a dead-letter and of no practical result.

Since the time when fatuous and sickly influences succeeded in depriving us of the help of the useful bamboo in the Settlement, our criminal classes seem to be having it a good deal their own way, but at any rate, in view of the conditions which such a mistaken policy has given rise to, I do not think public sentiment would be unduly outraged if steps were taken towards making the Ward Road Hotel a more or less permanent abiding place for these expelled criminals who are continually playing the fool with us by so regularly returning to the Forbidden Land.

Perhaps, if it meets with your approval, you would give this not unimportant question your support. It seems to me the prestige of the Police and the administration of the Settlement should be supported in this matter by every means in the power of both Chinese and foreigners alike.

I am, etc.
W. Bruce Lockhart.

THE "CAT"

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—The effect of the timely and valuable leader of July 12 "The Armed Robber Challenge" is vitiated by your recommendation that the "cat" should not be limited to armed robberies but that it should also be used upon those found carrying weapons. This is quite a different offence and very likely the innocent would suffer with the guilty.

We come here upon the very reason why our laws have constantly to be re-written. Legislation is a continued effort to so change and frame laws that only the guilty will be punished. In criminal law especially great care has to be exercised. It is quite one thing to favour the severe corporal punishment recommended in proven cases of armed robbery but another to suggest the same punishment for carrying concealed weapons.

I am etc.,
Americus X.

Shanghai, July 12, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

In "Notes & Comments" under the above caption you reproduce a contribution to the "Glasgow Herald" which describes the living upon the immoral earnings of a woman as the meanest conceivable form of crime.

I imagine I know what the writer meant when he penned these remarks but he certainly does not express himself correctly. It is probable that he meant to say that living upon the earnings of an immoral woman was a crime. The actual earnings, i.e. the "splosh," cannot be immoral. It is merely an example of the work of a sloppy journalist.

I am, etc.,
Hard Boiled.

Shanghai, July 15, 1924.

*This strikes us as rather a debateable point. When at school we seem to remember something about transferred epithets—was it not called "hypallage?"—an ancient construction used by writers certainly not to be called "sloppy journalists."—Ed.

MAJORITIES' RIGHTS OVER MINORITIES

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Up to what point may a majority impose its will on a minority? Evidently if a majority were to instruct the members of a minority to go and boil themselves, the latter would be perfectly justified in refusing to do so. There is therefore some point beyond which majorities should not seek to impose their will on minorities.

Every foreigner in the Yangtze valley owes a debt of gratitude to the man and men who acquired the use of Kuling for foreigners. I believe all will agree, however, that although those men were missionaries, it was not their intention that Kuling should be reserved exclusively for the use of missionaries, and we can feel quite sure that that was not the intention of the British Prime Minister who brought pressure to bear on the Chinese Government to close the deal. Indeed, so far as I know, no such claim has ever been made by or for missionaries. Kuling is intended for the free use of any and every foreigner of whatever occupation, creed, or nationality. It is, nevertheless, a fact that missionaries predominate in numbers and that on the Council which controls Kuling, and amongst the landrenters, who hold a vote, they are in the majority.

Before proceeding with my argument I wish to make it perfectly clear that this letter is not intended in any sense to be anti-missionary. I have a great respect for many aspects of missionary labour. I state this because I do not wish anyone to misunderstand the motives from which I write.

In Kuling on any Sunday afternoon from the various houses on every side arise sounds, I should perhaps say concatenations of sound, which on investigation turn out to be hymns and, alas, the harmony is not always perfect. To a sensitive ear these sounds may even be slightly painful. Now suppose for the sake of argument that the majority in Kuling consisted of those who do not sing hymns on Sunday afternoon, of those who might indeed object to any such hebdomadal manifestations of laryngeal exuberance and suppose that this majority made a by-law to the effect that no hymns were to be sung on a Sunday afternoon? Would there not be a hullabaloo? But we should all consider the minority perfectly justified in refusing to obey the majority in such an event.

We therefore are similarly justified in asking by what right have the present majority in Kuling created a by-law to the effect that tennis is not to be played on the public courts on Sundays. Evidently they have no more right to do this than that other majority would have to stop the singing of hymns on Sunday afternoons. The cases are exactly analogous.

That the Anglo-Saxon, whose church has in the past discountenanced the playing of tennis on Sundays, should seek to impose his ideas in an international community on the members of a larger church, I refer to the church of Rome, which (so I believe) approves of the playing of tennis on Sundays, savours of discourtesy if of nothing worse. If I were an advocate of "direct action" I would say to all the young men and maidens in Kuling so inclined that it was their duty at about 3.30 p.m. on every Sunday to seize their tennis racquets and make a bee line for the public courts. But I am not an advocate of "direct action." I hope that others will see how evident it is that this question is one which each individual must decide for himself, not one for coercion by the majority. Is it too much to hope that the descendants of those who sailed in the Mayflower will make it their business to see that there is no coercion? Is it too much to ask of the followers of Luther, of John Knox, and of Calvin to see to it that the individual conscience in Kuling is not subject to oppression by the majority?

I am etc.,
Eikonoklast.

Yangtzekiang, July 10, 1924.

P. S. The only sensible argument against the playing of tennis on Sundays is that it involves the use of labour. Persons who are sufficiently keen on the game will be quite satisfied to arrange for the fielding of their own balls, so that this argument falls to the ground.

MUSICAL WORMS

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Those who live near ponds or creeks are familiar with the resonant sound which continues all through the night, not unlike that produced by scissor-grinders! Until quite recently I was under the impression and I find that my friends were too—that frogs were responsible. When I asked my gardener to catch one of the frogs he smiled in a pitying way and told me it was a worm. Of course, I disbelieved him and he thereupon produced a lantern and a spade and tracking down the place from which the sound came, he quickly dug up a worm about six to seven inches long. One end was covered with a scale-like covering not unlike a centipede of the nasty variety and I was asked to believe that that produced the row. I was sceptical so another sound was tracked down and another similar worm found.

Some of my friends are disbelieving sinners and so I shall be glad if some one can tell us if my gardener is correct. If he is then it will be a comparatively easy matter to clear out the pests as they do not dive into ponds and creeks as do frogs. Then I suppose we shall not be able to sleep because of the quietness!

A WONDERFUL DOG MEDICINE

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—A recent issue of your paper has reference to a subscription made to the Field fund for combatting distemper, and refers to the loss amongst dogs in Shanghai from that cause. Last year "Country Life" had a very appreciative article on a propriety disinfectant called Yadil which was proving wonderfully effective in treatment of sick animals, and knowing through long experience the difficulty of treating sick animals out here, I sent home for some Yadil. I found it was stocked by Watsons and by the Hankow Dispensary. It is a very highly concentrated extract of garlic. Later one of our dogs got distemper in my absence and in very cold weather. It was decided to shoot him as he was not valuable; distemper was held to be always fatal in the Northern winter and a valuable puppy some eight months old would be exposed to infection. The latter soon after showed well marked symptoms of distemper, Yadil was given with a result that was amazing in its quickness. The Company issues a monthly booklet; I send the only two copies I happen to have kept. In a recent one there was an article on the search for the distemper germ, etc.; the "Field's" won. Anyone interested can doubtless obtain full particulars of Yadil from Watson's, and anyone with a sick animal will be well advised to try a remedy which cannot apparently be harmful but which appears to effect result purely from the antiseptic properties garlic has long been known to possess. Yadil is also used for human treatment and an experienced doctor friend in London in writing recently mentioned it as excellent.

HIGHEST READING

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Would you do me the favour of stating in your correspondence column the maximum heat near the Cathedral for the past five years.

Hoping you will oblige,
I am, etc.,
Hot.

Shanghai, July 11, 1924.

The highest temperature recorded near the Cathedral during the past five years is 100.1 degrees, on August 3, 1921. Following are the maximum temperatures recorded from 1918 onwards:—

1919.—95.2 on September 8.
1920.—96.8 on August 3.
1921.—100.1 on August 3.
1922.—98.8 on July 18.
1923.—98.1 on August 1.
1924 (up-to-date).—94.4 on July 3.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Your correspondent "Hot" may be interested to hear that although the highest temperature as yet recorded this year by the thermometer near the Cathedral was 94.6 on July 3. the maximum shade temperature registered by Siccawei Observatory on that day was 95.6.

A daily comparison of the records taken at these two observing stations will show that the maximum temperature at Siccawei usually exceeds that near the Cathedral by from one to two degrees Fahrenheit, while the minimum temperatures are lower at Siccawei by about the same extent. The explation probably is that the Cathedral instrument may not be so fully exposed to the open air as the thermometres at Siccawei.

OUR DIAMOND JUBILEE

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—Your sixtieth anniversary entitles you to the sincere and hearty congratulations of your readers, local and abroad. I believe it was the late Henry Ward Beecher who had likened the Press to a window from which one could see the whole world passing before him in a panorama. The "North-China Daily News" enables one to stand on the "window" every morning to catch a glimpse of what is really happening in every corner of the globe. May you continue to go from strength to strength and from height to height.

THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION

To the Editor of the
"North-China Daily News."

Sir,—In your issue of last Friday, your Mr. Sokolsky stated that the nomination of Mr. John W. Davis "places the Democratic Party in an unusually strong position."

This is extremely questionable, since Mr. Davis is the attorney for J. P. Morgan & Company and other important Wall Street interests. This should not disqualify a man for the Presidency of the United States and under ordinary conditions probably would not, but this year the political fight in America will be concentrated on the Republican record as an alliance between Government and "big business." Or to put it in other words Mr. La Follette, who represents the discontented agricultural and labour interests in the West, is out as he says to "break the unholy alliance between the Government of the United States and the big corporations." La Follette will exploit the oil scandal under the Republican Administration and he will exploit Mr. Davis's connexion with Wall Street. He will exploit the fact that Morgan & Co. are the financial agents of Great Britain in America and since Davis was U. S. Ambassador to Britain under Wilson, etc., etc., and so on, the demagogues will fill in the rest.

Mr. McAdoo was the popular choice of the Democrats for the nomination, but the thing he could not overcome was the fact that he had served, after his retirement from the Treasury Department, as an attorney for Mr. Doheny, the wealthy oil operator who was involved in the oil scandal and is now under indictment. McAdoo is considered a "radical" and had the support of the Wilsonian Democrats and of organized labour, but his connexion (entirely legitimate) with Doheny could not be overcome.

Mr. Sokolsky also said that McAdoo was in a measure responsible for Wilson's Presidency. Mr. McAdoo had nothing whatever to do with Wilson's nomination. The Democratic Convention in which Wilson was nominated was deadlocked quite similar to the present convention. Hon. Champ Clark of Missouri was the leading candidate and on several ballots received more than 600 votes, less than a hundred short of the two-thirds majority, but Clark lost out purely because William Jennings Bryan at the last minute threw his strength against Clark and in favour of Wilson. Bryan did this in order to even scores with Tammany Hall and he did it with a vengeance. Clark never spoke to Bryan from that day to the day of his death and in Senator Reed's eulogy of Clark delivered in the House of Representatives, he referred indirectly to this fact.

Again Mr. Sokolsky states that Wilsonism is stronger to-day in the United States than it was when Harding was elected President. How can this be true when the National platform just adopted in the Democratic Convention—and published in the "North-China Daily News" asks for a referendum on the subject of America's joining the League of Nations. Mr. Baker, the Secretary of War under Wilson, brought in a plank pledging the Convention to Wilson's doctrine on the League and this was turned down and the "referendum" plank adopted instead. Mr. Baker in his emotional appeal following the rejection of his proposal said himself that this constituted a repudiation of Wilson.

The fact that "Charley" Bryan, a brother of the Great Commoner, William J. Bryan, was nominated for the Vice-Presidency shows that the Democratic Party leaders are afraid of the reaction which is bound to follow the nomination of Davis for the Presidency. Bryan in the present convention threw his strength to McAdoo which indicated his continued opposition to the domination of Tammany Hall and Wall Street. The Convention sought to muffle Bryan by putting his brother into the Vice-Presidency. This puts Bryan in a terribly embarassing position, but it is extremely questionable whether the Democrats in the West will swallow this, even with brother "Charley" on the national ticket.

It is true that the Republicans are divided, but don't forget that La Follette's Progressive Party has a platform containing a clause declaring for freedom for Ireland. The Irish Democrats who bought Mr. De Valera's bonds and who have worked for decades for Irish freedom will listen to this La Follette music and the liberal Democrats in the West who are not fond of Wall Street or Tammany Hall will listen to La Fallette's other music. It remains to be seen whether they are a "united party" as Mr. Sokolsky asserts.

Mr. Sokolsky should stick to his "Chinese Impressions."

FRED BRAMLEY

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your query in to-day's leader "Should it not be Bromley?" is presumably a reference to Mr. Bromley of the Union of Railway Men.

Mr. Fred Bramley, Secretary of the British Trade Union Congress, first came into note as one of the most successful of the "vanners" associated with the "Carion" those itinerant emmissaries of Mr. Robert Blatchford, sent out to convert Britain to Socialism. The socialist Government having now arrived (in somewhat attenuated form) Mr. Blatchford is now endeavouring to perform the same service for the achievement of an attenuated humanity—the conversion of the world to Spiritualism.

PROHIBITION IN WORKING

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I, as an earnest admirer of the 18th Amendment to our American Constitution, having been an ardent prohibitionist from my boyhood and longing to see what I believe to be one of the greatest curses in the world blotted from the whole earth, wish to thank you for your fairness in allowing in your columns figures and facts to prove the other side of the question from your own opinion and convictions. I shall keenly appreciate it if you will kindly print these three extracts from American papers just to hand and allow me a few remarks.

I wish especially to direct the attention of the many who seem to want to make the impression that this amendment was rushed through as a war measure to these figures gathered by the "Literary Digest" in 1916, showing that all of the counties in the U. S.—2543—except 305 had by popular vote made themselves dry! It is also true that no others of all the amendments have ever been so nearly unanimously approved by the State Legislatures as was this 18th .

I wish also to call attention to the fact that the houses occupied formerly by this, to say the very least of it, non-productive business to the number of nearly 200,000 and many of them being among the most magnificent places in their respective cities, are now occupied by some kind of productive business. Note also that the homes to care for alcoholics have decreased from 238 to 38! ! That, too, when some people claim that there is more drinking and much of it of very hurtful adulterated liquor which would seem to increase the need for such homes. Note again that the per capita wealth has grown from $968 to $2,918, an increase of nearly $2,000 for every man woman and child in the country! That, too, again when we have passed through in 1921 a most depressing state of business throughout the country and also that, despite all these things, insurance policies and saving deposits have increased marvellously, while the number of automobiles has increased perhaps more rapidly—all in these seven years since our country outlawed John Barleycorn.

Thanking you for your courtesy and space and longing to see even China a "dry" country,

I am etc.,

G. P. BOSTCK.

Pochow, An., July 12, 1924.

The Eleventh Hour.

The 'New York Times" of recent date had a very interesting communication from Dr. Charles Eliott, President emeritus of Harvard University, in regard to his attitude toward prohibition. Twenty-seven years ago Dr. Eliott was opposed to prohibition, while now he is an earnest advocate of it. At the age of 83 he became a total abstainer. He was never what may be called a drinker, but when attending social functions he was accustomed to take wine and beer when it was served in order not to appear peculiar.

A representative of Congress wrote to Dr. Eliott asking his reason for his change of opinion. He said he spent his summers years ago at a resort in Maine and the prohibition laws there were strictly enforced, while at Bar Harbour, a city in Maine, there was no enforcement of the prohibition laws as people came from different sections and demanded the right to have their beverage.

At Cambridge, Massachusetts, where Dr. Eliott has lived for so long, they had local option. He voted for prohibition, but daily saw the prohibition laws violated and thought that this encouraged a spirit of lawlessness.

During the war when so many men were rejected because of unfitness for service caused by the use of alcohol, he saw that the drink habit was a menace to the health of our nation, and believing that nation-wide law was the only way by which prohibition could be made effective he favoured national prohibition. In order to be consistent, when the law was enacted he refused to drink wine and beer even at social functions. He gives it as his experience that an old man even does not need stimulants but is better off without.

Dr. Eliott stands out in striking contrast to Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, who spoke against the Eighteenth Amendment and favours a clause permitting the use of light wines and beer.

SOME RESULTS OF PROHIBITION.

In spite of all obstacles and handicaps the social, economic and industrial reforms accomplished under four years of prohibition, are so numerous that it is difficult to catalogue them in one article. But here are a few outstanding and verified facts:

There are no longer 177,790 open, legalized saloons: the death rate has fallen amazingly, the decrease being equivalent to saving 873,000 lives; the federal census shows a decrease of almost 6 per cent. in our criminal population: at least seven million motor cars have been bought with money that formerly went to the saloon, and Roger Babson is authority for the statement that this accounts for much of our prosperity; saving deposits increased last year a billion dollars; insurance holdings gained eleven billions; the growth of Labour ranks is due to prohibition; homes for alcoholics have decreased from 238 to 88; the per capite wealth has increased from $968 to $2,918, and labour unions are now going on record to the effect that the Eighteenth Amendment is the greatest blessing they ever received.

DRY COUNTIES IN THIS COUNTRY.

Before Congress ever had anything to do with the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution and before the requisite number of State legislatures had ratified it, there were 2,238 counties out of the 2,543 in the United States that had voted themselves dry. That was in 1916, and the figures were given in the "Literary Digest." Those who declare that the prohibtion amendment was "put over on us" have food here for reflection.

W. B. L. AND HIS FRIENDS

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR EDITOR,—Pardon me this interruption in the midst of your life's serious occupations, to grant me minimum space in your ever-popular organ. Thusly to express:—

I am serious constant reader of your esteemed and learned organ, from which I gain tremendous moral and material up-lift. But it is serious matter to relate that my studious perusings are so frequently jarred, and uplift thoughts dissolved into chaos, by harsh screedings of one Mr. Bruce Lockhart.

For many days now, Sir Editor, I enjoy peace and harmony. I gloat with anticipations of happy summer with my beloved "North-China Daily News," as I think that aforesaid Mr. Bruce too busy like bee with schemings for summer school, and would be thusly deprived of spared times to trouble esteemed editor and readers with aforesaid harsh screedings.

But alas, Sir Editor, I dwell within Fool's Paradise, for sadly to relate I receive again rudely shock yesterday morning. Once again you otherwise spotless pages of news and wisdom are besmirched by aforesaid harshly screedings. Blame for rudely shock should not be deposited in full entirety upon Mr. Bruce, but rather should be largely concentrate upon heads of "English-woman" and other interferers who offer meekly suggestions for discouragment of said summer school, thusly "providing time for mischief hands to do."

But, as great proverbial expression sayeth:—"Too late to weep after milk escape," and we must dolefully solace our thoughts in further ancient proverb, i.e., to wit:—"What cannot be endured must be cured," relying upon you, Sir Editor, to devise plot for suppression such public nuisances.

Although somewhatly irreverent to present effusion, I crave pardon to interject at this juncture, one great fragnant query, submission to closely meditation of Mr. Bruce, i.e., to wit:—

"If such gently remarks of "English-woman" are successful in quering great schemings for summer school projectings, what profiteth it, Mr. Bruce, to utilize such harsh bellowings and actings, like unto undiplomatic bull in crockery shop."

Here is amply food for useful thoughts, Mr. Bruce. Deep contemplations thereof should penetrate intellectual skull that "it pays to be polite." Even cheap Etiquette Dictionary (75 cents any book store) expound such fundamental truths, specially for benefits of London cabbies and children, but also beneficial in extreme cases of "B. B." i.e., to wit:—Bruce Bumptiousness.

Up to present, Sir Editor, I am warm adherer of ancient warning: "Fools butt in where angels even dare not walk." Even when Mr. Bruce severely onslaught inoffensive letters to editor, I only indulge, with other readers, in disdainful smilings, and even he should cast his mantle of wrath upon my meekly admonitions, I merely continue aforesaid disdainful smilings, only perhaps little more so.

But, Sir Editor, everything has limits, and when Mr. Bruce pursue acute revilings, petty cavellings and unjustly post mortifications, towards learned dissertations of esteemed editor, I perforcely grow wrathful. Yes, Sir, and righteously so!

Your warmly expressions of laudation for Mr. Tagore's soulful lecturings are muchly merited; but, dear Sir Editor, your rebukings of Mr. Bruce are too milk and watery, especially watery, if I dare to express so. What are urgently require is what American call "good hard boot"! Yes, Sir, "good swift kick"! (Kindly pardon such slangful expression, Sir Editor, which are usually eschew by first-class authors, but sometimes excusable as even great Shakespeare advise, i.e., to wit:—"When in Rome, do like Romans"). This not slightingly remark towards great Italians, who are really polite peoples.

But, as famous song sings, Sir Editor, "Why Worry?" I have specially cheery news. Yesterday I read "Science Siftings" in Aeroplane Magazine, which state: i.e., to wit:—it require many, many thousand cubic feet of gas to raise only one ton of weight. Thusly, I perforce conclude that Mr. Bruce's gas bag, although pretty big, only carry small weight. This only jokings, Sir Editor, but oftenly happens "great truths uttered in jests."

Sir Editor, if you can so devise to indulge in metaphorical choking of Mr. Bruce during hot weathers, I shall esteem it great favoour and pleasure.

With hearty expressions of my highest esteems, Sir Editor, and congratulations in advance for success of afore suggested chokings.

Yours very truly,

JOSMITEL.

TRADEMARK PROTECTION.

To the Editor of the

"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The Trademark Bureau is being established in Shanghai, and blandly informs us that, after registration, protection would be afforded not only in the open ports, but throughout the whole of China. What exactly is the meaning of "the whole of China?" seeing that even in Peking itself the police are unpaid, the Government ineffective. If the "protection" promised is on the lines of all the others afforded and burked, we can do without it.

Reading between the lines one can see the vicious intention to refuse recognition to marks which have not been registered and mulcted for this new imposition, illegal, and illegally applied. Those who register will find themselves swimming in a sea of troubles, infested with sharks, and those who do not will be given "protection" like that extended to the ship "Advertiser" at Wusih.

I am, etc.,

FRERE.

Shanghai, July 16, 1924.

THE "Shanghai Tribune" reports that a Japanese steamer, which has been working between Ichang and Chungking, and has just come down to Shanghai for repairs, was searched by Customs officers shortly before going into dock at Kiangnan. Twenty-four chests of Szechuan opium and 37 bags of Yunnan opium were discovered on board. The police were carrying off this haul when they were stopped by soldiers and sailors, who claimed the opium as having been seized within a military zone.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

THE THIRD TEST MATCH

Victory for England by Nine Wickets: Good Bowling by Tate and Tyldesley

Headingley, July 12.

The Third Test Match between England and South Africa opened here to-day in perfect weather. It was very hot and the sky was cloudless. The wicket was excellent. Three thousand spectators were present at the start. Gilligan won the toss and went in. Hobbs and Sutcliffe opened the innings. They did not take any risks and the scoring mounted steadily. The bowling was particularly good. especially that of Pegler, Nupen and Nourse. Hobbs fell into a trap on the leg side from Nourse when he was 31. At the lunch interval, after two hours' batting, the score stood at 122 for 1 wicket. Sutcliffe and Hearne were in partnership with 58 and 15 respectively.

Sutcliffe was patchy, but made some good placing on the off-side. He was caught off Blanckenberg at 83, which he compiled in 185 minutes, hitting 12 4s. At the tea interval the score stood at 305 for 6 wickets, Hendren being 104 not out.

The South African bowlers relied considerably on the leg theory, which was principally exploited by Nourse and Nupen. Hobbs fell an early victim, while Sutcliffe and Hendren mistimed repeatedly. Hendren showed some fine forcing shots, but gave easy chances when he was 24 and 37. He batted for 140 minutes, scoring 132.

England were all out for 396.

Headingley, July 14.

The Third Test Match was resumed to-day in fine, cool weather. Three thousand people were present. The wicket was excellent. The South Africans were all out for 132 by 1.5 p.m. Taylor made the highest score of 59 not out. He gave a fine exhibition of clean cutting and driving, and hit one 6 and five 4's in his innings of 100 minutes.

The visitors followed on, Commaille and Ward being in partnership with the score at 6 for 0 wicket at the lunch interval.

After lunch Commaille batted patiently, but was stumped by Wood at 31. He was in for 100 minutes and hit five 4's.

The fourth wicket fell for 135, but then Taylor and Catterall made an excellent stand, both hitting all round. Taylor reached his 50 in 114 minutes and Catterall his in 65 minutes. When stumps were drawn, the score stood at 232 for 4 wickets, Taylor and Catterall both having made 54 not out.

Headingley, July 15.

There was a small attendance on the third day of the Test Match. The weather was perfect and warm. The wicket showed signs of wearing.

The South Africans' second innings closed at 12.45. England had made 17 for 1 wicket at the lunch interval. The match closed at 2.40, England's score being 60 for 1 wicket. The South Africans thus lost by 9 wickets.

Warwickshire v. South Africans a Draw

Birmingham, July 10.

The match between the South Africans was resumed to-day in hot weather. There were 1,000 spectators. The wicket was good.

Warwickshire made 440 in their first innings. Santall made 102, Calthorpe 76 and Bates 76. The early batsmen took the edge off the bowling, and the scoring after lunch was brisk.

At the close, the South Africans' second innings score stood at 25 for 0 wicket.—Reuter.

Birmingham, July 11.

The weather was brilliant and hot and there was a small attendance on the third day of the match between Warwickshire and the South Africans. The wicket was good. At the close of play the South Africans had made 384 for 8 wickets in their 2nd innings. Commaille made 69 and Taylor 116, including 13 fours, in 160 minutes. The match was thus drawn.—Reuter.

Lancashire v. South Africa: Good First Wicket Stand by Hallows and Green

Liverpool, July 16.

The match between Lancashire and the South Africans opened here to-day in cloudy weather. The attendance was small. The wicket was good. There was a 70 minutes' interruption for rain after lunch.

At the close of play, Lancashire's score stood at 299 for 3 wickets. Hallows and Green's first wicket partnership lasted for three hours and put on 201 runs. Green made 79 and Hallows 124. Hallows did not give a chance and hit 13 fours.—Reuter.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury, S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

LAW REPORTS

JUDAH I. EZRA REFUSED DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY

Liabilities Tls. 3,000,000: Application Strongly Opposed by Official Receiver and Creditors: "Not Making any Serious Effort to Meet Liabilities"

Strongly criticizing the gambling spirit and saying that bankrupt had deserved all he got, Judge Grain at H.M. Supreme Court on Thursday, refused an application for discharge in bankruptcy by Judah Issac Ezra, whose liabilities were stated to be in the neighbourhood of Tls. 3,000,000.

The application was opposed by the Official Receiver (Mr. R. F. le Mesurier) and representatives of two of the creditors, Mr. C. Stigter, for the Netherlands Indies Bank, and Mr. C. R. McGuire, for Mr. H. E. Morriss. Mr. M. Reader Harris appeared for bankrupt.

The Official Receiver (Mr. R. F. le Mesurier) said Ezra was adjudicated bankrupt in April, 1921. He applied for his discharge on January 24, 1922, the application being heard on April 11, 1922. Since his last application for discharge, bankrupt had obtained employment with the China Realty Co., Ld., at a salary stated to be $200 per month. Certain periodical payments had been made in pursuance of an arrangement between Mr. Ezra and Mr. le Mesurier's predecessor to repay $75 per month, but these payments had not been regular, the Official Receiver told the Court.

The grounds on which he opposed the application, the Official Receiver continued, were in his predecessor's report, the paragraph reading as follows:—

> I consider that the bankrupt's discharge should be refused under section 26 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, on the following grounds:—(a) That the bankrupt's assets are not of value equal to 10s. in the pound on account of his unsecured liabilities. (b) That the bankrupt omitted to keep such books of account as are usual and proper in the business carried on by him, and as sufficiently explain his transactions and financial position within the three years immediately preceding his bankruptcy. (c) That the bankrupt contracted a debt provable in the bankruptcy without having had at the time of contracting it reasonable or probable ground of expectation of being able to pay it. (d) That the bankrupt has brought on his bankruptcy by rash and hazardous speculations and by gambling.

"I have heard from various sources that bankrupt has not materially altered his mode of life," the Official Receiver concluded, "and is not taking any serious effort to meet his liabilities."

Seen at Amusement Resorts.

Mr. C. Stigter, on behalf of the Netherlands Indies Bank, describing bankrupt's transactions with the bank as mere gambling, bankrupt not having a cent. He had made no effort at all to pay, and he had been seen in various places of amusement.

Mr. C. R. McGuire, opposed the application on behalf of Mr. H. E. Morriss, a creditor to the extent of a lakh in hard cash lent to bankrupt. Against that hard cash, said Mr. McGuire, Mr. Morriss received an I.O.U. In another Court in Shanghai a certain Chinese had received 10 years' imprisonment for attempting to extract money from a member of the community. From Mr. Morriss, another member of the community, bankrupt had extracted a lakh, while another man received 10 years for attempting to extract $6,000. "I don't think it right when no serious attempt has been made by Mr. Ezra to repay the money, to let him loose again on the community to carry on the same kind of extraction from members of the community," said Mr. McGuire. There was no justification for bankrupt saying that he had made any serious attempt to repay his debts, and Mr. McGuire, personally, had seen him going about the town as one of the best dressed men in Shanghai. "He can apparently afford better clothes than I can," Mr. McGuire commented.

Fine Clothes and Motor-cars.

Bankrupt had been seen going about in motor-cars, and he had been able to afford counsel in that Court to try and get him out of obligations for which he had given his I.O.U. "I strongly oppose any attempt," said Mr. McGuire, "to release him from his obligations."

Mr. Reader Harris mentioned that when the similar application was made in April, 1922, it was pointed out that bankrupt admittedly had brought on his bankruptcy by rash and hazardous speculations, but at the same time it was also emphasized that it took two to make a speculation. Mr. Reader Harris did not suggest that the banks were gambling, but most emphatically he would say that the banks and Mr. Morriss knew Mr. Ezra's condition. In fact counsel believed that Mr. Morriss lent Ezra one million on security. Mr. McGuire had come to Court stating that bankrupt had extracted this money in the same way as a man who took it with a revolver. That was nonsense. The Official Receiver had stated that bankrupt's debt was about $3,000,000, but the proved amount was only seven lakhs.

Formerly Worth $1,000,000.

This bankrupt. Mr. Reader Harris submitted, was very different from some bankruptcies in which poor men had been robbed by the bankrupt. This was a case of a man speculating and making large sums of money. At one time he was worth over $1,000,000. Believing he could make more, he went on. He was unlucky and now, instead of being looked up to as a citizen of high standing, he found himself cast down and his creditors come to Court to kick him down lower and keep him down. "I challenge Mr. McGuire, or anybody else," said Mr. Reader Harris, "to show how a man who is an undischarged bankrupt and who is now employed in an office at $250 a month can do more than he has done." Bankrupt had his salary raised to $250 in 1920, Mr. Reader Harris explained, and at that time wrote to the Official Receiver, telling him of the fact and offering to pay $75 a month. The reason he was able to pay that sum was that Mr. Edward Ezra (now deceased) had paid for his actual maintenance, and after Mr. Edward Ezra's death the bankrupt had to keep himself on $250 a month.

If the application is refused, Mr. Reader Harris concluded, he could see no possible hope for his client ever getting his discharge, for the same grounds could be brought forward year after year.

Farthing in the £.

The Official Receiver, in reply, mentioned that when Mr. Dixon left no money was paid until Mr. Cook, in April, 1923, noticed it and pressed bankrupt for his instalments. The same thing happened again when Mr. Cook left and he (Mr. le Mesurier) took over.

Refusing the application, the Judge said perhaps "premature" was not exactly the word which should be used in this case, but the Court did consider that at the present time it would not be right to release Mr. Ezra from all further liabilities. Up to the present time no more of the large amount for which he went bankrupt had been paid in three years than something like ¼d. in the £. His Honour thought it was the duty of the Court to consider the public and to show its distaste for the gambling spirit which now, undoubtedly, was at large. If an individual insisted in speculating he could not be held up to pity; he deserved all he got. Mr. Reader Harris had referred to bankrupt as a hardly-used individual who had had bad luck. The Court could not take that view. Bankrupt had gambled recklessly, and he must have known that he had no means of meeting his liabilities. His Honour would not make a definite time when further application should be made, but he intended to-day to refuse the application for bankrupt's discharge.

THE Ministry of Communications has telegraphed an order to all railway offices, stating that the 6th Transportation Conference will be held on September 16 and that questions for discussion must reach the Ministry before August 10.

MISADVENTURE IN THE COTTON MARKET

Brokers' Tls. 21,146 Action against Partner for Alleged Breach of Agreement

Some interesting disclosures concerning the cotton market were made on Thursday in an action heard by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H. M. Supreme Court. Messrs. A. & B. Rosenfeld, the well-known Shanghai cotton brokers, claimed from Mr. Maurice David the sum of Tls. 21,146.40, in circumstances which were set out in the statement of claim as follows:

By an agreement dated May 17, 1921, defendant was made a partner in plaintiff's business, for a period of 10 years and to the extent of one-quarter of the business, in consideration of which defendant undertook to pay Tls. 20,000 in four equal instalments on the first days of May 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925. Defendant was to be liable for one-fourth of a debt from plaintiffs to Messrs. J. Spunt & Co, amounting at the time of the agreement to Tls. 84,928. On or about February 12, 1924, defendant, in breach of the agreement and without the consent of plaintiffs withdrew from the partnership and refused, and still refuses, to abide by the terms of the agreement and to discharge any of his liabilities thereunder. His liabilities amounted to Tls. 21,146.40, made up as follows:

One-fourth share of loss for the period ended February 18 1924, Tls. 10,320.54; one-fourth share of debit on closing stable, Tls. 22.27, one-fourth share of loss on 1,000 bales American cotton bought on January 25, 1924, 500 bales bought on February 3, all on the New York Stock Exchange for July delivery, Tls. 16,121.14; one fourth share of 500 bales American Cotton bought on February 8 from Messrs. E. Hutton & Co., New York, Tls. 3,490.08; balance of purchase price of partnership Tls. 10,000; one-quarter of debt still remaining due to Messrs. J. Spunt & Co. Tls. 11,735.92: making a total of Tls. 51,689.95.

From this there was deducted, as due to defendant, capital Tls. 25,000: balance at credit Tls. 5,465.55, and interest Tls. 78, leaving Tls. 21,146.40, the amount of the claim.

In his statement of defence, defendant denied that the terms of the agreement were correctly set forth. He admitted having withdrawn from the partnership, but denied that such withdrawal was a breach of the agreement or without the consent of plaintiffs, and he further denied that he had refused to abide by the terms of the agreement or to discharge his liabilities (if any) thereunder. He alleged that on his withdrawal from the partnership, plaintiffs became liable to pay him the sum of Tls. 25,000 and that no further payments were to be made by either party to the other, and proceedings had been commenced in the U. S. Court to recover this sum. In reference to the amount due to Messrs. Spunt, defendant claimed that his liability ceased upon his withdrawal from the partnership.

Mr. Tych Wing (instructed by Messers. Schuhl & Schoenfeld) appeared for plaintiffs; Mr. M. Reader Harris (instructed by Mr. Sidney Moss) for defendants.

Series of Quarrels

Mr. Wing having opened the case for plaintiffs at some length, first called Julius Rosenfeld, son of the senior partner in the firm. He stated that in May, 1921, they took in Mr. David as third partner and carried on the business of cotton merchants and importers and exporters, as before. All went well and smoothly until late October or early in November last year, when a dispute occurred between witness and Mr. David about a case of melons. Witness had been in the habit of having one or two cases of melons shipped for himself during the season, and he undertook to get two cases for Mr. David. When these arrived, he quite forgot for whom he had ordered them and disposed of the melons to other people whereupon, when he heard of the matter, Mr. David became furious and declared that he would quit the firm. "All right," said Mr. Rosenfeld, senior, "you can quit if you want to. We will arrange everything." Upon this, defendant said he was sorry, he did not mean what he had said; and so the whole thing blew over.

Tientsin Crash

Prior to this, information had been received from a friend in Tientsin that the situation there looked very serious and defendant had been sent up to investigate. He came back and reported that it looked critical and that the firm was not going to get a pound of the cotton they had bought from Chinese merchants in Tientsin, and this view proved to be a pretty correct one.

On February 12 of this year, a further dispute arose between witness and defendant. They had been discussing the question of reducing the drawings of the partners, in order to cut down expenses, and witness and his father agreed, but defendant said nothing. Having "gotten a good hiding" at Tientsin, it was necessary to try and put themselves on their legs again. There were various other losses, and proceedings had been taken in the Mixed Court to try and recover something.

Liquidation Suggested

On the afternoon of February 12, discussing accounts, witness discovered that a debt against the partnership had been put against his own name, and he objected, trouble then starting. Defendant became very excited, and said that he wanted to quit. "You can quit if you want to," witness replied, to which defendant responded "I want my money." "You'll get all that's coming to you," witness answered. Witness did not think the situation serious, having seen defendant in a temper before, but he suggested voluntary liquidation and, calling in the secretary, asked her to type out:

> "We, A. B. Rosenfeld, Julius Rosenfeld and Maurice David, hereby agree this day to go into liquidation."

When this had been prepared, witness asked defendant to sign it, but, saying that he would sign nothing until he had seen his lawyers, he put on his hat and walked out of the office. He was still very excited, shouting all the time. Next morning, through his lawyers he sent a letter asking for inspection of the accounts by an independant auditor. Witness had an impression that he would cool down and come back, and even thought so when a letter was received announcing his withdrawal from the firm, and this doubt about defendant's intention's remained until he filed proceedings in the U. S. Court to recover Tls. 25,000.

Speculation in New York.

Cross-exemined by Mr. Reader Harris, witness said that it was only on February 12 that he knew a debt by the firm had been placed to his personal account.

It was for Tls 40,000?—Tls. 38,000.

And that was a loss incurred by you on the New York Stock exchange?—Correct.

Your personal loss?—No.

The auditors in New York debited it to your private account?—As requested by me.

That was because it was your own private affair?—Not at all. I did regard it as such until I got to Shanghai. Mr. David then volunteered to divide the loss among the partners because, said he, "If you had come back with a fat letter of credit I should have asked for my share." When he said he was quite agreeable to the partners sharing the loss, I took it for granted that, as defendant was in charge of the books, the correct procedure would be followed.

Then why should he be angry when you object to its being made your personal debt?—Probably because he had forgotton what he had said formerly.

When you went to New York, you were told not to speculate in cotton?—That was agreed upon.

I suggest that it was after you had looked into the books that you suggested voluntary liquidation?—No.

In answer to further questions, witness said that the debt to Messrs. J. Spunt & Co. was originally Tls. 100,000, which sum Mr. Rosenfeld senior agreed to pay for release from an agreement under which he was not to engage in the cotton business in Shanghai and was not to use his own name. The debt was not a trading debt. This agreement was made when his father retired from that partnership. It was agreed that no money should be paid if Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld ceased to carry on the business, or if he ceased to be a partner and his name dropped from the firm.

In answer to Mr. Wing, witness said the firm had now been incorporated as A. B. Rosenfeld and his father took an active part in the business, so that the agreement with Messrs. Spunt remained in force.

The Melons Quarrel.

Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld, senior partner, gave evidence that at one time he was in partnership with Messrs. J. Spunt & Co. and on leaving them he entered into a restrictive agreement, as described. He retired in 1916, but six months later changed his mind and returned to China. The sole reason for taking Mr. David into partnership was because Mr. Julius was to open a branch office in New York. Asked if his name was of commercial value, witness said he would say that it was. It was known over the world and particularly in the United States and China. The quarrel about the melons, witness continued, ended by Mr. David saying: "Pop, let's forget it." When the second dispute occurred about the New York account, witness never consented to defendant leaving the firm.

Mr. Harris—Why have you incorporated without his consent, if he is still a partner?—We had to do something, for reasons best known to ourselves.

Witness went on to say that, against his instructions, his son speculated in New York and lost Tls. 38,000. Mr. David and himself were upset about it, but it was agreed the loss should be debited to the firm.

Mr. A. B. Foox, in charge of plaintiffs' Tientsin office, said there was a considerable amount due to the firm there, four Chinese between them owing from Tls. 150,000 to Tls. 200,000. After repeated efforts to collect, all he could get was a promissory note for Tls. 2,500, and there was no chance of collecting the balance. If they waited long enough, they would probably get this Tls. 2,500, but that was the only ray of hope in Tientsin. Not a cent came in while he was in charge of the Tientsin office.

Tientsin Exporters' Heavy Losses.

In reply to Mr. Harris, witness explained that owing to the Japanese earthquake and the shortage of the cotton crop, Tientsin cotton went up from Tls. 28 to Tls. 42, and when the market was up to Tls. 33 the Japanese somehow enticed Chinese who had entered into contracts with European exporters to re-sell their cotton at market rates. Endeavours to prevent this were made through the Chamber of Commerce, the various Consuls and the Diplomatic Body, but without success, and practically 90 per cent. of exporters were involved in heavy loss.

His Lordship—The crash is quite well known, and I do not think it is suggested that Messrs. Rosenfeld unduly speculated in cotton futures and got hit.

Mr. Harris—It is not suggested.

Mrs. R. David, plaintiffs' secretary, described the scene in the officee on the afternoon of February 12. Defendant demanded his money, and Mr. Julius Rosenfeld dictated the note of agreement of voluntary liquidation. This defendant refused to sign.

Mr. J. A. Turner (of Messrs. Seth, Mancell & McLure), gave evidence that the loss on the Spunt contracts stood at Tls. 64,484 on March 24, and on those of Messrs. Hutton & Co. at Tls. 13,960. On February 18, the balance due to Messrs. Spunt & Co. under Mr. Rosenfeld, senior's, agreement, stood at Tls. 46,943. From January 1 to February 19, the profit and loss account showed a total loss of Tls. 41,282.

This concluded plaintiff's case.

Defendant's Agreement.

For the defence, Mr. Reader Harris, on the question as to whether there had been a breach of the agreement (which he described as an ambiguous and incomplete document) emphasized its provision that the partnership could be terminated by mutual consent. Defendant put capital into the business at a time when plaintiffs required it, and he retained the privilege of saying: "I have finished with the firm and shall retire. Give me back my capital and all is over between us." It was agreed that the value of his share should be Tls. 25,000, and even if the business had made a profit if Tls. 150,000 in two months defendant could not have asked for an account against Rosenfelds. They would have said: "You simply have to get out, and all you get is Tls. 25,000." Because, however, business had been unfortunate, they now wished to charge defendant with a share of the losses.

His Lordship—At the time he was a partner he was liable for his share of the losses.

Mr. Harris—The agreement provided that he could retire at any time, in which case he would be paid Tls. 25,000, and that sum only.

His Lordship—But it was your client who demanded a dissolution account up to the time he left the office. You are changing your ground entirely. You demanded an account, and now I understand you to say that no account was necessary, nor could it be ordered.

Mr. Harris—I am standing on the agreement.

Defendant then gave evidence as to his joining plaintiffs' firm, on the request of Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld, and said trouble first arose through Mr. Julius Rosenfeld drawing as much as Tls. 5,000 or Tls. 6,000 a month against his own private account. When his father was informed there was trouble, and he stopped Julius signing cheques. Witness said at this time he would resign, but the matter was smoothed over and he went to Tientsin. Upon returning, Mr. Julius Rosenfeld suggested drafting a new agreement, under which himself and witness should draw only 20 per cent. of the net profit, but witness could not agree, as Mr. A. B. Rosenfeld was to be allowed to draw to any amount. Witness never agreed that the Tls. 38,000 lost by Mr. Julius Rosenfeld in New York should be debited to the firm, although the Rosenfelds wanted to force his hand in this matter. It was because of this dispute that he left the office and resigned.

Question of Profits.

Mr. Wing—If there had been good profits you could have stayed with the firm for 10 years?—Yes.

And your interpretation of the agreement is that you could leave the firm at any time irrespective of profits or loss?—Yes.

A very comfortable position to be in—The agreement was drawn up by their lawyers.

In answer to further questions, witness admitted that no part of the Tls. 38,000 New York loss had been debited to him.

Asked if he could point to any document in which either of the plaintiffs agreed to his withdrawal from the partnership, witness said it, and his father said "If you don't like it you can get out."

This concluded the case for the defence, and the court adjourned until next morning.

THE BANKRUPTCY OF MR. MOLLER

Composition Accepted by Creditors: Question of Mortgage on "Fairyland"

The composition which has been accepted by creditors in the bankruptcy of Mr. Eric Moller was on Monday approved in H. M. Supreme Court by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner.

In asking that the composition be approved, the Official Receiver (Mr. R. F. le Mesurier) said his report was before the court and all creditors who had proved had been given notice of this application. In his opinion, the composition was calculated to benefit the general body of creditors and he saw nothing to prevent its being approved.

His Lordship—It provides for the payment of more than five shillings in the pound?

The Official Receiver—Yes.

Mr. H. Lipson Ward, appearing on behalf of the petitioning creditor (the Yangtze Insurance Co.), said there were two matters to which he had to refer. The composition provided for a mortgage, and it was necessary for him to inquire what was the precise land which was going to be mortgaged under the scheme and which was merely described as "Fairyland." Naturally, the creditors wished to know precisely what the land was, and also they required to know what prior charges there were, if any, on this land.

His Lordship—I notice it is referred to as a second mortgage.

Mr. Ward—Yes. My clients approval of the composition is subject to a full description of the property being given and the disclosure of all charges whatsoever upon it. I do not want it merely to be said; I want a definite statement in writing. I have asked for it, but I have not had it. It will be understood, of course, that the mortgage, when framed, will have to be submitted to creditors for their approval.

In reply to his Lordship, Mr. Moller said that the information asked for had already been prepared.

His Lordship then approved of the composition which, he said, provided for payment well in advance of the minimum payment under the Act. This would be subject to approval of the legal documents necessary to carrying out the arrangement and to full disclosure of all charges already existing on the land involved.

A COMPANY WITH MANY NAMES

Unsuccessful Claim for Goods Sold and Delivered

An action brought by the American Drug Co., Nanking Road, against Mr. A. V. White, to recover $3,500, the cost of goods sold and delivered to him, was heard on Tuesday in the Supreme Court by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner.

Mr. Tycho Wing appeared for plaintiff and Mr. H. Lipson Ward for defendant.

Mr. Wing, in opening, said the story began with an enterprise known as the Maya Manufacturing Co., the Maya Perfume Co., the Perfume Factory Maya, and so on, and dealings with this company were not altogether satisfactory from plaintiff's point of view. On May 29, 1922, the company received a letter stating that Mr. A. V. White had bought the business and had become sole proprietor. The name of Mr. White inspired confidence, and thenceforward credit was given to the Perfume Factory Maya on the basis of its being solely the property of Mr. A. V. White. In the following September, Mr. W. S. Fleming learned that the Perfume Factory Maya had been purchased by the Maya Manufacturing Co., Ld. Mr. Fleming was President of the plaintiff company, but it was not in that capacity that this notification was sent to him, he having written as a solicitor acting for a client. Defendant's account increased and became overdue, but when application for payment was made to Mr. White he disclaimed responsibility on the ground that he had disposed of his interest in the concern, which had been converted into a limited liability company. Credit was immediately stopped.

Mr. Ward, in answer to his Lordship, said that the business was transferred to the limited liability company in August 1922, and Mr. White would not dispute the items in plaintiff's account after that date.

His Lordship—Then the only point in the case is whether or not Mr. White is personally liable.

Evidence was then given by Mr. H. Schloten, formerly manager of the American Drug Co., bearing out Counsel's opening statement. He said that it was on June 2 that a letter was received notifying plaintiffs that the Maya Perfumery had been bought over by Mr. White, who was then sole proprietor. Prior to that date, it had been difficult to collect the accounts, but when it was learned that Mr. White had become sole proprietor credit was extended, solely on that account. Mr. White having notified them of his taking over the business, he should also have informed them when it was turned over to a limited liability company, but no such notice was received.

In answer to Mr. Ward, witness admitted that communications were received from "The Maya Manufacturing Co., Ld." and there was a letter, signed by Messrs. Beck & Swan, secretaries of the company, but plaintiffs still thought it was Mr. White's business. The name "Maya" was upon all the documents, and the goods were delivered to the same address.

Mr. Ward—Do you seriously suggest that your manager, receiving an order from the Maya Manufacturing Co., Ld., and completing it, thought the goods were being sold and delivered to Mr. White?—Not delivered to him.

Sold to him?—No.

Mr. W. S. Fleming, President of the American Drug Co., gave evidence that in September 1922 he wrote to Mr. White on behalf of the Han Yung Co., a German concern, in connexion with an account due for oils supplied, and Mr. White replied that the Perfume Factory Maya had been purchased by the Maya Manufacturing Co., Ld., and that Messrs. Beck & Swan were the secretaries. Witness wrote solely on behalf of the Han Yung Co., and had not the affairs of the American Drug Co. (of which he was a director) in mind, and therefore he gave them no instructions in the matter.

When the hearing was resumed in the afternoon, Mr. H. W. Pflug, the present manager of the plaintiff company, also gave evidence that despite the change in the company's name he still thought, upon receiving the various orders and sending them to the factory to be executed, that they were for Mr. White. He never thought about any change of ownership.

Mr. Ward—And it is because you did not use your brains that this action has been brought.

Counsel then submitted that defendant had no case to answer. No application had been made to amend the pleadings according to facts known before the action was brought, and the pleadings claimed for "goods sold and delivered to defendant." This, however, had been disproved out of the mouths of plaintiff's own witnesses.

Mr. Wing argued that while the goods were not delivered to defendant personally, they were delivered to his agents, for whom he was responsible.

His Lordship agreed with Mr. Ward's contention. He said that the case which plaintiff had endeavoured to set up in court had not been disclosed in the pleadings at all, and it was only when he came to read the correspondence in court that he found the issue was an entirely different one from what he had supposed when reading the pleadings. The issue of defendant's personal liability should have been disclosed, but it was not, and in these circumstances his Lordship did not see why he should be called upon to answer a case which had not really been brought against him. He therefore gave judgment for defendant, with costs.

"SMALL TOKEN OF ESTEEM"

Unpaid for Silver Salver: Suit Against Member of Patriotic Society Fails

An unpaid for "small token of esteem" was the subject of an action in the Supreme Court on Tuesday, before his Honour Judge Grain, Messrs. Boyes, Bassett & Co. suing Capt. Davies, of the Woosung Forts Hotel, for payment of $91.20, the cost of a silver salver.

Mr. G. M. Boyes gave evidence that on April 8, 1919, Captain Davies purchased a silver salver, which was engraved to order and forwarded, the charges totalling $101.20. Some time later, when payment was applied for, Capt. Davies informed witness that the salver had been ordered for the Nanking Branch of the Patriotic League of Britons Overseas, which had presented it as a token of appreciation to their departing secretary, Mr. W. R. T. Waters. The purchase was debited, however, to Capt. Davies, and he had paid $10 on account.

Mr. M. Reader Harris, who appeared for defendant, argued that his client could not be held responsible. He was a member of the Commitee of the Nanking branch of the League, but he had only ordered the salver for them and had not guaranteed the account.

Defendant gave evidence to this effect, and his Honour, observing that it was necessary the case should be proved to the hilt, said that some doubt existed and gave judgment for defendant, without costs.

"OUT NIGHT AFTER NIGHT"

Boarding House Keeper's Complaint About Non-Paying Guest

T. C. Watson appeared before his Honour Judge Grain on Tuesday on two judgment summonses, the first taken out by Mrs. Ridnick, a boarding house keeper, for $40. The matter was adjourned for a week.

In the second case, also a claim for board and lodging, the plaintiff was Mr. R. Dramis, a member of the Municipal Orchestra, and he informed the court that defendant was "out night after night," and if he could spend money in the cabarets, surely he could contribute something towards his debt for board and lodging.

Defendant said that his mother occasionally gave him two or three dollars, and, as for his evenings out, these were with friends. He promised to pay something on account as soon as possible.

Glad to keep Him in Prison.

His Honour adjourned the case until August 1, warning defendant that failure in carrying out his promise might result in his being sent to gaol.

Plaintiff—He may as well be sent to gaol, anyway. I am never likely to get the money.

His Honour—In that event, you will not only lose your money, but you will have to pay for the food supplied to defendant in gaol.

"Well," responded plaintiff, "you go right ahead. My limit is $500. Somebody will have to pay for his support, so it might as well be me."

A NEW WAY TO PAY OLD DEBTS

Defendants in Gurdwara Ghee Fund Case Now to Sue Each Other

The Sikh Gurdwara ghee fund continues to provide H. M. Supreme Court with some little problems in litigation, and on Wednesday there was a full attendance of interested parties to hear the proceedings on a judgment summons against Sucha Singh and Amar Singh. It will be remembered that some $900 were found to be missing from the fund, and the two present defendants, who were Granthis, were charged with embezzlement. They were found not guilty and were discharged, and civil proceedings were then taken for recovery of the money, judgment for the full amount being given against them. Nothing has been paid, and accordingly the two appeared yesterday before his Honour Judge Grain.

Amar Singh told his Honour that they had not been able to collect outstanding amounts due for the ghee, and that a number of the purchasers had since gone away to Mexico.

Mr. Maitland—You have paid nothing, and you have publicly stated at the Gurdwara that you do not intend to pay?

Defendant—I have no money.

Mr. Maitland—You have your deferred pay?

Defendant—Yes, $167 deferred pay and passage money.

In answer to further questions, this defendant said that he was suing Sucha Singh for $500, and Sucha was suing him for a similar amount in connexion with this debt. Sucha had an interest in a printing business at Yangtszepoo, the machinery in which was worth over $6,000.

Sucha Singh was called and strongly denied that he had any interest in the aforementioned printing business.

The necessity of telling the truth on the Holy Book being impressed upon Sucha, he replied that, if he was not telling the truth, the Court could "hang him up."

His Honour—The punishment is not quite so severe as that, but you might have to go to prison for a long time.

Amar Singh undertook at once to hand over his deferred pay as an instalment on the debt, and the summons was adjourned.

AN ARMED ROBBER CONVICTED

Cleverly Caught at New World and Sent to Arsenal: One of a Gang of Eight

Doo Ah-nyi came before the Mixed Court last Friday morning on the charge of armed robbery.

Det. Sub-Insp. Quayle representing the police said that the accused had on the 3rd instant been arrested at the "New World." The complainant on that occasion recognized the accused as one of a gang of some seven or eight armed robbers who had made a raid upon his residence in Sing Dong Ka Loong on June 17.

At the station the accused was recognized and identified by other witnesses. When questioned by the police accused said that he lived at 127 Avenue Road. Investigation proved this to be untrue. He also stated that he had worked in the employ of the Java Export Co. until recently and that he had a relative in that firm with whom he lived. From inquiries it seems that the accused did work at the above mentioned firm and that his relative occupied a good position there. The statement that he lived with the said relative, however, was quite false, the latter having refused to appear in Court or to have anything to do with him. The accused had on his person $22 when arrested which he maintained had been given to him by his relative. This again the latter denied.

The complainant, when asked to give evidence, said that he had recognized the accused as one of seven or eight who had made an armed raid upon his house. One of the said gang knocked at the door of the building and, when it was opened, pointed a revolver at the complainant's head. Resistance was of course impossible, and the robbers had taken with them $100 in notes, some jewellery and clothing.

The accused faltered somewhat in his reply to the magistrate's question as to whether the accusation was true, and became entangled in the cross-questioning which ensued. He, however, affirmed that the accusation was a false one and said that the case was one of mistaken identity.

After some consideration the Court decided to hand the accused over to the Defence Commissioner at Lunghua.

PILFERED CARGO

Three Men Sent to Gaol: Pawn Shops Fined for Receiving Goods

Four persons were brought before the Mixed Court last Friday on the charge of theft. It would seem from the evidence given that the accused persons on June 27 broke into a godown on the Hongkew wharf, and stole the contents of a packing case which contained several rolls of blue serge. This they had cut up into various lengths and had pawned at no less than five different pawn shops, receiving sums ranging from 10 to 18 dollars each. The accused when questioned admitted the charge. The first received six months and expulsion, the second one month and re-expulsion, the fourth three months, whilst the third accused, who was only aged 17 was sent to a reformatory.

With regard to the pawnshops the police stated that a circular had been sent to all pawnshops notifying them of the theft. In spite of this they had made no attempt to inform the police. In defence the pawnshop owners sated that the stolen goods did not answer to description in view of the fact that they had been cut into various lengths. Two of the pawn shops were first class shops, and the fact that all five, though quite unknown to each other, had acted in the same manner was in itself significant. They were however fined $30 each, the view of the Court being that people of the class of those who had committed the theft would not be in possession of such material save by illegal means, which fact the pawn shop owners should have recognized.

CHAINED TO A TREE

Small Chinese Boy's Escape from Cruel Family and Arrival in Shanghai Court

A small boy; arrested on the Bubbling Well Road, was brought before the Mixed Court on Monday. Inspector Fowley presented the case, stating that the accused was taken into custody by the constable on duty in that area at 4.30 a.m. of the 13th instant. The suspicion of the constable was aroused in view of the fact that the accused held his hands over his stomach in a peculiar manner. On investigation it was found that a chain was fastened to the boy's left foot and padlocked round the waist. Further inquiry showed that the boy, who was badly treated by his sister-in-law, with whom he lived, had been chained by her and her husband to a tree, as a form of punishment for not properly weeding the lettuce beds. He had, however, managed to make his escape from the abode of his relatives, at a place near Tsung Ning, and had travelled from there as a stowaway in a launch to Shanghai. After spending a day in the vicinity of the French wharf he had wandered to the Bubbling Well district in the hope of finding shelter in a more prosperous district. The boy had a good many scars on his body as the result of cruel treatment. He was ordered by the magistrate to be sent to a reformatory.

GRUESOME DISCOVERY IN PAWN SHOP

Chinese Hacked to Death with Chopper: Woman and Man Charged

The trial was begun at the Mixed Court on Monday of a man and a woman accused of the murder of a Chinese whose mutilated remains were found in a pawnshop several weeks ago. Det. Sub-Insp. Quayle, who visited the pawn shop, situated in Shanhaikwan Road, on May 15, said that he found the premises in great disorder. Under a heap of bundles of clothing was found the deceased, his head badly cut and his body in a crouching position. His head was resting on a chair, and a cord was round his throat which passed across his back and was tied to his feet. Beside the body was found a large kitchen chopper.

Medical evidence showed the wounds to be one in the throat, one on the left palm, and another on the side of the mouth.

A young boy who stated that he was the nephew of the deceased, gave evidence that he was present on the occasion, but had been sent upstairs to fetch a compass (used for fortune-telling) when the actual murder occurred. He had later been persuaded by the accused man to run away and had accompanied the latter to Nanking and remained with him till accused was arrested.

The woman was arrested shortly after the murder on the Bund. She was seen by the constable on duty at 4 a.m. carrying a large bundle. When asked as to what her business was at this late hour she stated that she had only just arrived in Shanghai, and was going to the house of a friend. The constable however observed that her face was very pale, she was carrying what appeared to be some bedding. She was therefore taken to the station where some jewellery which was wrapped in the bedding she carried was identified as the property of the pawnshop. The trial was adjourned until Wednesday afternoon.

Accused to be Sent to the Arsenal

Wednesday's hearing was occupied with the closing addresses by Mr. Maitland, Police Prosecutor and Mr. S. H. Lewis, who defended the prisoner.

Mr. Maitland characterized the case as one of the most brutal that had come before the Court. Lawless elements should be made to realize that they could not come to Shanghai to carry out their murder plots. Both accused were not residents in the Setlements, but came from Kompo.

Mr. Lewis said that the only charge which could legally be preferred against both prisoners was one of manslaughter, to which crime the male accused had confessed. The female accused, who was arrested hours after the actual murder, was according to the statement of the male not in the room when the crime was committed. She was merely an abettor to the fact. He would ask the Court to deal with the charges as of manslughter.

In answer to the Magistrate, the male prisoner said the pawnbroker owed him money, which he had come to collect. He would have accepted a payment of $5, then would have been glad of $3 and finally wanted to pawn his trousers for 30 cents. He had slept in an alleyway for one night, but would not do it any more.

The Court, upon conclusion of the examination of both accused, ordered both to be sent to the Arsenal to be tried by the Defence Commissioner with the usual request that if either or both were not sentenced to death they should be returned to the Court to be further dealt with.

THE male Chinese, Yih Ming-nye, who with a woman accomplice was found guilty on Wednesday of the murder of a pawnshop proprietor in Shanhaikuan Road, on Thursday committed suicide in Sinza police-station cells. On making his morning inspection of the cells, the police officer on duty found Yih hanging by the neck in the latrine from an improvised rope made from pieces of his clothing. He was at once cut down and artificial respiration applied, but with no effect. Tying his knotted clothing to an iron bar, he had evidently leapt from a Soochow bath tub. The body was removed to the Mortuary, where an inquest will be held.

FALSE AND MALICIOUS ACCUSATION

Chinese Convicted of Persecuting a Foreigner and Sent to Prison

A case of alleged false and malicious accusation was brought up in the Mixed Court on Tuesday in which the accused, Dzang Yui-dong was charged with having made a false accusation against Mr. Whitgob, resident at 84 Bubbling Well Road.

Inspector Fowley stated that at 2.30 p.m. yesterday Mr. Whitgob rang up the Sinza Police Station to say that a man had come to his residence and had caused a considerable disturbance. A few minutes later the accused came to the station with the complaint that he had visited 84 Bubbling Well Road to collect a debt of $1 and had been assaulted and cut on the forehead with a knife. Medical examination showed that the bruises upon the man's forehead were not those of a knife but were probably inflicted by the accused himself.

Mr. Whitgob when called upon to give evidence said that the accused had been to his house that day to mend a water piping. Witness had, however, refused to pay him the sum of one dollar which he demanded until he knew that the repairs were satisfactory. The accused went away, but returned at 12 noon, saying that his gear had been detained at the station and that he had no money to redeem it. He was refused again and was told to leave the house. He did so but grabbed up a knife as he went. Later he and another man returned while Mr. Whitgob was resting. They pushed their way upstairs into the bed room and showed signs of wanting to fight Mr. Whitgob. They were, however, forcibly ejected by some of the boarders in the house and were given over to the police who had already been summoned. The accused was sentenced to one week's imprisonment, but received the payment of one dollar from the complainant.

TEN YEARS FOR BUND ROBBER

Bank Coolie's Evidence: Asked if He Wished "to Face Knife or Pistol"

Tsong Tsing-shing, self-confessed robber, who tried to take from a coolie a bag with $6.000 on the Bund a week ago and who was caught after a thrilling chase at noon, was on Wednesday sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment at the Mixed Court, Messrs. Martin and Loh hearing the evidence. Mr. Maitland, Police Solicitor, prosecuted and Mr. Y. Char defended.

Det-Sgt. Hunter produced a nickel-plated pistol, commonly known as the "bull-dog" of .38 calibre, with a three-inch barrel, and two daggers, one of which was found on the person of accused at the time of arrest, and the other taken from his bed when search was made at his abode at 116 Broadway. Witness also put in two confessions, which prisoner wrote himself in Chinese and which had been translated. One was written, said the officer, before the preliminary hearing and the other more recently.

Mr. Y. Char (defending) elicited from witness that he had been told that accused came from a good family, his father being proprietor of a pharmacy. In reply to further cross-examination, witness stated that as far as he knew the crime was a one-man affair. There was no record of any previous convictions against the man.

Mr. Char—Did any one ever tell you that Tsong was "loony," or crazy, or a bit off his head?—No one.

The coolie who carried the money, in answer to Mr. Char, stated that he had left the bank to go to the Chartered Bank. On approaching his destination, he had the bag slung over a shoulder with a knotted cord round his wrist. When accused caught hold of the sack, which fell off from the shoulder but still remained attached by the rope, he asked him, "Do you wish to face knife or pistol?" Prisoner did not continue to hold the bag and witness immediately cried out, "Jang dau, jang dau" (Robber, Robber).

Did you see a gun or knife?—No.

Did you slap at accused?—I did not strike him, but as I kicked him he made tracks.

Mr. Char then submitted that the wrong charge had been brought. No violence had been used, no arms presented and there had been no consummation of crime. C. P. C. 379 should have been applied instead of C.P.C. 370.

The Assessor (Mr. Martin)—It appears as though the former could have been used in framing the charge.

Counsel, continuing, was of the opinion that the offence was simple attempted larceny and the only reason accused had made off on the cry of "robber" was because he would be charged with carrying concealed weapons, if caught. Concluding, he entered a plea for mercy.

Son of Good Family.

Mr. E. G. Maitland, Police Prosecutor, said the offence was most serious. It had not been committed by a lawless soldier or bandit, but by a citizen who should know better with the education he had received. He had been earning a livelihood and came from a family in good circumstances, and in spite of all deliberately chose to commit such a crime against society on the busiest road in the Settlement. "I am going to ask the Court to make an example of this case and will request that the accused be sent to the Defence Commissioner, who, under special mandate from Peking, is able to sentence malefactors guilty of this crime, to be shot. If not sentenced to death, I suggest that the Court should order his return to the Settlement. It is high time that a vigorous attempt be made to stop this violent form of crime."

The Court, in passing sentence, said the case differed from others—accused had probably read of the many robberies in the Settlement and thought to try one himself.

AT the U. S. Court Sessions at Tientsin on Saturday, Judge Purdy made an order that the shares held by the Standard Oil Co. in pledge for the late Charles L. Coltman, be advertised for sale in the Press, and that the Court would subsequently give a ruling. The action was one in which the Standard Oil Co. sought to establish a claim of $23,000.

Two police officers who arrived at H.M. Police Court last Friday morning to prosecute Mr. E. Kale for keeping a dog without a licence learned on arrival that the defendant had gone away on Home leave. One of them asked for an adjournment, but the Magistrate, pointing out that the defendant might be away for a year, struck the case out.

PLEADINGS were ordered at H. M. Supreme Court on Monday in the case of Tien Luen v. the Royal Insur. Co. It is a claim for Tls. 1,500 payable under an arbitration award by Mr. A D. Bell in connexion with a fire which occurred at Nanking, where premises belonging to plaintiffs were insured for $5,000. Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for plaintiffs and Mr. H. Lipson Ward represented defendants.

W. A. Pennell was summoned at H.M. Police Court last Friday, for having failed promptly to obey a police traffic signal at the Nanking-Honan Road crossing at 10.05 on the 26th ultimo. Mr. E. T. Maitland, prosecuting, said defendant was driving his car westward along Nanking Road and at Honan Road passed the Sikh constable who was holding up traffic east and west. A tram car and other motor-cars were stationary there. Defendant said there were three passengers in the car, and they would all say that he did not pass a tram car at this crossing. He asked for an adjournment in order to call evidence, and this Mr. G. W. King granted.

Municipal Vaccine Supply.

The following cable appeared in the "North-China Daily News" on June 3:—

VACCINE IN SHANGHAI.

U. S. Seamen's Charges of Poorness of Quality.

Manila, June 2.

Shipping Board officials are investigating charges by seamen of the West Orowa and the West Keats that the Shanghai Public Health Department is using poor quality vaccine.

Nearly a dozen seamen, who had been vaccinated in Shanghai, have been confined in Manila Hospitals recently. One of them had five operations on his arm and another was laid up for 60 days. The men declare that the number of cases shows that there has not been infection from external sources.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Consequent upon the above, the following interchange of correspondence has taken place:—

Shanghai, July 7, 1924.

DEAR DR. HILL,—I thought it might interest you to have a copy of the enclosed memorandum upon the subject of Shanghai vaccine, since a question seemed to have arisen at Manila as to its purity. As a matter of fact, it would seem that the infection complained of, of the vaccinations of several members of the crews of various vessels was probably due to their efforts to undo the vaccinations by sucking out the virus.

Yours sincerely,

S. A. RANSOM.

MEMORANDUM.

Manila, P. I., June 16, 1924.

Allow me again to thank you for the samples of the Shanghai vaccine which you were good enough to forward me. The following is a portion of the report submitted to me by P. A. Surgeon R. W. Hart in relation to the use of this vaccine:—

"In accordance with instructions, we carried out a test of the Shanghai vaccine which was sent to this office, vaccinating 15 people with it. Chart showing the results is enclosed herewith. No case of infection or unusual reaction resulted from the use of the vaccine. The double scratch method of vaccination was used in all cases with one control scratch."

Public Health Department.
Shanghai, July 8, 1924.

DEAR DR. RANSOM,—Very many thanks for your letter, which I appreciate very much. Every batch of vaccine prepared in this Laboratory is very thoroughly tested, aerobically, anaerobically and by animal experiment, both for the presence of any pathogenic organisms and for activity, and when found satisfactory in these respects it is used for free vaccinations at the Branch Health Offices to confirm the proof of activity before it is offered for sale.

Out of 1,234 vaccinations done in one Branch Health Office in April—the same office (and batch of vaccine) at which the sailors were vaccinated,—only 5 cases of sore arm occurred, all in Chinese children whose arms had been dressed with filthy rags; while in the cold weather there were only two in three months, during which [illegible] 5,000 vaccinations were perf[illegible].

Yours sincerely,

ATHELSTANE HILL.

Fire Brigade Report for May.

The total number of calls received was 34, of which 26 were genuine fires, 23 (including 2 chimney fires) occurring within the Settlement and 3 outside. The remaining 8 were false alarms.

The damage on assessed property within the Settlement was estimated at $17,350 (Foreign $10,000—Chinese $7,350) whilst the property at risk was estimated at $299,600 (Foreign $120,000—Chinese $179,600).

Two lives were lost and 3 firemen and 3 other persons were injured.

Thirteen premises were damaged.

In dealing with these calls Brigade machines travelled approximately 261 miles, 17,050 feet of hose was used, and the time occupied was approximately 102½ hours.

Only those rescued from the weakening agony of Piles by Zam-Buk can describe the marvellous soothing and healing of this great herbal balm. Besides its instant allaying of the burning itching irritation, Zam-Buk relieves congestion and checks the bleeding. All swelling, soreness and inflammation vanish and the piles themselves, gradually disappear where Zam-Buk is persisted with.

Cured Without Operation

Mr. Robert Grattan, who spent years of service with the 1st Devon Regt. in India and Burmah, writes from the Town Barracks, Exeter:—

"My piles began in India through riding on wet saddles, and they caused agonies I shall never forget. Besides smarting and itching, the growths bled freely and caused great bodily weakness. When I had tried numerous European and Native remedies I underwent an operation in Hospital, still without finding a cure.

"Hearing Zam-Buk highly praised I got a box. Benefit and relief came from this splendid balm soon after beginning the treatment. The bleeding, inflamation and pain all gradually passed away, and within a comparatively short time after starting with Zam-Buk all the obstinate growths had completely disappeared."

Obtainable of medicine dealers and dispensaries. Direct from agents: Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

FOREIGN OFFICE ESTIMATE DEBATE

Dawes Report and Germany's Financial Obligation: The £40,000,000 Loan: Need for an American Representative on the Reparation Commission

London, July 14.

In the House of Commons to-day carefully-worded speeches were made by Mr. Asquith and Mr. Baldwin on the resumption of the Foreign Office estimate debate, with the evident desire not to embarrass the Government on the eve of the inter-Allied Conference.

Mr. Asquith urged that any assurance with regard to security that was given to France ought to be part of Britain's general undertaking under the Covenant of the League of Nations; secondly, that similar security should be offered to Germany; and, thirdly, that Germany must be admitted to membership of the League and given a seat on the Council. The Empire should guarantee France and Germany. He emphasized the desirability of consulting the Empire and of carrying it with us in order to achieve the object of the League.

Mr. Baldwin expressed sympathy with Mr. Asquith's argument.

Mr. MacDonald said that the question whether the Dawes report sought to impose on Germany obligations not legally within the interpretation of the Treaty of Versailles would be reported on by the legal experts to the Conference.

France, he continued, had come to regard the Treaty of Versailles as something akin to the Ark of the Covenant and any suggestion to put it aside aroused amazing fears. A similar feeling was entertained with regard to any suggested modification of the operations of the Reparation Commission. We must, however, be very careful that France did not extend the legal provisions of the Treaty.

The Reparation Commission.

With reference to the probability of American participation, Mr. MacDonald said that practical difficulties alone prevented an official appointment at present. The only thing clear up to the present was that, if there were going to be an American on the Reparation Commission, France would insist on an extra appointment to it, by reason of the fact that the experts' report could only be put into operation on the floating of a £40,000,000 loan, his duties being confined to safeguarding the creditors. With reference to the alternative arbitration proposal, the Prime Minister said that it must be remembered that the Reparation Agent would have the command of every conceivable particle of information, enabling him to give judgment whether there were wilful default or not.

The language of the White paper had been left purposely vague. The minimum they were seeking was satisfactory security for the creditor. The minimum change would be an American on the Reparation Commission with power to speak and vote when default was being considered. The Spa Agreement would certainly not be reconsidered in London. Mr. MacDonald was very anxious that these questions should not be quarrelled about preliminarily to the Inter-Allied Conference, at which the Dawes report alone would be considered and put into operation.

The Reparation Commission was political rather than judicial. Certainly with regard to the Ruhr the Commission had been scrapped. The subsequent action had been taken not by the Reparation Commission but by the Governments, acting not together but on their own initiative. The undermining of security by political action was a problem to be faced. Mr. MacDonald took up the position that the creditor should have security which would be satisfactory to him.

The preparation of a programme of sanctions would only mean giving Germany a warning of how, in the event of default, she would be punished. Nobody would be so foolish. All they could hope was that the conference, beginning on Wednesday, would be regarded as an opportunity that would not occur again, not only for the Allies to reunite, but to unite in the one work of pacifying Europe.

An Alternative Suggestion.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain, after a recital of what he described as Mr. MacDonald's errors with a view to their avoidance in future, proceeded to outline a policy which he recommended for the consideration of the Prime Minister. He said that, firstly, they should frankly accept and uphold the Versailles Treaty as the only possible basis of public law in Europe; secondly, they should make the maintenance of the Entente with France a cardinal object of policy; and, thirdly, they should make Germany's observance of her obligations a no less cardinal feature and, in return, if Germany accepted and loyally fulfilled the obligation now presented, they should be prepared to respect Germany's integrity and welcome her back to the comity of nations. They should seek to secure the association of the United States wherever possible. He suggested that another Dawes Committee, appointed by the Reparation Commission, might be a hopeful way of securing the results desired.

The Foreign Office vote was eventually agreed to and the debate terminated.—Reuter.

THE INTER-ALLIED CONFERENCE

Cabinet Meeting to Discuss Britain's Foreign Policy: Dominions' Right to Reparation: Arrival in London of French, Belgian and Italian Delegates

London, July 15.

There is much activity in Downing Street in connexion with the preparation for the conference on July 16. The weekly meeting of the Cabinet was held to-day instead of to-morrow in order to leave Mr. MacDonald free to devote his whole attention to the conference. It is understood that the Cabinet discussed the questions of foreign policy which are likely to be raised at the conference.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, had a further meeting with the representatives of the Dominions at the Colonial Office with regard to the representation of the Dominions at the conference, in connexion with which over 100 foreign official visitors will be in London to-morrow.

It is expected that the following will represent their countries:—Britain—Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. Philip Snowden; United States—Mr. Frank Kellogg and Colonel Logan; France—M. Herriot, M. Clementel, General Nollet and possibly Marshal Foch; Italy—Signor de Stefani, Signor de Nava and the Marchese della Toretta; Japan—Baron Hayashi and Viscount Ishii; Belgium—M. Théunis and M. Hymans; while Portugal, Serbia, Rumania and Greece will also be represented.

Later.

The French delegation to the conference arrived to-day. It was welcomed at Victoria station by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and members of the French Embassy. Mr. MacDonald and M. Herriot exchanged very cordial greetings, while the crowd shouted "Vive Herriot" and "Good old Ramsay." The delegation does not include Marshal Foch, but his Chief of Staff, General Desticker, is a delegate. The Italian and Belgian delegations also arrived to-day and were welcomed by representatives of the Premier.

July 16.

The publiic interest in the opening of the Allied Conference was shown by the large crowd in Downing Street an hour before the commencement, including a number of Dominion boy scouts and many journalists and photographers. There was a constant procession of motor-cars and taxis from 10.45 onwards. The Japanese delegates were the first to arrive. Then came M. Caclamanos (Greece), General Norton de Mattos (Portugal) and M. Titulesco (Rumania), who were followed by the Serbian and Belgian delegates and by M. Herriot, who received a particularly hearty welcome, and finally by the Italian delegates. They all proceeded to the Foreign Secretary's room, where they took their places at a horseshoe table. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, who presided, made a speech detailing the aims of the Conference.—Reuter.

Paris, July 16.

In response to the Anglo-French request for suggestions with regard to the drawing up of a plan for the re-establishment of Germany's economic and fiscal unity, the Reparations Commission has decided that the following conditions would determine whether the Dawes report had been put into execution:—(1) complete handing over to the trustee of the securities provided for in the report, (2) completion of the gold bank issue, (3) formation of the company to work the railways and (4) complete subscription of the first loan of 800,000,000 gold marks.

The "Petit Parisien" says that the last-named point was only decided on after a heated discussion, the British delegate declaring that the subscription would be difficult and perhaps impossible if the economic unity of Germany is not restored.—Reuter.

Berlin, July 15.

The German Bill for the establishment of the new gold note bank has been submitted to the Reparations Commission. The bank will be conducted similarly to the Reichsbank. Its directorate will be exclusively German, but it will be supervised by a general council of 14 members, comprising seven Germans and seven representatives appointed by America, Britain, Italy, France, Belgium, Switzerland and Holland as creditors of the new bank. The President of the Reichsbank, Herr Schacht, is the president-designate of the general council.

The bank will be completely independent of the German Government. It will issue so-called Reichsmarknoten and coinage to the value of 5,000,000,000 gold marks, which must be covered to one-third by gold and foreign currencies. The bank's capital of 800,000,000 gold marks will be raised by an international loan.

Later.

The Government has approved the text of the bill establishing the new gold note bank in accordance with the Dawes report. The Bill incidentally provides for the issue of gold 10 and 20 mark coins, silver coins of from one to 5 marks and copper coins of the value of 1, 2, 5, 10 and 50 pfennigs.—Reuter.

BERLIN'S FEARS OF THE CONFERENCE

Acceptance of Dawes Report Coupled with Defiance of France

Berlin, July 12.

Germany's hopes from the London Conference are becoming anxiety and apprehension, said the Chancellor, Herr Marx, in the course of an address to pressmen.

The German Government, he added, intends honestly to enforce the Dawes plan, but with the stipulation that the plan must be carried out by all parties in letter and spirit.

"If France demands the maintenance of the Treaty, she must understand that we insist on the preservation of our rights under it."—Reuter.

M. HERRIOT'S VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

End of Dispute over British Suggestions for Allied Confidence

Paris, July 11.

The Senate to-day passed a vote of confidence in the Herriot Government by 246 votes to 18.

The vote followed a speech by M. Herriot in reply to M. Poincaré's speech on Thursday. The Premier paid a tribute to the trustfulness and conciliation displayed by Mr. MacDonald. He declared that it was the duty of the French Government not to delay to substitute an inter-Allied agreement for isolated French and Belgian action. The Italian and Belgian Governments had already accepted the bases of the Franco-British Note.

He would continue to defend the Reparations Commission and the Treaty of Versailles. France would retain her freedom of action if the Allies failed to agree in the event of German default. He termed the Bonar Law plan with regard to inter-Allied debt as the best offer France had ever received.

In conclusion, M. Herriot said that if Britain and France parted, it would mean a war of revenge.—Reuter.

OPENING OF LONDON CONFERENCE

Delegates Welcomed by British Premier: Essential Conditions to Carrying Out the Dawes Report: Commissions to Report on Various Controversial Questions

London, July 16.

The meeting of the Allied Conference ended at 1 o'clock. It will resume at five this evening.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, in his speech, welcomed the delegates. He urged the importance of enforcing the recommendations of the Dawes Committee as a whole, unaltered. It would be the business of the Conference to create conditions under which the Dawes plan would be likely to work. The Prime Minister hoped that the Conference would follow the good example of the Dawes Report in approaching the problem as a business proposition rather than from a political standpoint. The Conference should deal solely with the Dawes plan.

Mr. MacDonald specially welcomed the American representatives, whose presence was evidence of the co-operation and goodwill of the United States.

M. Herriot thanked Mr. MacDonald for his noble words. He dwelt on the difficulty of the Conference's task of conciliating the interests of the peoples concerned and of taking steps to restore and maintain peace. The French Premier emphasized that everybody in France very sincerely desired peace. M. Herriot proposed that Mr. MacDonald should be Chairman of the Conference.

Mr. Frank B. Kellogg thanked Mr. MacDonald for welcoming the United States delegates, who had come in a spirit of helpfulness. The American Ambassador paid a warm tribute to the Dawes Committee, and said that Americans believed that the adoption of the Dawes Report would be the first big step in the reconstruction of Europe.

Signor de Stefani, the Italian delegate, seconded M. Herriot's proposal that Mr. MacDonald should be Chairman. He promised Italian co-operation in the work of the Conference.

Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Ambassador, promised similar co-operation.

M. Théunis, the Belgian Premier, expressed confidence that the Conference would succeed in its work of justice and peace.

Mr. MacDonald accepted the Chairmanship, and hoped that the Conference would succeed.

Sir Maurice Hankey was elected Secretary-General of the Conference.

Three technical committees were appointed.

Later.

The Dominions were not represented at this morning's meeting, but it is understood that they will be represented at the future meetings.

Mr. J. H. Thomas and Sir Eyre Crowe, in addition to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. Philip Snowden, composed the British Delegation.

Mr. MacDonald, in the course of his speech emphasizing that the business of the Conference was to create conditions in which the Dawes Report would work, said that two conditions seemed absolutely essential, namely, the economic and fiscal unity of Germany and adequate security for the investors in the proposed loan.

Three Commissions Appointed.

There was no second plenary session of the Allied Conference to-day and there will probably not be another until the three commissions dealing with various controversial questions in detail have presented their reports.

These commissions, which sat for about two hours this evening, are dealing with the authority of the Reparations Commission and, with a view to security for investors and bondholders, France and Britain are uniting to secure the presence of an American on the Reparations Commission in case of German default. If this solution proves impossible, steps may be taken to call in the Agent-General for Reparations.—Reuter.

The 800,000,000 Marks Loan.

Paris, July 16.

Following the newspapers' revelations of the recommendations of the Reparations Commission, a communiqué was issued to-day which broadly covers the same ground, but suggests with reference to the 800,000,000 marks loan the conclusion of the underwriting of contracts between Germany and foreign banks instead of the completion of subscription. The Commission in fact suggests that underwriting should be done before evacuation and subscription after evacuation.—Reuter.

DOMINIONS AND CONFERENCE

Refuse to Be Bound by Decisions Unless Represented

London, July 17.

The Imperial Constitution issue has again arisen in an acute form in connexion with the Inter-Allied Conference, which opened without direct Dominion representation. Conversations between British Ministers and Dominions High Commissioners during the past week have failed to reach an agreement regarding the character of Dominion representation, notwithstanding the insistence of Canada and Ireland that they will be unable to be bound by the decisions of the Conference unless they take direct part in the discussions.

Canada, indeed, despatched Senator Belcourt to London as "Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary," and his absence from the Conference is ascribed by the newspapers to the fact that the British Government suggested a panel arrangement, whereby each Dominion alternately should take part in the Conference, to which Senator Belcourt objected.—Reuter.

Paris Press Comment

Paris, July 17.

Though they are aware of the difficulties to be overcome, the papers, commenting on the opening of the London Conference, point out that the speeches of the delegates aim to give the Americans the impression that the Allies will be able to reach an agreement. The papers are happy that the meeting got immediately to work on the basis of the Anglo-French Note of July 9. Some papers emphasize that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald stated that the Treaty of Versailles will not be affected.—Reuter.

Paris, July 16.

The "Matin" states that Mr. Owen Young has accepted the post of agent for Reparations payments.—Reuter.

THE NAVAL BASE AT SINGAPORE

No Intention of Development Without Consultation with Other Powers

London, July 15.

In the House of Lords to-day the Marquess of Linlithgow drew attention to advertisements appearing in the Straits Settlements newspapers of Singapore base material. He said that such advertisements caused concern in Britain and the Dominions because it had been understood that the Government's decision was not final.

Viscount Chelmsford, the first Lord of the Admiralty, stated that the advertisement did not indicate a change of policy. The material could be replaced from home in a few weeks if necessary. The Government were actively considering the best means of applying the Prime Minister's general pacific policy.—Reuter.

London, July 15.

In the course of his reply in the House of Lords to-day to the Marquess of Linlithgow, who drew attention to the advertisements appearing in the Straits Settlements newspapers of the Singapore base material, Viscount Chelmsford, the First Lord of the Admiralty, said that it was unreasonable to ask him to mention the exact date when the Government intended to reconsider the question of developing the Singapore base. It would be necessary in pursuance of the Premier's policy to approach more than one foreign Power.

Replying to the Earl of Balfour, Viscount Chelmsford explained that in any extension of the policy of the Washington Conference it might be necessary that the five Powers represented at Washington should be brought into a conference again.

The Earl of Balfour denied that the Washington pact had any bearing whatever on the question of Singapore. Why should the other Powers be consulted? The matter was one between ourselves and the Dominions (cheers).

Offensive or Defensive Base?

Viscount Haldane, the Lord Chancellor, said that the question of the boundary line of the Pacific as agreed on at Washington had nothing to do with the matter. The Government must consider the effect on the Empire's general foreign policy of the establishment of the base, which would be for offence even more than for defence. It was essential that the base should be made a great instrument for offensive possibilities, from which very far-reaching operations could be conducted. That might be a desirable policy from a certain point of view, but it could not be reconciled with the new view of foreign policy taken by the Government, which contemplated bringing about a better situation which would make Singapore much less important that it now seemed to be. The Government's policy might fail, but the Government meant to stand or fall by it.—Reuter.

Possibility of Government's Decision Eventually Being Reversed

London, July 16.

An editorial article in the "Manchester Guardian" to-day expresses uneasiness in regard to the debate in the House of Lords regarding the Singapore base. The article contrasts the statements made by the Lord Chancellor, Viscount Haldane, and the First Lord of the Admiralty, Viscount Chelmsford, and says that if Viscount Chelmsford is the accredited mouthpiece of the Government, then there is no longer any security that the Singapore decision will not later be reversed.—Reuter.

AUSTRALIA'S NAVAL DEFENCE

Debate on Bill Authorizing Construction of Two 10,000-ton Cruisers

Melbourne, July 17.

The House of Representatives to-day debated the Defence Equipment Bill authorizing a grant of £2,000,000 for the construction of two 10,000-ton cruisers and £500,000 for a defence reserve fund. The debate showed that the Labour Party does not want men-of-war and does not fear attack, but the Labour Members advocate the establishment of aerial fleets and munition factories.

According to the "Melbourne Herald," the Federal naval engineering staff has submitted to the Cabinet plans for a floating dock 860 feet long and 180 feet wide and capable of receiving vessels drawing 40 feet as an alternative to building one of the cruisers locally. If the plans are accepted both Australia's new cruisers will be built in England and the money thus saved will cover the cost of the dock.—Reuter.

THE BUILDING STRIKE

Now of National Character Rendering Useless the Lock-out Notice

London, July 11.

The building trades employers have issued a statement that, owing to the delay in the issuing of the report of the court of inquiry and the fact that the strike is now of a national character and extent, the lock-out notices are further postponed.—Reuter.

London, July 17.

There has been little change in the situation in the building strike during the past week. The court of inquiry has issued a report, refraining from making a recommendation.

The report finds that the main cause of the stoppage was the refusal of the Liverpool operatives to accept the special terms offered them on June 10 and to submit to the decisions of the National Wages Council. The court is of the opinion that neither side understood the position of the other and declares that the resumption of negotiations offers the only means of a speedy termination of the quarrel.—Reuter.

GOVERNMENT AND HOUSING CRISIS

Possibility of a General Election

London, July 17.

The possibility of the housing situation shortly involving the country in a general election is being canvassed in political circles owing to the activity of the Opposition in the course of the debate on Mr. Wheatley's Housing Bill in the House of Commons last night.

All amendments moved were rejected, but the frequent criticisms provoked Sir Patrick Hastings, the Attorney-General, to declare that the Government would be only too glad to get the voice of the on February 12 that he know a country upon the measure.—Reuter.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE EXHIBITION

Receipts at Wembley Not Yet Sufficient: Suggestion of Continuation Next Year

London, July 15.

Although the visitors to the Empire Exhibition average 750,000 a week, bad weather in the earlier months curtailed the anticipated attendance, inclining the authorities to modify the original estimates of 30,000,000 during the season. A movement is afoot to continue the Exhibition next year to enable the heavy expenditure of the exhibitors to be spread over two years.

The Prince of Wales yesterday supported the movement in a speech in which he declared that he had visited Wembley six or seven times, but he did not feel that he had made much headway in seeing it all. Lord Stevenson, the President of the Exhibition Administrative Board, applauded the Prince's suggestion to re-open next year.—Reuter.

ADVERTISING FOR LOWER PRICES

International Conference at Wembley: 5,000 Delegates from All the World

London, July 14.

The first International Advertising Convention in Europe, which is attended by over 5,000 delegates from all parts of the world, was opened to-day by the Prince of Wales in the Palace of Industry at Wembley. The Palace was decorated with flowers and the flags of the different countries. Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and Mr. Frank Kellog, the United States Ambassador, were present.

The Prince of Wales was given an enthusiastic reception by the assembly, who rose and sang the National Anthem and cheered for several minutes.

Viscount Burnham, the President of the Empire Press Union, welcomed the delegates.

The Prince of Wales said that advertising aimed at providing throughout the world a freer exchange of commodities at a lower cost of distribution, resulting in the elimination of waste and the reduction of prices and unemployment.

Mr. Kellog believed that the inter-Allied conference in London would solve the greatest economic problem that had confronted Europe for generations.

Mr. J. H. Thomas welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Government.

Crown Colony Exports.

In the House of Commons to-day at question time Mr. J. H. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, said that it was too early to expect definite indications of an increase of the exports of the Crown colonies as a result of their participation in the British Empire Exhibition, but that information in his possession induced the strongest belief that a large increase might be counted upon.—Reuter.

BRITISH SHIPS BEING BUILT ABROAD

Result of Taxation and Trade Union Restrictions

London, July 16.

Speaking subsequent to the launching of the British India Company's steamer Salamba to-day, Mr. Batey, director of Messrs. R. W. Hawthorn, Leslie & Co., said that orders for eight vessels had been recently placed in Holland for British owners and two in Hongkong for Australian owners, who previously gave their orders in England. He declared that taxation and trade union restrictions handicapped British builders.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Miss Winifred Emery

London, July 16.

The death is announcedof Miss Winifred Emery, the well-known actress.—Reuter.

The late Miss winifred Emery (Mrs. Cyril Maude) was born at Manchester on August 11, 1862, and her father, grandfather and great-grandfather had all been famous actors in their day. She made her first appearance on the stage at the Amphitheatre, Liverpool, in 1870, in a child's part and her first appearance on the London stage in the pantomime "Beauty and the Beast" at the Princess's Theatre in December, 1874. Her debut as an adult was made at the imperial Theatre in April 1879, in "Man is not Perfect" and in the same year she joind the company of the late Mr. Wilson Barrett. Thenceforward her career was one of continued success. In 1881 she played with the late Sir Henry Irving in "The Bells" and "The Merchant of Venice" and was a member of his Companies when he visited the United States in 1884 and again in 1887. In 1896, after having played with Wilson Barrett at the New Clympic and with Forbes Robertson at the Lyceum, she and her husband took over the Haymarket Theatre, where she appeared in in leading parts in "Under the Red Robe" "The Little Minister" and many other successes. In 1898 she was compelled to retire from the stage for three years owing to illness, and again from 1902 until 1905, but made a welcome reappearance in 1905 at His Majesty's Theatre with Sir Beerbohm Tree's Company.—Ed.

RUSSIA RECOGNIZED BY MEXICO

South American States Thought Likely to Follow Suit

Moscow, July 13.

Mexico, which was represented at the International Conference of the League of Industrial Workers, has officially recognized Russia.

According to the Russians, the Argentine is expected to recognize Russia shortly and the Powers in the Central and the Southern Americas are thought not unlikely to follow suit.—Eastern News Agency.

BRITISH CONFERENCE WITH SOVIET

Rumours of Money for Moscow and Soviet Debt to Britain to Be Recognized

London, July 11.

It is understood that the Anglo-Soviet Conference is at present considering an agreement, calculated to benefit the Soviet Government to the extent of £10,000,000. It is stated that, if the Treaty of Commerce is concluded, it will supersede the trade agreement of 1921 and enable the Soviet to claim the money which belonged to the Russian Imperial Government and is now lying in English banks.

It is pointed out in well-informed circles, however, that the matter will not be the subject of a separate agreement, but part of a general treaty, embodying a complete agreement on all points, including that of the Soviet indebtedness to Britain.—Reuter.

ATTACK OF ZAGHLUL PASHA

Egypt's Premier Shot at and Wounded: Police Searching Cairo for Anarchists

Cairo, July 12.

Zaghlul Pasha was slightly wounded in the chest by a revolver shot at the station to-day when he was starting for Alexandria.

The assailant has been arrested.

Zaghlul Pasha was going to Alexandria to attend the Bairam reception. He was walking on the platform between the Sub-Governor and the Acting Commandant of Police amid cheering crowds when suddenly a trousered Effendi about 20 years of age fired at him from behind the front rank of spectators. He then threatened the Police Commandant, but he did not fire again. The assailant was rescued from the raging mob with difficulty and put on the train which left the station. Zaghlul Pasha was removed to his home. His condition is satisfactory and he has now been removed to his private house on Roda Island.

His assailant was brought to Cairo under a strong guard and is being examined.

Assailant Nearly Lynched.

Later.

The assailant of Zaghlul Pasha was a student named Abd-El Latif Abd-El-Kadir. He arrived in Cairo in June from Germany. He was injured by the crowd who tried to storm the carriage, where he was protected by the police, in order to lynch him. Zaghlul Pasha is now in a private hospital. Bulletins regarding his condition are reassuring.—Reuter.

Cairo, July 13.

Zaghlul Pasha is making a splendid recovery. His condition is good and he expects to be released from hospital in a few days' time.

The police are searching the houses of suspects throughout the country. The extremist Sheikh Shaweesh and a few others have been arrested.—Reuter.

Evidence that the Conspiracy Was Laid in Berlin

Cairo, July 14.

Documents have been discovered suggesting that the conspiracy against Zaghlul Pasha was hatched in Berlin.—Reuter.

London, July 14.

In the House of Commons to-day the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, replying to Mr. L. R. Lumley (Conservative), said that the Egyptian Premier, Zaghlul Pasha, had expressed readiness to enter into negotiations with the British Government, but that the date of the meeting had not yet been fixed.—Reuter.

POWERS AND MOROCCO

U.S. Accepts Tangier Convention But Declines to Partake in Administration

Washington, July 12.

The United States has informed Britain and France of her willingness to agree conditionally to the Tangier Convention, signed in Paris, but declines to participate in the actual administration of the zone.—Reuter's American Service.

THE REVOLT IN BRAZIL

Sao Paulo Held by Insurgents Under Bombardment by Federals

Montevideo, July 11.

The rebels are reported to be continuing their operations successfully and to be completely in control of Sao Paulo.—Reuter.

Buenos Aires, July 11.

The newspaper "La Nacion" says that the Government of Sao Paulo has been deposed and that the revolutionary junta has formed a temporary Government.

July 12.

A virtual state of civil war between the revolutionaries and the Federal Government exists at Sao Paulo. The censorship is very strict, but official communiqués from Rio de Janeiro indicate that bombardment of Sao Paulo is in progress. The Federal troops, who were earlier reported within the city, have apparently retired. The rebels control the city and the surrounding country.

An official communiqué states that the loyalists are advancing and concentrating their fire on certain points of Sao Paulo with satisfactory results.—Reuter.

Washington, July 12.

A telegram from Rio de Janeiro states that Federal artillery bombarded Sao Paulo, which has already suffered severly at the hands of the rebels.—Reuter's American Service.

Rebels Now Marching on Santos: British Life and Property Safe

Buenos Aires, July 13.

According to a telegram from Santos, the rebels are masters of the situation at Sao Paulo and are now marching on Santos. The Governor of the State of Sao Paulo has issued a proclamation stating that he is temporarily obliged to transfer the seat of Government. General Ysidoro Lopez, the rebel leader, declares that the movement is directed against the Federal Government.—Reuter's American Service.

London, July 13.

It is understood from an authoritative source in London that British life and property has not suffered injury in the rebellion in Brazil, which is confined to the city and immediate neighbourhood of Sao Paulo.—Reuter.

Fierce Fighting at Sao Paulo

New York, July 14.

It is reported from Santos that the fighting at Sao Paulo is very desperate. Refugees state that the casualties among troops and civilians amount to 3,000. Hotels have been converted into hospitals and are crowded with the wounded. It is believed that the rebels defending Sao Paulo number 34,000, while the Federal troops there or en route are estimated at 24,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Buenos Ayres, July 14.

According to news from the frontier, persons arriving at Santos declare that 15,000 rebels at Sao Paulo, who are armed with artillery, are preparing to march on Rio de Janeiro. A Federal detachment of marines has been wiped out. There are 200 wounded in hospitals at Sao Paulo.—Reuter's American Service.

Buenos Aires, July 15.

A relayed message from the steamer, Andes, which is leaving Santos, says that the rebels are eight miles from the city. According to other advices the Federal troops continue to shell Pao Paulo but are not doing much damage. Some Federal artillery are reported to have joined the rebels.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Disturbing Effect on Foreign Markets: Speculation in Coffee Futures

New York, July 15.

Owing to the Brazilian revolt causing fears of shortening supplies in consuming countries, coffee futures are strong and active. Yesterday's advance was attended by heavy covering and European buying. The same influence caused further recessions in Brazilian bonds, which fell two to three points as compared with Saturday. Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN OIL LEASES SCANDAL

Mr. Sinclair Indicted for Contempt of Senate on Six Counts

Washington, July, 14.

The Supreme Court of Columbia has sustained six out of the ten counts in the indictment against Mr. Sinclair for contempt of the Senate in connexion with the Teapot Dome leases. The Court ruled out questions asked the defendant about alleged contributions of Sinclair stock to someone representing the Republican National Committee as irrelevant.—Reuter's American Service.

Ex-Secretary Fall Bound Over to Appear for Trial at Washington

El Paso, July 15.

Mr. A. B. Fall, ex-Secretary of the Interior, was to-day arraigned before the United States Commissioner in connexion with the indictments against him by the Columbia Grand Jury relative to charges arising from the leasing of the Teapot Dome oilfields.

Ex-Secretary Fall pleaded "Not Guilty." He waived preliminary hearing and gave a bond of $25,000 for his appearance at Washington. —Reuter's American Service.

THE LIQUOR PIRATES

Following Mulhouse Outrage Another Attack: Foreign Captain Killed

New York, July 11.

Following the report from Halifax that pirates boarded the French steamer Mulhouse off the New Jersey coast and seized a cargo of liquor valued at half a million dollars, prohibition officials now learn that the pirates boarded a second ship of foreign registry, killed the captain and threw his body overboard.

July 13.

While pursuing rumrunners in darkness with lights extinguished, a Quarantine Island police launch suddenly came under the fire of prohibition agents who mistook the launch for rumrunners. The commander of the launch was seriously injured.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN AVIATORS IN ENGLAND

Rousing Reception at Croydon: Preparations for Trip Across Atlantic

Constantinople, July 11.

The American worldfliers arrived here to-day.

July 12.

The American airmen would have left this morning but the Turkish authorities insisted on delay in order to allow them to examine the machines, which were visited by several Tukish aviators and military officials.

Although the engines are working splendidly they will be replaced by new engines at Hull and floats will replace the wheels before the Atlantic passage is undertaken.—Reuter.

Bukharest, July 13.

The American world-fliers landed at Bancasa yesterday, and left for Vienna this morning.—Reuter.

London, July 16.

The American world fliers have arrived at Croydon.—Reuter.

London, July 16.

The American world-fliers were given a rousing reception by a large crowd at Croydon. They were welcomed by Major-General Sir William Brancker, Director of Civil Aviation, members of the American Embassy and Mrs. Maclaren.

Lieutenant Smith in an interview said that he would not do the trip again for a million dollars. The airmen had had two days' rest since they started, one in Paris and one in Constantinople.

July 17.

The American world-fliers this morning flew from Croydon to Brough, Yorkshire, where the aeroplanes will be fitted with new engines and floats for the Atlantic crossing.—Reuter.

Washington, July 16.

The Navy Department has improved the plans for assisting the American aviators to complete their world flight. Ships will be placed along the Atlantic route to be followed by the airmen and a chain of wireless communication will be established throughout.—Reuter's American Service.

FOURTEENTH OF JULY IN PARIS

Silent Tribute to the Unknown Soldier: Striking Ceremony

Paris, July 15.

On the occasion of the Fourteenth of July celebrations a striking ceremony took place before the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. In the presence of enormous crowds, detachments of all arms defiled before the Tomb in impressive silence. By the side of the Tomb stood the Cabinet Ministers, Marshals and members of the Diplomatic Corps. A squadron of aeroplanes flew overhead. In the afternoon the American world-fliers flew over the Tomb, and were cheered by the crowds.—Reuter.

ENGLISHMAN KILLED BY MEXICAN BANDITS

Agent of Eagle Oil Company and Nephew of Lord Jellicoe

Mexico City, July 11.

Bandits at Portrero del Lano, Vera Cruz, shot dead Mr. Herbert Vereker, an employee of the Eagle Oil Company, because he refused to hand over money.

It appears that Mr. Vereker insisted on remaining at Portrero after the withdrawal of the military garrison. He had twice previously been captured by bandits, but was released in spite of non-payment of ransom.

Mr. Vereker was a nephew of Admiral Lord Jellicoe.—Reuter's American Service.

FOREST FIRES ALONG PACIFIC COAST

Enormous Damage to Property but No Loss of Life

San Francisco, July 15.

Damage estimated at $1,000,000 has been done by forest fires along the Pacific Coast of the United States and British Columbia.

There is much anxiety in regard to the safety of villages in the path of the flames. Thirty-five persons, including 11 children of the village of Wheeler's Mill in Washington, are missing. No news is available of several families of settlers at Pine Creek.

Heavy rains have improved the situation.

Later.

All the persons reported missing in the forest fires have now apparently been accounted for.—Reuter's American Service.

LLOYD'S SHIPBUILDING RETURNS

Decrease in World's Tonnage Owing to Large Number of Ships Broken Up

London, July 16.

A decrease in the world's tonnage as compared with last year is shown in Lloyd's Register of Shipping for the first time since the tables were compiled. There was a total of 64,000,000 tons in June as compared with 65,000,000 tons in June last year, including 19,000,000 tons in Great Britain and Ireland as compared with 19,250,000 tons last year. The decrease is mainly due to the large amount of tonnage broken up.

As compared with 1914, Great Britain and Ireland have 18,917,000 tons as against 18,877,000: the British Dominions 2,213,000 against 1,407,000: the United States 11,823,000, against 1,837,000: France 3,193,000 against 1,918,000: Germany 2.856,000 against 5,098,000: Holland 2,533,000 against 1,471,000: Italy 2,676,000 against 1,428,000: and Japan 3,655,000 against 1,642,000.—Reuter.

London, July 13.—A record assembly of advertising experts last night attended a ball and reception at the Albert Hall to 5,000 delegates from all parts of the world to the Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World which the Prince of Wales will open at Wembley to-morrow. Two thousand of the delegates are American.—Reuter.

AMERICAN CAPITAL IN DUTCH RUBBER

Special Legislation to Facilitate Investment

London, July 12.

It is reported from Amsterdam that the Dutch Colonial Minister, replying to written questions in the Second Chamber yesterday, admitted that the United States expert sent to the Dutch East Indies to investigate the chances of foreign capital in the rubber industry sent home a report raising objections to the East Indies tax legislation and revision proposals which he declared would make it extremely difficult for rubber companies operating in the East Indies to meet the competition of Malaya and Ceylon.

The Minister stated that the preliminary budget for the East Indies for 1925 would authorize replacement of the present taxes on the companies by a proportional tax on profits. He expressed the opinion that this would lessen the competition of Malaya and Ceylon and improve the chances for investment of American capital in East Indies rubber companies.—Reuter.

LISBON'S "RED LEGION"

Businessmen Blackmailed and Forced to Flight

Lisbon, June 1.

Lisbon is becoming terrorized by an association of extremists, calling themselves "The Red Legion," the members of which have been committing bomb outrages and shooting prominent men in broad daylight. Three such attempts were made in one week and, acting on the advice of the police, several well-known businessmen have left for France after having received threatening letters. More than 60 arrests have been made and documents found indicate that the legion has a large membership of young men. An arsenal of bombs and weapons was found in the home of one of the men arrested.—Reuter.

LA FOLLETTE NOW DENIED FARMERS' SUPPORT

Two Communists Put Up by Workers' Organization

Chicago, July 11.

The National Farmer-Labour Party of America will not support Senator La Follette, the Progressives' candidate for the presidency.

The executive committee, confronted with the withdrawal of its candidates, Messrs. MacDonald and Bouck, has endorsed the candidacy of Mr. William Z. Foster and Mr Penjamin Titlow, two Communists, who are Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates of the Workers' Party of America.—Reuter's American Service.

INCREASE IN THE PRICE OF FLOUR

Gambling in Wheat Futures

London, July 16.

Speculation on bad harvests in America is blamed for the disquieting increase in the price of flour from 37/- to 43.6 per sack in the past two months. A prominent trade authority points out that France and Germany both report bad crops and that the Canadian supplies are estimated at 30 per cent. below normal. He declares that "almost every office boy in the United States is at present gambling in wheat futures."—Reuter.

HINDU-MOHAMMEDAN RIOTS IN DELHI

Delhi, July 11.

There were riots between Hindus and Mussulmans practically in every part of the city to-day. Seven persons are reported killed. The police are patrolling the streets with armoured-cars.—Reuter.

Delhi, July 13.

The riots yesterday were due to Hindus objecting to Moslems drawing water from a certain well. Two persons were killed and 80 injured. The situation is now quiet. The authorities are taking precautions to prevent further racial riots.—Reuter.

Delhi, July 16.

A serious riot, resulting from the aggressive attitude of Mohammedans towards Hindus, necessitated firing by the military, who were called in with armoured cars. There were no casualties from the firing but six were otherwise killed and 100 wounded in street fighting. The origin of the trouble was due to Mohammedans persisting in carrying a sacrificial cow through the prohibited area where Hindus reside. The Mohammedans set fire to a Hindu house and broke open a temple and descrated the idols. Order was restored after four hours. —Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

THE INTER-ALLIED CONFERENCE

Committees Discussing German Finances: Dominions' Representation

London, July 17.

The three committees appointed by the Allied Conference yesterday are meeting at the Foreign Office this afternoon to deal: (1) with the problem of German default; (2) with the best way of restoring German economic and fiscal unity; and (3) with methods of transferring German payments from the receiving body in Berlin to the creditor countries.

The first important result of the Conference that has been reported is the announcement of Mr. Logan, the American observer, that the United States would not object to the appointment of an American representative on the Reparation Commission in order to establish flagrant default on Germany's part. As the United States Government is unable to nominate an American member of the Commission without the consent of Congress, which does not meet till the autumn, the committee have decided that the American representative should be nominated by the World Court at The Hague.

As regards Dominions representation, the consultations are progressing and it is said to be certain that representation will be arranged in time for the next plenary meeting of the Conference.—Reuter.

THE MANIFOLD USES OF ADVERTISEMENT

International Convention Concluded: Desire to Avert Further Warfare

London, July 17.

The International Advertising Convention concluded on July 14 a series of sessions at which a number of prominent personages, including Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Sir Robert Horne and Mr. Winston Churchill, made speeches and some papers were read. At the conclusion a telegram was sent to the King and to President Coolidge expressing an earnest desire to co-operate towards the economic restoration of the world.

There were very enthusiastic scenes at the farewell session. The delegates ranged under the banners representing 42 countries and states and, led by an orchestra, joined in the singing of the national tunes of the different countries.

The President of the Convention, M. Lou (Holland), was presented with a signed photograph of the Prince of Wales, the Patron of the Convention.

The meeting finally passed a resolution urging a conference of leaders of nations with a view to preventing wars.—Reuter.

U. S. SHIPPING BOARD LOSSES

Alternative to Subsidies as Means of Running Ships Less Expensively

London, July 18.

Mr. Plummer, the Vice-President of the United States Shipping Board, who is at present in London accompanied by a number of American shipping experts, declared in an interview to-day that the object of his visit was to seek an alternative to the present system of subsidies to American shipping.

He stated that two alternatives were to enforce discriminating duties whereby goods carried in American bottoms were admitted cheaper than foreign-carried goods, or to induce foreign shipowners trading with America to agree to an increase in rates in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent.—Reuter.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

OUR PARIS LETTER

Why M. Millerand Was Assailed: Should a President Be a Mere Figure-head?

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Paris, May 29.

The result of the general election has encouraged the advanced Socialists and Communists to try to pay off old scores with President Millerand, whom they have never forgiven for going over to the bourgeoisie. One of Jaurès' former lieutenants, M. Renaudel, who was rejected by the electors in 1919 but was now returned to Parliament, goes so far as to tell the Radical-Socialist majority that their first act should be to refuse to govern so long as M. Millerand remains at the Elysée, and this view is expressed with more or less violence by the party organs.

M. Millerand is accused of "fabricating the electoral franc" which means that he was a strong supporter of M. Poincaré's scheme for increasng taxation and placing the national finances on a sound basis, so as to be able to prove to the country that the depreciation of the franc was stopped. One would have thought that the maintenance of the national credit was one of the first duties of a President, but M. Millerand's enemies refuse to admit that he was actuated by patriotic motives, and they declare that he has gone beyond his constitutional powers, compromised himself by supporting the Bloc National, and ignored the impartiality which should be his first care.

M. Millerand has never made any secret of his conviction that the President of the French Republic was not intended by the constitution to be a mere figurehead. He thinks that the first citizen of the land has not only the right but the duty to express his views in all matters affecting the vital interests of the country. What is the use, he argues, of electing a man to the presidency if his knowledge and accumulated experience are to be shut up in a sealed box?

Unfortunately, these views run counter to one of the strongest political sentiments of the French people. They will not endure anything in the nature of personal authority. They do not want a one-man government. They have never forgotten what happened when they allowed Napoleon III to overthrow the Second Republic and put himself in its place. They do not want anyone to exercise power without checks and restrictions. They prefer a constitutional machine with plenty of brakes, and they suspect the man who depends rather on his own judgment in driving than on using the brakes.

Radicals' Delicate Position.

For these reasons I am inclined to think that the attacks on M. Millerand meet with a certain amount of sympathy, but the Radicals are hardly likely to begin by bringing about a Presidential crisis. They have their own programme to attend to. They have to justify some of their electoral promises and prove that they can manage public affairs with better results than were obtained by their predecessors. In all probability the Socialists will not join the new Cabinet. They will give it support, and also plenty of criticism. The Communist goad will be frequently applied to the flanks of the Radical cow to move it faster along the road. In view of the uncertain nature of their alliance with the Extreme Left, and the smallness of their majority, the position of the Radicals in France will be as precarious as that of the Labour Government in England. A great deal depends on M. Herriot's tact in dealing with the extremists and resisting their demands without giving too much offence. What will he do, for instance, about the demand for an amnesty, which would bring M. Caillaux back to public life and enable Capt. Sadoux, the French officer who joined the Bolsheviks and was sentenced to death for treason, to return to France?

The Tragedies of Football.

An Association football tournament with the British Isles left out suggests "Hamlet" without the Ghost. The Olympic competition now proceeding in Paris is nevertheless not devoid of interest. It shows how the game has spread to portions of Europe which, from the sports point of view, have hitherto lain in outer darkness. Who would have predicted 10 years ago that Turks and Egyptians and Czechs, not to mention far distant Uruguay, would send football teams to Paris in 1924? In England the game has become so closely associated with everyday life that it is taken as a matter of course. In the "new" football countries, if we may judge by the doings of the teams seen in Paris, it is in the full flush of novelty.

Football, as they understand it, is not a highly finished piece of combined effort but an awakening of primæval forces, a conflict of strength and skill and ruse. Their instinct leads them to dramatise it in a manner which would give unstinted delight to a London crowd of spectators. In the match between Spain and Italy, when one of the Spanish backs—the captain, too!—sent the ball through his own goal, the situation was quite painful. The goalkeeper raised his hands to Heaven in mute appeal against this cruel blow of Fate. The culprit buried his face in his hands as if to shut out the horrid vision, while his comrades stood aghast and the Italians fell upon one another's neck and embraced. That goal was the only one scored, and the Spaniards, who were thought to have a good chance of going right through, were knocked out in the first round. No wonder their unfortunate captain shed tears as he walked back to the dressing-room!

Mlle. Lenglen's Jaundice.

Apropos of the Olympic Games, they will not, it seems, be deprived of the presence of that interesting personality, Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, the world's woman lawn tennis champion. It has been rumoured of late, and the rumour has doubtless been cabled to the uttermost parts of the earth, that she was laid low by illness and would be unable to compete either at Wimbledon or the Olympic Games. It was also said in some quarters that she stood a chance of being beaten at Wimbledon by Miss Helen Wills, the "new" American player. As a matter of fact, Mlle Lenglen, who is now at Nice, has had an attack of jaundice, which caused her to lose strength and weight, but she has now recovered and will resume training in a few days. She declares that she will appear at the Olympic Games but says nothing of her intentions concerning Wimbledon. Asked what she thought of Miss Wills she replied "Nothing," adding that she had never seen Miss Wills play. Very good judges of the game say that, though Miss Wills can undoubtedly hit very hard and accurately, she is not quick on her feet and does not show the power of anticipation which is necessary in a champion. Mlle. Lenglen has been supreme for so long that she must expect to see rivals raised up against her and perhaps extolled beyond their merits. In the meantime she holds her title and means to defend it.

*A telegram on Monday said that Mlle. Lenglen would not play at the Olympic Games. She did play at Wimbledon but retired half way through.

WHERE DO TAIPANS GO IN THE SUMMER TIME?

Mysterious Disappearances from City Offices

London, June 3.

The mystery of the disappearance from offices in the City and West End of managers and heads of departments for an hour or so in the morning or afternoon has been cleared up by a visit to Lincoln's Inn Fields. Here, on the green, smooth lawns, an 18-hole putting golf course has been laid out, and would-be golfers can try their hand at a cost of 3d. a round, which includes putters and balls. The London County Council are responsible for laying out the putting course. In the lunch hour the greens are covered with young men and girl clerks, and after office hours there is also a rush of players.—Reuter.

SCOTTISH LETTER

The Scots and Golf: Are We Holding Our Own?

From Our Own Correspondent.

Edinburgh, June 4.

The fact that the Golf Championship in its last stage was an Oxford v. Cambridge affair emphasizes once more the prominent place in amateur golf now occupied by players who have represented these Universities on the links. Four out of the last five Championships have been won by members of the Oxford and Cambridge Society. In Scotland it is still true that the game claims its devotees from all ranks, but our record in the Championship hardly suggests that we are holding our own against the conquering Englishmen. Superlatively fine golf was played by some of the Scottish competitors, but because they had acquitted themselves so well up to a point one felt all the more disappointed that none of the four who figured in the last eight survived to provide an international final. Only two Scotsmen have wrested the Championship from their English rivals since 1909, Mr. J. L. C. Jenkins having won the last event before the war and Mr. W. I. Hunter being the winner in 1921. A Scottish victory is more than due. The standard of play among the best amateurs was never higher than it is to-day. Witness the remarkable scores in some of last week's matches. Mr. Denys Kyle's 60 strokes for 16 holes, which was too brilliant even for the lion-hearted Mr. Tolley to survive; the best of Mr. Wethered's rounds, and those of several other competitors, represent golf of a quality that has not been excelled in an Amateur Championship played over St. Andrews, the greatest course in the world. Perhaps some of the credit for these astonishing performances (compared with those of ten years ago) should be given to the ball manufacturer, but, after making allowance for that, there remains the evidence of the power and skill of the players themselves. To be beaten after playing golf which represented an average of less than four strokes for each hole—this was the fate of Mr. Tolley—is an experience with which most golfers who know the difficulties of St. Andrews and sympathize.

Birthday Honours List.

The first Birthday Honours List of Labour Government was looked forward to with some curiosity, but with the exception of the absence of any Peerages it shows no difference from its predecessors. Politics, it should be said, are barred. One of the two Baronetcies goes to Mr. Alexander Grant, the managing director of the Edinburgh firm of Messrs. M'Vitie & Price (Ld.), biscuit manufacturers. Mr. Grant, it will be remembered, was the donor last year of £100,000 which enabled the Government to take over the Advocates' Library as an institution available to the people of Scotland. It will be noted with interest that Mr. Grant has always taken a keen and practical interest in the development of Forres, Lossiemouth, and other parts of his native district, and has frequently gifted large sums on behalf of the Lossiemouth golf course. A personal friend of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, he acted as host to the Prime Minister during the latter's recent visit to Edinburgh.

Prominent among the new Knights is our best known Scottish painter and etcher, Mr. D. Y. Cameron, R. A. Another well-known Scot is honoured, Mr. W. L. Sleigh, of a leading motor and cycle firm, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. A third Knight is Mr. Robert Donald, who began a successful journalistic career in Edinburgh, was editor of the "Daily Chronicle" and managing director of United Newspapers (Ld.). He was President of the Institute of Journalists; Chairman of the Empire Press Union, and Chairman of the Publicity Committee, in connexion with the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley. During the war he reported several times on propaganda, and was a Director at the Ministry of Information.

Mrs. Kennedy Fraser, who received the decoration of C.B.E. "in recognition of her contribution to folk music," is a well-known and popular figure in Scottish musical circles. The Hebridean melodies which she has rediscovered and published have become famous all over the world, because of their haunting beauty, and music lovers are under a deep debt of gratitude to Mrs. Kennedy Fraser in this connexion. She is a daughter of the late David Kennedy, the Scots singer.

The Church in Scotland.

A great experiment has been an unqualified success. By the appointment of a commoner to represent the King at the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, quite apart from the fact that he was a member of the Labour party, there has been established a precedent which will make its influence felt as long as the office endures. This, it may be said, is the unanimous opinion of the Scottish press. After all, there is no State Church in the world where such an appointment could be more fitting. The Church of Scotland is a democratic church, the "church of the poor," administered with plainness and frugality, and its ministers have all liberty of conscience in spite of State connexion. It sprang from the people, and is peculiarly the church of the people. In Mr. Brown the High Commissioner was more really representative of the Church than perhaps any previous holder of the office. This year's Assembly has for this and other reasons been more in touch with the common life of the nation than ever before, at least in modern times; and the important subjects discussed especially that of Church union, gather a fresh vitality, which may help to carry them through to early fruition.

Obituary.

At New York, on the 24th inst., John G. Todd, late with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and formerly with Anchor Line at Marseilles and New York.

"Scots Wha Hae."

The Scots are by no means unanimous about the Home Rule Bill, but it appears that the English are all for it. One of their poets speaks:—

England's Chance.

Scots wha are o' Maxton's breed
Scots wham Kirkwood lo'es taw lead,
May Buchanan's Bill succeed,
Some day yet, say we!

May the day come soon again
When there are at No. 10
Gathered chiefly English men,
What a day tae see!

Ruled nae longer frae the Clyde,
Think o' England's joy and pride,
Yon's the day will coincide
With the day she's free!

Caledonia stern and wild,
Keep it up, ye naughty child,
Get the English really riled,
That's the stuff tae gie.

We are afraid, however, that they will have to grin and bear with their Scottish visitors for a while yet.

Compliments of a Sort.

The Rev. D. C. Stewart is responsible for the following stories. A well-known city clergyman was assistant to a great preacher. One evening after service the beadle was helping my friend to disrobe. Said the beadle, "O' a' the assistants I hae kent here, you maist resemble the auld doctor." "How's that?" my friend eagerly asked, thinking a compliment was coming. "You sweat like him in the oxter."

Some of the compliments paid me have been rather qualified. "Come back soon," said a woman. "Haste ye back, I'm aye unco' glad to see ye. In fact, minister, I'm unco' fond o' you, though I canna see ony parteeclar reason for't."

On another occasion she evidently saw a "parteeclar reason for't." She had been reviewing to me the great trials she had had to endure. "But you got through," I said. "Ay, wi' Providence and you ahint me—espaichally you!" My friend's kind invitation to hasten back reminds me of what another woman said to her minister. "Gude day, Mr. Broon; gude day, and thank ye! I'm awful prood o' yer veesit. In fact, I'm mair prood than it's a' worth!"

Divots from St. Andrews.

It is rather singular and perhaps not too good a sign that the Royal and Ancient governing authority for the past two years, on the eve of chmapionships, has had cause to issue a warning against golfers using implements or attachments foreign to tradition. Last year in the "Open" at Troon the ban was put on the pepper-box faced iron clubs, in the improvization of which all the hand-punches in Troon had been going night and day for some time. Now it is the colossal tees of "cranks" that has got the knock at St. Andrews. Why not play the game?

The fall in the Amateur Championship so early of the only American representative, Mr. Brown, of Honolulu, while regrettable, nevertheless conforms with precedent. In 20 years only one American player, Mr. Travis, of New York—who, by the way, was an Australian by birth, has won the cup; while two others, Francis Ouimet and "Chick" Evans, have reached the semi-final stage. Perhaps their worst year was 1921 when, after badly whipping us in the international, all of their players, including Bobby Jones, their present champion, went down before the semi-final.

In all these fights perhaps the most sensational in respect of its chagrin to the big American gallery in attendance was the fall of "Chick" Evans at Prestwick in 1911 to Bruce Pearce, a left-handed Australian. After a tie Evans put his second shot into a bunker before the first green. Seeing the desperateness of his plight, he flung off his coat and descended into the deeps of the bunker. At least 1,000 silent Americans walked back to the clubhouse when they saw "Chick" fail to place the ball near enough the hole to save the game.

CHESHAM HOUSE

Soviet's Claim to London Legation: Real Design of Bolsheviks

The application made through the British Foreign Office by the Soviet Delegation demanding possession of Chesham House, the home of the former Russian Imperial Embassy in London, and of the offices of the former Russian Consulate General in Bedford-square, together with all their contents, will shortly form the subject of legal proceedings in the British Courts.

The Soviet Government through Rakovsky have, the "Morning Post" is informed, issued writs against M. Sabline, late Chargé d'Affaires of the Russian Provisional Government; M. Onou, Consul-General of the same Government; and Colonel Belyæff, in whose custody had been left documents relating to the Russian Government Committee—a mission which dealt with supplies for the Russian Armies during the first three years of the war—demanding the surrender of all papers in their possession and also of all furniture, etc., of the buildings occupied by the Russian Embassy and Consulate.

As regards the buildings themselves, of which the respective landlords are the Duke of Westminster and the Duke of Bedford and the leaseholders Countess Benckendorff, widow of the last Russian Ambassador, and Baron Heyking, late Consul-General of the Russian Imperial Government, no legal proceedings have so far been instituted.

Refusal to Surrender Documents.

It now seems quite obvious that the Soviet Government really wishes to obtain access to documents which, in the opinion of the Che-Ka, may provide information regarding the activities abroad of loyal Russians who embraced the cause of the White Forces. These documents would provide the Moscow butchers with a new excuse for wholesale executions, and the persecution of all relatives of persons involved in what the Communists call "counter-revolutionary" efforts.

For this reason Rakovsky appears to be particularly insistent on gaining access to the archives of the Consulate-General, where no documents of any political significance or value have ever been kept, but where records of Russian citizens, who have refused to become subjects of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, and continue to use registration and nationality certificates issued by the Russian Refugees' Relief Committee, may be perhaps found.

M. Onou, on being informed by the Foreign Office that, in the opinion of the British Government, he should hand over all his archives to Rakovsky, refused to do so.

BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER

Glowing American Tribute to Cockchafer's Action in the Hawley Affair

The following striking testimony to American feeling in respect of H. M. S. Cockchafer's action at Wanhsien after the murder of Mr. Hawley appeared in the "Morning Oregonian" of June 24.

Portland, June 23.—To the opponents of Anglo-American amity in this country an Association Press dispatch from Peking, printed in the "Oregonian" June 23, seems directly addressed.

The commander of the small British gunboat, the Cockchafer, attached to the Yangtsze river patrol of the North China detachment, who probably does not rank above a captain, took it into his own hands to see that proper respect was given an American citizen beaten to death by Chinese sailors. This particular American received these honours because he was employed by a British firm, Arnhold Brothers & Co., Ld., a corporation having large and varied interests in China.

The British commander went a step further. He insisted that the two leading members of the guild of which these sailors were members should be shot on the beach where the American was fatally assaulted. The dispatch from Peking says he "ordered the Chinese to arrest the two leading members of the junk men's guild, convey them to the spot and execute them." It might be pointed out that the junk men's guild is the "union" or organization to which belong all sailors of Chinese junks, or small freight-carrying sailing vessels.

Had the captain of the Monocacy, Villalobos or any other American gunboat taken such definite action in China there is little doubt that the cry of Chinese students, representing the so-called "new China," would be made with such clamor that it would be followed by a congressional investigation in Washington. Then would naturally follow a battle of party politicians which, if it did not result in a censure for the American naval officer, would probably detract from any action he might have taken.

Possibly there is a lesson for America in the action of the commander of H. M. S. Cockchafer. Possibly this is an indication that the British government is leading other foreign governments in an about-face which will put to an end the dilly-dallying and "face-saving" policies which have been so persistently employed by foreign governments in China.

A few more demonstrations of foreign power, one or two other indications that the "gunboat policy" is still a potentiality if no longer a recognized and definite programme, will put an end to such outrages as the Lincheng bandit episode, the raiding of American and other foreign missions and the holding in captivity of foreign nationals resident in China.

To the commander of the British gunboat Cockchafer Americans owe a debt of gratitude. Possibly he will help us shake off the lethargy of provincialism.

WOMAN'S STATUS IN OLD JAPAN

Members of the Japan Society heard at 22 Russell Square, on April 30, the first part of a paper on "Japanese Marriage Law, Past and Present," which was delivered by Mr. Y. Okuma, Second Secretary at the Japanese Embassy.

Mr. Okuma, speaking of marriage law in the past, said it was based upon the ancient cult of ancestor worship which made it imperative that the family should be perpetuated, and marriage represented a union for this purpose. Although in the earliest times men and woman were on an equal footing the "house-father," the head of the family, gradually increased in power and threw into insignificance the "house-mother." Hence the ascendancy of man over woman, husband over wife. Buddhism, also, weakened the position of women. The belligerent age, before the Tokugawa Shogunate in 1603,led to a further ascendancy of the male. Any act of disobedience to her husband might involve a wife's dismissal. Christianity had had some influence towards the emancipation of women. Even in ancient Japan marriage was a great event and consent was necessary from the heads of both houses concerned. Polygamy was lawful, but not polyandry. Polygamy was usually treated, however, as an unavoidable necessity in the lack of issue. After the introduction of the Chinese legal system there were many changes. A legal status was given to plural wives, who were in a position similar to servants or slaves, the chief wife having maternal rights over their children. Seven causes of divorce were introduced, or rather consolidated. They were sterility, adultery, disobedience to either parent-in-law, loquacity, larceny, jealousy, and serious disease. The wife was divorced by the husband signing a deed, countersigned by the nearest parents or grandparents. The wife could not in any circumstances divorce her husband. In the Tokugawa Shogunate a civil court of divorce administered by the councils of Buddhist temples was formed. Divorce was really expulsion from the house, which permitted the wife to re-marry. The court came into being to enable the wife to divorce the man if the grounds were adjudged reasonable.

In 1896 the Civil Law was codified as a result of Japan throwing off the Chinese legal yoke with the restoration of the Meiji, and adopting a new legislative system, similar to those in every civilized country. As law could not be promulgated rapidly enough to meet the exigencies of the new state of things, the Grand Council of State issued an order that civil cases should be decided by the express provisions of written law and where there was no such law, according to custom. This law is binding even to-day, and opened the door to an influx of foreign law. Translations of the Code Napoleon and other Western law books were published, and unprecedented cases were decided by the Western principle of reason and equity. It thus came to pass that the Civil Code in force now was formed, and is still in force. In its formation the laws of France particularly, and of Germany, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Great Britain, the United States, and other countries were drawn upon, whilst paying due attention to native customs and usage, especially in regard to the laws relating to marriage. Of present-day marriage laws the second part of the paper, to be read at a subsequent session, will speak.

NOT ENOUGH GOLD SOVEREIGNS

Why Paper Pounds Must Still Suffice: 1929 at the Earliest

There is no chance of adopting the suggestion of Professor Gustay Cassel that the British Government and the banks should begin to issue sovereigns and half-sovereigns again and withdraw paper money.

Professor Cassel's reasons are not hygienic, although over 140,000 bacteria may have been discovered on a single Treasury Note, as announced recently by the "Lancet."

Professor Cassel's appeal to England to do the bold thing, and to do it now, by reintroducing gold coinage, is based on nothing like that. He wants England to set an example to other nations, and emphasise the value of the gold standard. So great an authority as Sir Felix Schuster, and other bankers, are inclined that way also.

But from a Treasury authority I learn (writes an "Evening Standard" representative) that there is not the slightest prospect of any immediate return to gold currency, however desirable economically or hygienically that may be.

"There is a new price level since the war. Far more money is in circulation," I was told. "The sovereigns, half-sovereigns and the bullion of the Bank and the Banks could not meet the requirements in a re-introduced gold currency, taking into account the reserves which must be held at the Bank of England.

"One cannot expect a return to gold currency at the earliest, I should say, before 1929, and it is doubtful even at that remote period on the present outlook."

OUR AUSTRALIAN LETTER

Protectionists' and Freetraders' Futile Attempts to Sink Differences and Combine against Labour: Proposal to Build Two 10,000-ton Cruisers and Dock

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

Melbourne, June 2.

The position of Mr. Bruce, the Prime Minister, since he returned from Britain, has been getting increasingly difficult. It is not always easy to judge of the progress of events by the daily newspapers, for after all each has its own particular dish to cook, and it finds ingredients in each daily ministerial utterance or action. We were assured that Mr. Bruce and Dr. Earle Page, who is both Treasurer and leader of the Country Party, were conferring together with a view to ariving at some common modus operandi between the two parties against Labour.

An agreement has now been announced, but it amounts to very little. Practically it is that the first claim to existing seats at the next elections shall be with those (not Labour) at present holding them. If there are three-corner fights for Labour seats the preference votes shall be exchanged in such a way that the Labour boatswain gets all the shot. It is to be midshipman Easy duel over again. This seems perfectly simply, but at the moment of writing the agreement has only been reached as between Dr. Page and Mr. Bruce, and in these days there are thousands to say that the leaders cannot control the organizations behind them, but that they are merely the servants to do what the organization say. Dr. Page and Mr. Bruce may advise and recommend, but already Dr. Page is preparing for the fight of his political life. There is to be held in little less than a fortnight a conference of the Federal Country party unions, which after all means the unions of primary producers who have been dragged into the political scrimmage.

That the majority of farmers, like the majority of workers, know anything about politics or anything that is said in their name, is not to be believed. But it is before these delegates that Dr. Page has to explain the agreement. What they will say is on the lap of the Gods; equally, therefore, is the political fate of the Commonwealth Treasurer.

The Fiscal Issue.

Since the House of Representatives foregathered at the end of March there have been several indirect attacks by Country members upon the fiscal policy of the country. This so far is protectionist to an indubitable extent, but the freetraders are never weary of fighting their battles, and a section of the Country party—chiefly those who never belonged to Labour, and never will—have been helping the press with deputations to ministers, questions in parliament and general propaganda. Mr. Stewart, Minister for Works and Railways, is a freetrader, yet he found himself, in the interests of local engineers, compelled to vote for a local railway engine contract, about £30,000 in excess of duty paid imported English makes.

I told the story about the dumping duties on wire netting, and hardly a day passes but similar arguments arise. Suddenly, Mr. Chapman, minister for Trade and Customs, and author of the uncivil dismissal of Mr. E. S. Little as Trade Commissioner at Shanghai, announced his resignation, alleging ill-health as the reason. No one doubts that his health was bad, but many question its bearing upon his sudden retirement from a posititon in which he had not done a great deal of work, and was only about to fight battles in Parliament. Some think he was sacrificed to propitiate the Country party, and others that he was jettisoned by Mr. Bruce because the New South Wales section of the Nationalists were not satisfied with him, considering him too friendly with the leader of the Country party, and too doubtful as a serious protectionist. But the facts seem to be clear. The Country party is composed of Protectionists and Freetraders, and also of Conservatives and ex-Labourites, whose sole common issue is the price of farming implements, fertilizers and binding string. Outside those issues they revert, politically to their old faith, and exactly as the Nationalists—composing Liberals and ex-Labour—revert, so do the supporters of the Country party. This is an aspect of the matter that so far very few seem to recognize. Those who support Nationalist or Liberal governments continue to insist that all we require is a combination of the anti-Labour parties, quite ignoring the fact that there are now no so-called anti-Labour parties, such parties as do exist being composed of half Conservative and half Labour, with the latter ready to revert the moment the Conservative appears to be having his own way. For nearly 25 years Labour has held its own and gained a strength by sinking the fiscal question on its own account and allowing its opponents to break themselves on the rock before its eyes. The question seems to be whether the anti-Labour crowd will allow history to repeat itself. From all appearances it will.

The Northern Territory—Another Enigma.

If it were thought, from all the statements made during the long reces, that at last there was something definite and progressive to be said about the 500,000 square miles forming Australia's Northern Territory, called by unimaginative people the desert heart of the country or the Achilles' heel, so far anticipations have been disappointed. There has been introduced a Bill to provide for the termination of certain pastoral leases, which have still many years to run, and a rearrangement by which areas will be leased for pastoral purposes for long periods, subject to stocking, but with a reserved right to the Crown for reclaiming for closer settlement. Before South Australia handed the Territory over to the Commonwealth the State politicians undoubtedly sold practically all the interests, and the Commonwealth, under Deakin, took over the country with all the shackles of half-century leases. The present effort is to repudiate the leases, without appearing to do so. The offer is made that if the leases are surrendered other long leases will be granted, but obviously on terms more suited to the Commonwealth. To most people this seems a quite sensible thing to do, but Labour politicians will not learn. They still think that perpetual leasehold is a good thing, but if one offers a pastoral area under a 42 year lease they regard it as a "boodling swindle." Labour demands that we should do nothing with the Territory until a committee of some sort has wandered through the country and reported. This is of course merely playing for the time when the Labour party will be back in office and once more empowered to further exploit its theory that by the appointment of officials, and the promise of government transport and other encouragement, with some additional miles of non-paying railway there will come, like a bolt from the blue, thousands of settlers who, like the locusts, will seek what they can devour, and for the moment give an appearance of prosperity to the new State. Therefore, Labour opposes anything so common-place as the stage from empty country to pastoral occcupation, and from that to closer settlement. It thinks it can make a gigantic leap. Yet there is not a sufficiently solid backing behind the Bruce Government to prevent weeks of parliamentary work being wasted, while the theorists blow their inept horns.

Critic of Port Darwin as Naval Base.

The question of Australian defence, now that the Singapore base is hung up is exercising the Government. We are promised that a complete statement will shortly be made. Mr. Marks, a New South Wales representative, who saw a good deal of active service during the war as a lieutenant of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, and who has recently visited the East and is shortly leaving for England, fired something of a bombshell into the Northern Territory camp the other day by strongly denouncing as the height of folly any attempt to make a base at Darwin. Yet this was the chief hope of the few whites living in the town, the port of which has been praised by naval experts, and is said to be our gateway to the East. Mr. Marks argued that the place could not be defended and that it was too far from the trade routes of the Indian Ocean. He wanted the base somewhere on the western coast. He did not believe Australia had anything to fear from Japan, yet he admitted that that country was the only potential enemy in sight. This was sufficient to arouse the Labour Opposition which denounced any references to Japan as calculated to make that country declare war on Australia. Despite the fact that Russia keeps all her neighbours simmering with anxiety lest she become aggressive, Labour politicians in this country persist in believing that the proletariat" is peaceful, and what is still less intelligible that the "proletariat" actually rules any country.

Two 10,000-ton Cruisers Wanted.

Mr. Bruce, the Price Minister, is shortly asking parliament for an appropriation of £2,500,000 towards the building of two modern 10,000-ton cruisers. When he makes his statement we may also expect that he will propose the construction of at least one dock which will take any of the 14 capital British ships which have no docking facilities east of Suez. There is a general desire to bring all political parties to a common understanding as to the broad principles of defence so that a policy may be laid down covering a number of years, but it seems difficult to reconcile the views of Labour with those of any party holding that defence preparation is a national duty and necessity.

Back to Work.

The influence of the Commonwealth Arbitration Court has been shown in a peculiar way lately. It will be remembered that Melbourne had a tramway strike, which strike resulted in a number of new motor-buses, which being faster and more convenient to enter at the kerbside, instead of in the middle of the streets, are cutting seriously into the tramway service. The men would not go back to work, because it would appear as if they had "climbed down." Mr. Justice Powers, President of the Arbitration Court, ordered them back to work and they went joyfully declaring, like Gilbert's Rev. Hopley Porter, that

For days they'd longed for some
For this revulsion;
Now that excuse had some
They do it on compulsion.

Of course it is explained that they had to obey the Court, lest perchance their union be de-registered, which would mean that the employers would no longer be bound to pay wages according to award. Following immediately upon this came the matter of a number of coastal steamers, as mentioned in my last which were hung up, crews refusing to offer until the company had paid up a claim for a man's bruised thumb.

Mr. Justice Powers ordered these men back, and they also promptly obeyed, and the steamers are running again. In each case it is probable that the men acted unthinkingly obeying the orders of their union officials. Certainly in neither case were they given the opportunity of taking a secret ballot as to whether or no they should leave work, but for all that the Arbitration Court clearly has its uses, if only as a means of retreat for the men from an unjustifiable and hopeless position.

Indications of Trade Prosperity.

The Treasury returns of the Commonwealth and the States for the month of May and for the 11 months of the financial year 1923-24 indicate that the various governments are doing better financially than they did last year. The Federal revenue largely exceeds the estimates made by the Treasurer, and the several State returns indicate increasing revenues, largely from taxation, which in no way accords with the popular impression that business is bad, and that the country is on the verge of financial stringency. The wheat crop was taken off early in the year successfully, and the returns are good, while prices remain high. The pastoral districts have had good rains, and the price of wool remains attractive. A big meat contract has been secured by Queensland from the Imperial government, the cotton harvest is giving good results, and as to sugar the season has been so exceptionally favourable that many of the sugar mills are starting work weeks before their usual time. Maize and fruit are also giving good results and the spirit of organization is abroad, so that the producers will not find that seasonal amenities are at once followed by the glutting of the markets, and low and unremunerative prices.

The erection of the Celotex factory, costing £300,000, is practically assured, and this will give grater profits to the sugar industry, while the manufacture of motor spirit from molasses will add a value of about 15s. to every ton of sugar.

Mining alone does not show any progressive activity, though there are immense quantities of minerals to be recovered the moment the cost of doing so can be brought down. The prospecting and development of the Mount Isa silver field in North Queensland is proceeding, and so far there is no reason to consider the earlier estimates exaggerated. The public credit is good the Commonwealth having just borrowed £10,000,000 in London and New South Wales, £5,000,000. Yet business is declared dull, and there is a good deal of pessimism for which one cannot account, and with which it is difficult to agree.

"PARROT TALK"

Mr. G. B. Shaw on the Speaking of English: His Dislike of Asparagus

Mr. George Bernard Shaw took part, on May 31, in the campaign against slipshod English, speaking at the assembly of the English Association at Bedford College, Regent's Park.

Mr. Shaw began by asking his audience if they had ever known a family with "a celebrated talking parrot." The family, he said, asked their friends to come and hear Polly say such pretty things as "Pretty Polly," "Give me a lump of sugar," and "Fetch a cab." But when they got there they heard Polly produce nothing but what were to them inarticulate noises, yet were to the family intelligible phrases. The parrot, as a matter of fact, had originally spoken those words quite distinctly; then gradually there had set in a decay of language. The phrases had become modified little by little, until finally the parrot had arrived at sounds which were not in the least like the original thing. The family had not noticed the change which had been going on.

That was an instance of the decay of language which occurred very extensively among human beings. If they went into Covent Garden they would hear a great deal of that parrot talk. There was more of that parrot talk than they imagined, because, in regard to a great deal of it they were in the relative position of the family to the parrot. Supposing, however, that a foreigner who had learned English well were put into Covent Garden, he would not understand the language there because it had gone through a process of decay, and the people there were not speaking English.

"What you ought to aim at," said Mr. Shaw, "is to speak English that will be intelligible to a foreigner. It is not sufficient for us to be intelligible to one another, because we are in the relation of the family to the parrot."

"Mumble, Mumble, Mumble."

Mentioning some of the difficulties met with in spoken language, Mr. Shaw said:—

"Occasionally someone asks me out, and, very exceptionally, I accept the invitation. Then I always find that, as I am the celebrated Bernard Shaw, people want to be introduced to me. Many of them cut it short by coming up boldly and claiming that they have known me for years. Eventually my hostess comes up and says, 'Oh, Mr. Bernard Shaw, may I have the pleasure of introducing to you—mumble, mumble, mumble.' I sometimes feel like saying to my hostess, 'If you had only been articulate when you came to Miss Smith or the Countess of So-and-so, you would have been of some use to me.'"

Another difficulty fatal to good conversation was the indiscriminate use of a word or the act of jumping at its meaning. "When I am invited out to lunch," he said, "my hostess, who has heard I am a vegetarian, unfortunately buys an extremely unpleasant vegetable, called asparagus, which I cannot eat. I am presented with an enormous dish of it, and there is nothing for me to do but to refuse it. She says, 'Won't you take asparagus?' I say 'No, I don't like asparagus,' and she replies, 'Oh, you are a pessimist.'"

Tracing the deterioration in pronounciation as shown in the use of the word "modern," which had now become "mode'n," and would soon become "mod'n," he said that a great deal of that was due to pure slovenliness, which should not be encouraged, as it destroyed some of the variety and music of the language.

No Correct Language.

People should be taught to cultivate and be proud of a certain athleticism in their speech. There was athleticism in articulation as in other things, and he did not know why it was that so many young people who were quite properly proud of athleticism in lawn tennis and other sports should yet be intolerably slovenly when they came to speech. "I think they ought to be made a little ashamed of it," he said, "and be taught to understand that the most intelligent and cultured people are generally rather particular about their articulation. I am, for example—(laughter)—but, generally speaking in public, one has to be."

"You must not make the mistake of trying to get a correct language," said Mr. Shaw. "There is no such thing. You will not get any two people who agree as to what correct language is." There was, however, a genuine public demand for something else. People knew very well that certain sorts of speech cut off a person for ever from getting more than three or four pounds a week all their life long—sorts of speech which made them entirely impossible in certain professions. People were saying: "I don't want to be taught correct English or anything of the kind, but will you teach me an English which will pass, which will be good enough if I am made King, or Lord Chief Justice, or Prime Minister."

"Correct English does not matter so much now," added Mr. Shaw, amidst laughter, "although fortunately we have a Prime Minister who speaks extremely good English. But your next Labour Minister may not be so good as Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. So you will have to get a standard actor, say Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, whose English is absolutely unchallengeable, to set before people a standard and say 'That is good enough. If you come within a certain distance of that you will be all right.'"

CANADA'S GATEWAY TO UNITED STATES

Immigrants Lost to the British Empire

A curious situation has arisen in connexion with immigration from Britain to the North American continent. Since the beginning of the year a considerable stream of British immigrants has been entering Canada—there were 72,919 altogether during the fiscal year—an increase of 38,411 over the previous 12 months.

A statement made to the Press by Mr. Chester W. Martin, the American Consul in Toronto, discloses, however, the disturbing information that a very large number of these immigrants are anxious to settle not in Canada, but in the United States.

Under the American quota law there can be admitted to the United States each year, beginning July 1, 77,342 immigrants of British origin, of whom no more than 20 per cent. can enter in any single month. The monthly British quota is, therefore, 15,468, and Mr. Martin states that at his office in Toronto there have already been made this year enough applications for passports for British immigrants to fill up the whole available quota for the first month.

The quota system does not apply to Canadians, but under the American regulations people who have been born in Britain must have resided five years in Canada in order to qualify for the privilege of free entry gvien to bonâ fidè Canadians.

Many of the applicants for these passports are new arrivals from Britain. When July 1 dawns there will likely be long queues of British immigrants at all the ports of entry along the Ontario border. First come, first served is the rule, and the prospects are that the British quota may be exhausted within a few hours or a day at the outside.

In such circumstances it would be well for British immigrants bound for the United States by sea to make sure of passages on a boat which will guarantee to land them at an American port in the early hours of July 1. If they do not take this precaution a serious disappointment may await them.

THE GREAT DIVIDE

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, Sunday Evening May 25.

Text:St. Mark I. 13; "And he was with the wild beasts."

Most normally-minded people have a dread of being out in lonely places in the dark. There are a few frontiersmen in half-settled countries who do not feel it. I met one in Vancouver, who told me, that he could sleep out in the forest, and risk the cougars. Such people are the exception. Most of us have an eerie feeling if we are out alone on a moor or in a wood, in the darkness. The silence of night is not a beautiful thing; it is a very grim thing, if you are out in it alone, far away from town or village. The sounds of the night are haunting, the creaking of the boughs of trees, the sibilations of the grasses. Nature becomes a sort of prison in which we are condemned to solitary confinement, and the silence affects us as that affects prisoners. I have known people overtaken by night in a Japanese forest among the mountains. They have described it as weird and creepy, however brave a face they had to put on it. No one likes it. We are social creatures. No one seeks the lonely country at night, unless forced.

Yet, here we have this terse and striking sentence about Jesus Christ; "He was with the wild beasts." Out there in the unenclosed grassland, most probably somewhere east of Jordan, on some height, which seems implied in one of his temptations, with the cries of the wild creatures, mingling with the other sounds of nature, winds and vegetation, Jesus was alone. He was a townsman; He had lived in a family circle. To be out in the night alone was not congenial to Him. He was no frontier hunter, who had been used to nights in the wild. But this is what we read; He had just been baptized by John in Jordan. On coming out of the water, He had heard a voice from heaven saying, "Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased." That gives us no hint of what should follow. We should never have guessed it. What we read is, "And immediately the Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness. And He was there in the wilderness 40 days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and angels ministered unto Him."

The Great Choice.

What is the meaning of all this? It was a divine impulse that sent Him into the wilderness. God, acting through His higher nature sent Him out. And He was tempted of Satan; tempted to use His mighty powers to satisfy His hunger; tempted to acknowledge that evil is the ruling power of the world: tempted to use the power He possessed to win cheap applause by casting Himself from a height of the temple. There is, however, no need for us to go into the particulars of the temptations; St. Mark does not even name them, because he knew that the form of them of them does not matter. But the essence of this experience of His with the wild beasts does. What was the essence of it? Jesus had come to the crisis of His life. First, let us notice, that His had developed to the full. As a boy of 12 years, He had had some inkling, that He was no ordinary person, for He said to His father and mother, "Wist ye not, that I must be about my father's business?" We need not wonder at such precocity. Francis Bacon, at the age of 12, came to the conclusion, that the whole philosophy of Europe needed remodelling. In the light of the transcendent position of Jesus in the esteem of mankind, it is not asking too much of anyone to believe, that Jesus Christ was, at least, as able as Bacon. He was now 30 years of age. He had grown up thinking, reading the Scriptures, meditating, brooding over life and His relation to it. He knew well enough of what He was capable. Mr. Augustine Birrell has a very deep and true remark about John Wesley. There is a common idea that genius is largely unconscious, that great men do not know that they are great. He says, they know it well enough. He says, No one knew better than Wesley, that if he had taken his great talents into the political market he could have risen to the first place in English life. But he threw aside the temptation; he gave himself to the service of Christ, to an income of 90 pounds a year, to toils incredible. And Jesus, in the wilderness feeling the surging of these vast powers in Himself, faced it out, whether He should use his talents for God and for man, or whether He should use them for self. Then in addition to His consciousness of vast powers, He had become aware, that He stood in a special relation to God, His Father. This had been growing on Him. John had confirmed it. He was the Messiah, on whom the tremendous burden of redeeming the world was laid. All this was upon Him. And the "Spirit drave Him into the wilderness." The meaning is clear enough. He was man too; He was tempted in all points like as we are." If not what use is the story to us at all?

The World's Destiny.

So He was "with the wild beasts." He had it out with Himself, with His conscience, with God. He looked at it from every point of view Dr. Whyte thinks that it was the saying of John, that He was the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," which brought before Him, as nothing had ever brought it home to Him before, the terrible destiny in store for Him. John's words flashed it into the very innermost region of His soul. Sometimes we know things without realizing them. A cancer patient knows generally, that he cannot get better. Then comes a day when he realizes, that he has only a few hours to live. Jesus realized His tremendous work. We do not know more than faintly what sin is before God, its awfulness. We should be different people, if we did. He knew and the awful burden thrown on Him of putting it away-And He had to have it out with His own soul.

He must pray about it, wrestle with it. As a man, there were two courses before Him. A glimpse of the two courses was before Him in the Garden when He prayed, that if possible the cup of pain and agony might pass away from Him. How much more likely that the two courses of obedience and refusal should be before Him now in the heyday of His youth. So He was driven into the wilderness, to think, to set the great life-work in the clear light of His consciousness, to take up the work His Father had given Him with a clear will, with full knowledge of all that it involved. He was "with the wild beasts," with God, with His soul, with the destiny of mankind hanging on His decision. There is a remote height in one of the Americas, called "The Great Divide." The waters on one side of it flow down to the Atlantic, the waters on the other side flow down to the Pacific. They never meet. So in the career of Jesus. He had come to the "Great Divide." The whole destiny of the world depended on His decision. All that was involved in His being "with the wild beasts."

To Everyone a Moment.

Every man and woman must some time or other be "with the wild beasts." There comes a time in every life, sometimes more times than one, when we have to have it out with ourselves on which side our life forces are going to flow. There comes a time when we know well enough in our inmost heart, that we have to decide whether good or evil shall be our choice, whether we shall obey God or the devil. The better and the worse are always presenting themselves to us. Life sees to that. We are in a tangled world. We are surrounded by all kinds of allurements and incitements towards the better and towards the worse. And it is not only the world outside us, that tempts us. In our own nature, there are strange forces working, one striving upward to God, one trying to force us downward to the pit. Paul felt the terrible conflict within him; "For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am carnal, sold under sin; for that which I do I know not: for not what I would, that do I practice; but what I hate, that I do." Well, when a man has come to that pass, that he does what he hates doing, then is the time for him to have it out with himself, to "be with the wild beasts." That is the crucial time of his life. That is the time when his whole future is at stake. Let him pray, let him struggle with the wrong bias, let him cast himself on God, as the Saviour did in the wilderness. The reason why there are so many wrecked lives, is that men let themselves drift, let passion get a stronger and stronger grip of them. It is as Thomas A'Kempis quoting an old poet says,

> "Take physic early; medicines come too late
> When the disease is grown inveterate."

It is well to notice, that the need of a time in the wilderness with the wild beasts, a time of resolutely facing our high destiny to be an obedient child of God, or a disobedient prodigal, lies in the very nature of man. We belong to two worlds, the physical and the spiritual. The history of every man is broadly the same. We are born with the physical dominant. A baby can suck and sleep. It cannot think, at least not much, it cannot pray. We grow up, and, as we know, the aim of all education, all religious and moral instruction is to make the mind and soul develop and grow. The physical passions remain in us; they must, but we have to learn that they are not to rule us, but we to rule them. We have been introduced to the world of unseen things, purity, faith, knowledge, to God, to the world of truth revealed in Christ.

In our earlier years mostly, there comes a time when we are on the edge of the wilderness. We can see the two courses before us. We can choose to take the good things the world offers, and please ourselves, or we can choose the "better part," to "put first things first," the law of God, purity, unselfishness, Christlikeness. Happy is it for the man, who at the time that he sees clearly the distinction between the better and the worse, goes into the wildness and "is with the wild beasts." He can do that in a room in a lodging-house or hotel where he is living. He can be alone there and have it out with himself. Which is right? Which is better? What is the result of one course and what the result of the other? If a man does that, he may be just as certain that it is the Spirit of God who is driving him to the conflict and to the chance of a right decision, as Jesus knew that it was God's Spirit, who drove him. Dante calls the young man, who, in the Gospels, turned away from Christ, him who "made the great refusal." Happy is the man or woman, who comes out of the wilderness on the right side, the side of God and goodness.

From Buddha to Olympia.

The life of mankind teems with cases. In the general sense we find them in all religions, as in the forms of Christianity. The beginning of Buddhism was in the life of an Indian prince. Once he saw that he might give up all his grandeur for the sake of mankind, or go on enjoying it for himself alone. After a time in "the wilderness," as it were, he gave up all his grandeur, and surrendered himself to what he conceived to be the service of man. It might be shown, that all men, who have done great things for God and man, have been "with the wild beasts," in lonely wrestling with self, when the vision of a better and nobler life has come to them. There is the case of the Apostle Paul. When Christ appeared to him on the way to Damascus, he soon went into the solitudes of Arabia, there to let the new Truth soak into his soul, to think out all that the vision meant to him. He had to have it out with himself. How he emerged from the desert, we all know from the work he did and the place he holds in the Christian world. Sometimes Christian men are face to face with a new situation, a new demand upon them, and they are asked to do or sanction something, that is not at clear. The only way is to have it out. There is the case of Mr. Eric Liiddell, the fast runner. I see, that he refused to run at the coming Olympic Races at Paris, if they were held on a Sunday. We know that out here there are plenty of men, who would say, Why not on Sunday? Sunday is the sports day. It is in France. Well, Christianity is not hard in its "Sabbatarianism." The texts you can quote from the words of Christ are all in favour of reasonable liberty. But Christianity does demand, at least, attention to the needs of the soul; "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation;" said Jesus; And he said, "The hour cometh when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for such doth the Father seek to worship Him." Now, I have never noticed that the men and women who make Sunday a sports day, make up for their Sunday total neglect of worship, by devoting some other time or part of another day to the worship and the sublime things, for which Sunday stands. Under present day conditions of life it does look as if religion stands or falls with Sunday. And it would be a good thing if many people concerned went out into the wilderness, and were "with the wild beasts" as the Lord was, and had this matter out.

And in the Far East.

Finally, consider, what a number of lives would have been saved from moral, religious and social wreckage, among the men who have came out East to business, if they had, on arrival here, amid new circumstances, new luxuries, "been with the wild beasts," for a time. That is if, on arrival and after a survey of the new temptations to sins and luxuries, new to them, they had had it out with themselves. A man is on the "Great Divide" when he arrives. Drink is cheaper, credit easier, than at home. The old tempter is at his old game. He "sheweth" a young arrival "all the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them." And he says still, "All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." At this point, when he realizes the two courses before him, there is nothing for it, if his soul is to be saved from ruin, but for him to let the Spirit of God, who is speaking to him as truly as He spake to the Saviour, "drive" him out into the wilderness, to be "with the wild beasts," and have it out with himself, which life he can choose. His lodging room can be the wilderness. He can think of all he has been taught of the Christ, who died for him to bear away his sins; he can think of all he knows and really believes of the supremacy of truth and holiness over excess and vice he can think of everything "pure and of good report" and everything "in whose heart are the seeds of death," and happy is he, if he comes out of the wilderness on the right side. I could speak for hours of men who have come out and, for want of this bold facing of the tempter, have gone under. If there is but one listening to me, let him, like the Master "be with the wild beasts," and let him also come out in the power of the Spirit.

THE ANTI-FOREIGN FEELING AND THE KU KLUX KLAN

Organization Claim to Fight Bolshevist Propaganda in the Interest of Good Feeling between China and Foreigners

Not much has of late been heard of the Ku Klux Klan. In the following article one of its supporters explains what it is intended to do. We publish this as a statement from the K. K. K. side, but take no responsibility for its statements.

About four months ago several well known Chinese began to realize that there was a very decided anti-foreign propaganda started through Shanghai and vicinity and unless something was done it would advance to the point where the Foreign Powers, who have about reached their patience, would interfere. This the better class of Chinese dread, not because they do not desire a staple government but they believe that if the Powers ever send in troops and take over the Government, it will mean the subjection of the Chinese, and China as a nation will cease. Thinking Chinese believe that the day is coming when the other nations will be compelled to take over the government of China as they see the military leaders striving with all possible haste to enrich themselves and working in line with the doctrines of the Soviets who have had agents among them for these many months. The military officers believe that with the aid of the "Reds" they can keep out the other nations.

Agents of Moscow.

At the present time there are numbers of paid agents of the Moscow Government spreading the tenents of the Soviets to the people of Shanghai and vicinity. These agents are Chinese, mostly students who have come down from the north within the past three months. They are telling the people what a wonderful country Russia is under the "Red" rule and how the other nations have had to accept the peace terms as demanded by Moscow and how wonderful it was that Russia conceded the terms she did to China. They state that Moscow after a thorough investigation of the Chinese courts found that they were based on justice. They state that these laws are satisfactory to them, and the administration of justice by the Chinese is as honest as in any country. Then why if the Soviets are and were satisfied to come under the rule of the Chinese courts should not the other nations be compelled to abandon the extraterritorial rights that they are fighting so much for?

These agents go among the working people, students and the small merchants and point out the small wages paid and the huge profits, the foreigner is supposed to be making out of the labour of the Chinese. They tell the worker when he does work for foreigners to delay and do the poorest class of work and spoil everything possible, so as to make the cost high. They persuade the small merchant that the foreigner is taking all the profits from him and keeping him poor.

Red Army to the Rescue.

The worst feature of the propaganda is that the Chinese are advised that if they will harass and drive out the foreigner the Soviets will, it is alleged, send an army to assist China in case she is attacked by a foreign Power. The Chinese believe this, especially the military leaders, that if they help the Soviets and receive assistance from them, no other power will dare invade her.

The workers are told to strike at all times for more wages and keep on striking so that soon the capitalists will become discouraged and then the workers can take over the factories and run them as such are run in Russia under the Soviet plan whereby all workers receive the full benefits of their labour.

Missions the Chief Target.

Missionaries are the especial target of these propagandists; the people are informed that as long as the missionaries are permitted to remain, the Powers of the world will have a hold on China; they point out how the missionaries first went to India; and England "brought India to slavery." If the missionaries are driven out, then the nations will have no excuse for interfering in the affairs of China as the missionaries are only spies for the nations, especially American and English. The spirits of the departed are destroyed wherever a Christian church is erected, is another thought they try to teach. "Drive out the foreign devils and your ancestors will rest in peace and prosperity will again come to the land" was heard spoken in Chapei just a short time ago to a crowd near the railroad yards, and during this time there were at least ten police listening.

Soviet Money Plentiful.

That these agents are stirring up the people can be seen every day in the actions of the police, in their attitude to the foreigner and in the attitude of the Chinese press of late which has come out openly against the foreigners. Soviet money is plentiful to those that work for her and spread her doctrine of hate and anarchy and she is finding willing workers in a class of Chinese who consider nothing except how much "chance" they can get; they do not care that they are ruining their country and people, not that it is hastening the day when the Powers of the world will be compelled to drive out those who are using the Government for their selfish ends.

This is what the organized four knew being spread. After a meeting they called in others that were of the same opinion as to the danger of this propaganda and a society was formed to help counteract it. At that time there was considerable agitation in America over the Ku Klux Klan, the society thought that the use of a similar name would attract attention and help bring in members, so the society was called the "Order of the Three K's." Only those who were recommended and guaranteed by members were to be admitted and at the time of the raid by the Chapei police about 3,000 had already signed the obligation.

The raid gave a slight set-back to the order, but the leaders who started it are determined to go ahead and fight the insidious teachings of the Soviets who are doing all that is possible to create a condition that will compel the Powers to take over China. Moscow's secret motive in this is that Russia would then obtain what she cannot get now, her concessions back and another slice of China as well.

BEGGAR-VOICES

I

Ho for thy lusty voice
Passing our door!
Gender-warned, trusty voice
Dawn at four—

Gilding the hours by Chanting of beans,
Turning to flowers thy
Barrow of greens!

II

Where soft a child is singing,
And other children play,
A little child is bringing
The tribute of her day.

Her voice is quick and lithesome—
Her pigtail swinging gay,
Her voice is sweet and blithesome
To beg along the way.

Her bonny self's a treasure,
So what if Fate's unkind?
To see her is a pleasure,
So what if she be blind?

III

With a call, and a call, on his oft-trod beat
The old news-vendor comes down the street.
With a bundle of papers under his arm
He flings his cry like a magic charm,
And the little ragamuffins along the way
Mock at his crying the livelong day.
With a few small coppers he fills his purse
While the world turns on for better or worse;
But little cares he for the world's mad whirl
For him west of news is an old song unfurled.

IV

What are you selling but sorrow,
Pitiful man in the street?
Is it a song for to-morrow
Out of the bowl you beat?

Up in my chamber I hear you,
Tapping your wooden refrain—
Tell me the tale of it, ere you
Pass on your journey again.

Dark is the night, and the raindrops
Flash as you hurry along!
Fashioned in pity the pain drops,
Pure as the woe of your song!

Song of the hills ever golden,
Gleaming to answer the sun,
Song of a search that is olden,
Search that will never be done.

Sing for to-day and to-morrow!
Toll for the yesterday sweet!
Buying your alms with a sorrow,
Tapping your bowl in the street.

V

Is it a god with a silver rod,
Beating a bowl of jade?
Or only the bell of a blind beggar-man,
Led by a little maid?

CYCLOPS.

PEKING is much exercised over the latest rumour regarding alleged British encroachments in Tibet. A Japanese news agency states that Mr. Lu Hsin-chi, Chinese Amban in Tibet (who is now residing in India) has cabled to Dr. Wellington Koo, Foreign Minister, on the illegality of the appointment of a British police officer in Lhassa for the training of the Tibetan police without the concurrence or knowledge of China and that the Waichiaopu should protest to the British Legation in Peking against it. According to Mr. Lu, the chief cause for the Panchan Lama's departure for China was political disagreement between himself and the Dalai Lama of Lhassa and that the original intention of the Panchan Lama was to visit the first Mongolian Hutuktu in Urga. Now on account of the death of the Urga Hutuktu, the Panchan Lama will come up to Peking from Lanchow when cooler weather sets in this year, reports Gen. Lu Hung-tao of Kansu.

AN AUDIENCE WITH THE PANCHAN LAMA

Motion-picture Operator's Romantic Experience: Living Buddha's Interest in the Men from Afar: Thought Koreans Could Walk under Water

The following account of a movie man's adventurous journey to Western China is contributed by Mr. Eugene Lamb, leader of the camera expedition sent out by the Sino-Tibetan Motion Picture Co.

The writer is accompanied by Mrs. Lamb, who has cheerfully and successfully encountered all the hardships of the journey to date, and Mr. F. Tangier-Smith.

Leaving Peking early in the year, the party set out with the intention of following the route taken by Marco Polo on his famous journey into China, taking pictures of all the interesting places and scenes in the life of the people along this ancient highway. Upon reaching Lanchowfu in Northern Kansu, the party had the good fortune to meet the caravan of the Panchan Lama, the Living Buddha of Tibet, on his way to Peking, and Mr. Lamb was successful in obtaining an audience with the Holy Man, and even in inducing him to pose for a picture.

Months ago there started from Shanghai a little group of five,—three foreigners and two Chinese. With them they carried many cases containing cameras and films. Their destination was Tibet. With the cameras and films they secretly hoped to bring Tibet back with them so that all the world could peer for an instant into the portals of that forbidden land.

Their departure from the outset was made under difficulties. Hordes of bandits commanded the road over which they had to go to reach Ning Hsia, and only two days prior to their leaving they had chatted with Father Van Praet, the Catholic Priest recently released by the bandits after days of captivity, hardships and privations. Twenty-one days later, the party rode into Ning Hsia safe and sound, a little tired, covered with dust, but still "going to Tibet."

Trudging Across Gobi.

March and April found the five out on Gobi. The carts had given way to camels now. In single file, they trudged across the great sand desert. No bandits here, but something worse. Sand, oceans of it. Towards each corner of the earth this endless sea stretched out, its surface like a tormented sea, and for a road, an almost invisible hint of camel tracks, left by the last caravan. To depart from this meant disaster, for only on this trail at intervals of two or three days may one find a meagre water supply, drawn from a shallow filthy hole, into which seeps the few drops which run beneath the surface.

May came with its awakening of life. The cold winter winds gave place to the warming sun, gentle showers swept the land in lieu of the terrible dust storms which rage over this country in winter and with this smile of spring upon them the party settled down in camp outside of Liang Chou, but a few score miles from the Tibetan border. And now came the great news. Liang Chou fairly hummed with strange tales and gossip, for the Living Buddha, the Pan Chen Rinpoche was fleeing from Ta Haidumpo, his official residence and would shortly pass through Liang Chou on his way to China.

Days passed Now it was heard that the Great "Fo Yeh" had arrived at Hsu Chou, no, he was already in Kanchow. But he was to pass through Liangchow. That was sufficient. Five men lugged at tent stakes, and they were off to intersect the course of the Panchan Lama and to "shoot" him. Two days later, beneath the very temple window through which the Buddha would gaze while resting in Liangchou, two white tents were pitched. The ground about was strewn with cases, cameras, saddles, provisions—the endless paraphenalia which goes to make up a far interior camp. And on an overturned case a man sat, and deliberated, and wondered where he could get a copy of the latest text book on "How to obtain an interview with a Living Buddha," never thinking that in the end he would have to write that book himself.

Behold the Living Buddha.

May 29. I awakened early this morning, all night I have been pondering over what my luck of tomorrow will be.

At nine o'clock this morning I was sitting idly outside my tent toying with Blotty, the Expedition dog when a breathless youth dashed up and a in a dialect so difficult I could barely understand shouted that the "Ta Fo Yeh" (The Living Buddha) had sent him over to ask me to take his picture. I nearly reeled over backwards. A war-whoop on my part roused the camp, and together Wang and I bundled out a motion-picture camera, magazines and tripods and my favourite still camera. Madly we rushed for the temple gate, up the two long flights of stone stairs which lead to the top elevation and past two very startled looking sentries, at the main portals of his apartment and awaiting us, with reassuring smile was the "K'an Po," next in rank to His Holiness himself. The K'an Po spoke no Chinese, but a Tibetan interpreter stepped forward immediately and together we went to a small side room where I was compelled to take the seat of honour on the kang. For a full half hour we sat together discussing this and that, while attendants brought in a magnificent silver tea service mounted with bits of coral. Several platters of dainties were also produced, including a huge dish of rook candy which unfortunately I helped myself to only to discover that it was as hard as steel and totally beyond my ability to crush. Accordingly, I sat with a large lump of this concealed under my tongue and forvently prayed that sooner or later it would melt, dissolve, or do most anything but occupy such an important position in my vocal organs. My prayer was answered though, for hardly had the last morsel dissolved and been swallowed than an attendant came to escort us to the chamber occupied by the Living Buddha. Its walls were newly papered with Chinese paper, white, and stamped with huge bunches of perfectly impossible pink roses. The floor was covered with a red plush carpet, over which several very beautiful rugs were laid. The furniture was scant to say the least. A few decrepit looking chairs lined the wall and now and then a rather shaky looking table held a potted plant of some kind.

THE PANCHAN LAMAS A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY THE SINO-TIBETAN MOTION-PICTURE CO. AT LIANCHOU, KANSU.

The Lama's Mona Lisa Smile.

My attention was not focussed on these however, for in the centre of the room, bent over a huge volume, sat no other than the Pan Chan Rinpoche, the Living Buddha of Tibet. A small table supported the book he was engaged in reading, and this was covered with a large square of yellow silk, bordered with red. Upon my entering he raised his head and looked directly at me, while a smile, such as I have never seen the like of before bespread his countenance. I hardly remembered to make the low bow I had practised in my imagination, so attracted was I by the appearance of this man. For a moment my gaze rested upon him, and I was impelled by an instinct to go over to him, to stand silently by him and bask in the radience of that smile. My good sense kept me from doing it however, and silently I strode to the other chamber.

Surveying the prospects for picture taking, my decision was easily made. The inner chamber was undoubtedly his personal apartment. Small as it was, it was a fairy scene. Three wide windows opened out into the valley which leads up to Liang Chou, and from here one gazed into the very heart of spring. Little plots of wheat, now so green. Here and there large plots of mustard grew—vivid yellow patches which swayed in the morning breeze—while down the banks of the many little streams the wild iris bloomed, adding a touch of lavender to a scene already perfect. Facing the open windows the dais had been raised flanked on each side by tables exquisitely carved and covered with cut flowers, the huge chair upon which the "Fo Yeh" sits and thinks of the sins of this world was placed, and over this was draped yards of gorgeus yellow flowered silk, I stood entranced with the picture, when into my mind crept the professional side of it, and I made a quick survey of the lighting possibilities. Once that was done I signalled to my guide that I was ready, when he came hastily forward and asked that I again accompany him to the small reception room to wait while his Holiness changed his attire. This gave me an opportunity to set up my machines, and as I threaded the film into the "take up" magazine I hoped that when I again saw it it would be to see the impressions of the Living Buddha. I explained that I would take the "still" pictures first. The whole proceeding was greatly simplified the immoveable attitude of the Buddha. He sat in his customary posture of the Great Gautama, absolutely rigid, eyes straight adead, and hands folded on his lap. I had been so reluctant to stare at him, that I took advantage of my focusing plate, and through this, concealed by my black cloth I gazed upon the man who had taken so great pains to enter into the presonce of. The "stills" finished I moved toward my movie machine, explaining that there would he no occasion for alarm. The Buddha smiled.

This Interest in the Men from Afar.

When I had finished, a few words were exchanged with his interpreter who now said that this being the first opportunity his Holiness had ever had of meeting an American he wished that I would be seated. I was shown to a chair on the Great Buddha's right, and sitting quiety there the good man turned towards me smilingly. The "K'an Po" stood directly in front of him in an inclined position, his eyes on the ground. Upon addressing the Buddha he would retreat several steps, while when listening to his words he would advance a stop or two, maintaining all the while his position of reverence, his eyes glued on the floor. After a few more formal exchanges of courtesies the conversation took a change to worldly affairs and for ten minutes I was busily engaged in satisfying the curiosity of the man concerning my native land.

"Who now is the President of America?" he asked.

The poor "K'an Po" had a awful time grasping the word Coolidge, while I summoned all my power to make some proper translation into Chinese as to America,' its military strength, its greater industries, its minerals—all of these things he inquired into, and in a manner so thorough, so intelligent, that for a moment I was dumfounded at his great knowledge. I was then examined on the countries which I had visited, and on replying that I had visited practically all the great nations of this earth the Buddha's delight was apparent, and there ensued a series of questioning upon points concerning which undoubtedly he knew but was not too sure.

The only question put forward during the entire interview which could be considered at all irrelevant concerned the Koreans. He first wished to know whether I had been to Korea, to which I very truthfully replied that I had been there 40 or 50 times, and had an intimate acquaintance with the people of the country.

The Submarine Koreans.

He then stated that it had come to his knowledge tha Koreans were able to walk under water for great distances, and he wished to know whether this was true of not. I assured him in return that not only were Koreans unable to accomplish this feat, but that I had observed them as being even reluctant to go out when it was raining for fear of getting their feet wet. My reply brought forth a wider smile than usual, and I think I noticed a decided impulse to laugh outright. If so, it was suppressed however, and another interrogation followed almost immediately.

The interview lasted for one hour exactly, and it was I who suggested its termination. Barely had I reached the door to his apartment, however, than I was recalled, when, again through his interpreter the Buddha made a request which I shall always regard as the greatest honour bestowed on me by an Oriental. He wished to know if I, upon return to my camp, would send him an autographed copy of my photograph. I came within an inch of shouting "You bet your life," but I didn't—I bowed again and in three skips, a hop and a jump carried the news back to camp.

JAPAN'S U. S. BOYCOTT

In the Land of Jasbo Rasbo, a million miles away
The Rasbos boycotted everything that came from the U.S.A.
They wouldn't look at flickering films, they wouldn't drink tinned milk,
And they wouldn't sell the Yankee gals a bolt of their blooming silk.
They broke every globe with GE on it and punctured U.S. tyres
And wouldn't use Socony boxes to kindle their humble fires.
They wouldn't dance new-fangled steps—they wouldn't dress the hair
To cover their ears, but they'd strut round with legs quite naked and bare.
Their beggars refrained from asking alms from the heathens over the sea,
And they wouldn't buy timber that came from out the heart of a Western tree.
They wouldn't sell Tourists curios at double or treble their worth,
And wouldn't sell resident heathens a yard of their sacred earth.
The list was complete and included these things, those things and that,
But it never officially mentioned burning a baseball bat.—JAPAN CHRONICLE."

ERUPTIONS ON FACE AND SCALP

Child Could Not Rest For Itching. Cuticura Heals.

"My boy had sore eruptions on his mouth and in a few days they spread all over his face and on his scalp. They were of a wet nature and a terrible disfigurement. He was not able to go out for some time. At night he could not rest for the itching.

"I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after a few days' use there was a great improvement. I purchased more and in about three weeks he was completely healed." (Signed) Mrs. F. Pettitt, 294, Franciscan Rd., Tooting, London, S. W. 17, Eng.

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Now that he has completed a trilogy with "The Heavenly Ladder," Mr. Compton Mackenzie is composing a tale in no fewer than seven volumes! It is to cover the period from 1897 to 1923.

Who sent Lady Pondor's stolen emerald necklace to that very delightful Sir Patrick O'Hara? That is the only "Secret of the Blue Vase" (Herbert Jenkins, 3s. 6d.). Hugh Tinte otherwise develops his rollicking, knockabout story with the utmost candour, reveals how the criminal house decorator hid the jewels in the blue vase which Sir Patrick promptly sold to the pretty widow with resulting complications. This is a mirthful detective story: even the detective is Pickwickian and very reminiscent of Mr. Jingle.

"Thomas Hardy's pessimism is very far removed indeed from the general undefined attitude of mental gloominess that 'always looks on the dark side of things,' or, as Dr. Garwood picturesquely expresses it, 'sees only the hole, and not the doughnut.'" The above sentence is from Mr. Ernest Brennecke's "Thomas Hardy's Universe" (Fisher Unwin, 8s. 6d.). This is a very interesting attempt to explain the philosophy of the great novelist. Mr. Brennecke finds a spiritual affinity between Thomas Hardy and Schopenhauer, both of them prophets of the Immanent Will. He quotes a good deal from the works of both writers and his comment is shrewd and suggestive. Mr. Brennecke's final word is illuminating:—

"Hardy's basic optimism, paradoxical as that expression must sound to his superficial readers and critics, may best be observed in his underlying humanity, in the ground-tone of pity that sounds through all his work no less than it does through the philosophy of Schopenhauer, and in the feeling, in which he is again in harmony with the great philosopher of the Will, that 'man's greatest enemy is man!'"

Routledge are to add to their Broadway Translations "Bandello's Tragical Tales," translated by Geoffrey Fenton in 1567, with Introduction by Robert Langton Dougton Douglas. The whole edited with a glossary by Hugh Harris, B. A. The version is reprinted complete, and unchanged with modernised spelling from the first edition. The stories of Bandello had the profoundest influence on the England of Elizabeth's day. He was a follower of Boccaccio and a forerunner of our first great English novelist, Defoe. From his stories Shakespare drew the plots of "Hamlet," "Romeo and Juliet," etc.

Messrs. Stanley Paul announce "Sims Reeves: Fifty Years of Music in England." By Charles E. Pearce, author of "The Amazing Duchess," "Polly Peachum and the Beggar's Opera," etc. In compiling the biography of the great English tenor, the author has had the assistance of Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves. Incidentally the author has given a delightful account of the development of the art of music in England during the Victorian Era.

It is understood that Dr. George Saintsbury is putting together another of his now well-known and very popular "Scrap-Books." He has lots of material, personal and literary, which anybody else would have made into one book of reminiscences He does not care for that sort of thing, but he does not mind making "Scrap-Books," and we all like them.

Is Walter Pater read by the new generation? One wonders, for he was rather precious, but there is no doubt that his books are still read. An inquiry at the Macmillans, who publish them, makes that certain, and, moreover, they are issuing a new pocket edition of them. It begins with Pater's Renaissance "Studies in Art and Poetry," which in some ways is his most popular book, although that kind of a story, "Marius the Epicurean," is not far behind it.

AMPHIBIOUS WAR

THE NAVY IN THE DARDANELLES CAMPAIGN. By Admiral of the Fleet Lord Wester-Wemyss, G.C.B. Hodder and Stoughton. 16s. net.

Some extracts from Lord Wester-Wemyss's spirited narrative of the Dardanelles campaign have already appeared in serial from. Our readers, however, will do well to read the complete chronicle of one of the most wonderful episodes in the history of warfare. That its purpose was not achieved was no fault of the officers and men engaged in the conflict. Lord Wester-Wemyss indicates plainly enough that the causes of the failure resided in an unhappy combination of ignorance, indecision, and divided counsels at home. The situation was tersely defined in an incident related by Lord Wester-Wemyss:

> The other day there was an armistice on the Peninsula to bury the dead: while it was going on a Turkish officer strolled up to our lines and found a chaplain reading the service over a large grave. When it was finished, he took off his fez, looked down into the grave and said in a loud voice: "God bless all true soldiers and eternally damn all politicians."

In November, 1915, Lord Wester-Wemyss proposed to the War Council a scheme by which, as he believed, and still believes, the Navy would have been able to open the Straits and keep them open. Other influences prevailed, and the evacuation was ordered. It is possible that the adverse decision was a mistake of the first magnitude. Lord Wester Wemyss does the justice to Admiral Sir Berkeley Milne which the politicians denied to that officer. It was carefully concealed from the public that as Lord Wester-Wemyss records:

> When six weeks after the assassination of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand—an event universally regarded as the signal for the outbreak of hostilities—war was declared, the British Ambassador at Constantinople was absent from his post and the Embassy apparently as unaware of the negotiations going on during the July crisis between Germany and the Young Turk party, as of the alliance between the two States signed on August 2. To this ignorance must be attributed the escape of the Goeben and Breslau.

Apart from the political and strategical aspects of the campaign, it was distinguished by exploits of heroism and endurance second to none, and of these immortal deeds Lord Wester-Wemyss gives a seamanlike account of a profound interest. It is amphibious war seen from within.

MR. HUXLEY'S STORIES

"LITTLE MEXICAN, AND OTHER STORIES." By Aldous Huxley. (Chatto and Windus. 7s. 6d.)

The opulence of Mr. Huxley's talent speaks in every page of these short stories, and is only equalled in impressiveness by the confidence with which it is employed. His refusal to hurry effects is a perfectly delightful experience if one comes fresh from contact with more commercialised "producers." "Uncle Spencer," the longest and most considerable of these pieces, is a model of deliberation: the figures take shape, touch by touch, as the tale meanders along—the expatriated English male old maid, the Flemish sisters, the little Cockney music-hall girl—and not even the supers are scamped. The spirit of "Uncle Spencer" and of "Little Mexican" is essentially comic, and in that vein the author's ingenuity seems able to spend itself at once freely and without waste, even if some of its unconventionalities are scarcely worth while. "The Portrait" stands, with some slightness, in the same class, as against the other three stories, with their French professional overstrain of amertume. An English writer cannot attain in that medium to more then cleverness: if he means to make pain an ingredient of art, he must approach it more gravely. Mr. Huxley is still young enough to enjoy the sensations of sheer experiment. But he would be wasting his time on repetitions of "Fard" or "Young Archimedes."

THE DISPASSIONATE PILGRIM

HARBOTTLE. A. MODERN PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By John Hargrave. 7s. 6d.

Bunyan's Christian knew where he wanted to go. Mr. Hargrave's "Harbottle," distracted by the loss of his two sons in the war and the flight of his wife, wandered in search of an answer to the riddle of the universe which he could not define. The author satirizes unmercifully various current methods of solving or evading the Everlasting Why, and spares neither Spiritualism nor Art nor Science, neither the "Nature Gospel" nor Anthropology nor Rosicrucianism, nor even Religion of the conventional type. His poor little hero, on his aimless walking tours, encounters many familiar types, from the wealthy and discontented young peer with no aim in life to the gipsy and the labourer and the parvenu, who are equally content with mere existence. But Harbottle finds no guidance, save in a school atlas with its concrete presentation of facts, until he meets a sympathetic woman, and then fate cuts short his revived chances of happiness.

Mr. Hargrave pictures the confused gropings of the queer little mind with unmistakable ability from beginning to end. The ironic arguments are cleverly expressed. The book drags here and there because Mr. Hargrave introduces pages of highly technical detail about anthropology and mysticism without irradiating them, as Anatole France does, with a persistent humour. But, as a first novel, "Harbottle" shows uncommon promise and refreshing originality.

A FRENCH PORTRAIT OF JOHN BULL

The Virtue of Being Thickheaded

L'ANGLETERRE D'AUJOURD'HUI. Son Evolution économique et politique. By André Siegfried. 7fr. 50. (G. Crés et Cie., Paris.)

This is the first of a series of three studies of conditions in Great British undertaken by M. Siegfried on behalf of the Musée Social, with the collaboration of the Association France-Grande Bretagne. It is a thorough piece of work, accompanied by an elaborate chart dealing with prices, wages, and unemployment during the last 10 years, and space does not justify such a bringing of coals to Newcastle as a description of it for English readers. But there are passages in the last chapter, in which the author pleads with his countrymen to make more of an effort to understand us, and does his best to give them a good start, that cry for quotation:

"More then one misunderstanding (M. Siegfried writes) arises from the fact that we forget too easily that the English are English. We talk a lot about British egoism, and it is true that the Englishman is egoistical, ingenuously and remorselessly so. He simply does not know how to put himself in anyone else's place, that is all: remind him that you are there and he will take notice of you. But he would not have thought of it on his own. . .

"Very slow to grasp complicated reasoning, he is guided principally by instinct, without analysing what goes on within himself and, especially, without knowing how to express it. Not being tied down by any system or logic, he does not waste time in bind alleys, but turns round without more ado, and with astonishing rapidity. It is we French, reputed to be so fickle, who do not know how to depart from a line of conduct we have once adopted.

"The Englishman does not imagine danger in advance; it is only when the danger is upon him that he perceives it. Also, he forgets it as soon as it is past, for he remembers no more willingly than he foresees. . . .

"He has succeeded so often in spite of his faults that he has come to consider them as one of the factors of his success. That is what is at the bottom of the astonishing expression "I'll muddle through." . . . . Is that not rather how he won the war?. . . . If he hits hard, he takes his own medicine without anger; the not unattractive code of sport and "fair play" is taught in his school. But you will fail with him every time if you try to finesse or if you expect him to defend your interests for you. He presumes you to understand that he works for himself, and he expects you to do the same. He will not thank you for a concession and will respect you, on the contrary, for sticking to your own point of view. . . . This absence of subterfuge and malice gives him. . . . the charm of quite young things. He is never blasé. The Frenchman, labelled frivolous feels old and wise beside these. . . . big boys. . . . .

"We must bring ourselves to take the Englishman as he is, and, giving up any idea of changing him, try at least to understand him. With less polemic and more psychology the Franco-British entente would be helped along considerably. When the English take a different point of view from ours they have, after all, their reasons; they are not necessarily doing it out of hostility. . . .

"The capacity of the English for forgetting is enormous. They have positively forgotten the danger of yesterday, and do not want to think of it any more. Did they ever fear Germany? They seem to have no recollection of it left. It is a thing of the past, happily, so why dwell on it? The peril might arise again, you say? As God wills! But if it must be, then Old England will know well enough how to defend herself and triumph once more. . .

"What she (England) would really like is a Europe without military combinations which might let loose war, Europe regulated by the League of Nations in which no power would overshadow the rest. It is hard to say how great a part idealism and how great a part egoism plays in this conception."

MISS SINCLAIR'S NOVEL IN VERSE

"THE DARK NIGHT." By May Sinclair. (Jonathan Cape. 7s. 6d.)

The inefficient can, of course, be verbose in any medium, but for the good artist verse has certain inherent advantages over prose. It prompts him to a closer economy of language, a more dramatic swiftness of action; moreover, in verse one may rise, when occasion calls, to heights of poetry which, if they were attempted in prose, might be condemned as purple patches or high falutin.

Miss May Sinclair, like the sensitive artist she is, has admirably fitted her medium to her theme and written "The Dark Night" in no formal measure, but in the less exacting, adaptable metres of free-verse, which enable her to mention such an address as St. John's Wood and such a name as Julius Maximilian Rosenthal without falling from grace, and yet to clothe her vision of life and the thoughts and passions of her people in the beauty of phrase that rightly belong to them and to poetry. For her free-verse is not merely purse cut into eccentric lengths: it rises and falls with its subject, but moves throughout in changing harmonious numbers.

The story opens quietly in Elizabeth's garden, where God reveals himself in the fire and light of the flowers and the beech tree; it draws swiftly to her meeting with Victor Rendal and their instant love of each other. I like that satirical sketch of the Rector at the At Home, but have no room to quote it. Victor is a poet, poor like most of the tribe; Elizabeth is rich, and glories in the thought of lifting all anxieties from him, so that he may devote himself to his work untrammelled. But it is just this prospect of being dependent on her, of being caged and fettered for life that overwhelms him on the eve of their marriage and drives him to give her up and go abroad. In her grief and loneliness, when she has found again the God that had revealed Himself to her in her garden, Victor returns; his love has cast out fear, and he sees there can be no happiness for him except in bondage to her:

> I am only afraid of the life without you.
> Of myself without you.
> Of my soul and body without you.

It is the coming of Monica, the passionate, beautiful daughter of Elizabeth's dead friend, Cicely, that brings disaster into the Eden of their marriage. Elizabeth had promised her friend that she would be responsible for the girl's well-being, and, in spite of Victor's warnings, she comes to live with them. He presently succumbs to her witcheries, and Elizabeth loses her lover, and, plunged in despair, only wins her way gradually and with difficulty back to the peace that had first found her in her garden, and because

> When I shut you out of my heart.
> I shut out God > Unaware.

she can forgive Victor and the other woman, goes to them and their child, and befriends them in a poverty from which Monica is already thinking of escaping with that man of the plethoric name. But her flight is only postponed; when blindness falls upon Victor, she finds the tending him in his helplessness too irksome, and after he and their child are deserted, Elizabeth takes them to herself, and in his deep contrition he tells her:—

> I was thinking
> How you, my Beloved,
> Were led clear eyed through the darkness,
> Because you were without sin,
> And how > God had to blind me
> Before I could see.

This bald summary does scant justice to a story that is instinct with beauty of idea and of phrase. Verse is its true medium; it would have missed much of its charm, even of its reality, by being clad in the plainer vesture of prose. The episode of the old, old grandmother and her death is in itself one of the most poignantly beautiful poems I have read for long past, and I would not mar it by extracting anything from so perfect a picture.—London "Sunday Times."

"THE CRICKET MATCH"

"THE CRICKET MATCH." By Hugh de Sélincourt. (Cape. 7s. 6d. net.)

Hugh de Sélincourt—the fellow who writes those extremely "unpleasant" novels—what can he know about anything so healthy as cricket? Probably he is just using cricket, that noble old English game, as a blind for his usual very un-English sort of ideas? Not so. Every page of this new novel on which cricket is mentioned (and that must be more than three-quarters of the whole number) shows that the man who wrote it is a real cricketer, and more than a cricketer—a sportsman. The book tells in pretty minute detail the story of a single Saturday afternoon match between two village teams in Sussex. Village cricket, more than any other kind, is cricket played for the love of the game; and every cricketer who picks up this book will feel with delight how true is this tale of the ups and downs, the comic and the serious sides, the triumphs and the failures, the tense excitement of a good village match. But there is more to it than that. Judicious readers of Mr. Hugh de Sélincourt's other books know that on the one hand he has a keen sense of fun, and on the other that he cannot help being a philosopher, or psychologist. And the fun, the meaning, of this village cricket match, detailed through many a droll and exciting page, is based on the character, income, social status, home life, manners even health of the ten men and a boy who played for Tiddingfold against Raveley. We get to know them all, rich and poor, intellectual and stupid, happy and unhappy. And then we are shown how a game of cricket, a "play-activity," an art, affects them, welding them together, testing them, making men of them. There is no end to the ideas which the book suggests—and it does not omit that amusing subject the attitude of the average sensible woman towards baby man's passion for playing with a ball. We do not know of any other work of fiction, which thus describes a sport both for its own delightful sake, and for the sake of all the psychology that goes to it. What is the best bit? Where Gauvinier and Fanshawe discuss a poem of Baudelaire, or where Ted Bannister, by accident or miracle, holds a hot catch? Where round old John Mc-Leod and his round old wife start the day together, or where Fanshawe gives a "religious performance" at the wicket, in which "a run seemed almost like a mistake or a profanity?" There is no saying. From end to end the book is full of cricket and sunshine, and the summer feeling, and of sympathy, fun, and goodwill.—The "Observer."

THE MISCHIEVOUS MOSQUITO

What To Do Till Morning Comes

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Volumes might be written on mosquito extermination by scientists and men of commerce interested in the sale of insect discouragers but few formulas equal the short, sharp swat for efficiency. The miserable, poisonous, low-lived (two paragraphs of adjectives deleted as being too abusive, Ed.) Culex pipiens apparently knows no better than to evade all the traps set for his extermination and to survive undaunted through the half-hearted campaigns waged against him.

During the day we may withstand his attacks with more or less equanimity but at night, when the accumulated sleepiness derived from many broken slumbers numbs our reasoning powers, then, then it is that we are taken off our guard and suffer most cruelly. Sad experience should have made us perfect in our nightly ninety, the ammonia or eau de cologne placed conveniently to hand, the room previously sprayed with one's favourite brand of sure death vapour, bed and robe de nuit soaked with citronella in some form or other, smudges cheerily glowing beneath the bed, the net carefully examined lest any uninvited guest lurk within. Wild flurry and swishing away of possible skeets, as with a hasty leap one bounds within the sheltering tent of the net, and hastily tucks it snugly in.

"A Miserable Night of Ghastly Dreams."

False security lulls one to slumber, a tired, drugged sleep, which all-too soon begins to be broken by wild dreams. You are captured by savage tribes and condemned to death by the torture of exposure upon an ant hill, or smeared with honey and stung to death by wild bees, or sent into the trenches to pick off cooties, or—anything sufficiently uncomfortable. Finally a gleam of reason pricks through one's sub-consciousness. You realize that you are being done in by the villainous brutes of mosquitoes who have invaded your fastness of net in some mysterious way.

At first one is invariably unwilling to arouse oneself fully. One drugs one's common sense with the thought: "There is only one noisome insect in the net. In a moment he will have gorged himself to repletion and I shall have surcease." But his appetite is either insatiable or else his high piping call for reinforcements has been very successful. You doze, and dream still more horribly. You awake to swat, seldom with success. You try to demonstrate the superiority of mind over matter. You can't.

Drastic Action Required.

At last one reaches the conclusion, which should have been reached an hour back, namely that "something has to be done about this." You turn on the light and have a little pogrom of your own. However hard it may be to raise your hand against your own flesh and blood, you nerve yourself to the task. How elusive a mosquito can be. How deftly he tucks himself away in a crevice of the bed linen to emerge when the coast is clear. How successful he is in dodging your blows.

One of the mysteries of this visitation is how they get in. The net is never torn, it is always tucked in, how does it happen? The answer is hard to find unless one has retained a faith in a personal devil, and that explains everything. With a sigh of sympathy for Job you sink off again, perhaps to sleep till morning, perhaps not. The queer thing about it is that no matter how many times this programme is repeated it is always just as hard to believe that the only solution for the problem is to rouse ones self and take direct and drastic action. Always the reluctance of waking sufficiently to deal with the situation has to be met, always precious sleeping minutes are wasted. The difficulty is psychological as well as physical. The only hope glimpsed for the future is a mosquito drill which with long practice will become automatic, so that at the first piercing zzzip one will awake, perform the necessary slaughter and woo the balmy once once again.

WHO IS SYLVIA?

The Enigmatic Edna St. Vincent Millay

By Elizabeth Pepys.

How can so frank and outspoken a poet be a puzzle? Perhaps not to you. Possibly the disarming frankness of many poems in "Figs and Thistles" has convinced you that Miss Millay is simply the nonconforming girl of the day, gifted with a rare sensitiveness to word-values, and with a talent for expressing vividly what many of us think but are too conventionally tongue-tied to put into words. A merry, whimsical, wayward young slip of a genius you label her, the product of Vassar College and Greenwich Village, musically rebelling against anything which trammels her capricious self-expression. With deeper moods, too, but these treated without pomposity, in short, "The Penitent."

Does This Foreshadow the Panier?

I had a little Sorrow,
Born of a little Sin,
I found a room all damp with gloom
And shut us all within;
And, "Little Sorrow, weep," said I,
"And, Little Sin, pray God to die,
And I upon the floor will lie
And think how bad I've been!"

Alas for pious planning—
It mattered not a whit!
As far as gloom went in that room,
The lamp might have been lit!
My Little Sorrow would not weep.
My Little Sin would go to sleep—
To save my soul I could not keep
My graceless mind on it!

So up I got in anger,
And took a book I had,
And put a ribbon on my hair
To please a passing lad.
And, "One thing there's no getting by—
I've been a wicked girl," said I;
But if I can't be sorry, why,
I might as well be glad!"

Which is all quite true, but one can't leave it there. How does a New England, coast-of-Maine person come to be so free-spoken with herself and her public? How utilize the energy of a Puritan conscience in the dynamo of passion that gleams in "The Singing-Woman from the Wood's Edge?" And the childlike beauty of "Renascence" is an entirely different thing as it shows loving observation of nature, philosophic struggle to grasp the cosmic riddle. How did so young a girl write that before she had been to college, before she had seen much of the world? One would say she must have been unusual, not to say queer, if that were not contradicted by all the stories of happy, normal home life with her sisters, jolly companionships at school, the give and take of the Village.

Second April.

Comes then, after "Figs and Thistles" has surprised the younger generation with its knowledge of its heart and has caused parents some anxious moments, "Second April," in which poetic promise reaches fulfilment. In its treatment of life and love and death there is a nunlike austerity, but it is glorification of Art that is its creed. Life is poignantly sweet because of its fleetness, the only thing that matters is to live triumphantly while "this flawless vital hand, this perfect head, this body of flame and steel" endures. "O world, I cannot hold thee close enough," the poet sings again.

The plays, of course, are vital and arresting, but not so revealing as the poems, for whether one should or not, one seeks for the personality of the poet. Miss Millay's poems seem so essentially a part of herself that the reader is kept a-wondering. Since first reading anything of this author's I have been consumed by an avid curiosity as to what she really was. Such eager reading of her poems and hoarding up of current say-so regarding herself and her work indeed suggested at times the uncomfortable reflexion that poem-peeking is as unjustifiable as key-hole-listening. But so piquant a personality as Miss Millay's must pay the penalty.

Miss Millay's advent in Shanghai, then, was tremendously elating. Now, thought I, these tormenting questions will be answered and this intrusive ghost laid. With so many people in the world why should one devote so disproportionate an amount of time to the multiplex personality of one poet? Now we shall know whether she is a nun, a gamin, a sophisticated artist or a woman of the world. Then we can catalogue her and turn our attention elsewhere.

The Poet in Person

The first glimpse confirms her as the outspoken poet of youth. In her extinguishing cloche, her smartly boyish sports costume, high collared, sailor knotted, the tucked shirt-bosom and pleated skirt she looked precisely like the ahead-of-the-moment figures "Vogue" presents to us as sartorial ideals. The red-gold hair of legend was either bobbed or shingled: the cloche, which also did its best to conceal the grey-green eyes, would not let us say which, The voice was frank and friendly, straightforward with no suggestion of the "Vassar drawl." The small, lithe figure was vibrant with life. The conversation was reassuringly mundane, such as the reporter could follow. Peking —marvellous, but dusty; Chefoo, surprisingly alluring; the heat, intense but not all-conquering. We breathed freely. We knew what a delightful comrade Miss Millay might be.

Then, a sudden twist in the conversation, a stray phrase, a new timbre in the voice, and our doubts returned with reinforcements. It is difficult to analyze your reactions to a suddenly glimpsed ideal and to maintain a reasonable conversation at the same moment. A few more sentences, a quick, firm handshake. the audience was over and the poet still unclassified.

England Jazzes Just the Same.

It is stated that there are five million people in the United States who can not read or write. Perhaps that accounts for some of their songs.—The Humourist (London).

BATHING SUTTS

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Never before has there been such variety in seashore costumes, for sand or surf. Whether one merely wishes to stretch oneself on the sand, under the shade of the great beach umbrella or desires to emulate Annette Kellerman and the pearl divers, there is a costume waiting for the mood of the moment, comfortable, appropriate and tremendously chic.

The costumes shown in our illustration, should not, we feel, unduly disturb "Old Correspondent" or any other visitor to Henli, for while recognizing that one must have the use of one's limbs in order to manage swimming, they do not seem to us unduly revealing. We do not refer to Cupid's costume, which consists of a bathing cap and a smile. He has been granted poetic license for so long we never trouble to be shocked at his scantiness of clothing or to write to the papers suggesting that he be more suitably outfitted.

Bathing Suits for Henli or Anywhere Else.

Favourite Fabrics.

The young lady in the straight, two piece suit, is presumably clothed in jersey, after all, the most useful fabric for real water service. This model, however would look very well in black taffeta, which still maintains its prestige in natatorial materials, or alpaca would make up stylishly. The bouffant effect in the accompanying illustration is doubtless achieved with the assistance of crepe satin, very popular this year for the sea as well as for the verandah, and the dull and shiny sides are combined to good effect.

Waterproof satin is always in good taste and even square blocked satin is allowed this year in some of the more elaborate designs. Gay cretonne costumes, worn over black jersey tights with cretonne knee-bands, look very jaunty on the sands and gingham is used as an over-slip and to trim the jersey knickers, but it must be admitted that a dip does rather ruin the dressy appearance of the gingham.

Both long and short sleeves are seen and some of the demurest outfits have a high neck, finished with a white piqué collar and cuffs of the same. The ubiquitous scarf is also seen as in our illustration or in a printed shiki cloth, in muffler effect, while a roman-striped scarf is also knotted round the shoulders of some bathing dresses. Some of the plain over-slips button straight down the front, others are long waisted, with fetching circular ruffles or with ruffled or plain apron effects. One may be as dressy or as frank and boyish as one likes.

The Extras.

Accessories for a morning on the beach are so numerous as to demand special water-proof bags, one of them an amusing red jersey fish, rubber lined. A simpler bathing suit case is built like a wallet from rubberized surf-cloth, with three pockets, and there are plain rubberized black satin bags which draw up with a cord. Scarves are a department by themselves, in every style and mode. There are rubberized kerchiefs to use as caps, the usual caps with rubber flowers or rubber petals, some with a brim like a visor, and bandannas of all sorts.

Capes, coats, and shawls are used for bathing wraps as well as dashing, manlike bathrobes, and almost every material is rubberized for these, taffeta, satin, natural coloured silk printed in wild, gay patterns, satin or pongee as well as the usual towelling, the capes in themselves enough to make one wish to frequent the beaches.

Sandals are cut down almost to the sole so that they are not unduly confining, and afford the maximum of comfort. The straps are cunningly disposed so as to make the foot look smaller. Some new rubber bathing-Oxfords fit snugly round the ankles and are trimmed with contrasting strips of bright rubber.

HELPFUL HINTS

Getting Rid of Iron Rust and Stains.

To remove iron rust from white clothes mix fine salt and cream of tartar, moisten with water, lay on the stain and expose to the sun. Repeat application if necessary. Grass stains yield to an application of soap followed by soda and immediate rinsing.

Creaming Brass, Steel and Aluminum.

To clean brass cut a lemon in half, dip it in coarse salt ,and rub it thoroughly over the surface of the brass until all stains have disappeared. Then rinse in warm water and polish with brick dust (powdered bath brick). When steel becomes rusty, rub it over with a piece of emery paper which has been dipped in turpentine; then polish it with a new piece of emery paper. When aluminum pans become black, clean them with a soft cloth which has been dipped in lemon juice. Rinse them in warm water and they will look like new.

Spice Bags.

Five spice bags hang behind my stove. Into one I put the top leaves and roots of celery bunches; in the second I store away parsley when it grows too fast in the summer garden for family use; into the third go green sage leaves; into the fourth green mint leaves and stalks, and into the fifth I drop nasturtium leaves as they ripen—they are excellent to pickle with little gherkins. The heat from the stove dries the contents of my spice bags and provides me with delicious seasoning for the winter.

Feeding the Baby.

Not having an expensive hot-water plate for the baby's food, the writer devised one which she thinks more efficient. She uses separate ramekins for the potatoes, carrots, and coddled egg and places them in a milk pan half full of hot water. This keeps the food hot during the slow progress of baby's dinner. She uses a little coffee spoon instead of the regular baby spoon, which was too wide for small bites. Even so the bib acquires a portion of the egg, so she is sheathed in a long bib which reaches the bottom of her dress and has sleeves. The extra effort of making or buying these bibs is will repaid by a clean dress when dinner is over.
